THERE is someway a smile in the newspaper item saying that Mr. Winthrop Aldrich, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank, has joined with wealthy neighbors in legal opposition to the projected erection of a picture theatre in fashionable and elite Madison avenue at Seventy-ninth street in New York. Maybe as a banker he has not found the pictures as amusing as he expected.

THE International Fixed Calendar League, promoting a fixed calendar of thirteen months of four weeks each, a project strongly supported by the late Mr. George Eastman, reports marked progress, even through the depression years, with many concerns keeping their books on the thirteen period basis. Largest among motion picture enterprises listed is Loew's, Inc. The motion picture in industry's unit of time is the week, and the use of the thirteen period calendar is likely to be found to be extending among distributors and exhibitors as time goes on.

THIS WEEK---

"BETTER" FILMS

Authorized in a resolution of the National Council of Federated Church Women, in seventh annual convention in Rochester last week, is a campaign designed to enlist 22,000,000 Protestant church women in the country in a new campaign for "decent and better motion pictures." The campaign, embracing a seven-point program, was developed by Mrs. Ralph J. Hudelson, Indianapolis, of the motion picture committee. . . .

LANDMARKS GOING

Two more New York theatre landmarks, Loew's New York and the Criterion, in Times Square, will go June 14, when demolition begins on the block front property to make way for stores, and perhaps a new theatre. Owned by the City Bank Farmers Trust Company, the property was taken at foreclosure recently. The houses were built 40 years ago, and follow the pioneer Rialto, which is making way for a new theatre. . . .

CHILDREN'S SHOWS

Fox West Coast theatres are adopting a children's matinee idea, "Visual Recreation Tours," devised by William Jenner of the California theatre at San Bernardino. The idea is an hour and one-half show after school hours with tickets sold in books with the cooperation of the Parent-Teachers Association. . . .

JUBILEE SHOWS

More than 100,000 of England's poor saw motion pictures free of charge last week in connection with the King's Silver Jubilee. The renters dropped their usual rental fees on films for the occasion and the exhibitors passed on the free admission to their patrons. Theatres throughout the country cooperated. . . .

PRICE RECORD

Bob Helma, managing the San Francisco Capitol theatre, has established something of a record for admissions, triple features for 10 cents, any seat, any time. Non-union, the house is being picketed, and competitive houses already have lodged complaints. . . .

QUALIFIED APPROVAL

Guy Holmes, Kansas City censor, has approved Universal's "Werewolf of London" only on the stipulation that admission is refused to children under 12. He said he was influenced by protests of local women. Exhibitors, who had to take the qualified approval, or total rejection, declare the verdict sets a precedent. . . .

FRENCH COMPANY

Curtis Melnitz, veteran American film man, has organized Ambassador Films (Societe Anonyme des Films Ambassadeur) with headquarters in Paris, aiming at production of French, and possibly later, English films. Mr. Melnitz was connected with United Artists in Europe for a long period. The famed stage operetta, "White Horse Inn," will be the first. . . .

"MASS INTERVIEW"

Editors in 12 cities simultaneously interviewed Mae West in an unusual telephone hookup arranged with the cooperation of the telephone company. Miss West, in Hollywood, answered one question from each editor while all others listened in. The "mass interview" was promotion material for her Paramount film, "Goin' to Town." . . .

SOUND COURSES

Nathan Levenson, chairman of the Technicians' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast, has named a commitee to develop plans to start courses of study in sound and acoustics for studio sound department workers. The courses will be given by the Frank Wiggins Trade School. . . .

MEXICAN TAX

Mexican producers and distributors have been buffeted by the demand of the finance minister that they pay a tax of from six to 13 per cent of gross receipts for last year. It is believed in Mexico City the step has been taken by the government to force the native interests to settle their 1934 income taxes, as American interests did recently. . . .

The British International picture, "Royal Cavalcade," film of the King's Jubilee, has been renamed "Jubilee Cavalcade" for release in the United States, because of possible confusion with Fox's film, "Cavalcade," according to Arthur Dent, BIP official, now in New York seeking release of six pictures. . . .

FILM CODE MACHINE JAMS AT THE COLLAPSE OF NRA

Code Authority and Boards Ordered Suspended, Hearings Halted on Grievances and Zoning, Suits Strike Impasse

Court Ruling Means Industry Return to Adjustment of Issues Through Its Own Recognized Trade Associations

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The Blue Eagle is dead, killed swiftly and suddenly on Monday by the United States supreme court on the grounds of unconstitutionality.

Its demise, the severest blow to be felt by the New Deal, scuttled completely and immediately all the machinery—theoretically adopted voluntarily—through which the Administration had been enforcing adherence in codified industries to standards of fair competition and working conditions.

The Code Authority of the motion picture, its boards in the field and in Hollywood were ordered suspended overnight. No further hearings may be held on grievances, nor can clearance and zoning schedules be drafted under the Blue Eagle. Court suits involving code violations charged to exhibitors no longer may be pressed, and trade practices controlled by the code are now free of restraint.

To the motion picture the abandonment by nullification of code law and code tribunals can only mean a return to the industry's own system of adjusting through its recognized trade associations, the individual issues as they arise—a system which had been in the making for some 20 years until the motion picture code, developed on June 16, 1933, out of the National Industrial Recovery Act, took from these trade associations virtually all responsibility of adjusting difficulties of trade practice, placing that responsibility in the hands and controversial application of a Code Authority and subboards in the field. True, the various trade groups were permitted to nominate code board members, but their actual appointment and procedure both were supervised by Washington and the NRA.

"Voluntary Code" a Problem

The immediate reaction to the momentous declaration by the supreme court on the illegality of Recovery Act provisions giving the President the right to proclaim code rule over private industry were to: (1) daze the Administration, thereby delaying decision on the steps to be taken to salvage the recovery program; (2) cause Congress to mark time while awaiting word of legislative leadership from the White House; (3) worry labor because of the jeopardizing of its gains under the NRA; and, (4) bring confusion to codified industry. The fact remains, however, that there is no longer a Blue Eagle code in the motion picture, or any other industry.

Industrial leaders in other lines were quick to the press with word that they would attempt to salvage "worthwhile" features of their codes, but for the most part these expressions came from those industries which have a single trade association representing the whole, and, therefore, would have no difficulty in arriving at a set of fair trade and working practices. In the motion picture business, however, it appears that there can be no "voluntary" code because of the many and conflicting interests. Realizing this, the leaders were compelled to withhold, perhaps temporarily, any expressions suggesting promulgation of such an agreement.

Minority Groups' Opposition

It was explained by that part of the film business known as "the New York home office," that because a voluntary code means a code brought in unanimously, it would be impossible to continue under the present code, or even attempt to adopt a revised instrument for the entire industry because of the persistent adverse sentiment of the minority groups, some of which never have been won over on a national trade issue. They could and undoubtedly would upset an industrywide attempt to codify by resorting to the federal courts, using the antitrust laws for a complaint; by boycott, or by engaging in ruinous competitive practices aimed at the majority.

Standing alone on Capitol Hill was the plea of the Administration to industries voluntarily to observe their codes. How this would or should be accomplished was left to the imagination of business, including the motion picture.

Immediate Quandary

In the same breath immediate suspension of "all methods of compulsory enforcement of NRA codes" was announced by Donald R. Richberg, Recovery Board chairman, and on Tuesday morning the motion picture Code Authority, John C. Flinn, secretary, was officially instructed to discontinue all activities. The Code Authority, in turn, telegraphed similar instructions to the 32 Local Grievance and 32 Local Clearance and Zoning Boards. Immediately all hearings, arguments and complaint investigations on trade practice violations and clearance and zoning schedules were halted.

Trade representatives of the entire structure of 567 codes and 201 supplemental codes covering 3,000,000 establishments and 22,000,000 workers affected by the invalidation of NRA, would not even predict what's to be done. It was held likely that the President will appeal to the nation with a formula to salvage the NRA, and, though believed remote, there was a suggested possibility that Congress would be asked to start the wheels turning for a constitutional amendment to change the basic law in order to widen their powers and the powers they give the President over interstate commerce.

The here and now, however, was the concern of every motion picture producer, distributor and exhibitor and those of their employees whose working conditions were set down in the NRA's film code.

Motion picture executives described as "insane" any movement by this or any other industry which would reduce the minimum salaries and increase the maximum working hours of the NRA at this time. Industry generally was reassuring labor, and this despite the predictions of the pessimists that wholesale wage-cutting and "firing" immediately would result. Motion picture-wise, Jack L. Warner, vice-president of Warner Brothers in charge of production at the Burbank studios, declared it would be unpatriotic to change working schedules, and Eastman Kodak announced it would not alter the wage scales or working hours set down in its code.

From a labor standpoint the situation created in the motion picture industry by the supreme court's action is this:

Scales and working hours agreed to in contracts between employers and labor cannot be interfered with, even though the hour and wage stipulations of the contract are also a part of the nullified code.

However, where no labor contract exists the employers are free to decide whether they will or will not alter wages or working hours.

Barrier Down on Trade Practices

The death of the code throws down the barrier against the socalled "unfair" trade practice that cannot otherwise be controlled by contract. There are certain stipulations for proper practice set forth in the code and these end immediately, except where there is a contract in addition. The exchanges will insist immediately that exhibitors live up to their contracts, to which they have legal right even though identical clauses appeared in the code.

Where an exhibitor was given the right in the code to cancel 10 per cent of a block of pictures he will continue to hold this cancellation privilege if his contract with the exchange sets forth this right.

An anticipated wholesale engagement by circuit and independent exhibitors in the practice of "Bank Nights," awards and other such box office "stimulants," depends on whether state laws permit them, and, of more importance, whether competitive owners are unable to agree on a mutual prohibition of such practices.

Whether clearance and zoning schedules as drafted under code board authority and supervision are salvaged is a matter for speculation. If not, clearance again will be a bargaining matter between the distributor and exhibitor, to be bought when a contract is negotiated.

Code Authority Meets Monday

The Code Authority will meet in emergency session in New York Monday to determine what they may be permitted to do—if anything.

Unless the law of the land is involved, it appears that there must be a wholesale abandonment of the dozens of pending court suits involving legal battles between the code boards, as enforcement agencies, and exhibitors over "Bank Nights," giveaways and many other practices, forbidden by the code, but which owners believe they had the right to pursue but for intimidation or control by the Code Authority.

There can easily develop much confusion within the industry now that the barriers are down. The code had clauses to prohibit distributors from forcing short subjects on exhibitors out of proportion to features sold. Overbuying of product by one exhibitor in order to keep such product away from a competitor is now free of restraint. Too, the code compelled distributors to offer the Standard Licensing Agreement to a theatre owner along with his own company form of contract, and gave the exhibitor the right to select either form.

Some executive opinion in New York hoped that the industry might effect arbitration machinery for determining exhibitor-distributor controversies over contracts.

Questioned about the possibilities of a resurrection of the Film Boards of Trade to act as an arbitration medium, and, possibly, as a clearing house for trade grievances, Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and champion of the Film Boards, declared, "I wouldn't discuss that even with my own mother."

The theory has been advanced that with the collapse of the code machinery, the industry could return to a modified form of Film Board regulation.

Prior to the NRA, arbitration was by consent under the contract. Compulsory arbitration under the Film Boards had been outlawed years ago by the Thacher decree in the federal courts.

Industry members who paid assessments for code operations undoubtedly will receive a rebate from the unspent part of the budget.

Hollywood Least Affected

Hollywood workers are least affected by the nullification of the code, and this because the majority of the studio crafts work under contracts or agreements between labor unions and producers.

There can be no further efforts expended in Hollywood, through the code machinery created for the purpose, to establish standards of practices between producers and agents, players and other talent, not that any headway had been made.

Players have been working under a set of working conditions drafted by and with the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Future relations between Hollywood acting and other talent probably will be governed to a large extent by agreement with the Academy, although there are other minority groups.

Relations among vaudeville and motion picture stage players, and theatres and booking managers, were governed to a considerable extent by the code.

Defamation of the character of competitors, publishing or circularizing of theatres or suits not in good faith were intended to be controlled.

Protection of stage rights to a play purchased for filming, and premature negotiations with a producer under contract to another were other forms of code control.

Too, distributors, under the code, were supposedly prevented from intimidating or coercing an exhibitor to purchase their product under threats of building in competition.

Must Depend on Contracts

Exhibitors hereafter must depend on their contractual or other relations to control many practices that were outlawed in the code, for example:

Distributors' employees were not to use their position with the distributor to interfere with the licensing of product by operating a theatre in competition to another.

Substitutions were governed in an important part of the code.

Nontheatrical sales were intended to be controlled.

So was the transferring of assets by either distributor or exhibitor in order to get out of a contract.

Stipulation was made of the manner in which distributors were to make adjustments for pictures purchased under certain conditions.

Specified play dates were tabooed under certain conditions, and where permitted the law set forth the procedure.

Refusal of a distributor to deliver short subjects because an exhibitor was not in good standing on a feature contract, and vice versa, was prescribed as a code violation.

The manner of rejecting pictures by exhibitors was an important code clause.

So was the anti-overbuying clause when one exhibitor overbought in order to keep the product away from his competitor.

Cut rates, script books, coupons, throwaway tickets, two-for-one admissions and lowering of admissions by any other form, except below the contract minimum, all violations, can now be unrestrained.

Machinery was set up for controlling premiums when 75 per cent of the exhibitors in a territory so agreed.

Premature advertising of pictures to which a competitor has prior rights was also a violation.

The use of the Optional Standard License Agreement and the method of arbitrating contract disputes under that instrument were prescribed.

There were at least a dozen additional clauses intended to govern the relations between distributors and exhibitors and among exhibitors.

For the most part film industry leaders maintained a discreet silence, and those few who had ventured any remarks commented for the most part as individuals.

Myers Jubilant

Abram F. Myers, chairman and general counsel of Allied, issued the following statement Wednesday:

"For the passing of a grand concept, regrets; for terminating abuse of that concept, hallelujah! The ideal of self-regulation of industry through cooperation is not dead, but has a new birth. Future relations between different divisions of the motion picture industry must be on a basis of recognition of the rights of all concerned, plus a genuine desire to promote interests of the industry as a whole. Progress was being made in this direction prior to the NRA. The code phase was a nightmare creating distrust and driving farther apart the various industry factors.

"I look for a revival of plans to establish a clearing house for adjustment of complaints and settlement of problems in which the essential merit of each issue will be the determining factor and not the number of representatives which each division has on the tribunal. Let us stop jockeying for domination and direct our efforts toward establishing stability, security and justice by mediation, conciliation and fair arbitration without insistence that controversies be submitted to tribunals packed in favor of any economic group. I think a breath of fresh, reviving air has blown on the industry and I look for real progress in inter-industry relations.

"Allied has stood steadfastly for adjustment of complaints and settlement controversies by cooperative effort within the industry. The five-five-five conferences and the negotiations with Sidney R. Kent in 1932 marked progress. Had the major companies supported their representatives, the established system could have been incorporated into NRA without difficulty."

"I regret to see the whole motion picture code go out," said Sidney R. Kent, Fox Film president, on Tuesday. "We need provisions regarding minimum wages and maximum working hours. Industry should not be allowed to profiteer off labor, especially under present conditions. I think the motion picture code, however, bit off more than it could chew."

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, telegraphed:

"Complete annulment of the code will bring about immediate chaos in several situations. The little independent exhibitors benefited by it if anyone did, yet they complained most. Organized labor will be hard hit by the decision. Those working for a living must earn more than just a bare living if theatres are to prosper. I think further study of the decision will not find it as sweeping and drastic as it seems

MAJORS FAVOR NRA CONTRACT

National sales managers of major distributors favor continuance of the contract form adopted under the NRA without change and including the 10 per cent cancellation clause, it was indicated Wednesday at a conference at the New York offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. The conference was called to discuss in general form the probable course of the film industry following the breakdown of the NRA.

Producers will save $60,000 yearly by dropping the 15-foot Code seal trailer at the start of each film.

SCHENCK, ZANUCK LEAVE UNITED ARTISTS FOR FOX

Entire Producing Personnel and Assets of 20th Century Join Fox; Schenck Becomes Chairman, Zanuck a Vice-President

Joseph M. Schenck, for ten years president of United Artists Corporation, resigned abruptly on Monday to become chairman of the board of Fox Film Corporation. The step followed several months of unsuccessful negotiating with United Artists for release of his future pictures from Twentieth Century, of which he also is president.

In leaving United Artists, Mr. Schenck takes with him to the Fox organization the entire producing personnel and assets of Twentieth Century Corporation as well as the services of Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president of Twentieth Century in charge of production, who will become a vice-president of Fox Film.

Sidney R. Kent will remain as president of Fox. Mr. Kent issued a statement Tuesday that Fox Film had made considerable progress in the improvement of its box office quality under the production leadership of Winfield Sheehan and that the Schenck - Zanuck - Twentieth Century move is not the forerunner of any shakeup in the Fox organization, but, rather, a rearrangement of the executive work in Hollywood and the producing work involved, to the end that the combined companies would strengthen their entire producing structure still further. Mr. Kent said that all the personnel involved have but one purpose in view, "and that is to build a greater Fox Film - Twentieth Century producing organization".

Mr. Schenck will make his headquarters on the West Coast, working in close contact with Mr. Sheehan and Mr. Zanuck and other producers of the two companies. It is generally supposed that Twentieth Century will not lose its corporate identity and that production of Mr. Schenck and Mr. Zanuck henceforth will be known as Twentieth Century pictures, released through Fox Film.

Both Mr. Kent and Mr. Schenck said the resources of the two combined companies, as to manpower, personnel and box office assets, will lead to an even better quality for the resulting program than was possible with each producing on its own. It was pointed out that it was their intention to produce a minimum of 55 to 60 pictures annually so that there will be as many productions as now are being made individually by Fox and Twentieth Century.

At its sales convention this week (see page 40) Fox announced 54 feature releases and an undetermined number to come from Twentieth Century.

Although arrangements are only just past the preliminary stages, it was declared in the joint statement issued from the Fox Film headquarters, that negotiations will be "finalized as soon as the necessary final contracts can be drawn, regulations of various kinds complied with and necessary corporate action taken."

Mr. Schenck, en route to England, verified his resignation by ship-to-shore telephone to Kinematograph Weekly, adding that there is no truth to the report that his and Twentieth Century's association indicated a three-corner merger with MGM as the third angle. In London also the Donada-Deutsch theatre interests expressed complete surprise at the news of Mr. Schenck's move, saying they were awaiting Mr. Schenck's arrival to discuss affiliation and expansion with United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., a move still considered possible.

UA Principals Explain

Some of the producing members of United Artists offered the industry an explanation of the move, the basis of which had been kept secret the past several months. A joint statement issued by Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and Samuel Goldwyn read:

"Mr. Joseph M. Schenck has been negotiating with the United Artists Corporation for several months for the release of his future pictures, but failed to come to satisfactory terms. He has, therefore, apparently made arrangements elsewhere."

The retirement of Mr. Schenck from the United Artists scene was considered in most quarters to be one of the most important company changes in the industry. He held one-sixth of the company stock with partners having similar interest, including Miss Pickford, Mr. Chaplin, Mr. Goldwyn, Douglas Fairbanks and Art Cinema. The switch of distribution of Twentieth Century product to Fox leaves United Artists at this time with a feature producing roster of Mr. Goldwyn, Reliance Productions, London Films and British & Dominions.

Lichtman Goes to Coast

Al Lichtman, vice-president and general sales manager of United Artists, who was being mentioned on Tuesday as a likely successor to Mr. Schenck in the post of president, left New York on Monday to attend a directors' meeting in Hollywood, at which time plans for a replacement of the Twentieth Century lineup will be discussed. With regard to the presidency there will be no official announcement made prior to a meeting of stock holders.

Samuel Goldwyn also has been mentioned as a possible successor, although indications from Hollywood Tuesday were that at a meeting of Mr. Goldwyn, Miss Pickford and Mr. Chaplin it was decided not to name a producer for the post. This report, if true, adds strength to the possibility Mr. Lichtman will be named.

The Fox board of directors met Tuesday to ratify formally the Schenck-Twentieth Century deal.

Whether Twentieth Century will produce for Fox release the 10 pictures already selected for 1935-36 release through United Artists is one of the many points which probably will not be cleared up until Mr. Schenck's return from abroad.

However, it is expected that Mr. Zanuck will proceed with the 10 above mentioned pictures, and two others, including the following:

"Ivanhoe," adapted from the novel by Sir Walter Scott, with an all-star cast.

"The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo," starring Ronald Colman, and directed by John Ford from the scenario by Nunnally Johnson.

"Sing, Governor, Sing!" with Paul Whiteman and his band, Phil Baker, and his stooges, Beetle and Bottle; and Rubinoff. Songs and musical score by Gus Kahn and Arthur Johnson.

"The Diamond Horseshoe," starring Lawrence Tibbett, with screenplay by Bess Meredyth and George Marion, Jr.

"Shark Island," starring Fredric March, the screenplay based on the life of Dr. Samuel Alexander Mud from the book by his daughter.

"Professional Soldier," starring Wallace Beery, with the scenario by Harold Long.

Four for which no stars have been selected are "Nile Patrol," by Phillip McDonald; "Gentlemen, the King!" by Howard Smith; "Earthbound," by W. P. Lipscomb, and "It Had to Happen," by Howard Smith.

While the affiliation of Twentieth Century with Fox was being announced in New York, Mr. Zanuck was returning to Hollywood from a three weeks' shooting trip in Alaska. He was scheduled to start work on "Sing, Governor, Sing!" early in June.

Fox will not start releasing Twentieth Century pictures until next fall, when the new Zanuck product goes into distribution. The deal in negotiation will not affect pictures already made for United Artists release.

Miss Pickford announced she will go ahead with plans to make three features, beginning this summer, the first for fall release. Mr. Goldwyn plans 12 for 1935-36 and with the product of British producers, including London Films, which still has three years to go on its United Artists contract, United Artists should have about 24 pictures.

Fox "Met" Participation Stands

Mr. Schenck's move to Fox Film will not, as is described elsewhere in this issue, disturb his participation in the reorganization of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses. Mr. Schenck still retains control of United Artists Theatre Circuit Corporation, in which he is reported to own 96 per cent of the stock outstanding.

Joseph M. Schenck's career in the film and amusement business started in 1921, when, with his brother, Nicholas, he built Paradise Park at Fort George in northern New York. Later at first. In my opinion Congress will work something up to replace NRA."

From Hollywood came word that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will continue as in the past working as an independent organization servicing industry workers through four adopted studio agreements consisting of the actors' agreement pertaining to free lancers, the writers' code, the directors' code and the conciliation and arbitration board.

Compliance Director Sol Rosenblatt went to Los Angeles by plane Wednesday. Varying reports were that he was to confer with studios on wage scale maintenance and that he was to join a large producer.

In New York City local exhibitors meeting under the leadership of Milton C. Weisman unanimously adopted a resolution providing for the setting up of an arbitration board to succeed the two local code boards. The plan was proposed by Harry Brandt, president of the New York Independent Theatre Owners' Association.

That Intrastate Phase

At Washington, on the subject of the intrastate versus interstate phase of the Supreme Court ruling, it was commented that producers could relieve themselves of all responsibility by selling their entire output to a distributor as it left the studio. They then would be engaged solely in intrastate commerce. Where a producer now distributes his own product, he could set up a separate distributing company.

While the distributors would be under any new legislation to control the situation, there is considerable doubt as to the position of the exhibitors. In all probability, if efforts to apply control legislation to exhibition were contested —as they undoubtedly would be—the courts might hold exhibition to be a local activity despite the fact that the supply of film might come from without the state. In the Schechter case, the company received its supply of chickens from outside the state, but was held by the court to be engaged primarily in intrastate business.

With producers and exhibitors out, there would be little or nothing gained by putting the distributors under regulation, and the same argument applies with equal force to many other industries.

Several suggestions for dealing with the situation have been proposed to the Administration. The simplest is for establishment of a commission to study the whole subject and report when Congress convenes next January. Another is for use of the trade practice submittal plan of the Federal Trade Commission, under which the industries could carry their trade practice provisions to that body and, with due regard for the antitrust laws, ban unfair competitive practices.

Gordon Extends Circuit

Sol E. Gordon of the Jefferson Amusement Company, Beaumont, Texas, has purchased the Dixie, in Bryan; Rialto, Jacksonville; Austin in Seguin and Stone Fort in Nacogdoches from Inca Theatres, headed by Claude Ezell and W. G. Underwood.

Named Branch Manager

S. Nagler has been named United Artists branch manager in Vancouver, succeeding David Griesdorf, who has been assigned to Winnipeg. Phil Sherman, formerly in Winnipeg, has been transferred to New Haven.

BROADWAY STAGE IN HOLLYWOOD

New York went to Hollywood this week, and again arose discussion of Hollywood as production center for tryouts of plays destined for the screen.

The road company of "Three Men on a Horse" moved into the Biltmore with most of the Warner stars on hand to greet the show.

Clifford Odets' two plays, "Waiting for Lefty" and "'Till the Day I Die," opened to quite a different, but none the less enthusiastic audience at the Hollywood Playhouse with excellent amateur casts.

Otto Kruger and Martha Sleeper still are playing in "Accent on Youth" at Henry Duffy's El Capitan Theatre. "The Vagabond King," "The Chocolate Soldier," and "Blossom Time" are scheduled for a week each at the Philharmonic. Bert Lytell opens Monday at the Belasco in "The First Legion."

Mexican Producer Sees Need of English Versions

If Mexican producers are to obtain an adequate return on their investment, they must make English versions of feature pictures. This conclusion has been reached by the Impulsora Cinematografica, S. A., backed by American and Mexican interests, which began operation last October and has two successful pictures to its account, "Cruz Diablo" ("Cross Devil") and "Maria Elena" ("Mary Helen").

According to the company's president, Paul H. Bush, leading Mexico City automobile dealer, English versions are essential for Spanish spoken pictures made in Mexico as the Spanish market is insufficient for a good financial return on the productions. Of course, native Mexican songs, music and dancing must be incorporated in the English versions. This has been done with "Maria Elena," a melodrama of the tropics set to music, and made by Americans and Mexicans in the jungles of Vera Cruz state at an investment of 200,000 pesos ($60,000, U. S.), a record outlay for a Mexican-made picture by a native company.

County Seat Sees First Talker

The town of McArthur, county seat of Vinton county, in Ohio, with a population of 1,200, had its first talking picture recently, when a portable equipment was used in the Memorial Auditorium. The town had a theatre in the old Opera House in the silent days, but the Opera House closed several years ago, and there has been no theatre there since.

he and his brother purchased Palisades Park at Fort Lee, N. J., which they still own today While active in the management of Palisades he became associated with the late Marcus Loew as one of the chief figures in Loew Theatrical Enterprises. Ultimately he became identified with production and introduced many of the industry's outstanding stars to the American public. Foremost among these was Norma Talmadge, whom he married and divorced; Buster Keaton, Constance Talmadge and many others. On Dec. 4, 1924, Mr. Schenck was elected chairman of the board of United Artists, which had been formed in 1919 as a releasing organization for the independent films of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith.

Immediately after his appointment he began expanding United Artists and during 1925 and 1926 Norma Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Corinne Griffith, John Barrymore, Morris Gest, Samuel Goldwyn and other outstanding independents aligned themselves with Mr. Schenck. On May 23, 1926, he announced organization of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., 20 prerelease theatres, and on April 4, 1927 the stockholders of United Artists Corp. elected him president, to succeed Hiram Abrams, who died in 1926.

"Moscow Nights" Korda's Next

United Artists on Tuesday announced that "Moscow Nights" is the next production on the schedule of Alexander Korda with Anthony Asquith directing.

Samuel Goldwyn said he has signed Joel McCrea to a five-year contract, his first assignment to be the lead in "Barbary Coast" opposite Miriam Hopkins. The script has just been completed by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur. It will be directed by Howard Hawks.

Mr. Goldwyn also announced that he has signed Jane Murfin, who wrote "Lilac Time," "Daybreak," "Information, Please," "Smilin' Through," to a long-term writing contract. Miss Murfin immediately will terminate her association with the RKO studios where she has been a writer and associate producer.

Herbert Wilcox made known a new production for Jack Buchanan for United Artists release, the story being an adaptation of Alice Duer Miller's "Come Out of the Pantry." The cast, Mr. Wilcox said, is to be composed almost entirely of American players, with the exception of Buchanan.

Shares Retirement Approved

The board of directors of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation last week approved retirement on June 15 of 146,691⅜ shares outstanding of the company's preferred stock at par, stockholders receiving the par value of $27 per share in addition to the regular seven per cent dividend of 47½ cents, due June 15. Retirement of the issue involves an outlay of $4,030,235. A new security issue is expected to be announced.

Directors of Loew's, Inc., voted the regular quarterly dividend of 50 cents a share on the common stock, payable July 1 to holders of record June 14.

Admission Taxes Up

Admission tax collections in April totaled $1,157,970, it was reported in Washington last week by the Internal Revenue Bureau. This compares with collections of $1,283,595 in March and $969,210 in April, 1934.

PARAMOUNT BOARD VOTE MONDAY WILL START ERA OF NEW COMPANY

Directorate Then Will Choose Operating Officers Before Mid-June; Securities Commission Starts Formal Study

Paramount Publix reorganization enters upon its final phase on Monday when the stockholders meet in New York to elect the board of directors, who, as their representatives in the management of the new Paramount Pictures Corporation, will convene a few days later to select the officers to operate. Election of officers, to take place before mid-June, will bring the last formal action, a request to the court for discharge of trustees and the receivership, thereby taking the corporation, completely reorganized and rejuvenated, out of the lengthy and costly process of rehabilitation, and its attendant complex entanglements with the federal courts, lawyers and creditor groups in which it has been enmeshed since the voluntary petition was filed Jan. 26, 1933.

The Securities and Exchange Commission undertook this week its formal investigation of the reorganization plan; Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe approved the new by-laws; interested groups were completing the personnel structure of the board about to be elected, and indications were forthcoming that there will be a three months' extension from June 27 for agreements between the corporation and certain of its theatre operating partners. Some 150 theatres are involved. Judge Coxe approved the form of indenture securing the new debentures.

In line with the study of reorganization of all bankrupts, the Securities and Exchange Commission was obtaining information about the Paramount plan from Kuhn, Loeb & Company, the investment banking houses of Lehman Brothers and Lazard Freres, and the two protective committees, one of bondholders, headed by Frank A. Vanderlip, and the other for the common stockholders, headed by Duncan A. Holmes, and from Atlas Corporation, all of which have participated in drafting the plan. Others contacted by the Commission were Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballantine, counsel for the Paramount trustees, and the law firms of Cook, Nathan and Lehman; Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner and Reed, and Archibald Thomas.

A subcommittee of the new board which will be ratified by the stockholders on June 3rd, as provided for in the bylaws approved by Judge Coxe last week, was deciding on the terms which each of the 16 directors will serve, whether for one, two or three years. The board is not expected to reconvene to elect officers until about June 12th and will then meet once monthly thereafter.

The subcommittee is composed of Frank A. Vanderlip, Percy H. Johnston, H. A. Fortington and Maurice Newton.

Immediately involved in the extension of theatre operating contracts are 150 theatres, operated as follows: Karl Hoblitzelle, 84 theatres in Texas; Lucas and Jenkins, 26 in Georgia; A. H. Blank, 30 in Iowa and Nebraska, and George Trendle, 10 in Detroit. These agreements expire June 27th and the three-month renewals are being submitted to the four partner groups, although already informally approved by both management and partners. E. J. Sparks would return 11 Miami theatres to Paramount by a pending deal.

The Paramount theatre structure will emerge from reorganization with interests of varying nature in 970 theatres in 39 states and in 240 additional houses in Canada and abroad—a total of 1,210 theatres, operated for the most part under partnership arrangements with some 39 companies, which in almost all cases have operating control.

Paramount Publix trustees late last week asked the federal court to approve the pooling of Paramount, Comerford and RKO theatres in Rochester, N. Y.

Loew's to Lease Mayfair from Reade

Contracts will be signed Monday for Loew's to take over the Mayfair theatre in New York from Walter Reade on a 10-year lease. Loew's insisted on a lease as well on the ground on which the Mayfair is built, and which is owned by an estate and handled by Chase National Bank. Loew's will continue at the Mayfair the policy in force at the New York, which it vacates next week.

Mr. Reade and Charles Bryan surrendered at the district attorney's office this week in answer to an indictment charging them with malicious mischief in the amount of $25,000. It is alleged that they and three others damaged the interior of the Astor theatre. Mr. Reade had owned and operated the Astor, but it had gone into receivership.

Rothafel Files Details Of $211,404 RKO Claim

Samuel L. (Roxy) Rothafel's claim of $211,404 against RKO for alleged breach of an employment contract was detailed in a bill of particulars filed in New York federal court last week in support of the claim. A supplemental claim on 10,000 shares of RKO Class A stock, or equivalent, was filed.

Mr. Rothafel declares his RKO contract as director of the Radio City Music Hall provided for $2,000 per week and the 10,000 shares of stock. He contends he did not receive the stock and was paid only $1,000 per week for the first year, then nothing after that. Irving Trust Company, RKO trustee, is contesting the claim.

Expect $150,000 Roxy Net

Net profit for the Roxy theatre in New York is expected to reach $150,000 for the year ended June 15, after taxes and charges on receivership certificates. The date marks the first year of Howard Cullman's operation as trustee. He was formerly receiver.

Television Cable Tests Next April

Initial tests of the new co-axial television-telephone cable to be installed between New York and Philadelphia will be made next April, it was revealed this week by engineers of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. The experiment is designed to indicate the practicability of television for evryday use, such as permitting persons to see each other over the long-distance telephone.

Development of the new high-fidelity transmission line, which is capable of conducting frequencies up to 1,000,000 cycles, was announced late in January.

An invention of the Bell Laboratory engineers, the co-axial cable will make it possible to transmit the equivalent of 200 or more telephone calls simultaneously between New York and Philadelphia over one circuit. Single-wire lines now in use, with the aid of all modern contrivances such as "carrier-current multiplex systems," are each limited to about four simultaneous telephone conversations. Cost of the experimental installation will be $580,000, it is estimated.

In Europe it was learned, motion picture and radio broadcasting interests met in a secret conference last month at Nice, France, to work out cooperation whereby news events would be presented on motion picture screens in the form of "visual radio newsreels" when the art of television reaches that stage.

The International Educational Cinematographic Institute then proceeded to organize a central bureau for documentation of all questions pertaining to television.

In Hollywood it was announced that the television subcommittee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Research Council has added Wesley C. Miller of MGM and William Mueller of Warner to its membership.

The committee's first step will be preparation of a summary of all published material on television in technical and scientific journals, then a study of the actual status of television transmission and reception equipment.

In France the first official television broadcast took place on a wave-length of 175 meters, with 28 images a second and a 60-line horizontal scan. Receiving sets are reported to be ready for the market at about $800.

Permission to issue 300,000 shares of $1 par value common stock was sought from the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission by American Radio and Television Corp., Astoria, L. I. Joseph La Via is president.

WARNER TO SPLIT WITH COMPOSERS' SOCIETY IN FORMING OWN BUREAU

Issuance of Music Licenses by Warner May Go on "Per Performance" Basis; Transcription Makers Are in Quandary

Warner Brothers and its music publishing subsidiaries shortly will announce officially the severance of relations with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers—a move secretly underway for several months. Warner executives said this week that the company will discontinue its agreement with the Society, but with licensing terms for performing rights to the Warner music libraries still to be determined, they declined to discuss plans or the reasons for the break.

The Society was reported to have assured radio broadcasters that any contract signed with the Society would guarantee use of the Warner catalogues, but Warner, which is proceeding with establishment of its own performing rights bureau, has notified the broadcasters that, subsequent to Dec. 31, 1935, if they wish to utilize its catalogues, negotiations must be conducted directly with Warner Bros.

It is understood that the Society, meeting with various broadcasting representatives last week, declared openly that regardless of whether Warner extended its agreement the organization would make available the company's copyrighted music starting Jan. 1, 1936, adding that it was prepared to take the issue to the United States supreme court, if necessary.

Up to the Courts

Although E. C. Mills, general manager of the society, on Monday refused to discuss the situation, it was reported last week that officials of the Society had explained that in signing with it, the author of a musical composition waives his common-law rights and invests in the Society all rights to his work upon its creation. These officials reputedly said it would be up to the courts to decide wherein this waiver conflicts with the rights held by the publisher of the work, who is the copyright owner of record.

While E. H. Morris, head of Witmark, principal Warner music subsidiary, declined to make any official expression, it is thought that Warner now contemplates issuance of music performance licenses on a "per performance" basis instead of a blanket arrangement. The film company has available the catalogues of three music companies—Harms, Witmark and Renick—which it controls through Music Publishers' Holding Corp., and is expected to retain the policy of a split between publisher and writer, abandoning group classifications of writers for royalty purposes and, instead, paying the writer direct.

A feeling of uneasiness has arisen among the makers of syndicated electrical transcriptions, with National Broadcasting Company especially anxious to know what assurance it can have that the syndicated series currently being prepared will not be barred from broadcasting over stations to which they are sold. Another factor in this situation is the fact that to date at least 10 per cent of the country's leading popular music publishers have failed to renew their Society membership agreements, all of which expire Dec. 31, 1935.

Officials of NBC are reported to have suggested that one way out would be an understanding that any publisher in granting a mechanical license prior to December 31 agrees that, regardless of his membership status in the Society thereafter, the users involved will not be subject to a higher rate than that asked by the Society.

On the other hand, publishers who have not extended their contracts contend that any such stipulation would prove impracticable and that the only thing left to the transcription maker to do is take a chance on the differences between themselves and the Society being ironed out and its membership setup remaining intact.

May Ask Injunction

The Society, in an endeavor to forestall an early trial of the Government suit to invalidate its music licensing procedure, may apply soon, through Nathan Burkan, its counsel, for a writ of prohibition denying the federal district court in New York the right to proceed with the trial, scheduled to start June 10th.

In a letter to MOTION PICTURE HERALD this week, E. C. Mills said that the article in the May 11th issue was "somewhat misleading, though entirely unintentionally so, and is causing some confusion amongst exhibitors who are prompted by this wording to assume that ASCAP has agreed to extend the old license terms, in effect previous to the arrangement made with the Exhibitors Emergency Committee, to the end of 1935."

"This," wrote Mr. Mills, "is not the case. ASCAP agreed that it would extend its present rates until the end of 1935. The confusion arises through some exhibitors now attempting to construe that the rate in effect prior to the increases negotiated with the Exhibitors Emergency Committee has been continued in effect until the end of the current year.

"At the time of the negotiations as to the new rates with the Exhibitors Emergency Committee, it was understood that ASCAP would permit licenses then in effect to run at the stated rate until the end of the contract year, when the new rate would go into effect."

The Society encountered still more difficulties this week when exhibitors in New Orleans, said to be led by Alex Dumestre, a lawyer and also an exhibitor, declared they would refuse to pay their music tax licenses until the Society's representatives show they have paid for the licenses called for under a new state law. This tax is $5,000 annually in each parish where collections are made.

Easing Dual Ban For Kansas City

Exchanges in Kansas City are tending to a greater leniency in their attitude toward the long standing demand of local exhibitors for double features, and in some cases have lifted restrictions imposed at the beginning of the season.

All large distributors, with the exception of Columbia and Universal, had adopted a firm rule that no feature playing first run would be released for subsequent dual billing. Now, some features sold on flat rental and considered too weak, are to be given dual classification by Warner and Paramount. None of the larger pictures will be released for duals by Warner, Paramount, Fox, MGM, Radio and United Artists. The Fox exchange, however, is ready to meet exhibitor demands if subsequent runs agree to run duals behind single bill playdates in the same category.

The plan to organize New York exhibitors with the intent of eliminating double features and increasing admission prices has been abandoned, according to Harry Brandt, because of lack of support from exhibitors.

The Warner in Pittsburgh, for the last year a double feature house, has returned to single features with United Artists' "Let 'em Have It." The continued policy of the house will depend largely on the availability of product, according to local executives.

Koenig New Chairman of Academy Research Group

William Koenig, executive manager of the Warner Coast studio, has been named chairman of the research council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast. He succeeds Samuel J. Briskin, following the Academy plan of rotating the chairmanship. The council includes one technical representative from each studio.

Through the Academy's technical committee, MGM's development, the automatic start system of controlling camera and recording, has been made available to all studios. Douglas Shearer, MGM recording director, member of the Academy research council, placed the development before the council.

AMPA Head Confers

Bruce Gallup, president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, New York, met with the board of directors last week on next season's plans. The first open meeting will be held June 6.

EQUITY TILT HALTS SUNDAY SHOWS PENDING REFERENDUM OF MEMBERS

Plea by Brady Fails to Win Immediate Approval for Performances Legalized for New York State Theatres

Resident voting members of Actors' Equity Association in New York are divided in opinion on the advisability of Sunday legitimate performances in New York state, as legalized by the Berg law. Despite the insistent demands of many members and the pleas of William A. Brady, representing producers, that Equity's council countenance participation of its members in Sunday shows, disposition of the matter will again be delayed while the issue is submitted to a referendum of the voting membership. This will be done at once.

The results of Monday's balloting were:

For flat acceptance of the measures	10
Acceptance on a one-year trial basis	36
Flat refusal under all circumstances	152
Qualified acceptance stipulating a remuneration of 2/8ths of a week's salary for each Sunday performance and a guarantee of 24 consecutive hours' rest in every week	152
Total ballots	350

The vote met strong opposition from Broadway managers, especially that phase stipulating two-eights of a week's pay for Sunday performances.

As to enforcement of more stringent regulation of working conditions in summer theatres, it had been generally thought Equity would demand that producers pay the code minimum of $40 a week for senior members and $25 for junior members. With the supreme court blow to the codes, however, it is thought doubtful whether Equity will be able to formulate a plan in time.

Brady Makes Dramatic Plea

William A. Brady, both a producer and a member of Equity, made a dramatic last-minute plea for Sunday performances.

"It's going to mean something to the actors, theatres, stage hands and perpetuation of the American theatre," Mr. Brady said. "Yesterday in the Capitol theatre (Loew's first-run film theatre) Eva Le Gallienne played four times in a day in a dramatic piece. I ask you whether that's fair play for one of the great people of the theatre?"

The membership concurred with a chorus of "no's."

"I appeal to you in fair play for the good old theatre," Mr. Brady continued. "It's on its last legs. The theatre declined at the height of prosperity. Evidence shows that the people want the spoken drama back in the tank towns of the United States. I say Actors' Equity should give it a try."

After members Theodore Jones, Jack Byrne and Henry S. Norell had pleaded for Sunday shows E. J. Blunkall, speaking for five councillors, said he did not like the idea of "politicians in Albany telling me when my Sabbath will be," and asserted that the Berg measures were unconstitutional.

Secondary only to Sunday shows in importance was a bitter debate between Frank Gillmore, Equity president, and Sam Jaffe and Phillip Loeb, leaders of the insurgent Actors' Forum, which is within the union, over the constitutionality of a vote which saw the administration candidates for 13 positions on the council, including three replacements, elected by 565 ballots to 183, with 160 scratched ballots. Mr. Gillmore adjourned the meeting while Mr. Jaffe was arguing against the vote.

The feud between Mr. Gillmore and the Actors' Forum centered around the method of sending the administration's and Forum's tickets of candidates to out-of-town members. The administration's ticket was sent out in advance of the Forum's, although the latter's had been filed 20 days before the meeting, as provided in Equity's constitution. The council of Equity then ruled that out-of-town members who already had sent in their votes before receiving the independent ticket could not vote again, except if they appeared at the meeting in person.

Mr. Gillmore said that the regular ticket was sent out in advance only because that had been the custom and the council did not know of any opposition or independent ticket.

Mr. Loeb pressed Mr. Gillmore for an explanation of what section of the association's constitution forbids sending out a new ballot taking precedence over all others and including both tickets, and Mr. Gillmore gave the floor to Paul N. Turner, Equity counsel.

Mr. Turner referred to Section 7 of Article 3 of the constitution, but later said his ruling against the ballot was based mainly on his "interpretation" of the constitution and precedence. Mr. Jaffe accused Mr. Turner of "passing the buck."

The councillors elected were Walter Abel, James Bell, Humphrey Bogart, Beulah Bondi, Eliot Cabot, Alexandra Carlisle, Pedro de Cordoba, Edward Fielding, Priestly Morrison and Blanche Yurka. Replacements were Helen Broderick, to serve until 1937; Ernest Glendenning, until 1936, and Kenneth MacKenna, until 1938.

The treasurer's report showed that, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1935, Equity had the best year financially since the start of the depression, with a surplus of $13,685 for the year and $329,925 total surplus on hand.

Adoption of a plan to revive the theatre in cities outside New York and to provide employment for needy actors through cooperation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration with theatre owners, producers and labor unions of the stage, was voted last week by the NRA Code Authority for the Legitimate Theatre. The plan provides that theatre owners enter into leaseholds with a central board which then would offer a debenture bond issue on the leaseholds to the RFC in return for a loan.

Pemberton Chairman

Brock Pemberton was named chairman of a committee to discuss the plan with RFC and FERA officials in Washington. Other members are Frank Gillmore, Marcus Heiman, Philip Wittenberg, counsel to the Code Authority, and William A. Brady, chairman of the Code Authority. Mr. Pemberton said the committee would go to Washington this week.

The plan, drafted by Mr. Gillmore with the assistance of Mr. Wittenberg and Mrs. Dorothy Bryant, executive secretary of Chorus Equity, specifies that theatre owners, actors and producing managers each have five representatives, the Government ten. Theatre owners entering into leaseholds would have to insure a 30-week booking annually. With the loan the board would seek to assist in the production of about 50 shows. FERA would enter the picture by providing immediate relief for unemployed actors, musicians and stagehands. They would rehabilitate dark theatres.

The Wagner bill authorizing incorporation of an American National Theatre and Academy was passed by the U. S. Senate Tuesday.

BITTER EQUITY FIGHT EXPECTED

One of the bitterest fights Broadway has witnessed in many years shortly will be launched when Actors' Equity takes action on the demands of its acting membership for pay during rehearsal period. Broadway's producing managers will, for the most part, fight to the last ditch against any such innovation, although they will be forced to abide by Equity's decision.

At present, actors are not paid during the first four weeks of rehearsal. After the fourth week, if additional rehearsals are considered necessary, the manager must pay full salaries. After the second week of rehearsals, the manager also must advance to his players the equivalent of one week's salary to enable them to carry on until their regular salary is received. This sum, however, is deducted from salary, the method of deduction being arranged between actor and producer.

Charge Conspiracy In Theatre Action

Hearings on the old $10,000,000 Loew-Momand suit against Paramount; the filing of a new conspiracy suit against Warner and others in connection with West Virginia theatre operations, and advancement of court procedure in the Ledrik-Strand $1,050,000 New Jersey suit against distributors, were the principal developments this week involving motion picture companies in anti-trust actions.

A suit charging conspiracy was filed in supreme court, New York, on Monday against Warner and a number of other corporations and individuals financially interested in the Capitol, Wheeling, W. Va., by Clarence H. Marrow, holder of $1,500 of first mortgage 6½ per cent serial gold bonds of the Capitol Theatre Company, which operates the house, and is also a defendant.

The defendants are charged with purchasing three other theatres in Wheeling through pooling agreements to the detriment of the Capitol. They also are accused of buying inferior product for the theatre to injure its business and of engaging in other acts to reduce the value of the property so that they might obtain it at a reduced price.

Mr. Marrow, who filed the action in behalf of other bondholders as well as himself, asks that the defendants be enjoined from carrying on the alleged conspiracy and that the bondholders be given a chance to rehabilitate the theatre.

A hearing on exceptions to the $10,000,000 anti-trust claims filed by E. M. Loew of Boston and A. B. Momand of Oklahoma against Paramount Publix was asked for June 5 before Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe in New York last week by the Paramount trustees. The court is considering the request. Loew and Momand filed claims of approximately $5,000,000 each against Paramount, representing triple damages for anti-trust suits pending against the company.

In New Jersey Jacob L. Newman was appointed by Federal Judge William Clark at Newark to hear testimony by officials of six major distributors and their subsidiaries in contesting jurisdiction of a suit there for damages of $1,050,000. No date has been set for the hearing. The defendants claim they have no specific interests in New Jersey and cannot be sued there without their consent.

The plaintiffs are the Ledirk Amusement Company, operating the Palace, Orange, and Strand Theatre Operating Company, controlling the Strand, Orange. Suits asking for triple damages under the anti-trust laws were filed and also equity suits asking dissolution of the alleged trust and an injunction. The plaintiffs named Warner, Paramount, Fox, RKO, United Artists and Columbia as a combination in restraint of trade by controlling booking and releases.

Eleazer Price, Veteran Theatre Publicist, Dies

Eleazer D. Price, veteran theatrical manager and press agent, died at the age of 86 last week at Bellevue Hospital, New York, of arteriosclerosis. A newspaper man in his earlier years, he was dramatic critic of the Detroit Tribune.

The most significant move in a long time on the industry's checkerboard is the Fox-Twentieth Century alliance. Of outstanding importance is the added strength, in product and in personnel, which this move brings under the Fox banner.

With the astute Mr. Joseph M. Schenck as chairman of the board, associated with Mr. Sidney R. Kent as president, the Fox company will be in an exceptionally favored position. On product the contributions which will be offered to the program by Mr. Darryl Zanuck will make the line-up one which must be reckoned with in every theatre situation.

With Mr. Schenck as chairman of the board resident in Hollywood, there will commence a business association between Mr. Schenck and Mr. Winfield Sheehan which follows a long and intimate personal friendship. The new set-up for Fox is impressive. Much will be expected from it.

Fox's gain is United Artists' loss, even though only temporarily. United Artists has played a leading role in industry affairs ever since its formation by the late Hiram Abrams. It has been responsible for bringing to the theatres many great attractions. As a distribution organization under the direction of Mr. Al Lichtman it has been one of the most competent leasing firms. It has even been good enough to keep Mr. Sam Goldwyn satisfied from time to time. There still remains a great field and a great opportunity for United Artists, especially under the skillful direction of Mr. Lichtman. The vacancy left by Twentieth Century may well provide an opening for other good lines of independent product.

KEEP BLOCK-BOOKING ISSUE WITHIN INDUSTRY

Block-booking is a trade practice which certain persons in the industry think is advantageous to their interests. There are other persons in the industry who regard the practice as something detrimental to their interest. One group wants the practice retained; the other wants to get rid of it. As in many matters of legitimate controversy there are arguments on both sides. At any rate, both parties to the controversy are entitled to their opinions and are also entitled to exert themselves in all proper ways toward either maintaining the practice or eliminating it.

But, quite obviously, there are limits of fact, of truth and of reason beyond which neither party has any right to go regardless of how intense may be either their love or the hatred of the system.

Strangely enough it has been the record for many years that immediately socially-minded groups commence to take an interest in the motion picture question the subject of block-booking comes in for a lot of attention. This attention is directly traceable to the activities of persons who want the practice changed or perhaps eliminated entirely. The interest of these groups in the trade practice question of block-booking is enlisted on the grounds that if pictures were not sold in block no pictures would be exhibited which contain censorable material. This is a plausible explanation but is not true in point of fact, reason and on the record.

To ask the theatreman to accept full responsibility for the contents of pictures which he is not responsible for producing, pictures which in a vast number of instances—whether he bought singly or in block—he would not be able to give careful examination in advance of contracting for and showing, would be unsound and unreasonable. The theatreman with a heavy fixed investment and with heavy current expenses could not be expected to stand by and wait upon chance to decide whether or not he is going to have a regular supply of exhibitable pictures.

The record is particularly clear on the point that the exhibitor has not uniformly exerted himself toward the cancellation only of those pictures which contain objectionable material. While every exhibitor properly reserves to himself the right to show or to reject any subject as he sees fit, responsibility for the character of pictures has largely been left with the producer. Although thoroughly objectionable pictures have been shown it is hardly conceivable that any American court, regardless of contract, would compel an exhibitor to show a plainly objectionable picture, risking his public's displeasure and threatening the security of his investment. Pictures poor in entertainment value are widely canceled while some pictures containing objectionable material, and at the same time of popular interest, are played.

While the exhibitor shares in the responsibility for showing an objectionable picture, chief responsibility for such a picture lies at the producer's door. To attempt to absolve the producer from responsibility, leaving him free to make anything he might wish to make, and then for the welfare of the screen seek to fix responsibility on the theatre alone, would be futile and destructive. The public's interest can best be served by leaving responsibility for the character of pictures with the man who makes them, where it belongs, and not by transferring it to the theatreman who must show such pictures as are available, regardless of content.

To oppose the practice of block-booking and to seek to eliminate it is a perfectly proper course for those who don't like it, provided they stay within the facts. But

Two Fox Newsreel Cameramen Die in Army Plane Crash

Flying on an assignent covering Army Air Corps maneuvers, A. P. Alexander, cameraman, and Lewis Tappan, sound engineer, Fox Movietone News' San Francisco crew, were killed Tuesday when the plane from which they were making pictures crashed and burned. Two army men, Lieutenant Edgar W. Root, pilot, and Private Guy F. Poorer, were also killed when the Martin bomber in which they were carrying the newsreel men got out of control and dashed to the ground in a gully at Sequoia National Park, California.

News of the fatal crash was received at the Fox Movietone News office over the United Press news ticker service. It came in as General Manager Truman Talley was about to leave for the Fox annual sales convention at Chicago. The two men were well known to the entire Fox personnel, both having worked out of New York at various times.

Tappan and Alexander had returned from the Orient about a year ago where they had flown over fifty thousand miles in all sorts of makeshift aircraft. Len Hammond, now in New York, who organized the Tokio branch of Fox Movietone, recalled one assignment he had given the men while they were in the East which sent them 2,500 miles up the Yangtze river in a Loening amphibian which was held together with strings. They also covered the bombardment of Shanghai from the air and later flew into the interior of China to picture for their newsreel General Chiang Kai Shek's "War of Attrition Against China's Red Manace". They covered the war in Manchuria which preceded the establishment of the present state by the Japanese and were a source of information as to what was going on for the newspaper men assigned to the front.

Leaving China and Manchuria after covering the coronation of Emperor Kang Teh, the pair went to the Philippines and made the first comprehensive air pictures on these islands. With the cooperation of the Army Air Corps they promoted a series of flights over all the interesting landmarks and many a head hunter in the upper reaches of the Baguio saw an airplane for the first time as the result of the flights.

Recalled to the United States about a year ago they were assigned to cover the San Francisco territory.

Both were 31 years old and married. Alexander leaves a widow and a two-year-old son who was born in China. Tappan is survived by his widow and two young sons, the oldest of whom is not yet four. Alexander was from Chicago, Tappan from Rhode Island. The former started his career as a still photographer on the Chicago Tribune. His motion picture work began on the old Fox (silent) News. He was considered one of the most capable newsreel photographers especially in the air. Tappan, a graduate electrical engineer from M. I. T. started in radio but joined motion pictures with the advent of sound. He was the first man to record sound in the African jungles, having been a member of the Martin Johnson expedition which made "Congorilla" for Fox Movietone News.

to seek to draft public support on a matter of trade controversy by deceiving public groups as to the public's interest is thoroughly reprehensible. The campaign against block-booking has led nowhere with that method and is not likely to get anywhere! Intelligent investigators of industry affairs quickly learn that while block-booking may have disadvantageous features insofar as the buyers of films in certain instances are concerned, still nothing that can be done for or against block-booking is even likely to lead in itself to a solution of the problem of the moral influence of motion pictures.

The interest of public groups in the campaign against block-booking has been achieved largely through misrepresentation of the facts having to do with its practical effect upon the public's interest in clean pictures. If the practice needs to be altered it should be gone into legitimately within the trade as a trade matter. These methods of social and political pressure prove futile in the long run and in the meantime reflect no credit upon their sponsors, particularly when the public groups learn, as inevitably they must, that they have been sent on a wild goose chase.

DuWorld May Sue Over Film Ban

DuWorld Pictures threatened this week to take court action if the decision of Irwin Esmond, head of the motion picture division of the New York State Department of Education, banning "Spring Shower," a Hungarian-produced feature released in this country by DuWorld, is not reversed.

Intimations of possible court action were made Tuesday by Arthur Garfield Hay, attorney for DuWorld, following the arguing of an appeal before the state censor board at Albany and the special showings of the film in question to Dr. Frank Graves, Commissioner of Education. The film, denied a license in March by Mr. Esmond on the grounds that it would tend to corrupt morals, was directed by Paul Fejos.

Variety Club of Albany, Tent No. 9, held a testimonial luncheon in honor of Charlie Johnston on Monday. Mr. Johnston was presented with a complete set of Bobby Jones golf clubs.

Reel's Cameraman Barely Escapes A Firing Squad

The motion picture newsreel apparently does not have the right to "free speech" in revolutionary-torn Cuba, where, late last week, a newsreel cameraman narrowly escaped death before a firing squad because he filmed the execution of a rebel.

Abelardo Domingo, newsreel photographer for Universal, had taken a complete pictorial record, unmolested, of the execution of Jose Costiello y Puentas, at Santa Clara on May 8. Puentas had shot Lieutenant Juan Alvarez, a leader of an important contingent of the regular Cuban army. He was court-martialed and convicted. Domingo walked into the prison yard on the morning of the execution. No one said anything to Domingo. He said nothing to anybody, taking the pictures of the execution and shipping them to Universal in New York.

Last week Universal Newsreel No. 353, containing the scenes, reached Havana. The authorities saw them and, according to the "grapevine" reaching New York, rushed Domingo before a firing squad. George Naylor, of El Paso, Texas, manager of the Havana office of Universal, and Dr. Jorge Casuso, attorney for the company's Cuban division, interceded, and, although they succeeded in saving the life of the cameraman, they in turn were incarcerated at Cabanas Fortress. All three, however, were just as suddenly released on Monday.

Bright Made First Division Treasurer

Willis Bright, formerly associated with the Vitagraph Co., has been elected treasurer of First Division, Amos Hiatt, acting treasurer, will continue with the company in a new but as yet unannounced capacity.

Pending distribution deals between First Division and British producing companies, were left open to further negotiation by the board.

Nicholas M. Ludington, head of First Division Productions and a vice-president of First Division Exchanges, arrived from Hollywood to participate in the meeting, as did Henry Hobart, production head of First Division.

KAO on Board of Fox Metropolitan

United Artists will give up one place on the board of the reorganized Fox Metropolitan Playhouses to give Keith-Albee-Orpheum representation on the directorate for a consideration of a KAO 10 per cent stock interest in the new company, it was revealed last week when amendments to the Joseph M. Schenck-Fox Theatres plan of reorganization for Fox Metropolitan were made known. The resignation of Mr. Schenck as head of United Artists will in no way affect the relationship of United Artists Theatre Circuit to the reorganized Fox Metropolitan. Mr. Schenck is said to own 96 per cent of the stock in United Artists Theatres and his move to the chairmanship of Fox Film Corporation is regarded by many creditors as strengthening the plan worked out by him and Milton C. Weisman, receiver for Fox Theatres.

That Mr. Schenck's resignation from United Artists will not affect his status in the Fox Metropolitan plan was held certain by those associated with him in the reorganization, as well as counsel for Fox Metropolitan's creditors. It was pointed out that Mr. Schenck's interest in United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., which is to acquire one-half of the stock of the reorganized Fox Metropolitan, eliminates any difficulty in United Artists theatre company being permitted to carry out its obligations under the plan. No immediate plans are being considered for making the United Artists theatre company an adjunct of Fox Film and it will be continued under Mr. Schenck's direction.

Creditor interests pointed out on Monday that Mr. Schenck still will be able to deliver 20th Century product to Fox Metropolitan, which was one of the considerations leading to the tentative approval given the plan by the federal court several weeks ago. The product to be delivered to Fox Metropolitan by Mr. Schenck is not specifically named, an amendment referring solely to "such product as Schenck controls."

Herbert Bayard Swope, chairman of the board, will be the KAO representative on the new Fox Metropolitan directorate, replacing Harry D. Buckley, United Artists theatre head. The realignment will leave Mr. Schenck and William P. Philips as the United Artists representatives on the board, while Fox Theatres will have Samuel S. Allan and Mr. Weisman, attorneys. The sixth member, William Rhinelander Stewart, is understood to be a United Artists representative.

United Artists may acquire all of the stock in the new Fox Metropolitan held by Fox Theatres under an option contained in the plan and, it is anticipated, this will be exercised shortly after reorganization. In that event, Mr. Weisman and Mr. Allan would be displaced and United Artists representatives would be elected to succeed them.

A hearing on accepted modifications will be held Monday before Judge Julian W.

ALLIED LEADERS LOOK TO COURTS FOR ACTION

Territorial Leaders Instructed to Submit Facts on Oppression for Federal Inquiry

Exhaustive investigation of charges of oppression of independent theatre men by affiliated circuits and major distributors was promised this week after charges made at the annual convention of the Allied States Association of Exhibitors by Colonel H. A. Cole of Texas; Fred G. Weiss, John Cunningham, Charles Walder and Mrs. F. L. Liggett. The inquiry by Allied will be made immediately and will be concluded before proceeding with the convention's mandate that a committee demand of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, that restitution be made wherever damage has been done.

Sidney E. Samuelson, prior to the breaking up of the convention on Thursday, told territorial leaders to make thorough examination of all facts and submit findings to Abram F. Myers, general counsel, who, in turn, will pass them on to Allied officers if they possess sufficient merit.

The investigation is to get under way immediately and Mr. Hays is to be given every opportunity to take action if necessary. If, after this has been done, nothing is gained in the opinion of Allied, any cases of oppression will be turned over to federal authorities for prosecution.

Whether the fact that Allied may turn to the Government for redress can be construed as meaning the association will hold in check its promised lawsuits "on 100 fronts," has not been determined.

Kuykendall Replies

The reaction of affiliated circuits to charges made at the convention was reflected in a statement by Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who said:

"It is not particularly surprising that Allied, led by Abe Myers, a lawyer, and Sidney Samuelson, whose brother and partner is also a lawyer, should be stampeded into starting 'lawsuits everywhere'. Years of expensive litigation by exhibitors have settled no industry problems, from the famous Binderup case on down. No progress has been made through litigation yet. What the exhibitor actually will gain through lawsuits, other than a big bill for legal services, is vague and uncertain, but what the lawyers will gain is not at all uncertain."

The suggestion at the Allied meeting that a committee be appointed to confer with Mr. Hays was adopted on Wednesday, but the next day it was agreed that discussions with the major interests could result only in failure, so that reliance would have to be placed upon lawsuits backed up by the Federal authorities. However, it was later decided that, inasmuch as a committee had been appointed it might perhaps be well to attempt to "settle things peaceably, out of court."

On the Loew theatre program, H. M. Richey's "committee on MGM" had drawn up the following resolution:

"Whereas it has become generally known that MGM has adopted an unfair and unethical policy of intimidation, coercion and threats to build theatres in Chicago in opposition to existing theatres operated by exhibitors who have refused to accede to the unreasonable terms demanded by MGM in the sale of their pictures, now, therefore, be it resolved that such action by MGM, either implied or executed, will be condemned by every delegate present at this convention, and that each and every delegate is hereby pledging himself to submit to his respective organization for adoption a resolution expressing such condemnation of MGM's policy as will in no uncertain terms declare the wholehearted sympathy of such organization with the stand of the Chicago exhibitors and its intentions to take a similar stand if Metro persists in its aggressive policy.

Trailer for Loew Fight

"And be it further resolved, that the committee appointed at this national convention of Allied States Association be authorized to draft a copy for a trailer to be used on the screens of all Allied members throughout the nation to acquaint the public with the unfair and aggressive tactics employed by Metro, and the manner in which the public will eventually be affected."

In its fight against the major distributors and affiliated circuits, Allied delegates pledged themselves to donate 25 per cent of their box office receipts on August 5th, a Monday, on behalf of a "war chest." Allied now claims 5,000 theatre members, operating in 30 states. August 5th will be called "National Independent Allied Theatre Day."

In All but 12 States

In addition to the 30 states in which it has theatre members, Allied reported it is receiving cooperation from units in six other states. Four additional units, including North and South Carolina, are expected to join within a month, Mr. Samuelson said. Cooperating states are California, Wyoming, Colorado, Connecticut, Wisconsin and Mississippi. Non-Allied states are Arizona, New Mexico, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Kentucky, Virginia, North and South Carolina. It is understood an Allied unit is being formed in Oklahoma.

Tri-States Attacked, Defended

At the final session Aaron Saperstein called Tri-States Theatres, Inc., an "up-to-date modern racket," compelling exhibitors in the Southeast to pay tribute in the form of booking fees starting at $15 weekly and up "for the privilege of buying their pictures of them."

William K. Lucas, of Lucas & Jenkins, powerful Atlanta and state circuit operators, and Oscar Lam, who operates six theatres out of Rome, Ga., denied Mr. Saperstein's charges and described Tri-States as a "sort of mutual protective association," chiefly legislative for its 20 members. Mr. Lam said his answer was that he pays only $5.50 and runs six houses.

PATHE AND LOEW ASK SECURITIES LISTINGS

Consolidated Film Industries Also Asks Registration of Stock by Federal Bureau

Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Loew's, Inc., have filed application with the Security Exchange Commission at Washington for registration of securities. Pathe asks registration of 251,853 shares of no par preference stock issued, 7,886 shares unissued; 950,926½ shares of no par common issued, and 123,943½ shares unissued. Loew's asks registration of $8,715,000 15-year six per cent gold debentures, 136,722 shares of no par cumulative and 1,464,205 shares no par common, all issued, and 250,000 shares common unissued.

The Pathe statement shows 100 per cent ownership of Pathe International Corporation, State Theatre Company, owner of Australian Licenses, Inc., Pathegram, Inc., Pathe Studios, Inc., Pathe Sound Studios, Inc., and Pathe Company.

The stock setup of the company includes $10,000,000 in 10-year gold debentures, of which $1,996,500 is outstanding, and an authorized issue of 30,000 shares eight per cent cumulative preferred, 16,909 shares outstanding with a liability of $808,300. The liability of the outstanding Class A preference stock is carried as $243,123 and that of the outstanding common as $948,781.

Holders of 10 per cent or more of any class of security include only the Broseco Corp., 1,804 shares eight per cent stock, or 10.66 per cent, and voting trustees, 2,097 shares eight per cent stock, or 12.4 per cent.

The three highest remunerations paid by the company were reported as $20,800 to Stuart W. Webb, former president, who also was given an option on 5,700 shares preferred and 24,800 shares common as additional executive compensation; $15,600 to Arthur B. Poole, vice-president and treasurer, and $4,300 to T. P. Loach, secretary and assistant treasurer. Frank F. Kolbe is now president of the company.

The heaviest stock ownership by officers and directors included 30 shares eight per cent stock by Poole; 100 shares class A, Charles A. Stone, director; 15 shares eight per cent and 100 class A, Theodore C. Streibert, director, and 10 shares common, Charles B. Wiggin, director.

Loew's Has 83 Subsidiaries

Loew's statement shows that the company has 83 wholly-owned, 43 part-owned and 45 domestic and foreign subsidiaries and affiliates, details on the last-named being held confidential. M-G-M owns or has an interest in 57 domestic and foreign companies.

The stock setup includes $15,000,000 of six per cent gold debentures, $8,715,000 outstanding. The liability of the outstanding preferred stock is $12,920,229 and that of the common $3,657,580.

Stock holdings of officers and directors include: Nicholas M. Schenck, president, 1,817 shares common; David Bernstein, vice-president, 13,890 common; David L. Loew, vice-president, 500 common; Edward A. Schiller, vice-president, 500 common; Leopold Friedman, secretary, 3,412 common; Isador Frey, assistant secretary, 300 common; Charles C. Moskowitz, assistant treasurer, 300 common; Leonard Cohen, assistant treasurer, 100 common; H. Helborn, assistant secretary, 100 common; J. Robert Rubin, director, 2,000 common and 250 preferred; William A. Phillips, director, 2,000 common; David Warfield, director, 7,000 common.

The statement also discloses details of profit-sharing contracts, including that with Louis B. Mayer, Irving Thalberg and Rubin, heads of Louis B. Mayer Pictures, which, in addition to salaries, calls for the payment of 20 per cent of net profits up to $2,500,000 and 15 per cent on the excess, together with options giving Thalberg the right to buy 100,000 shares common and Mayer and Rubin 50,000 each at prices ranging from $30 to $40. The contract runs until March 1, 1939. Thalberg has taken 10,000 and Rubin 2,000 shares under this option.

There is also a contract with David Bernstein, vice-president and director, running to Dec. 31, 1938, calling for a salary of $2,000 weekly and one and one-half per cent of excess profits and carrying an option for the purchase of 50,000 shares at $30 to $40, of which 13,890 shares have been taken.

A contract with Nicholas M. Schenck as president calls for a salary and two and one-half per cent of excess profits.

Consolidated Stock Holdings

Application for registration on the New York Stock Exchange of 400,000 shares no par $2 cumulative participating preferred and 524,973 shares of $1 par value common stock, all issued, has been filed with the Commission by Consolidated Film Industries.

The registration statement shows the company owns all of the stock of the American Record Corp., Brunswick Record Corp., Studio Camera Co., Lubin Publishing Corp., Cinema Patents Co. and Biograph Studios. The only holder of 10 per cent or more of any class of stock is the Setay Co., Inc., New York, with 92,773 shares of common, or 17.06 per cent. This company also holds 62,900 shares of common not registered in its name.

Stock holdings of officers and directors included: E. C. Dearstyne, director, 500 shares preferred, 1,100 shares common; A. D. Farwell, director, 100 shares preferred, 1,200 common; W. P. Stevens, director, 500 preferred, 400 common; J. E. MacPherson, director, 5,500 common; M. Taylor, director, 3,000 common.

Consolidated paid to its president, H. J. Yates, $63,000 in 1934. Ben Goetz, executive vice president, received $42,820, and M. H. Lavenstein, a director and counsel, $32,395.

H. M. Goetz, treasurer, received $22,616; R. I. Poucher, vice president, $20,737, and G. W. Yates, vice president, $15,277.

The Setay Company, Inc., a corporation in which several of the Consolidated company's officers and directors are shareholders, owned 92,773 common shares, representing 17.06 per cent. Mr. Yates held 1,100 common as of March 18.

The financial statement of Warner Brothers for the quarter ended February 24, 1935, to be issued shortly, is expected to show substantial earnings for the preferred stock, as compared to the deficit reported last year for the same period, according to report in Wall Street. Samuel Carlisle, comptroller and assistant treasurer, recently acquired 400 shares of Warner common, bringing his holdings to 1,600 shares, according to a report to the Commission.

Radio Corporation of America board of directors has declared the regular quarterly dividend on the "A" preferred stock for the second 1935 quarter, of 87½ cents per share, payable July 1 to stockholders of record June 5.

Film Measure Is Shelved in Ohio

The Ohio General Assembly, which adjourns this week, considered more bills directly affecting the motion picture industry than in any previous session on record. Neither the bill to reinstate the 10 per cent admission tax nor the state income tax, however, have received Senatorial consideration. Governor Davey said this week he may call a special session immediately to consider old age pensions. Otherwise, another session will be called next autumn.

The 10 per cent admission tax was suspended January 1 for one year, when exhibitors began paying the three per cent sales tax. During the current Ohio session, a bill prohibiting designated playdates was passed. Another raises censorship fees from $1 to $3 per 1,000-foot reel or fraction thereof. A bill to tax billboards and the state income tax bill still await action.

Investigation of admission tax returns in many large cities is being planned by the Internal Revenue Bureau, the U. S. Treasury Department announced.

The legislative situation in other states was as follows:

ALABAMA: The proposed 10 per cent amusement tax bill is reported to have become dead. Exhibitors went to Montgomery to protest and the ways and means committee last week agreed to eliminate the application of the tax to film theatres.

CALIFORNIA: The Senate has amended the chain store tax bill to exempt film theatres.

CONNECTICUT: Amusement enterprises, including motion picture theatres, will be subject to the state tax on unincorporated business under the terms of a bill which has been favorably reported in the General Assembly and is expected to pass.

ILLINOIS: The new three per cent sales tax law will not become effective until July 1.

LOUISIANA: An ordinance intended to put teeth into the municipal amusement tax law in New Orleans was introduced by Finance Commissioner A. Miles Pratt at a special meeting of the commission council. The proposal, in the form of an amendment to the present amusement tax ordinance, would require each person or firm operating an amusement to obtain a permit from the city government.

MASSACHUSETTS: Massachusetts theatre men are opposing a bill to provide appointment of a director of outdoor advertising by the governor, and calling for special permits for all forms of outdoor advertising and a $100 fee. It is all-inclusive. Censorship of material would be provided and heavy fines are included for violations.

MICHIGAN: A bill which would make designated playdates illegal, said to have been sponsored by Michigan Allied, died with the adjournment on Saturday of the legislature.

NEBRASKA: Theatres were eliminated from the proposed chain store tax measure last week and the bill was sent back to a conference committee for the third time. As reported, the bill proposed a graduated tax of from $1 to $100 per unit. All film measures proposed were defeated.

NORTH CAROLINA: A bill prohibiting designated playdates recently died when the legislature completed its session.

PENNSYLVANIA: The lower house Tuesday received a favorable report on the compromise Sunday option bill from the committee on law and order.

WISCONSIN: A substitute to the Carow bill, which has been recommended for passage by the assembly taxation committee, seeks to raise $20,000,000 annually by licensing amusements in the state and $2,070,000 by a tax on gross incomes of theatres.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

"I VISITED HOLLYWOOD," writes Joseph Roth, ethereally, in Der Antichrist, Amsterdam, Holland, "Hollywood, or Holle-Wut (Hell-Rage), the place where hell rages, where men are the shades of their own shadows. That is the origin of all the shadows in the world, the Hades that sells its shadows for money, the shadows of the living and of the dead, to all the screens throughout the world. There the possessors of usable shadows gather together and sell them for money and are spoken of in worshipful and holy fashion, each in accordance with the importance of his shadow. There it comes to pass that one meets men and women in the street, living people, who are not even the shades of their own shadows, like the actors in the cinema, but are even less than that—the shades of the shadows of others.

"It is also a Hades that not only dispatches its shadows to the screen but also dispatches from the screen the living people whose shadows can no longer be sold. It makes shades of its shadows. That is Hollywood. Hell rages.

"There is a tumult composed of the men who finance the shadow-players, the shadow-dealers, the shadow-brokers, who are called directors, the shadow-conspirators and the shadow-lenders. And there are many who sell their own voices to the shadow of another, who speaks another language. And I saw there, in the factories, what the shadows sell, in big rooms where 20 people were sitting, each with a separate telephone. And every two or three minutes a couple of the telephones would ring, and the men would take them up and say, 'Nothing.' And that means that there is no work."

The place must be h-a-u-n-t-e-d!

Odd McIntyre notices that Joe (new Fox Film chairman) Schenck appears to have more fun in his after-office hours than almost any heavy burdened executive of middle years. There's scarcely a night he does not don white tie and tails, either in New York or Los Angeles, to make merry. He is accomplished at the rhumba and no slouch at the tango. No matter how hard he plays the night before, he is at his desk early. Often he's the odd number of a threesome that includes his ex-wife, Norma Talmadge, and George Jessel, her present husband.

When the MGM conventioneers were gathered a few days ago at Kansas City for their annual sales conference they joined in singing three songs at the banquet, a testimonial to Felix F. Feist, sales generalissimo, on his tenth anniversary with the company.

What makes this a paragraph, however, is the fact that the lyrics were written by Felix, "'way back when." "Ski-da-me-rink-a-doo" (Means I Love You) was introduced in old Charlie Dillingham's production of "The Echo," an "American" musical comedy, and was sung by Johnny Ford. The sheet music published by Leo Feist bears the date imprint of 1909.

"Percy" was another, from "Two Islands," a "farcical musical melange in two acts," by Barney Bernard, and music by Joel B. Corin. Published by Leo Feist in 1907.

You should hear "Senora," though, its really bootiful: "Love Me—Ah! Love, Sweet Senora, For I Love, Yes I Love You."

When the Strayer family lost their money, some years ago, daughter Margery, now known as Margery Wilson, gave readings and recitals at lyceums on the gentle and genteel art of refinement. Eventually she landed in Hollywood, where she played the part of Brown Eyes in D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" and made some money on the side, telling movie actors how to talk, dress, be well-mannered and attractive. The sidelines became so profitable that she left the movies to concentrate on personality building—advice at first hand, lectures, articles.

The Margery Wilson Institute, Inc., which evolved from the little lady's earlier teachings, now sells charm in ten lessons for $15, and, at the rate of 200,000 lessons since 1932, the company sells at least $1,000,000 worth of charm each year.

Charm, says Miss Wilson, according to Fortune, class magazine, is the ability to arouse emotions of pleasure in others. In the first lesson, the pupil sits down in a corner and repeats her name over and over to herself—to get awareness and confidence. The second lesson talks about dandruff and slipping brassiere straps. In the third lesson a lady is told to keep her feet close together—"the legs should be like the stem of a flower; who ever heard of a flower with two stems?" The fourth lesson tells the story of the charming lady who, at a formal reception, lost her pants but not her composure (she stepped out of her pants and carried them out of the room, followed by admiring glances). And so on.

A batch of fan mail for various photoplay stars that missed them in California and has been wandering desolately back and forth across the continent since, made a day's stop in Kansas City recently and was interesting to examine.

Max Baer, Carole Lombard, Bing Crosby, Marlene Dietrich, George Brent, Buster Crabbe, Ricardo Cortez, Paul Lukas, Kay Johnston, David Manners and Sylvia Sidney were some of the people addressed, and the letters came from all quarters of the globe—from New Zealand to Czecho-Slovakia to Iceland, and in between.

It remained for a penciled postcard from our own Tennessee to take the prize, however. W. C. Fields was the addressee, only the front and back of the postcard put it "Mrs. Fields." Here is what was written:

> Dear Mrs. Fields: I have seen all of your Picture at have come to Chattanooga, for the last year. You are the beast blayer I have ever seen. I would like for you to write back. I am sure you will for I don't thank you have the big head like I was told. Yours truly,

Francis Deering, managing Loew's State in Houston, Texas, engaged five good-looking gals and sent them out on the streets to sell paper flowers. They came back with $6.96, which was converted into a check and sent to the Treasury of the United States to be credited toward the French war debt owed this country.

"We are native-born French girls," they told each prospect on the streets, "and because there is a story of the French Revolution now running at Loew's State theatre called 'The Scarlet Pimpernel,' we are selling these paper flowers to help our country pay its war debt."

In the left-hand corner of a cashier's check issued for the $6.96 by the National Bank of Commerce, Houston, to the order of the United States Treasurer, appears the notation: "Derived from sale of Scarlet Pimpernels."

GENE DENNIS is a cornfed young woman from Kansas, but she carries tremendous weight in Hollywood, where, so Joanna Rogers tells us, producers and actors believe she is psychic. Whether she is or not, she has called the turn so many times that princes, producers and picture stars pause and ponder when she speaks.

These things will happen in 1935, according to the seeress:

Greta Garbo faces the perils of pernicious anemia.

Joseph Schenck will be married, but not to Merle Oberon. He doesn't know the woman he will marry, but he is destined to be a family-man with several children.

Lupe Velez and Johnny Weissmuller will finally divorce and Lupe will be married two more times.

Joan Crawford will continue in success, but must watch her health. She gives too much to others. She tries everything.

Constance Collier will be the nearest successor to Marie Dressler. When Gene first saw Miss Collier in a London hotel she did not even know who she was, but predicted that before the day was over she would sign an important contract. Five hours later, Miss Collier was signed by Metro, but had no idea she was being considered for a contract.

Marion Davies will be greater than ever. Everything is before her. Whatever she has wanted she has gotten by concentrating on it.

Douglas Fairbanks has been greatly misunderstood and maligned, but the tide will turn this year. He loves Mary Pickford.

President Roosevelt will be reelected.

To top it off Gene says this will be a great year for flattery in Hollywood.

Real telephone numbers are never used in motion pictures. Before a phone number is spoken into the sound recorder studio research experts check to ascertain whether there is such a number or exchange in the locale of the sequence. Cranks would start troublesome damage suits if their number were used. However, as a special favor to Tommy Dugan, one of the featured players in "One New York Night," Metro's studio bigwigs graciously permitted Una Merkel, while portraying the part of an adventurous telephone operator, to speak the phone number of Dugan's aging mother in Brooklyn—"Just to give Ma a kick."

Our own "Little Mary" Pickford is the only lady on this side of the Atlantic who has ever worn the jewels given Marie Louise by Napoleon soon after the birth of their son, Napoleon Francois Charles Joseph Bonaparte, on March 20, 1811, and which are in the possession of William Howard Hoeffer, of Trabert and Hoeffer. They are kept in an Empire Room in their New York establishment, on Park Avenue. Mr. Hoeffer said that he values them at half a million.

"The Napoleon jewels" consist of one crown, two bracelets, one corsage brooch, two brooches, one belt buckle, one necklace, one pair of earrings. The pieces are mounted in gold, enhanced with black and white enamel, and are jeweled with rubies, emeralds, pearls, sapphires and other precious stones.

The last private owner of the jewels was the Archduchess Immaculata, of Vienna. Mr. Hoeffer has a paper from her certifying that the jewels "came from Empress Maria Luisa, widow of Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte, who presented them to the Archduke Raniero, King of Lombardy, of the Austrian Court, and became my property by the law of inheritance."

Mary got them—we don't know how—to wear at a tea.

BRITISH PRESS IN TUNE

Informative Attitude Toward Production Code Follows Visits of Quigley and Milliken

A constructive attitude toward the Production Code and its application to the American field of both production and exhibition is evidenced in current expressions from the independent sectors of the British motion picture press, in sequel to the sojourn in London of Martin Quigley, representing Will H. Hays, and Carl E. Milliken, attending as secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., at code practice discussions with the industry over there.

The Kinematograph Weekly, edited by S. G. Rayment, in a leader entitled "A Lesson at First Hand", in its issue of May 16, says:

When a man devotes himself to the formulation of a production code; sees it after much travail accepted by the United States; answers an invitation to explain it over here so that every British picture can enter America on its merits; then that man is worth a hearing.

Martin Quigley is no fanatic. He knows how to concentrate, but as a newspaper man of twenty or so years' experience in the film business he does not live in the clouds.

Three or four years ago he realized that the film business was in danger. Many people did, but he acted. He knew that a pure question of morals, however sincerely it was presented, would carry comparatively little weight in the counsels of many of the Hollywood production chiefs.

But when loose ethics was obviously going to mean bad business even the most cynical had to take notice. And it was Quigley's long-sighted vision which was able to show how inevitably the one must lead to the other.

That he was able to prove his arguments to that hard-boiled and cosmopolitan amalgam which we know as filmland shows his quality. He knew, and he convinced others, that the screen was failing to keep up its steady march forward, and failure to do this meant going back.

We of The Kine. Weekly have repeatedly appealed for more and better films for our young folk. We have quoted the opinion of showman after showman, who felt they were not getting the young people in, and who knew that their future well-being depended upon an alteration in production policy.

What has to be accomplished is not easily to be put in a convenient tabulated list; it is a changed outlook, and an appreciation of what is meant by "the family hall."

Our own readers are our guide. They say they want more "U" films. The Production Code acknowledges that need, and all we can do in this country to align ourselves with the rediscovered vision must be done forthwith, in self-defence if for no higher reason.

The Cinema, Samuel Harris, chairman, L. H. Clarke, editor, leads its issue of May 15 with a series of presentations under the title of "Forcing the Market," and observing:

Who is it—or which section of the industry is most vitally interested to-day—in the conversations that have been taking place between Martin Quigley and Governor Milliken (for the Will Hays organization)—and the producers group of the F.B.I. on behalf of the British industry?

At a first glance one would say—that—it is—the producers of British films.

But is it—only these half-dozen or so—who are vitally interested—or do the results react—either to the benefit or the detriment of—

Every other party interested in the trade?

But it is not on a question of censorship that British pictures will—or will not—get into America—

It is solely on the two outstanding questions of Entertainment and salesmanship.

Quality of product is not sufficient—without salesmanship!

And salesmanship is not sufficient—without quality!

Under the heading of salesmanship—we include—box-office names and an organization that can offer not one picture at a time (which exhibitors are likely to be too busy to bother about)—but—

A sustained series that exhibitors may book as a valuable addition to their source of supply.

It may safely be left to the British producers—to continue their job of—persistingly improving the quality of their pictures;

In the meantime—

What has now to be done—is—to launch—

A much more comprehensive salesmanship—and an intensive forcing of the market—

Commensurate with the quality of the product we have to offer.

Meanwhile an interestingly informative attitude is conveyed by some of the expressions of the British daily public press. The Morning Post, for instance remarks:

A clearing up of the difficulties of British film producers regarding the distribution of their films in the United States under the new "purity" code may result from a letter which has been addressed by Mr. Charles Tennyson, Chairman of the film producers' group of the Federation of British Industries, to Mr. Will Hays, President of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Mr. Tennyson points out that at present the film censorship code organization in the United States is situated on the West Coast, while representatives of the British producers are in New York, the distributing centre. He suggests that an organization of the United States code administration should be established in New York.

This, he states, would enable personal contact and explanation, which were much more likely to be effective in matters involving questions of taste and treatment than written communications.

And the Daily Herald, under a heading reading "British Film Makers Want U. S. Advice," says:

An arrangement for British film producers to obtain the advice of the United States Film Code authorities on the scripts of pictures before they are actually begun, is requested by the Film Producers' Group of the Federation of British Industries.

Suggestions for this closer cooperation are made in a letter from Mr. Charles Tennyson, chairman of the Film Group, to Mr. Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The letter adds that if it were possible to establish in New York an organization, or branch organization, of the American Code administration the difficulties which British producers have recently encountered in America, and fear they may encounter in the future, should be substantially reduced.

Call Hochreich's Testimony Untrue

The testimony of David R. Hochreich, former president of Vocafilm was branded as untrue this week by witnesses for the defendants, Electrical Research Products, Inc., Western Electric Company and American Telephone and Telegraph Company in the anti-trust trial brought by General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation in United States district court at Wilmington, Del. Trial recessed last on May 28 until June 3 when the defense will resume.

Warren Connor, of Philadelphia, Erpi sales representative at Charlotte, N. C.; John J. Lawrence, of Garden City, L. I., manager of the general contract department of Erpi and Percy M. Lewis, of Atlantic City, N. J., associated with George F. Weilland, exhibitors, denied a number of accusations made by Mr. Hochreich on the stand several weeks ago.

Testimony Is Denied

Mr. Connor testified that Samson Theatres, Inc., operating theatres in Clinton and Rockingham, N. C., wanted to change from DeForest equipment because they could not get anyone to service it and not because Erpi has attempted to get Mr. Samson to break contract with GTP so that Erpi could install its own sound, which Mr. Hochreich said in his testimony weeks ago.

Mr. Connor also denied he attempted to have DeForest sound taken out of a Lumberton, N. C., theatre by telling Dr. Beam, exhibitor of the Clinton at Lumberton that DeForest was dispensing with its service staff.

Mr. Lawrence said that he installed and later removed Erpi equipment in one of the Bailey Circuit theatres in Bunkie, La., for non-payment but denied an Erpi representative made a special proposition to Bailey to use Erpi equipment.

Mr. Lewis denied telling Mr. Hochreich that it appeared he, Lewis, might lose Metro pictures unless Erpi equipment was used in his Atlantic City and Ventnor theatres.

Williard S. McKay, Rye, N. Y., general counsel for Universal Pictures testified that statements made by David Garrison Berger, New York attorney for Louis Sobol who was on the stand for the plaintiffs weeks ago, that he, Berger, was informed that Universal had a contract with Western Electric and Erpi to release only pictures made on Erpi license equipment, were not accurate.

Tells of Service School

Herbert M. Wilcox, Erpi vice-president; John S. Ward, of Crestwood, N. Y., director of operations of Erpi and John Mills, Erpi electrical engineer, also testified.

Wilcox told of the Erpi school for the servicing men, and testified as to the equipments in the cross examination. He testified that Erpi also sold non-Erpi replacements to its exhibitors, citing instances where dry cell batteries were used. He also told of a double profit made from the tubes. He said Western sold the tubes to Erpi at a profit and Erpi in turn sold them to the exhibitors also taking a profit. Edgar R. Wagner, consultant, denied in New York that he had said all Duovac tubes were found unsuitable for films.

An appeal of Erpi from the decision of Federal Judge Nordbye in Minneapolis, denying a permanent injunction against Cinema Supplies, Inc., to restrain shipment of amplifiers allegedly infringing Western Electric amplification circuit patents, must await the October term of the United States circuit court of appeals in Omaha. Petition of Erpi for a review of the district court's decision at the May term of the circuit court to advance the date of hearing on the appeal was denied last week in Minneapolis.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in each of fourteen key cities during the six weeks from March 2 to April 6, 1935, with the business done in the same cities during the following six weeks, from April 13 to May 18. In each city the gross for the earlier weeks is taken as 100 per cent, and is indicated by the shaded bar. The black bar indicates the receipts for the more recent period.

MAXWELL COMPANY INCREASES CAPITAL

Jack Warner Says All Product Is for World Market; Midnight Openings Are Popular

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

The issue of 600,000 £1/6 per cent first cumulative preference shares by Associated British Picture Corporation, Ltd., of which John Maxwell is chairman and managing director, was announced on May 16 and closed on May 17, an hour after the lists were opened. It is understood that it was heavily overscribed.

Success for the issue was anticipated, but that it has been so eagerly snapped up, at a premium of 1/-per share, is an indication of a healthful attitude among the investment public toward film projects.

ABP recently converted its 8 per cent preference share to a 6 per cent basis. With the new share just issued, its total capital is £6,050,000, made up of £1,550,000 in £1 ordinaries, £2,000,000 in 6 per cent cumulative £1 preference shares, and £2,500,000 in 5 per cent first mortgage stock.

The prospectus of the new issue stated that the company operates 220 theatres and that the new money is to be used for financing recent and impending purchases in the London area. Profits of the company for the current year are estimated at £510,000, against £430,686 in 1934.

The brokers for the preference issues were Myers & Co., who also underwrote it for a commission of 1¾ per cent. Maurice "Mossy" Myers will be recalled as a prominent figure in the eventually unproductive plan for acquisition of control of Gaumont-British by the Maxwell interests.

Jack Warner confirmed, and more than confirmed, on his visit in London last weekend, Irving Asher's announcement of extended activities at the Warner-First National studios at Teddington.

The first of the three new stages planned for the studio is to be put in work at once. More important, Mr. Warner went on record as being definitely opposed to production of pictures merely for British quota. His most significant remarks were that he regarded Teddington as " an extension of Burbank," and that all Warner British pictures would definitely be made "with world distribution in view."

This is perhaps only a step towards a policy of making British films as a definite part of the American release schedule, but it is certainly a step. The Warner British organization is already capable of turning out features with American entertainment values.

Midnight Openings Grow

The midnight film gala habit is spreading. At the Regal, "Drake" ("Elizabeth of England" in America) contributed £3,000 in box office receipts, on top of an additional £5,000 from John Maxwell, to the King's Jubilee Fund. At the Plaza, Paramount started the London run of "The Scoundrel" with another midnight show, and for the same object. "Midnight with the Stars," the annual trade charity effort, is a recent memory. All this makes the 9 o'clock start of "Brown on Resolution," at the New Gallery with the First Lord of the Admiralty as the chief guest, seem a matinee and the 11 p.m. affairs favoured by Arthur Dent just ordinary evening dates.

Presentations Leader Retires

Robb Lawson, director of publicity for United Artists for many years past and previously with the Universal and FBO offices in London, was tendered a lunch and presented with a loving cup by the London film press at the Cheshire Cheese in Fleet Street, on his retirement. Mr. Robb was the first man to stage "presentations" as a stage prelude to silent films, in London. Murray Silverstone spoke appreciatively, and enviously, of his old colleague.

Aldrich Fights Theatre Project

Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank, last week joined the residents' committee, headed by Norman H. Davis, American ambassador-at-large, which is seeking to prevent the erection of a motion picture theatre on the corner of 79th street and Madison avenue, New York, and thus preserve the purely residential character of the neighborhood. Mr. Aldrich, as chairman of Chase, which has a large interest in Fox Film Corporation, is himself rather actively concerned in the affairs of the motion picture industry.

Justice Carewe of the supreme court has taken under advisement the application of Henry Mandel, builder, for an order to force New York License Commissioner Paul Moss to approve the project. Mr. Moss, after a hearing at which the residents' committee made itself heard, rejected Mr. Mandel's original application for permission to build an "intimate" theatre, seating 599.

Attorneys for the objecting residents contend that erection of the theatre will materially reduce assessed valuations on property in the neighborhood, and will serve as an opening wedge for other similar projects.

Kuykendall Urges Copyright Bill Aid

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in a statement issued this week, urges all theatre owners and others "interested in the progress and development of the motion picture industry," to support the United States State Department's copyright bill, introduced by Senator Duffy of Wisconsin, which is in the copyright and patents committee.

Mr. Kuykendall's statement said in part: "Theatre owners should insist that the bill be passed intact, without amendments or change in language."

The MPTOA president is expected to call a meeting of the organization's board of directors within the next 30 days. The date and place have not been determined.

About 125 exhibitors, 90 per cent of the Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California, at Los Angeles last week praised the board of directors for its work on behalf of the organization. Members requested dues be raised from $2 to $5 monthly.

West Virginia exhibitors will hold a convention at White Sulphur Springs June 26-27, at which time state legislative problems will be considered.

Celebrity in Book Tieup on ComiColors

An exploitation tieup has been arranged on the ComiColor cartoons between Celebrity Productions and Engel-Van Wiseman Book Corporation. Eight fairy tales will be published by the book company for distribution through national chain store organizations, with rewritten versions modernized and illustrated with drawings selected from the ComiColor series on these tales.

POOLING OF 150 N.Y. INDEPENDENTS PLANNED

Two Circuit Corporations Decided Upon, One for N. Y. City, Other for New Jersey

The country's strongest concentration of independent theatre power is in the offing in New York, where, after weeks of informal and secret discussion, non-affiliated exhibition interests this week came out into the open and decided on a tangible method for effecting a merger of possibly 150 houses into a single corporation in which the participants would vest part ownership of their properties, receiving in return a share of the profits and commensurate stock in the corporation, although they would continue to operate individually. A similar plan has been in the making in New Jersey.

Though not having any direct relation with the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York, Harry Brandt, president, nor with the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, Charles L. O'Reilly, president, certain members of both local independent organizations are sponsoring the new enterprise.

With Milton C. Weisman, ITOA counsel, preparing the legal phases, an ITOA committee, composed of Harry Brandt, Louis Schiffman, M. Fess, John Benas, Maurice Fleischman and M. Meyers, met last Thursday night at the New York Motion Picture Club to arrange the preliminaries after a score of others in attendance had indicated their willingness to participate.

It was decided to form two circuit corporations, one embracing New Jersey theatres, the other in New York City. Leon Rosenblatt, chairman of the New Jersey group, has working with him Julius Charnow, Harry Hecht, Louis Gold, Irving Dollinger, Jack Unger and Joseph Sicardi. They had been selected at a meeting held secretly two weeks ago in Newark, at which 25 independents in the Jersey territory decided to enter the arrangement.

A thorough analysis of the corporate and financial setup will be made and passed on to Jersey members before incorporation papers are drawn, within two weeks.

New York Committee Named

The New York contingent called a meeting Monday afternoon at the Hotel Astor, and with 86 owners in attendance it was decided to further the idea at once. A committee of six was appointed as follows: John Benas, chairman, David Weinstock, Abe Leff, Louis Fleischman, Louis Schiffman and William Salkin.

The committee will set out at once to present the proposition to every independent owner in the Metropolitan area. Meanwhile Attorney Weisman agreed to present the plan on paper to the committee, probably before the weekend. All independent owners, regardless of whether or not affiliated with the ITOA or the TOCC, will be asked to join, and the sponsors hope to obtain some 150 properties for the pool.

Later in the week it was learned that at least 75 owners are expected shortly to add their names to the 25 already signed in New Jersey, where the plan is limited to non-competitive and last run situations. The reason for this limitation is twofold; first, where non-competitive theatres are corralled into one unit, as proposed, distributors who refuse to compromise on selling terms will be left out of those situations; and, secondly, all last run theatres tied together in such an organization can demand terms from distributors.

While neither the Jersey nor New York groups have spoken officially as to the purposes of their circuit pooling of independent power it appears obvious that the benefits of buying strength and the protection which it brings in many channels is the basic reason for the move. The forcing of shorts, trailers and newsreels with feature sales is particularly annoying to the sponsors.

Originally, as broached many months ago, the idea was to pool into a community-owned circuit corporation at least 150 theatres in Jersey and New York, without any limitation as to type of run or the competition involved, and to operate the single company in both states. This proposal failed to register and the dual-company idea was substituted.

Film Exports Gain In 1935 Quarter

Exports of American motion picture film for the first quarter of 1935 show a slight increase over the same period in 1934, according to preliminary figures prepared by the Motion Picture Division of the United States Department of Commerce Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

During the first three months of 1935 a total of 50,253,150 linear feet of film, including positive and negative, sound and silent, with a value of $1,114,126, was exported, as compared with 49,630,226 feet, valued at $1,010,942, exported during the similar 1934 period.

Positive sound film accounted for the greater part of the exported total. Argentina took the greatest amount during the 1935 quarter, 4,787,530, while the United Kingdom, which led Argentina in the 1934 quarter, took 3,067,836.

Sensitized but unexposed, film exports for the first quarter of 1935 amounted to 35,059,818 feet, with a value of $600,844, as compared with 31,262,046 feet valued at $590,369 for the same period of 1934.

For the first quarter of 1935, motion picture equipment of all types (save 35 mm. cameras) showed healthy export increases over the corresponding periods of 1934 and 1933.

FOX DISTRIBUTING 54 FEATURES, CONVENTION TOLD; GB TO HAVE 16

Paramount Decides Upon One National Meeting for June 13th and Five Regionals; RKO Ready for Starting June 11th

GB Pictures announced on Monday at first annual sales convention 16 features for 1935-36.

Fox Film convened in annual sales session Thursday morning in Chicago and announced 54 features, 110 short subjects, 104 issues of Fox Movietone News and an additional undetermined number of features forthcoming from 20th Century Pictures, in accordance with the announcement made Tuesday regarding the combining of the 20th Century interests with Fox.

Paramount finally set one national meeting, in New York, starting June 13th, and five regional conventions.

Radio started to import foreign sales representatives and franchise holders for its first "international" convention, opening June 17th at Chicago.

Republic Pictures changed convention plans from three regionals to two, opening June 7th at Cincinnati, continuing at San Francisco and eliminating Salt Lake.

Warner Brothers extended its convention from three to 13 days, starting June 10th, at Los Angeles, to give field forces first-hand studio course.

Five new producing companies announced their 1935-36 plans, and a dozen others, both "major" and independent, further advanced their arrangements.

A new trend in Fox production policy toward "spectacular" productions and an increased use of music was revealed in the new program, to consist of 54 features, 110 shorts, the Movietone newsreel and an undetermined number of pictures to be produced by Joseph M. Schenck and Darryl Zanuck of 20th Century Pictures.

More than 12 of the 54 features will have songs and other music. There will be at least seven "spectacular" productions, while more than one-fifth will be from originals.

New personalities added to the Fox roster of players include Nino Martini, Metropolitan Opera star; Tutta Rolf, Scandinavian star; Tito Guizar, radio baritone; Simone, Contimental star, and Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink.

Will Rogers, Shirley Temple, Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter head a list of 54 stars and featured players.

The 54 features will be divided among seven producers, Winfield Sheehan, vice-president and general production manager; Sol Wurtzel, Jesse L. Lasky, Robert T. Kane, B. G. DeSylva, Edward Butcher and John Stone. Four George O'Brien westerns will be produced by Sol Lesser and John Zanft.

The holding of two sales conventions in one week served notice that the new selling season is getting into stride, and from other companies came news of these developments.

Broadway Productions

Broadway Productions, Inc., William Rowland, president and production chief, and L. J. (Jack) Schlaifer, vice president and general manager, contracted with Anglo-American Renters, Ltd., London, for world distribution outside of the United States and Canada, for four feature musicals, three to be made in New York at Erpi's Eastern Service Studios, and one in England at Anglo-American's.

Representing Anglo-American were Captain A. C. N. Dixey, M.P., chairman of the board; Giulio Niclas, head of production, and Peter Witt, general and foreign manager. They have been in New York for three weeks and will remain to negotiate further distribution arrangements, with the exception of Mr. Witt, who returned to London over the weekend.

American distribution of the four Broadway features will be arranged for by Mr. Rowland.

Captain Dixey, too, will later sell the rights here to 12 pictures to be made by Anglo-American in England. Although Anglo-American is participating, with Mr. Rowland and Electrical Research in financing the four Broadway Productions, the series will have no relation to Anglo's own 12.

"Romance Unlimited," first of the four, goes into production July 8th, an original musical by Herbert Fields and a screen play by Charles Beahan and John V. A. Weaver. Robert Milton will direct a cast headed by Sidney Fox, Abe Lyman and his band, Jack Dempsey, Helen Lynd and Russ Brown.

Mr. Schlaifer, handling Broadway's distribution, was formerly Universal sales manager and was variously associated elsewhere.

British International

Invasion of this market in 1935-36 by British International Pictures was launched this week through a subsidiary, Alliance Films, Ltd., with trade showings at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel of "April Blossoms" and "Abdul, the Damned." Six of a group of 12 are already in New York for sale to a distributor.

Distribution of "The Kingfish," story of Huey Long, was arranged for by Criterion Films with Marcy Pictures, New York, Film Classics, Buffalo; Capitol, Philadelphia; B. N. Judell, Chicago; Israel Levine, New Haven; Progressive, St. Louis; Elliott Film, Minneapolis; Principal, Los Angeles, and Sack, San Antonio, Texas.

Darmour

Larry Darmour started "West Beyond the Law," first of six westerns to star Ken Maynard, adapted by H. Gatzert, directed by Al Herman, co-featuring Lucile Brown.

Du World

Distribution policy of Du World was changed this week when the company opened its own exchange in New York for sale. Elsewhere, however, they will continue selling state rights.

Nine westerns, produced by Mayfair; six action features produced by Kinematrade, and two serials, the original 1935-36 schedule of Empire, have been augmented by 18 westerns.

S. R. Kent on Thursday morning opened "the largest sales convention ever held by Fox Film," a three-day session, at the Congress Hotel in Chicago, where some 265 delegates from the home office, managers and salesmen from United States, Canada, and foreign exchanges heard a detailed announcement of the 1935-36 product, as follows:

In addition there will be four George O'Brien action pictures. First will be "Thunder Mountain," Zane Grey's story which ran serially in Collier's; "Whispering Smith Speaks," will be second, as adapted from the famous Frank Spearman fictional character; the third will be a Harold Bell Wright story and the fourth is to be selected.

Mr. Kent and John D. Clark, distribution chief, took the lead Thursday in the product discussions. Plans of the foreign department were divulged by Clayton P. Sheehan, general foreign manager. Guest speakers included George Weeks, Gaumont's distribution head; Louis Hyman and Spyros Skouras. Talks on short subjects for 1935-36 were given by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational; Jack Skirball and W. J. Clark. W. J. Kupper, western divisional sales manager, also discussed distribution plans.

On Friday publicity and advertising plans were presented by Charles E. McCarthy, director of that division; Arch Reeve, A.O. Dillenbeck, Gabe S. Yorke, Earl Wingart and J. A. Clark. The schedule also included a discussion of Fox Movietone News by Truman H. Talley, Laurence Stallings, Lowell Thomas, Lew Lehr and Ed Thorgersen; an address by Edmund C. Grainger, eastern divisional sales manager; a discussion of the code situation by Felix A. Jenkins; distribution of prizes for the second "Sidney R. Kent Drive," and an explanation of the 1935 "Distribution Drive" by William C. Gehring, sales manager of Chicago.

Adjournment will come Saturday with distribution department meetings presided over by Mr. Clark, Mr. Kupper and Mr. Grainger; sales meetings conducted by William Sussman and Nat Finkler, and a meeting of the ad sales department conducted by James A. Clark.

Other executives who were on hand, besides those already mentioned, included: E. H. Collins, C. A. Hill, Jack Bloom, Roger Ferri, Harry Morsay, Irving Lincer and Deon DeTitta, from the sales department; Jerry Novat, Paul Allison and William Caldwell, ad sales; I. A. Mass, Jack Sichelman, M. L. Ahern, S. S. Crick (Australia), J. C. Bavetta (Brazil), C. V. Hake (Japan), S. S. Horen (Spain), Gustave Mohme (Mexico City), E. F. Lomba (Spain), Carl Nielsen (Scandinavia), Carlos Zeno (Porto Rico), Ramon Garcia (Cuba), P. N. Brinch, Germany, A. S. Santos and C. A. Villaverde, from the foreign division.

Sol Edward and Harvey Day completed the Educational representation. Additional guests were Charles Skouras, Arch Bowles, Jack Sullivan, Louis Hyman, George Skouras, Ed Peskay, Larry Kent, A. E. McNeil, Percy Heiliger, Sam Fox, Leonard Greene, Elmer Rhoden, Rick Ricketson, Ed Alperson and H. J. Fitzgerald.

Also present were the district managers and managers and salesmen of the 37 exchanges.

Before leaving New York for the convention, Clayton Sheehan was quoted as saying that Fox will produce 13 features at its Wembley studio in England for British distribution; John Clark indicated that 25 features for 1935-36 will be ready by October 1st, and Mr. Hammons announced that Joe Cook and Buster Keaton will continue next season under new contracts.

Jack Trop is understood to have joined Walter Futter, now in new quarters in New York's Paramount Building, to handle distribution on two series of features to be released next season, including five action stories and six Tom Keene westerns.

Gaumont

GB's first national sales convention in this country was attended by 100 sales representatives from the field. Arthur A. Lee, vice president, and George W. Weeks, sales director, announced the titles of 16 1935-36 features, which were selected for this market from 52 scheduled for production in England by the parent company. The stars include many from Hollywood, this as a result of Michael Balcon's visit last month to California from England. Stars who will appear include: Robert Donat, Jessie Matthews, Lupe Velez, Conrad Veidt, Madeleine Carroll, Claude Rains, Walter Huston, Boris Karloff, Peter Lorre, Sonnie Hale, Jack Hulbert, George Arliss, Richard Dix, Madge Evans, C. Aubrey Smith, Helen Vinson, Maureen O'Sullivan, Barry Mackay, John Mills and Fay Wray. Directing will be Alfred Hitchcock, Berthold Viertel, Victor Saville, Walter Forde and Maurice Elvey.

In the group of 16 releases there will be five which were screened at the convention, as follows:

THIRTY-NINE STEPS, co-starring Robert Donat and Madeleine Carroll, based on a spy story by Colonel John Buchan, Governor General of Canada; directed by Alfred Hitchcock.

THE CLAIRVOYANT, novel, by Ernest Lothar, co-starring Claude Rains and Fay Wray; directed by Maurice Elvey.

MORALS OF MARCUS, by William J. Locke, starring Lupe Velez and Ian Hunter; a Real Art Production, produced by Julius Hagen, directed by Miles Mander.

ALIAS BULLDOG DRUMMOND, by "Sapper," creator of the Drummond character, with Jack Hulbert and Fay Wray; directed by Walter Forde.

BORN FOR GLORY, with Barry Mackay, John Mills and Betty Balfour; directed by Walter Forde.

Pictures now in production include the following:

KING OF THE DAMNED, play, by John Chancellor, starring Conrad Veidt and Helen Vinson; directed by Walter Forde.

SOLDIERS THREE, by Kipling, with C. Aubrey Smith and Maureen O'Sullivan; direction by Walter Forde.

PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK, play, by Jerome K. Jerome, starring Conrad Veidt; direction by Berthold Viertel.

FIRST A GIRL, starring Jessie Matthews.

MODERN MASQUERADE, starring Jessie Matthews.

SECRET AGENT, by W. Somerset Maugham, starring Peter Lorre and Madeleine Carroll.

KING SOLOMON'S MINES, novel by Sir H. Rider Haggard.

JUNE BIG MONTH FOR SALES SESSIONS

DR. NIKOLA, novel, by Guy Boothby, to star Boris Karloff.

UNTITLED George Arliss feature, to be selected from three original stories.

THE TUNNEL, to star Conrad Veidt, Richard Dix and Madge Evans; directed by Maurice Elvey.

RHODES, THE EMPIRE BUILDER, to star Walter Huston.

The convention opened Monday morning at the Hotel Warwick in New York, adjourning Wednesday. Besides Mr. Lee and Mr. Weeks, it was addressed by home office executives, including A. P. Waxman, director of advertising and publicity; C. M. White, assistant sales manager; C. MacGowan, comptroller; Charles Leach, secretary, and C. Schwengeler, S. Krugman, J. R. Wilson and H. W. Fitelson. Mr. Weeks presided.

Guest speakers included Howard S. Cullman, trustee of the Broadway Roxy theatre; M. A. Lightman, president of Malco Theatres; Sidney R. Kent, Fox Film president; W. G. Van Schmus, director of the Music Hall theatre; Spyros Skouras, vice president, National (Fox West Coast) Theatres; Harry Brandt, president, Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York, and N. L. Nathanson, president of Regal Films, Ltd., and head of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto.

Frank C. Walker, President Roosevelt's chief aide in the recovery program, wired a message from Washington.

GB executives announced that Mr. Cullman, for the Roxy, purchased the entire 1935-36 lineup. Mr. Lightman negotiated a similar purchase. An open forum featured the second day's session. Paul de Outo, Los Angeles branch manager, was awarded first prize in the "Big Push" sales drive.

John Goring, of New York, was reported to be planning production through Gormay, Inc.

Four serials were set by Mascot for 1935-36, Barney Sarecky supervising.

Gordon Malson, Mascot's casting director, arrived in New York from Hollywood to secure talent for "Harway Lane," last for 1934-35, and also to secure stories for 1935-36.

Jimmy Durante will not appear on the 1935-36 schedule, MGM having granted the comedian a release. At the same time the company resigned J. Walter Ruben, director.

Discussing new production plans, Hal Roach, MGM producer, explained that short subject production costs have increased $5,150 per subject since silent days, as follows: Increase due to code cost, $650; Erpi royalty for sound, $1,000; music copyright, $550; recording, $3,000.

Hecht and MacArthur, producers, may make six in 1935-36 for Metro.

Metropolis Pictures, New York, will handle "Life of Pilsudski," produced under the supervision of the Polish Government, produced by Falanga Films, Rysgard Ordynski directing.

Plans for Paramount's sales convention were announced by Sales Manager Neil F. Agnew, and call for one national meeting, to be held in New York, at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, June 13th, 14th and 15th, to be followed by five regional meetings in New York, Chicago, Memphis, Kansas City and San Francisco.

Attending the national convention at the Waldorf, at which the new lineup will first be announced, will be home office executives, district and branch managers, exchange sales managers and members of Paramount's "100 Per Cent Club."

The regional meetings to follow will be attended by the entire exchange force from the districts in which the meetings will take place. Division Manager Charles M. Reagan will preside at Chicago, Kansas City and San Francisco, while Division Manager Joseph J. Unger will preside at New York and Memphis.

Paramount signed Oscar Hammerstein, II, who obtained his release from MGM, to write the screen play for the Hollywood debut of Jan Kiepura.

Radio Pictures will for the first time bring to its sales convention, to be held June 17th to 19th at the Chicago Drake Hotel, a large number of foreign managers and representatives abroad. Those already assigned to attend include: E. D. Leishman and Ralph Hanbury, London; H. W. Leasim and Pierre Charles Le-Long, Paris; N. Cazaris, Arta Films, Bucharest; Max Bossman, Brussels; Joost Smit, Amsterdam; Douglas Lotherington, Sydney; Reginald Armour, India; Luis Lezema, Mexico; Fred S. Gulbransen, Panama, and Jacobo Glucksman, New York, representing RKO in Argentine.

With the Hollywood studios engaged in an unprecedented production boom, producing six features and preparing three others, the company's circuit executives in New York were setting product for the theatres, acquiring 20 RKO features and negotiating for half of the Warner releases in 40 New York theatres. Under a new deal the three-year Fox product franchise was extended seven additional years, giving the circuit 140 features. One more company's output is needed to make available the required 175 or 180 features for the season.

RKO's features will be distributed in Finland by Bio-Kuva O/Y, of Helsingfors, C. G. Wallman acting for Radio.

Republic

W. Ray Johnston's Republic Pictures changed its convention plans. Instead of three regionals there will be two, the Salt Lake session having been cancelled. Eastern forces will meet at the Netherlands-Plaza Hotel in Cincinnati, June 7th and 8th. The western groups will gather in San Francisco later.

Republic Pictures, Inc., was organized in Pittsburgh to take over the Monogram exchange, with James Alexander in charge. Republic Pictures of Ohio, was formed at the same time, with Nat L. Lefton as general manager and S. P. Gorrell, sales manager, to handle product in Cincinnati and Cleveland. William Onie will be in charge at Cincinnati.

William Satori-Schacherl was appointed to represent Republic International in the middle, eastern and Scandinavian countries in Europe, establishing headquarters at Wien (Vienna) II, Obere Donaustr 87.

William G. Smith left New York for Hollywood to start a series of features with Ralph Graves and Evelyn Brent.

Spectrum Pictures arranged distribution of its new western series in Oklahoma and Boston, Majestic Pictures securing the Bill Cody group in the west, and L. F. Britton for Boston.

Toeplitz

Paul Graetz, head of distribution for Toeplitz Productions, of London, returned to England after three weeks in New York conferring with distributors on a cooperative producing-distribution arrangement. Mr. Graetz is returning to present the proposals to Mr. Toeplitz.

Universal's production activities were extended to embrace a Spanish division, Christy Cabanne having been assigned to direct "Storm Over the Andes," first of an indefinite number.

The international sales convention of Warner Brothers, which meets in Los Angeles on June 10th, was extended from three days to 13, in order to allow for a course in actual production for sales executives, salesmen and theatre managers who will attend, as well as for a series of individual conferences between Harry M. Warner, president, and key men of the Warner companies.

Executives already lined up for addresses include, besides Harry, Jack and Major Albert Warner, Robert Schless, in charge in Europe; Max Milder, Great Britain; D. E. Griffiths, also of Britain; Peter Colli, Central America; A. S. Abeles, Mexico; Hal B. Wallis, who will give a series of technical talks on production.

Business sessions, to be held at the Ambassador Hotel, will be presided over by A. W. Smith, eastern and Canadian sales manager, and Gradwell Sears, western and southern sales manager.

The studio this week announced that it has under contract for 1935-36, 21 stars, 54 featured players, 22 directors and 38 writers, a total of 135.

RKO Cuts Net Loss for 1934

A consolidated net loss for the year 1934 of $310,574 was reported by Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation this week in a financial report issued by Irving Trust Company, trustee in the reorganization of the company. This loss compares with a loss for 1933 of $4,384,064, and a net loss of $10,629,503 in 1932.

The trustees' report stated that the bulk of improvement in RKO's position last year is traceable to the earnings of RKO Radio Pictures, which had a net profit for the year of $570,000, as compared with a loss in 1933 of $663,000. Total income from film rentals and sales in 1934 amounted to $21,276,716.

RKO Pathe Pictures, engaged chiefly in the rental of the former Pathe west coast studio, reduced its 1933 loss of $627,000 to a loss of $270,000 in 1934. Pathe News also reduced its losses last year as compared with 1933, the 1934 report showing a loss of approximately $25,000.

Cash on hand at the end of 1934 amounted to $,4,659,505, or a gain of approximately $1,000,000 over 1933. Consolidated capital deficit in 1934 totaled $10,822,925 as compared with $10,973,141 at the end of 1933. Consolidated operating deficit increased from $15,899,122 at the end of 1933 to $16,078,501 at the end of last year. Income from theatre admissions in 1934 amounted to $18,290,803, while income from wholly-owned foreign subsidiaries amounted to $397,163.

50 COLOR ATTEMPTS IN 50 YEARS

Technicolor's forthcoming feature, "Becky Sharp," produced with the new three-color process, marks close to the fifteenth attempt over half a century to adapt as many color ideas to the commercial screen.

Coming at a time when the eyes of the industry are centered on this latest test of public reaction, the Color Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has published a record of some 46 color processes introduced variously down through the years, and even this is admittedly not a complete record, due to the unavailability of information on some processes long forgotten.

Tracing the history of color from the Zoetrope Process, as appearing in 1869, to the present-day three-color Technicolor process, the Engineers' Society explains the nature of the 46 processes brought to its attention. And here they are:

Agfacolor Process—A 16 mm. adaptation of the lenticulated film principle. (1932).

Autochrome—Three-color additive photography, plates for which are made by Lumiere. The plates carry an irregular mosaic screen of red, green and blue-violet starch strains with a panchromatic emulsion over-coating. (1907).

Busch—Additive two-color. The negative is produced by running 35 mm. film horizontally through the camera. Twin lenses form a pair of images upon a single frame area; image pairs are superimposed when projected. (About 1928).

Brewster—Subtractive two-color, utilizing a double-coated positive film. A colored negative is printed on double-coated positive film and the final silver images are bleached and dyed. (1914).

Cine Color—Subtractive three-color. Negatives are made with a beam-splitter camera using a single film and a bi-pack. Double-coated film is used for the red (dye tone) and blue (iron tone) images. The third (yellow) image is added to the film from a matrix by imbibition.

Colorcraft—Two-color subtractive. The negative is made by a beam-splitter or by a bi-pack method; the positive is on single-coated film. Print images are dye toned with the aid of an iodide mordant. (About 1929).

Dufaycolor—Regular mosaic screen-plate, for three-color additive cinematography. (1931)

Dufay—Mosaic screen-plate, using four constituent colors. (1908). N.B. Also Spicer-Dufay.

Dupack—Combination of a green-sensitive and panchromatic film sold by Du Pont for making two-color motion picture negatives. The green-sensitive film bears a red filter layer upon its emulsion surface.—The two films are run through the camera with their emulsion sides in contact. Exposure is made through the base of the green-sensitive film. (About 1931).

Duplex Color-Plates—Similar to the Paget a screen separate from a panchromatic plate, sensitive emulsion are on separate plates. (About 1927).

Finlay—Mosaic screen-plate, utilizing either a screen separate from a panchromatic plate. (1929) or coated upon the same plate. The latter type is known under the trade-marked name, "Finlaychrome." (1931).

Gaumont Tri-Color Additive—Triple lens system both in camera and projector. The frames are of standard (silent) width and three-fourths the standard height. (1912).

Handschiegel—Applying color to local areas of black-and-white prints by imbibition, using one or more dyed matrices.

Harriscolor—Two-color subtractive. Prints from color-separation negatives are made on single-coated film printed first through the back, processed, and blue-toned with iron. The residual emulsion on the front is subsequently printed, processed and red-toned. (1929).

Herault Trichrome—Additive three-color. The three-color print, consisting of successive red, green and blue dye-tinted frames, is projected 24 frames per second in non-intermittent projector. (About 1929).

Horst—Additive three-color. The three images are exposed and later printed within one standard frame. (About 1929).

Joly Color Screen—Regular mosaic screen-plate consisting of ruled lines. (1894-5).

Keller-Dorian—Three-color additive. A banded tricolor filter is associated with the camera lens. The film support which faces the lens is embossed with small lens elements. Each lenticular element images the filter bands upon the emulsion surface. A filter of similar form is associated with the projection lens. (Pat. 1908-9; Introduced 1925)

Kinemacolor—Two-color additive, involving use of a rotary shutter of color-filters before the lenses of both camera and projector. (1906)

Kodachrome—Two-color subtractive for still photography and 35 mm. motion picture, devised by Eastman Kodak Company. Prints are made upon double-coated film; the positive is bleached with a tanning bleach and dyed with dyes which penetrate soft gelatin preferentially. (1915) (NOTE: This is not the new Kodachrome process recently announced by Eastman and which bears no resemblance to that process introduced in 1915)

Kodacolor—16 mm. adaptation of Keller-Dorian process. (1928)

Kromogram—Three transparent stereoscopic pairs of images which appear as a single color picture when viewed with a special viewing device called the Kromskop. (1894)

Lignose—Irregular mosaic three-color, applied to roll film and film pack. (1927)

Lippmann—Direct color photography based upon interference of light. An exceedingly fine-grained panchromatic emulsion is exposed in intimate contact with a metallic (mercury) mirror. A standing-wave pattern is produced throughout the depth of the emulsion layer, the silver being reduced in the anti-nodal planes, thus forming a system of reflecting laminae. The plates are viewed by reflected light. (1891)

Magnachrome—Two-color additive. Half the normal picture height is used for each of the pairs of pictures.

Magnacolor—Two-color subtractive. Bi-pack negative and double-coated positive films are used. (1930.)

Maxwell Primaries—The colors red, green and blue-violet used by Maxwell to demonstrate the application of the Young-Helmholtz theory to color photography.

Morgana—Two-color additive (for 16 mm. reversal pictures). In the projector, the film is moved two frames forward, one backward, and so on. Effective camera and projection speed is 24 frames per second, although the special projector movement produces 72 alternations per second. (1932.)

Multicolor—Two-color subtractive 35 mm. The negative is made with a bipack. The color print is made on double-coated film. (1929.)

Paget Color Screen Plate—Regular mosaic color screen plate (1912) available commercially since 1929 as the Finlay plate.

Pathechrome—Color applied to a black-and-white print through a celluloid film stencil. (1928.)

Photocolor—Two-color subtractive, using a twin lens camera and dye-toned prints on double-coated film. (About 1930.)

Pilney—Two-color subtractive. (1930.)

Pinachrome—Printing process based upon the use of leucobases which oxidize upon exposure to light, yielding color images which are assembled by superposition.

Pinatype—Subtractive three-color for still pictures based upon the differential straining action of certain dyes for hard and soft gelatin. (1906.)

Raycol—Two-color additive. The image pairs are exposed (¼ standard size) on each frame and disposed in diagonal corners of the frame. The image pairs from contact positives are superposed by a suitable optical system. (1930.)

Sennett Color—Subtractive, using a bi-pack negative and a double-coated film for the print. (1930.)

Sirius—Two-color subtractive, in which alternate frames of the negative are exposed with the aid of a beam-splitter, and the positive print is made upon double-coated film. (1929.)

Splendicolor—Three-color subtractive in which the three-color separation records are printed as follows: blue record upon one side by iron toning, and the yellow and red as successive color layers upon the opposite side by dyed bichromatic methods. (1928.)

Technicolor—A trade-name applied to various types of subtractive cinematographic color processes (about 1915). At one time marketed as a two-color relief process; more recently as a three-color imbibition process.

Utocolor—Three-color subtractive transfer, using the bleach-out method for making a color transparency. It depends upon the bleaching property of certain wavelengths for certain dyes. (1895.)

Vitacolor—Additive two-color, similar to Kinemacolor. (1930.)

Warner-Powrie—Three-color regular line-screen process. (1905.)

Zoechrome—Three-color subtractive with a black-and-white key. In the camera every alternate frame is normally exposed; on each remaining frame, three images are exposed through primary filters. The standard size image is printed first, and each of the color-images in succession is enlarged and superposed upon the first. Between successive printings, the film is varnished and recoated with emulsion. Each image layer is dye-toned before the next layer is added. (1929.)

Zoetrope—Probably the first color photography using the rapid substitution of primary images before the eles. (1869.)

TECHNICOLOR, KODAK IN PATENT POOLING

Eastman Kodak and Technicolor, Inc., have entered into a cross-licensing agreement on color film patents, it was learned this week. Some of the basic developments behind the new Eastman Kodachrome process were the work of Technicolor and others of Eastman. Under the agreement it is expected that the Kodachrome process will become the Technicolor laboratory process if it shall be proved successful for Technicolor's use beyond the present Technicolor process.

NRA COLLAPSE HALTS LOEW INVASION TEST

Cessation of Local Board Meetings Delays Essaness Move; Court Action May Follow

The first actual battle in Chicago to be set between independent exhibitors and Loew-Metro over Loew's impending wholesale invasion of the Chicago theatre field in order to break the independents' boycott, died a-borning this week with the collapse of the NRA. Two clauses of the motion picture code, governing distributors' participation in exhibition, were to be used in a grievance board test case filed against Loew's by Essaness Theatres, but the ordered cessation of all local code board hearings as a result of the death of the Blue Eagle blocked the move. It appeared certain that Essaness would now seek remedy in the courts.

Report Quiz Plea Started

Edwin Silverman, of Essaness, who last week promised a "bombshell", declared following abandonment of the board hearings that he cannot talk until Friday. This lent credence in Chicago to reports from Atlanta, allegedly made by Abram Myers at last week's Allied States convention, that the wheels had been started for launching a Federal Trade Commission inquiry into the Loew-Metro building situation.

If a federal investigation is to be made, instructions had not yet been received from Washington by W. F. Dinnen, Chicago Federal Trade Commission chief.

Asked if he knew of a reported federal investigation, Mr. Silverman declared again that he could not talk until later this week.

Meanwhile the two Chicago exhibitor organizations headed by Aaron Saperstein and Jack Miller were putting pressure behind the new Granata state bill, aimed at the Loew-Metro move and which would make it unlawful for any distributor to build or lease theatres when the purpose of such expansion is demonstrated to be coercion or intimidation of any existing theatre.

Specifically mentioned in Essaness' grievance board complaint were Loew's and Jones, Linick and Schaefer, and involved were alleged efforts of the Jones interests to take the Sheridan theatre away from Essaness with Loew's backing.

Lynch Denies Compromise Move

Robert Lynch, MGM branch manager at Philadelphia, who has charge of the Chicago invasion, denied he had told Morris Wax, Philadelphia exhibitor leader, that his company is willing to set aside its Chicago building plans for the purpose of compromising with Chicago's independents. Mr. Wax's statement had been made on the floor to delegates at the Allied convention.

RKO, too, was facing possible difficulties with independents over operating policies. Members of Allied Theatres of the Northwest, gathered at a special meeting in Minneapolis, voted to permit the organization to handle their buying of RKO pictures for one year. This was in answer to the alleged unfair competition of the RKO Orpheum in Minneapolis.

Although Nicholas Goldhammer, RKO manager, explained that the Orpheum is not operated by RKO but by Mort Singer, Allied leaders insisted that RKO had sufficient voice to control the situation, which involves the showing of "key" pictures with five acts of vaudeville at prices said by Allied to be unfair.

Allied's Minneapolis members are understood to have pledged $250 each against any walkout from the agreement to permit the organization to handle its RKO product purchases, which will be in the hands of the governing board, composed of J. B. Clinton, president; S. G. Lebedeff and C. L. Peasley.

Industry Needs Color, Forum Told

"The industry needs all the help it can summon—it needed sound; it needs color," in the opinion of Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, co-inventor and head of Technicolor, Inc., speaking as honor guest at a "color forum" of the Motion Picture Club in New York on Tuesday. Other speakers included Robert Edmond Jones, color and set designer, and J. Arthur Ball, technical director of Technicolor, Inc., and M. H. Aylesworth, John Hay Whitney, Charles C. Pettijohn, W. G. Van Schmus and others.

Color Feature 15 Years Ago

The first full length feature, made in the newly developed three component Technicolor, "Becky Sharp," produced by John Hay Whitney's Pioneer Productions and released by RKO Radio, opens at the Radio City Music Hall shortly, and provided something of the impetus for the Motion Picture Club's forum topic.

Describing the development of Technicolor, from the first feature, "The Gulf Between," 15 years ago, to the present latest developments, Dr. Kalmus said:

"In the last analysis we are creating and selling entertainment. The scenario is the thing. You cannot make a poor story or poor script good by color, sound or by any other device or embellishment. But you can help a good scenario to be better—good showmanship always helps. Broadway has a terrible struggle each season to find good stories or plays for a dozen successes. Hollywood is trying to find 300. They don't exist. The industry needs all the help it can summon—it needed sound; it needs color. But color must be good enough and cheap enough. The old two-component, grainy Technicolor was neither, hence it failed; but it was a step to the present day Technicolor."

Answering what he described as a common question, that relative to the cost of producing a picture in Technicolor as compared to black and white, Dr. Kalmus pointed out that, as in the case of Walt Disney's "Funny Bunnies" Silly Symphonies subject, it couldn't be done in black and white at any cost. Making a general answer, Dr. Kalmus said that if a script has been conceived, planned and written for black and white it shouldn't be done in color at all. The story should be chosen and the scenario written, he said, with color in mind from the start. "Color should flow from sequence to sequence," he explained, "supporting and giving impulse to the drama, becoming an integral part of it and not something superadded."

Assuming the production cost question to be the cost for color per unit of entertainment on the screen, said Dr. Kalmus, it needn't necessarily cost any more than black and white. "With the right story and the right scenario it may cost less."

Cites Fall of Print Cost

The prints, however, do cost more. Technicolor prints started at 20 cents a foot, said Dr. Kalmus, were dropped to 12 cents a foot, then to 8¾ cents, 7½ cents, 6 cents and are now 5½ cents a foot. With sufficient volume the price will be further reduced, he indicated.

"I believe 50 per cent of the producers, distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures are color-minded," said Dr. Kalmus. "If you challenge the point I shall agree and then say that 40 per cent of them are not color-minded."

Tracing the development of Technicolor from the first feature, Dr. Kalmus pointed out that it was projected by an additive process requiring the projectionist to keep two pictures in register on the screen. The present process is a subtractive process, he said. Technicolor, he explained, is just as luminous as black and white, and requires only standard black and white conditions for theatre projection.

In 1926 Douglas Fairbanks produced "The Black Pirate" entirely in Technicolor, by which time the additive process had been abandoned. The process was a two-color double-coated subtractive process with one color component of the positive print on either side of the celluloid. Curling was one serious defect of that process, with resultant loss of focus. Then came the new three-color process, Walt Disney's use of it in the Silly Symphonies, in the Mickey Mouse as well, and now "Becky Sharp."

Robert Edmond Jones, color designer of "Becky Sharp," said artists with an instinctive color sense "will find this medium an extraordinarily difficult but rewarding one" and that color holds out to producers the promise of making their pictures "not only more beautiful but incomparatively more powerful." However, he emphasized, color is of value only when handled by colorists.

Mr. Ball saw in color a "means whereby the theatres may step out way ahead of television," predicting that television will be in black and white and that by that time color pictures can have placed the exhibitor far in front.

Mudra Celebrates 25th Anniversary with Bell

Frank Mudra, office superintendent of Electrical Research, was guest of honor this week at a luncheon given by 200 associates at the Great Northern Hotel, New York, to celebrate his 25th anniversary with the Bell System.

Bert Sanford, northeastern division sales manager of Erpi, was toastmaster and supervised the presentation of a traveling set, a gift from Mudra's associates.

Earlier in the day J. E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research, had presented Mr. Mudra with the gold award emblematic of 25 years' service with the Bell System.

Shaw Honor Guest

Harry F. Shaw, New England division manager of Loew-Poli Theatres, was honored at a testimonial dinner in Hartford this week celebrating his first year in his present position. More than 200 friends and business associates attended.

Kliou (The Tiger)

(Bennett Pictures)

Novelty

A novelty film which is done entirely in Technicolor, this is a silent with subtitles being the interpretative medium. Located in the interior of Indo-China, expert photography, finely tinted, accentuates the natural wild scenic beauty. Similarly appropriate musical scoring gives added significance to the picture's visual drama, romance, thrill, comedy and suspense. The four principal characters are Moi natives. In the prologue and epilogue de la Falaise, producer and director, and a white French army officer appear. The former tells the story which is subsequently acted by the natives.

Actually it is the story of a Moi romance and a tiger hunt. Bhat is in love with Dhi, daughter of Khan, who does not think the boy a big enough hunter or warrior to be worthy of his daughter. A tiger, Kliou, has been ravishing the native village, carrying off people and domestic stock. In a hunt the Khan is mortally clawed by Kliou. Witch doctors tell him that the ebbing of Kliou's life blood will restore him to health. Bhat with Nyan, little brother of the family, take up the hunt. Dramatic suspense is built up as the pair face the dangers of the jungles—crawling snakes, insects and other dangerous wild animals. Finally after much realistic and naturally presented hardship, the two strike Kliou's trail. Bhat wounds him with a poisoned arrow. After the menace has slowly died and the news relayed to the village, tribesmen bring in the trophy. Khan recovers and the romance between Dhi and Bhat consummated.

Presented in a manner that immediately created and holds attention, the picture is novelly interesting and one that should prove a pleasing attraction. The manner in which it gives a vivid insight into a type of life of which the white world knows little is both educationally instructive and entertaining.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Paris in Spring

Romantic Comedy

This is a clever adaptation of a smart stage play. A romantic comedy, to which an air of light drama is added, it also features its lead personality, Mary Ellis, in three song numbers. Modern in spirit, located and timed as the title indicates, it is keyed to a semi-intimate pitch. This character, however, is more likely to precipitate smiles rather than blushes and as it is intelligently handled in direction, dialogue and situations can be relied upon to intrigue the interest of both the sophisticates and masses.

Settings being exceptionally attractive, the show moves in a Parisian atmosphere that is pretty well understood in this country. First sequences are gay and merry as playboy Paul campaigns to win the heart of Simone, toast of the boulevards and night clubs. Rebuffed, he would end it all by jumping from the Eiffel Tower. There, in a moment of potentially tense drama, he meets love sick Mignon intent upon the same purpose. Talking each other out of their rash intentions, they fall in love. Taking the girl to the country, their romance grows apace until Simone reappears. It is evident that Paul's love for her is greater than his for Mignon and the girl is almost heartbroken.

Simone, sympathetic with her and both convinced that men are something they can do very well without, decide to retire to a convent. Learning of this and the tragedy that it would bring to him, Paul rushes after Simone and Mignon's young lover, Albert, pleads with her to reconsider. The situation is complicated by Grandma Leger, who believes that the wrong ones actually are married. But when the four become reunited and all are ecstatically happy, the show ends.

As there is much potential entertainment that should easily appeal to all classes in the story and the manner in which it is produced, there is also much commercially valuable in its ingredients and personnel with which to sell it. Mary Ellis, previously seen in "All the King's Horses," not only acts with ease and charm, but also sings in a manner that should thrill audiences. One of the songs, "Ma'mselle," is catchy, rhythmic and should prove a commercial asset. The other principals, Tullio Carminati, Ida Lupino and James Blakely, carry the story in the intended spirit. There being novelty in the romantic twists which are sufficiently complicated to maintain continual interest, the comedy is of the farce variety that usually can be counted upon to create lots of laughs. It may be sold as something quite a bit apart from the current trend.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The New Adventures of Tarzan

(Burroughs-Tarzan Enterprises)

Adventure

In this new Tarzan, the apeman hero, with a new famous athlete assuming the title role, transfers his thrilling and amazing activities from the jungles of Africa to those of the lost cities of Guatemala. Essentially a juvenile feature, produced in a manner to create the greatest amount of enthusiasm among that audience contingent, it is from a pictorial standpoint in its picturizations of the country's natural beauties and age old ruins, something that can be made interesting to adults.

The substantiating story is only a peg upon which to hang the production's exciting action and thrill. It has to do with a young scientist who, searching for the hidden jewels of a fabulous goddess and also a mystic secret formula, calls upon Tarzan for assistance. The highlights among the many thrilling incidents are Tarzan's race for life with a fierce crocodile; his struggle to save the girl from going over a roaring waterfall; his barehanded encounter with a pair of leopards, and a rousing fight with a horde of fanatic natives bent upon protecting the goddess and the secret formula.

Actually a thrill-a-minute feature, it is an exploitation picture in which the character of Tarzan himself is the focal point of showmanship endeavor. The theatrical heroics being an understood quality, there is a novelty in the settings which justifies much new and different interest development. Spectacular and authentic, the picture having been made in Guatemala, it has a commercial worth that should not be ignored in stimulating adult attention. However, as the real appeal of the action is to the young folks, a campaign that seeks to whet their appetites should be concentrated upon to the utmost.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Healer

(Monogram)

Drama

Homespun, down-to-earth drama, with contrasting comedy, with romance having an element of conflict, and the blistering action of a fiercely raging forest fire, this adaptation of the Robert Herrick novel is the kind of entertainment that may be shown any time and anywhere, and to almost any kind of audience. It may be sold as material for the entire family.

The cast contains familiar names which should have value as attendance attracting factors. In the lead is Ralph Bellamy, as the young country doctor, "the Healer." In support are Karen Morley, Judith Allen, J. Farrell MacDonald and the child player, Mickey Rooney, in particular.

There should be opportunity to attract patronage through the development of the story's theme, centering about the havoc that is almost wrought in the life and work of the doctor whose wonderful healing power centers about the mineral pool in the mountains, when a society girl attempts to lure him, for herself, into the leadership of a fine sanitarium, and to wealth and fame. The disillusionment which results would have caused complete breakdown of all he cared for most, had not a sharply dramatic episode returned the old order and happily terminated the romantic complication.

country town, Bellamy, able surgeon, is devoting his life, virtually without pay, to the cure of crippled children, with the aid of the pool containing curative powers, and the able assistance of Miss Morley, one-time society girl who has renounced her wealthy friends, and is secretly in love with Bellamy. Rooney, crippled boy, is brought to Bellamy's cabin sanitarium, where MacDonald is the cook and handy man. The boy's dream is that he will be able to ride a bicycle, and his faith in Bellamy is unlimited.

Visiting a nearby swank summer lodge is Miss Allen, with her wealthy father, McWade, suffering from dyspepsia. Miss Allen becomes infatuated with Bellamy, causes him to fall in love with her, for the moment, and persuades her father to transform the lodge into a fashionable sanitarium, and Bellamy to operate it. He becomes known among the wealthy, and the sanitarium becomes a rendezvous for wealthy hypochrondriacs. Miss Morley, meanwhile, maintains the pool and continues the treatment of the children there, bitterly resentful of the havoc that Miss Allen has wrought.

A forest fire breaks out, approaches the pool, and Miss Morley is struck by a falling tree. Young Rooney, driven by desperation, reaches the bicycle he had never ridden, and rides for Bellamy and help. The men arrive in time, Miss Morley is saved and the expensive sanitarium is destroyed. The forest fire sequence is especially effective. Bellamy realizes he loves Miss Morley, and Miss Allen understands that she is beaten.

With action, romance and down-to-earth appeal, it is an entertaining picture for the family. —AARONSON, New York.

Heroes of the Arctic

(Amkino)

Pictorial Record

A motion picture record of the now famous Russian expedition into the far North, headed by Commander Schmidt, and the dramatic rescue of the members of that expedition by air from the ice after the sinking of the ship, this has elements of inherent drama. In its direct picturization of the expedition from the time the ship Chelyuskin started from Leningrad in July, 1933, until the triumphal return to Moscow of the expedition's members and their rescuers, more than a year later, the film holds considerable of interest.

It is somewhat doubtful whether or not the film may stand alone on the program of the regular run theatre, since it is not actually in the category of what is generally considered to be entertainment, but for something in the nature of a special showing, it may well be sold as interesting and informative material. What little explanatory dialogue there is is in Russian.

The rescue by daring airmen of Soviet Russia and the United States, of 105 men, women and children, from shifting ice floes in the Arctic, and the fact that only one person of the expedition's personnel lost his life during the entire period of voyage, sinking, marooning and rescue makes for real drama. The camera work throughout is notably good, the expedition's cameraman, A. Shafron, having done his job most capably.

Scenically the picture has something to offer, as well, in its picturization of the tremendous ice floes, the ice bergs and shelves, as the steamer attempted to cut its way through in blazing a new ocean trail, via a northeast route, across the Arctic to North America. Having nearly completed its set journey, the ship was trapped in the ice, unable to move in any direction. Slowly the ice pressed in upon the steamer, and all hands were ordered to unload as much as possible of equipment, including the expedition's airplane and as much of personal belongings as possible. The ice crushed the steamer's side and she sank in three hours. Marooned on the ice, the personnel began to build shelter for itself, clear a landing field for the plane on the ice, and communicate via its radio with Moscow.

Rescue work was organized immediately and the best fliers of the Soviet state, as well as fliers from America's Alaska, began their task of rescue. Women and children were removed first, then groups of the men, until the entire personnel was taken off the shifting ice. The film concludes with the triumphal return of the group to Moscow, coupled with one of the gigantic parades in Red Square, in which the Russians seem to take such delight.—AARONSON, New York.

Romance with Music

Starring the famous European tenor, Richard Tauber, this British-produced picture is a romance, recording something of the unsuccessful romance in the life of the great Viennese composer, Franz Schubert, and set to the music of the genius. That music, adapted by G. H. Clutsam for the film, becomes at once one of the chief factors to be considered in the exhibition of the picture. It is known everywhere, and should be a means of attracting the cooperation of community groups.

With the exception of the star, the cast will be unknown in this country, especially insofar as the regular run audiences are concerned. Tauber may well be a familiar name among metropolitan audiences, and where he is known his name should be sold for all it may be worth.

Music lovers should find much to delight them in the film, the story of which is entirely simple, telling of the love of the poor schoolmaster and composer, who meets disappointment in his devotion to the young daughter of the man in whose house he has his lodgings, but who, to bring happiness to the girl, succeeds in gaining the necessary permission for her lover, a count and army officer, to marry her.

Tauber presents an excellent characterization of the composer, and every possible opportunity is wisely afforded for him to sing. There is comparatively little of the pronounced English accent which has presented a problem often in the exhibition of English productions in this country. The film as it stands tends to drag in spots, a fault which may well be overcome by judicious cutting. The exhibitor may make the most of the voice of Tauber, the music of Schubert and whatever may be devised relative to the romantic episode in the life of the great composer.

Schubert is in love with Vicki, and hopes some day to ask her to marry him. He is told by her father that he must first prove himself a successful composer. Rudi, a count, and officer in the regiment of the Archduchess, must hurriedly learn the waltz, new fangled dance which has swept the Vienna of 1820, and goes to Vicki's father for a quick midnight lesson. He meets and falls in love with Vicki, and she returns his feeling.

Unaware that she is seriously in love with the count, Schubert arranges a concert, meets with anger when his soloist does not appear, but wins his audience when he sings his own songs. Happily he asks Vicki to marry him, then learns that she loves the count. The count tells him he would gladly marry Vicki but the archduchess would cause his resignation if he married anyone but of her choice. Schubert composes a lampoon about the archduchess, is arrested and gains an audience with her. Through music he recalls to her memories of her own youth and love for her music master, and wins her consent to the marriage of Vicki and the count, even though it means his own loss of the girl. Schubert sings the famous "Ave Maria" at the elaborate wedding ceremony. "Red Roses," "Impatience," "Hark, Hark the Lark" and "Faith in Spring" are among the Schubert compositions included in the film.

Simple romance, music of unusual quality, the picture has little action in the generally accepted sense, but other entertainment elements which may be sold.—AARONSON, New York.

The Girl from 10th Avenue

(First National)

Adapted from a play by Hubert Henry Davies, this features two strong drawing names, two others which may well warrant emphasis by the regular run theatre exhibitor, since they are both apt to be well known in the metropolitan centers, and a dramatic story which follows the lines of many another about complication in the marital affairs of the wealthy. A secondary phase has to do with the manner in which a girl of the working class, so to speak, proves to a man presumably above her station that she is in reality more of a "lady" than another born to wealth.

At the head of the cast listing is Bette Davis, who has scored in numerous recent appearances, and whose name on the marquee should have definite drawing quality. Also Alison Skipworth is well known and popular. The two players whose names may well be emphasized are Ian Hunter, extremely well known on the New York stage, and definitely capable, and Colin Clive, who has been seen numerous times on the screen and who is likely to be remembered for several recent roles.

The story of this picture would seem to have a greater appeal for women than for men, consequently it appears that "selling" the feminine portion of the audience is the best tack to take, relying upon them to bring the men along. The film must be considered as sophisticated material in its atmosphere, but down-to-earth in its recording of the conflict of two women, one wealthy and with position, the other with neither of those, for the love of one man. The development of that conflict is the backbone of the film's story.

Hunter is thrown over at the last minute by the society girl he was about to marry, Katherine Alexander. Standing at the church as she is married to Clive, and inebriated, he is about to make a scene, when the little working girl, Miss Davis, watching the wedding during her lunch hour, takes him in hand and proceeds to straighten him out. When two of his club friends eventually find them in a restaurant, Hunter refuses to go with them, and they leave him with Miss Davis.

They find themselves next morning in a neighboring small town hotel, married, Miss Davis having permitted it in order to help him, since he drunkenly insisted upon it, but she is ready to give him his freedom immediately. He refuses to permit it, they return to town, live in an obscure apartment house, and while he attempts to develop his law practice, she attempts, through the aid of Miss Skipworth, landlady and former actress, to improve herself in such a manner that she will be able to get and hold Hunter's love.

Then Miss Alexander steps into the picture again, and tiring of Clive, attempts to regain her former position with Hunter. Miss Davis brings all her feminine wiles into the game, and with the aid of Miss Skipworth, almost succeeds, until a restaurant scene with Miss Alexander draws Hunter's anger. She is about to walk out on him, when he attempts to do the same thing, and at his club, in a conversation with Clive, comes to his senses and realizes he really loves Miss Davis. A reconciliation ends the film.

Adult material exclusively, the film is in no sense of the sort which children would either appreciate or understand.—AARONSON, New York.

Brown on Resolution

(Gaumont British)

Naval Drama

Full cooperation of the British Admiralty, extended for the first time to a producer of film drama, has provided in "Brown on Resolution" a sequence of scenes of naval battle which tops almost anything of the kind. Lending several ships, the Navy chiefs rather guaranteed the authenticity of Walter Forde's picture in matters of maneuver and discipline, and Forde himself has looked after the drama. The picture does definitely convey the impression that one is in the thick of a cruiser action, with salvoes of shells screaming overhead, enemy shells crashing about the ears, and the torpedo completing the picture of inferno with modern improvements. Some of the fighting is done at night and searchlights and gun flashes are added to the picture, which throughout is accompanied by sound on the terrifying scale.

Undoubtedly these scenes will have the average patron on the edge of his seat and a rather inconclusive story matters much less than it would in a story without such outstanding spectacular values. The fact that the human actors are little more than puppets in a war of machines has its dramatic value; certainly with all its parade of naval might, there is no suggestion of a glorification of war. The peace advocate will probably find the film a convincing proof of the stupidity of war.

A "period" opening to the story introduces a London household in 1893, the year in which the present King George and Queen Mary were married; their wedding procession is glimpsed. Elizabeth Brown, daughter of a shopkeeper, is about to be forced into a distasteful marriage when she meets a naval lieutenant on leave, and spends some months with him. She is turned into the street by her father, but sets to and earns her own living and in due course determines to make her son a sailor. His career in training ship and gunnery school is shown and, on the eve of the war, he is a seaman on the British cruiser "Rutland" in South American waters. In a neutral port the crew of the "Rutland" fraternizes with that of the German warship "Zeithen," and the boy strikes up a friendship with a German sailor who defeats him in a boxing match.

On the outbreak of war, the "Rutland" attempts to rendezvous with the more powerful "Leopard," but is intercepted and sunk by the "Zeithen." The boy is one of those rescued by the Germans and, in the sick bay of the "Zeithen," is tended by his German friend.

Pursued by the "Leopard," the German commander proceeds to Resolution Island to repair a shell-hole in the hull of his ship. The British prisoner, stealing a rifle and cartridges, manages to swim to the island and, from the cliff top, shoots all the men who attempt to repair the damage. One of those he kills is his own German friend. Finally, the "Zeithen" captain shells the island. The sound of gunfire brings the "Leopard" on the scene and the "Zeithen" is sunk in a night engagement. All that is found of the boy hero is a gold watch which the "Leopard" captain recognizes as that which he gave to the girl with whom he had a love affair in '93.

This is a picture which can be sold in more than one way. The sheer spectacular value of the war scenes, their really terrifying realism, are obvious assets. Another angle is the sacrifice of all decent human instincts demanded by war.—ALLAN, London.

A Shot in the Dark

(Chesterfield)

Mystery

Adapted for the screen from a novel by Clifford Orr, "The Dartmouth College Murders," this independently-produced picture contains the elements of mystery, suspense and a fair portion of action, all factors of audience attracting character. Since the cast includes no names of outstanding selling importance, it would appear that concentration upon the mystery-murder angle, playing on the perennial interest of screen goers in mystery material, would be the best attack to use in selling the picture.

In addition, whatever value the name of the author of the original story, and its original title, may have in the community may well be capitalized to the fullest extent.

Heading the cast is Charles Starrett, with Robert Warwick, Edward Van Sloan and Marion Shilling in chief support. There is something not only of novelty, but genuine relief, in the fact that the local small town sheriff who investigates the murders is not the customary "hick cop" supplying the comedy of the film, but rather a hard working and serious minded local policeman who realizes his own shortcomings and is more than willing to accept help from an amateur criminologist who happens to be available at the moment.

James Bush, roommate of Starrett, is found murdered in his dormitory room, his body suspended outside the window as though he had hanged himself. He is found by Starrett, who had gone to meet his father, Warwick, corporation lawyer and amateur criminologist. At the request of the college authorities, Warwick takes charge of the case, working in cooperation with the local sheriff. Starrett is in love with the dead boy's sister, Miss Shilling. There are several suspects, and action develops as another student, about to reveal important information relative to a visitor to the dead boy's room, is killed dramatically during a session in the college auditorium. The instrument by which he was killed, the same which murdered the first victim, was a long, fine needle, apparently shot into the heads of the murdered students.

Warwick conducts his investigation, and during a night examination of the auditorium, is shot at. The assailant escapes. Warwick is struck by the resemblance of a visiting student to Starrett's room, and learns that he is half-brother of the first victim. Then entering into the plot is the fact that Bush was about to have inherited a large sum of money, and the identity of a man who had married Bush's mother years before in Paris and then deserted her.

Eventually, after an action sequence in which the half-brother is trapped in a deserted house, then shot before he can reveal the name of the murderer, the perpetrator of the crimes is revealed by Warwick as the college professor and organ master, in reality the man who deserted Bush's mother in Paris.

With action, mystery which is difficult of solution for the ordinary audience and suspense, the film should be acceptably played almost any time during the week.—AARONSON, New York.

Elizabeth of England

(Associated British)

Historical Spectacle

Here is an energetic attempt to produce a lavish film sweeping across the wide canvas of the romantic period of English history when a small band of seafaring men set their country on the road to commercial and maritime domination. The period is, probably, the most adventurous and bizarre in England's history, and, as such, lends itself to cinematic treatment. The ambition of the director seems to have been somewhat dampened, and what could justifiably have been an epic just fails to get across. Nevertheless, it is a noteworthy addition to the long train of British historical films without any false and sugary lavishness.

The story tells of the merchantman Drake and his difficulties in trading on the high seas while Philip of Spain, master of the known world, sails his galleon fleets wherever he wishes. Drake manages to tell Elizabeth of the treachery of her socalled ally in attacking British vessels while the two countries are at peace. Ellzabeth although for obvious diplomatic reasons cannot agree to Drake's suggestion to retaliate, conveys to him that she is more than ready to overlook any exploit on his part which might result in the pillaging of the Spanish treasure towns in South America and a general worrying of the treasure fleets. Drake's success results in the Queen's visiting him in his home town at Plymouth, and her councillors realize that her admiration of this man will, unless curbed, lead to war.

But once again Drake manages to get unofficial permission to make a voyage. This time it is the famous one 'round the world in "The Golden Hind." Upon his return Elizabeth throws away all subterfuge, knights him, and the result is war. The war brought the famous Armada fight, and the mastery of the seas passed from Spain to England.

Elizabeth is brilliantly played by Athene Seyler, while Matheson Lang gives a convincing picture of the bluff sailor who becomes the savior of his country.

Most commendable is the care with which the film has been produced. Many of the speeches by Elizabeth and Drake are authentic. The realism of the battle scenes leaves nothing to be desired. Beautiful camera work makes up somewhat for defect of the battle as a whole.

The box office angle is the fine portrayal of Elizabeth by Athene Seyler and the true-to-life

Drama

A story of a rich girl suddenly poor, who is befriended by the operator of a come-on, "sucker" cafe in New York, cannot reciprocate when he falls in love with her, and wins the wealthy young man she loves only through the other's sacrifice to make her happy, this is mildly entertaining material. It was produced by Select Productions for RKO Radio release.

With only fairly strong names, "the story's the thing" as far as the exhibitor is concerned in the selling of the film. The title refers to the position the girl is given by her friend as hostess in the cafe and later in his swank night club. Whether or not to emphasize the title will best be determined by the exhibitor himself.

Heading the cast are Adrienne Ames and Ralph Bellamy, with Donald Cook and Robert Armstrong in chief support. The locale is entirely New York, with comparatively little in the nature of out-of-doors or action material included. The effort of the cafe owner to assist the girl he loves and provide for her happiness forms the backbone of the story and is the angle to be stressed in selling the picture. It becomes, therefore, largely a film which is more apt to attract women, and to them the exhibitor may well direct his greatest appeal. It appears a picture which is perhaps best set in a midweek position on the program.

Bellamy, the cafe operator, and his tough henchman, Armstrong, encounter Miss Ames while driving to New York. She is serving sandwiches at a charity party, and they mistake her for a waitress. Bellamy invites her to come to see him in the event she should come to New York. Later, penniless, she does.

Bellamy falls in love with Miss Ames, but she falls in love with Cook, who returns the feeling. Despite parental objection, Cook is determined to marry her, and gives her, among other presents, a bank account. A large part of it she lends to Bellamy to clear a debt, and at her instigation, to open a large, swank night club of the highest class. When Cook discovers the loan, he misunderstands and breaks the engagement, while Miss Ames becomes a hostess in the night club. But Cook repents, and it is Bellamy who explains the transaction he misunderstood, and affects a reconciliation between the two.—AARONSON, New York.

Leather Necker

(Columbia)

Fair

Harry Langdon, in the lead of this comedy, is the chief reason for the amusement that is in it. The story offers little, but the comedian is really amusing. Langdon is pursued dizzily about the city streets by another car in which is a man who tells his companion why he is chasing the comedian. What he tells is recounted in flashback on the screen. Langdon, on KP with the Marines during a bandit hunt in South America, goes with the sergeant to the house of the latter's girl. There Harry takes his girl away and when they are captured by the bandits sees to it that the sergeant gets the uncomfortable end of what ensues. Hence the comedy automobile chase. A fair comedy.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Mary's Little Lamb

(Celebrity)

Amusing

One of the Celebrity Comi-Color cartoons, this is entertaining and amusing, as it recounts the story, according to the artist's conception, of Mary and her little lamb, which followed her to school. It happens that the teacher is about to entertain the children, it being the last day of school, and when the lamb decides to put on a show of its own, the teacher is in all sorts of difficulty.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Windy

(MGM)

Good

One of the Oddity series, this features Charles "Chic" Sale in one of his expert characterizations. Here is an old miner, who with his burro, finds his greatest pleasure in visiting the children at the town school, where his visits are more than welcome, as he tells far-fetched tales of Indian fights. But the teacher orders him to remain away, until he saves one youngster, with a quick shot at an attacking rattlesnake. Then his status is restored, and he is happy. Sale's ability in these characterizations makes for effective material.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Memories and Melodies

(MGM-FitzPatrick)

Excellent

An excellent subject which should have the widest of appeal and which may be shown anywhere, this number of the Musical Revue series, directed by Technicolor by James A. FitzPatrick, is an outstanding subject. Taking as its theme the work—then unrecognized-of Stephen Foster, who wrote such haunting and everlasting melodies as "The Old Kentucky Home," the subject recounts what might well have been an incident in the composer's unhappy life. He writes the song, tries to sell it at the music shop and plays it, while scenes of the old South, of dancing and negro singing and jigging accompany the music. The Technicolor effects are beautiful, the subject of genuine excellence.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Scrappy's Ghost Story

Fair

This would have been a rather more successful cartoon, if it were not for its subject matter. In view of the fact that cartoons may be considered to be largely the material which most pleases small children, this can hardly be recommended for them. As Scrappy, before the fire, with his small brother, starts on his ghost story, the cartoon pictures all sorts of ghosts and goblins and the like pursuing the small boys, which is likely to keep small children awake far into the night. Otherwise a fair cartoon.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Southern Exposure

(MGM)

Good

One of the Hal Roach Charley Chase comedies, this has numerous entertaining moments, with Chase singing and taking a dual role. Charley's wife discovers that they are related to a southern family, and they trek south to find a broken down village and "poor white trash" as their kin. "Pappy," an old man with young ideas, is sued for breach of promise, and Charley, as a lawyer, has to defend him—against a packed jury, guns and violent tempers. Chase plays Pappy as well as his own role. The result is really amusing comedy.—Running time, 21 minutes.

King's Jester

(Columbia)

Amusing

An amusing cartoon in which Krazy Kat is one of several candidates for the position of King's jester. He is unhappy at the prospect when he sees what happens to others who have failed to make the scowling king laugh. His turn comes, and when he gets into all sorts of difficulty, with his head stuck in a vase, the king roars with laughter and Kat wins both job and princess.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Good Little Monkeys

(MGM)

Highly Entertaining

A new Harman-Ising cartoon, one of the Happy Harmonies series, and done in Technicolor, this subject bids fair to be considered one of the season's outstanding cartoon subjects, partly by reason of the jingle which accompanies the short. The three little monkeys come off the stand on the desk and dance their way across, while books disgorge their characters, and the devil comes up to entice the monkeys into wrong. They succumb, but the other characters rush to the rescue, with clever and unusual results. An excellent subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Old Mother Hubbard

(Celebrity)

Good

A good color cartoon in the ComiColor series, this tells, in different fashion, the story of Old Mother Hubbard, and the dog who could find no bone. Mother Hubbard is the king's laundress, and when the dog, delivering the laundry, and trying to eat a cooked chicken all at once, causes the ill king to laugh, everything is all right with Mother Hubbard and the dog. An entertaining subject, especially for the youngsters.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Chain Letter Dimes

(MGM)

Good, Timely

Amusing and timely to the minute is this MGM Oddity, for which Pete Smith renders the often amusing off-screen dialogue. It is a burlesque on the latest American national insanity, the chain letter craze, and proceeds to poke fun at the "pastime" in such a manner that both those who are devotees of the "game," and those who think very little of it, will alike find much that is amusing in the film. It should be worth special billing for its timeliness.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Gene Curtis Resigns

Gene Curtis, winner of the Quigley Award and sales promotion director for Famous Players Canadian circuit, has resigned. He will take a two months' vacation before announcing new plans. No successor to Mr. Curtis has been appointed as yet.

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

GINGER

Fox

Two child actors are featured in this production, the cast for which lists but five principals. They are Jane Withers, who zoomed to quick popularity in "Bright Eyes," a picture in which she was the bad little girl menace to Shirley Temple, and Jackie Searl, whose work in a host of attractions—"Skippy," "Sooky," "Finn and Hattie," "No Greater Glory"—having established him as the screen's prime child heavy and his more favorable part in "Wicked Woman" adding to his name value.

The grownups are O. P. Heggie, recently in "Count of Monte Cristo," "Anne of Green Gables" and last in "Peck's Bad Boy," "Dog of Flanders" and "Bride of Frankenstein"; Katherine Alexander, who has been seen in nine or 10 pictures since making her debut in "Should Ladies Behave," which was followed up by "Barretts of Wimpole Street" and the current "After Office Hours" and "Enchanted April," and Walter King, who was featured with Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter in "One More Spring."

The story, an original by Arthur Kober, who also did the adaptation, is a human interest comedy drama, dealing with the child problem. Being directed by Lewis Seiler, it deals with Miss Withers, rascal of the tenements, who, when her loveable ne'er-do-well guardian Heggie is sent to jail, is taken into the wealthy Katherine Alexander-Walter King household, which is dominated by Jackie. As Miss Alexander conducts psychological experiments to reform the little girl, it's the little boy who is actually reformed.

Name values look to be the assets best suited for commercial adaptation. As the always difficult impression that the attraction is a kid's picture will undoubtedly crop up, much attention should be given to publicity, smartly handled in every quality, to eliminate that handicap and at the same time convince that it is fun and amusement more than it is a moralistic or social-welfare preachment.

MAKE A MILLION

Republic

This production, a romantic comedy, has its unique exploitation value in that it makes use of a money garnering scheme similar to the many chain letter gags that are gripping many sections of the country. With that as one of its topical features, it also treads an economic-social path which leads vested interests to proclaim its sponsor a "red menace," but who is regarded by the dollar-senders as a genius who will lead them to wealth and affluence.

The story, an original by Emmett Anthony, is modernly premised and as it gets across its entertainment and amusement is lively with romantic love interest; sparkling with comedy in action and dialogue and carries the necessary quota of drama to contrast properly its motivating elements. Screen play is by Charles Logue, with direction by Lewis D. Collins, recently credited with "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" and "Sing Sing Nights" among other Republic pictures.

Charles Starrett is featured in the leading role as a college professor, suddenly separated from his job first because he flunked the girl in the case, Pauline Brooks (seen in minor parts in several MGM features), and then because the trustees believed he was too radical in his theories to instruct the students. Supporting characters are George E. Stone, a newspaper reporter, Monte Carter and Jimmie Aubrey, panhandlers, who cooperate with him in rolling up the snowball of dollars. Guy Usher is the girl's father and plutocrat who combines with publisher Norman Houston in trying to swat the budding financial czar. Others in the cast are James Burke and George Cleveland.

Essentially a topical exploitation picture in which story content readily lends itself to novel and effective exploitation, it should be possible to concoct all sorts of vivid gags through which more than usual patron curiosity may be aroused.

WESTWARD HO

Republic

Republic Pictures here has a western story featuring John Wayne. The story by Lindsley Parsons, who has created several for Wayne, is unique in potential entertainment and showmanship story content. The screen play, on which Harry Friedman and Robert Emmett collaborated with Parsons, tells of a period in American history when the early western settlers were harassed by lawless desperado bands. Wayne, left an orphan, grows up to be the leader of the "Singing Riders," a vigilante group. Joining a westbound group from Dodge City to Grass Valley which is led by Jim Farley and his daughter, Sheila Mannors, the party is attacked by a secret group led by Frank McGlynn, Jr., who, though neither knows it, is Wayne's brother. Eventually catching up with Jack Curtis, leader of the feared bandit gang and slayer of his parents, sequences packed with thrilling action led to the two brothers discovering their identity and McGlynn sacrificing his life to save Wayne's.

While majoring in dramatic action, the story also includes an intriguing romantic interest quality. It thus combines two entertainment and showmanship values which under proper exploitation guidance should have little difficulty in arousing both feminine and male curiosity and at the same time prove a feature that should be more than ordinarily attractive to juveniles.

Republic is endowing the feature with better than ordinary production values. With John Wayne ranking as one of the foremost western stars, his name looms as the outstanding commercial feature, but other qualities of the picture should not be ignored in its marketing.

SHANGHAI

Paramount-Wanger

Two stars who appeared in several of the past season's most popular pictures are featured in this, Charles Boyer, seen in "Caravan," "Private Worlds" and the forthcoming "Break of Hearts," and Loretta Young, in "Rothschild," "White Parade" and the new "Call of the Wild." The story, the character of which has demonstrated its entertainment and showmanship appeal since the time of "The Sheik," is located in the Shanghai International settlement and interior China and is being lavishly produced.

Fundamentally, it is a story of love beyond the pale of accepted ethical standards. It tells of the great infatuation of a white girl for a half-caste son of an exiled Russian nobleman and a Manchu princess. It brings into stark relief the theory that "east is east and west is west and never the twain shall meet." At it runs it course, it portrays great happiness and tragedy that culminate in an act of sacrifice on the part of both that is commonly supposed to be beyond the power of understanding.

The production is adapted from a stage play of the same title. The screen play is by Gene Towne and Graham Baker, whose past credits demonstrate their ability to handle this vivid type of showmanship-entertainment material, and Lynn Starling. Direction is by James Flood, who made "Wings in the Dark."

The cast supporting the leads includes such known screen names as Warner Oland, Alison Skipworth, Fred Keating, Hedda Hopper, Charles Grapewin, Walter Kingsford, Willie Fung and Keye Luke.

Full of the qualities in story content and costuming ordinarily considered as highly attractive to women patrons, there is also much that can be used to arouse general adult interest.

CALM YOURSELF

MGM

The title having more than usual exploitation value, this feature is a fast moving, romantic comedy in which the dramatic contrasting situations add to the fun-provoking quality. In summary it's the story of a young man's amorous proclivities, which, when applied to the boss's daughter, result in the loss of his job. Smart and resourceful he organizes "Confidential Services, Inc.," an institution which guarantees to take care of anybody's affairs, no matter how embarrassing. The entertainment and showmanship which results from the complicated situations encountered is obvious.

The story is adapted from a story by Edward Hope, with the screen play by Arthur Kober. Direction is by George B. Seitz, who recently made "Times Square Lady."

The cast is composed mainly of younger players, an asset that assumes showmanship importance in its relation to the production's character—youthful love interest, comedy drama, thrills and suspense in novel and different situations.

Robert Young, featured in many MGM productions, currently "West Point of the Air," has the lead role. Madge Evans, Betty Furness and Ralph Morgan constitute the principal support, with Nat Pendleton, Claude Gillingwater, Hardie Albright, Shirley Ross, Louise Henry and Richard Tucker in featured parts.

The locale is New York and the motivating story is being supplemented by swank production values. The combination of these, together with the many commercial adaptations and contacts that can be made with the title and the name of the service which results in the story's entertainment should make for unique exploitation. Naturally the names of the players, particularly as they appeal to the younger element, may be used to the fullest extent.

FROM every lot in Hollywood sounds the beat of chorus girls' feet, the warbling of opera stars, or the rhythm of a new theme song.

Hollywood has gone very much musical.

Warner has ready for release "In Caliente," with Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien, Edward Everett Horton and Leo Carrillo. It is a drama with much music and many dance numbers used plausibly in cafe scenes. "Broadway Gondolier," just completed, features Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Adolphe Menjou, Louise Fazenda, the Mills Brothers and Ted Fio Rita and band. There are no big girl numbers in this one, but plenty of songs to make it rate as a musical comedy-drama. "Anchors Aweigh," now shooting, has Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler with songs and girl numbers interspersed much in the manner of "Flirtation Walk." "Page Miss Glory" features Dick Powell, as a flying radio crooner opposite Marion Davies. In preparation at Warner are: "London, Paris and New York," a revue; "The Radio Jamboree of 1935"; a new Al Jolson musical; and "Thin Air," by Mildred Cram, a back-stage story. Now shooting is the Joe E. Brown musical comedy, "Broadway Joe," with plenty of girl numbers expected from Busby Berkeley, directing.

At MGM, "The Broadway Melody of 1936" is continuing the tradition of the first "Broadway Melody" with regiments of chorus girls and featured dancers. "China Seas," "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Masquerade" all have featured theme songs. "I Am Joaquin" will be given additional color with Spanish Ballads. The new Marx Brothers film, "Raspberries," will have wild intermingling of chorus girls and comedians. The presence of Ted Lewis, Harry Stockwell, Ted Healy and Nat Pendleton guarantees that "Here Comes the Band" will be a musical comedy. In preparation are "Americans Can Sing, Too," another Jeanette MacDonald-Nelson Eddy operetta; "The Life of Johann Strauss," light opera; and "The Great Ziegfeld," with the Harriet Hoctor Ballet. Miss MacDonald will sing also in "San Francisco."

From Girl Shows to Grand Opera

Fox has Jesse Lasky's "Redheads on Parade," a musical comedy, in the cutting room. John Boles and Dixie Lee warble romantic ballads over the heads of plenty of chorus girls. Boles also sings in "Orchids to You," a comedy-drama. Tutta Rolf has two songs in "The Dressmaker." Pietro Gentili, grand opera baritone, will sing in "Ramona." "Ball of Fire," with Alice Faye and Jack Haley, is a comedy with music predominant. "Under the Pampas Moon" has many songs and dancers. Grand opera stars are coming into their own in "Here's to Romance"; already signed are Nino Martini and Mme. Schumann-Heink, as well as Maria Gambarelli, ballet star.

Radio is rushing out "Top Hat" with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers. "Old Man Rhythm" features Buddy Rogers, Barbara Kent and Betty Grable; and "Hooray for Love" has Bill Robinson, Ann Sothern and Gene Raymond. Both have girl numbers. Symphonic music plays an important part in Katharine Hepburn's "Break of Hearts," as analyzed in last week's HERALD.

Columbia has ready Grace Moore's "Love Me Forever," with everything from grand opera to ballads. Seymour Felix will stage the chorus numbers for the comedy-drama, "The Girl Friend," featuring Ann Sothern. The Albertina Rasch girls appear in "After the Dance," featuring Nancy Carroll and George Murphy, another comedy-drama.

Paramount is shooting "The Big Broadcast," musical roundup of dozens of radio names. "Paris in Spring" is a drama with music, featuring Mary Ellis and Tullio Carminati. "Every Night at Eight," with George Raft and Alice Faye, is another music drama. Bing Crosby's new musical, "Two for Tonight," is in preparation. So is "Rose of the Rancho," operetta featuring Gladys Swarthout. Walter Wanger's "Vogue of 1935" will be a Technicolor musical, and Cecil B. DeMille has bought rights to the opera, "Samson and Delilah."

Universal is shooting "Sing Me a Love Song," featuring the radio star, Dorothy Page, with Ricardo Cortez. Planned are "Show Boat," light opera with Irene Dunne; and "April in Paris," to be produced by E. Y. Harburg.

Republic Pictures has two musicals for the new seasons, "Sitting on the Moon" and "Metropolitan Merry-Go-Round."

Sam Goldwyn is going in for lavish production on the Miriam Hopkins-Joel McCrea film, "Barbary Coast," and "The Goldwyn Folies" will be replete with girl and song numbers. Eddie Cantor's "Dreamland" will feature Ethel Merman and squadrons of dancers.

Out at Mascot Gene Autrey, radio star, is signed for eight musical westerns.

Six new pictures were started in the past week, three by major studios, two for independents and one by the newly organized Republic Pictures (Monogram). Seven were completed. Included are two each from Warner and Universal, the others from MGM, Atherton, Monogram and the Chaplin picture.

At the U. S. Naval Academy, Paramount started "Annapolis Farewell," with Guy Standing, Rosalind Keith, Tom Brown, Richard Cromwell, Louise Beavers, John Cox, Richard Brodius, Douglas Blackley and Benny Baker. Alexander Hall is director. "The Last Outpost" started at the studio. Charles Barton is directing Cary Grant, Gertrude Michael, Claude Rains, Kathleen Burke, Colin Tapley and Margaret Swope.

At Radio was begun "Alice Adams." Katharine Hepburn is starred, Fred MacMurray, Fred Stone, Charles Grapewin, Ann Shoemaker and Frank Albertson making up the principal support. George Stevens is directing.

Republic's First Feature

"Westward Ho" is Republic's first feature. The cast includes John Wayne, Sheila Mannors, Frank McGlynn, Jr., Earl Dwire, Yakima Canutt, Jack Curtis, Mary McLaren and Dickie Jones. Robert Bradbury is directing. The last picture to be made under the Monogram designation is "Cheers of the Crowd." It will present Russell Hopton, Irene Ware, Bradley Page, Harry Holman, Betty Blythe, Wade Boteler, Roberta Gale, John Quillan and John H. Dilson. Vin Moore is the director.

Invincible started "Dinner Party," with Frank Strayer directing Lloyd Hughes, Lois Wilson, Hedda Hopper, Grant Withers and Marion Shilling.

After nearly four months of shooting, with the utmost secrecy, the Charlie Chaplin picture carried on schedules as "Production No. 5" was reported finished, Chaplin being listed as author, director, producer as well as star, and Paulette Goddard, Chester Conklin, Carter De Haven and Henry Bergman listed in the cast.

At Warner Bros. "Page Miss Glory" (Cosmopolitan) was transferred to the cutting rooms. Marion Davies is featured. The lengthy supporting cast lists Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Mary Astor, Frank McHugh, Patsy Kelly, Lyle Talbot, Helen Lowell, Berton Churchill, Harry Beresford. "Broadway Gondolier" is in the cutting rooms. It has Dick Powell, Joan Blondell, Adolphe Menjou, Louise Fazenda, William Gargan, Grant Mitchell Hobart Cavanaugh.

DEAR HERALD:

The other night we saw Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell in "Traveling Saleslady," and we would like to write an open letter to these two women and tell them how much we enjoyed their work in this picture, if we were sure that there weren't a couple of husbands standing around with sawed-off shotguns. We have never liked to monkey with husbands who had sawed-off shotguns ever since we got out of the hospital that time.

We could write the girls and tell them what a fine comedy we thought it was, but it is quite likely they never would get to see our letter, but those "durned husbands" would, and then what?

The fact is that the "Traveling Saleslady" is about as good a comedy as they usually produce and about as good as there is any sense in making, as it is good enough and funny enough for anybody, and Hugh Herbert don't hurt it a bit, and if somebody will advise us about those husbands it might open the way for us to say a whole lot more, and if there are no husbands it is evident that there is something wrong with Hollywood's unmarried population.

The "Traveling Saleslady" proves that these two flappers could sell you anything. They could even sell a brass monkey a slice off of the moon, but we don't want to say too much about them because we remember about those shotguns an' everything. Anyhow, if you want a good, clean comedy, get this one.

Slums and the Shelterbelt

According to a report we saw recently in the press, the superintendent of that "Shelterbelt," in a public address, gave as one of the reasons for building it that it would do away with the "agricultural slums." For gosh sake, is it possible that the "East Side" has moved out in the country? We are a little curious to know what the boys will think about this "agricultural slum" stuff. This superintendent ought to be posted on "slums" since he comes from a city that has them.

Currency and Questions

Ridicule used to be considered as an argument to remove a man or an idea from the public mind, but that time has long since passed. Ridiculing a man or an idea today acts as a 24-sheet to keep them in the public thought, and when the public starts to think they start to reason. They try to ridicule that "Old Age Pension" idea out of the public mind, but the fact is that it is fast taking root in the public thought as being the best means of distributing money among the buying public that has yet been advocated. Maybe it is right and maybe it is wrong; anyhow, satisfy yourself about it; we don't know.

Arthur Brisbane sometimes asks some rather pointed questions. He wants to know why it is that our lawmakers seem to think that the government's security behind an interest bearing bond is better than behind non-interest-bearing currency. Here is something else again for the public to think about. Arthur shouldn't ask such leading questions; they might embarrass the boys up at the top.

Some people are beginning to argue that there is a lot of horseradish about this money question and they say they can't see that a hundred dollar interest-bearing bond is any better secured by the government than a hundred-dollar bill. We can't say, since we don't have any bonds, and if we ever get hold of any dough we will look the matter up.

J. B. Shearer of the State theatre at Huron, S. D., sends us a Fish Liar's License which is countersigned by himself as "Exalted Fish Herder" and which license gives us the privilege of stating the number we caught and the size of the ones that got away without being questioned too closely by people who are not familiar with the subject.

What we can't understand is why people seem to have an idea that our fish stories connect us with a foreigner by the name of Ananias (whose progeny, by the way, are writing advertisements).

Should proof be required as to the truthfulness of our fish stories we will ask the bailiff to call as witnesses H. J. Longarker of Glenwood, Andy Anderson of Detroit Lakes or Bonnie Benfield of Morris, Minn., or F. W. Zimmerman of San Marcos, Bob Smith of Mission or Shine Mason of McAllen, Texas. Any of these boys, who are not under the care of the Warden, will most likely give the necessary evidence, whether they know anything about it or not.

Thanks, Brother Shearer, for your letter and the license, and the next time we call on you we will bring Sherm Fitch, the RKO manager at Sioux Falls, along with us to handle the corkscrew.

Little Virginia a Star

Last night we went to see "Laddie" at the Moon. There were several reasons why we wanted to see this picture. One being that the story was written by Gene Stratton Porter and is rated as one of the classics. Another reason is that we have been entertained at the home of Mrs. Porter's daughter, Mrs. Leo Meehan out in Hollywood, and for the further reason that we know that the story furnishes the basis for an excellent picture.

We are glad we went to see "Laddie" because we saw an excellent cast, the principals being John Beal, Gloria Stuart and Virginia Weidler, who played the part of "The Little Sister" and who, by the way, was the star in the picture, if we know stars.

It isn't our wish to detract a particle from the excellent acting of John Beal and Gloria Stuart, but we wish to express our views regarding little Virginia and leave the others to the critics who know how to write.

When we saw "Bright Eyes" with Shirley Temple, and other of her pictures, we wondered if the screen would ever offer us a better child actor; in fact, we doubted if it ever would, and now comes along little Virginia Weidler and jumps, with one leap, right into the band wagon with Shirley.

This picture will make 'em sob in spots and go into an uproar in others. It is a picture that will please Pa and Ma and the whole family except, possibly, Sister Clementine, who has arrived at the "kiss 'em on the sofa" stage. RKO should continue to picturize the Gene Stratton Porter stories; they are worthwhile.

The flappers may not like John Beal ahold of the plow handles, but there are more brains behind the plow than there are behind the bar, the fashions or jazz orchestra batons.

Opinions for the Asking

We have just received a letter from Dick Sutton of the American Theatre Supply Company of Sioux Falls, S. D., enclosing two checks for $4 each with a request that we send the HERALD to Carr & Frey of the Strand theatre and Mr. Helmuth Frey, all of Viborg, S. D., for two years each. Thanks, Mr. Sutton. You can bet your last dollar that we will have it done; in fact, we have already done it. Who said that South Dakota had gone back to the government?

Of course, it wouldn't be proper to tell you about it here, but if you will come out behind the calf shed where nobody can hear us some moonlight night, we will give you our opinion of love song crooners, jazz orchestras, that shelterbelt and the blue pelicans. But maybe you don't care about our opinion. We don't blame you for that, for it don't amount to much, anyhow.

Lust Honored on the Fourth Year of Theatre

Sidney Lust recently celebrated his fourth anniversary as operator of the Arcade theatre in Hyattsville, Md., during which period he has cooperated with civic organizations of the community in giving benefit performances for various charitable causes. The anniversary was marked by laudatory reference to his activity in the Hyattsville Independent, local newspaper, which cited the important place he has taken in community activity.

Supply Dealers Meeting Set for Chicago June 15

The price and discount problem will be one of the most important topics of discussion at the annual convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers in Chicago, June 15-19. Approximately 150 dealers and manufacturers' representatives are expected to attend, according to J. E. Robin, president of the association.

The convention also will consider new developments in theatre equipment. The association plans a complete campaign of institutional advertising. Numerous leading equipment companies will have exhibits at the convention.

TWO SCHOOL STUDY PROJECTS IN ACTION

First of 20 'Secrets of Success' Reels Shown; Study Guide Issued by Education Association

The first of a series of 20 one-reel motion pictures on "Secrets of Success" were shown to two groups of New York school children this week as the initial step of a national movement toward greater and more specific use of films as supplementary to educational curricula. The series has been prepared under the direction of the Committee on Social Values in Motion Pictures, of which Dr. Howard M. LeSourd, dean of the Boston University Graduate School, is chairman.

"Secrets of Success" has been designed to further character education, by providing "life" situations and is made up of excerpts from selected motion pictures. This fact, said Dr. LeSourd, both avoids an obviousness of purpose in the pictures themselves and guarantees an emotional appeal carrying its juvenile audience directly into the situation presented.

"The earnest desire of the committee is to increase the effectiveness of existing programs and stimulate continued experimentation in this most important field of social control," said the prospectus.

Besides stimulating discussion, the pictures will, the committee hopes:

1. Train both the individual and the group to analyze problem situations, foresee consequences and select the one best adapted to the individual and social need.

2. Assist individuals and groups in setting up for themselves scales of values, and commit themselves to practical use of those which they rank highest.

3. Broaden experience and understanding of the important issues of life, and lead to increased cooperation in social enterprises.

The subject matter portrays thorough characterizations by well known actors such problems as snobbery, the difficulties of children in getting their parents to understand them, consideration for less fortunate playmates, truthfulness and patriotism.

The program shown in New York last week to pupils of Manhattan and the Bronx, was arranged through cooperation of Dr. Harold G. Campbell, superintendent of schools, and Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Mr. Hays saw the project as the first step in a nationwide movement in which school officials and producers will cooperate at every point. The films, he explained, are his response to a request of school officials in various parts of the country that the producers aid educators in the work of social training of children. Mr. Hays referred to a committee appointed last June by Dr. Campbell.

No Charge for Pictures

Requests for the films will be received by Dr. LeSourd at Boston University. No charge is made for the pictures, but showing for any other purpose than educational is expressly forbidden. They are available only in 35 mm.

Among pictures from which the series has been made are "Sooky," "Huckleberry Finn," "Tom Sawyer," "Skippy," "Tom Brown of Culver," "Wednesday's Child," "Young America," "Cradle Song," "Broken Lullaby," "Sign of the Cross," "Lucky Dog," "Alias the Doctor," "There's Always Tomorrow," "Her Sweetheart, Christopher Bean," "Gentlemen Are Born," "No Greater Glory," "The Band Plays On" and "One Night of Love."

The committee proposes to enlist the exhibitor's aid in setting aside a portion of his program or, preferably, Saturday mornings for showings to classes from local schools, in situations where schools, churches or other social values are not available.

"When these pictures are shown in a theatre, additional films may be obtained in order to provide an hour's program," the committee said.

Eight Centers of Distribution

For purposes of administration, eight centers of distribution and supervision have been established. Future expansion will be determined by the results in these eight centers and requests from other sections.

The centers and supervisors thus far determined are:

BOSTON: Dr. Howard M. LeSourd, Boston University.

CHICAGO: Prof. Frank N. Freeman, University of Chicago.

INDIANAPOLIS: Prof. Edward Bartlett, Depauw University.

LOS ANGELES: Prof. Harold Jones, University of California, Berkeley.

NEW HAVEN: Dr. Mark A. May, Institute of Human Relations, Yale University.

NEW YORK CITY: for schools, Miss Rita Hochheimer, Department of Visual Education, New York Public Schools, 128 East 52nd St., for churches, Prof. Harrison S. Elliott, Union Theological Seminary, Broadway at 120th St., and for social agencies, George J. Zehrung, Y.M.C.A. Film Exchange, National Offices, 347 Madison Ave.

Study Guides Issued

In the field of the teaching of history, English, social science and other subjects to high school students, Ernest D. Lewis, president of the Department of Secondary Education of the National Education Association, announced that study guides for selected photoplays have been compiled by educational authorities and are being forwarded to the heads of 18,000 high schools and to many private and parochial schools.

The first covers Darryl F. Zanuck's production of "Les Miserables," based on Victor Hugo's novel. Specific classroom discussions are outlined and there is a 15-minute radio dramatization.

Studies also are being planned for such coming films as Jack London's "Call of the Wild," Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream" and "The Crusades."

Mr. Lewis expressed appreciation of the cooperation given by Mr. Hays and the MPPDA, as well as theatre owners.

Hix Suit Opens on Coast

Trial began this week in Los Angeles superior court of the suit for $25,000 of John Hix against Universal. Mr. Hix charges infringement of the copyright on "Strange As It Seems," shorts series recently produced at the studio. He charges that after failing to take up his option, Universal produced "Stranger Than Fiction," trading on his name, and using his drawings in advertising.

SMPE Concludes Coast Convention

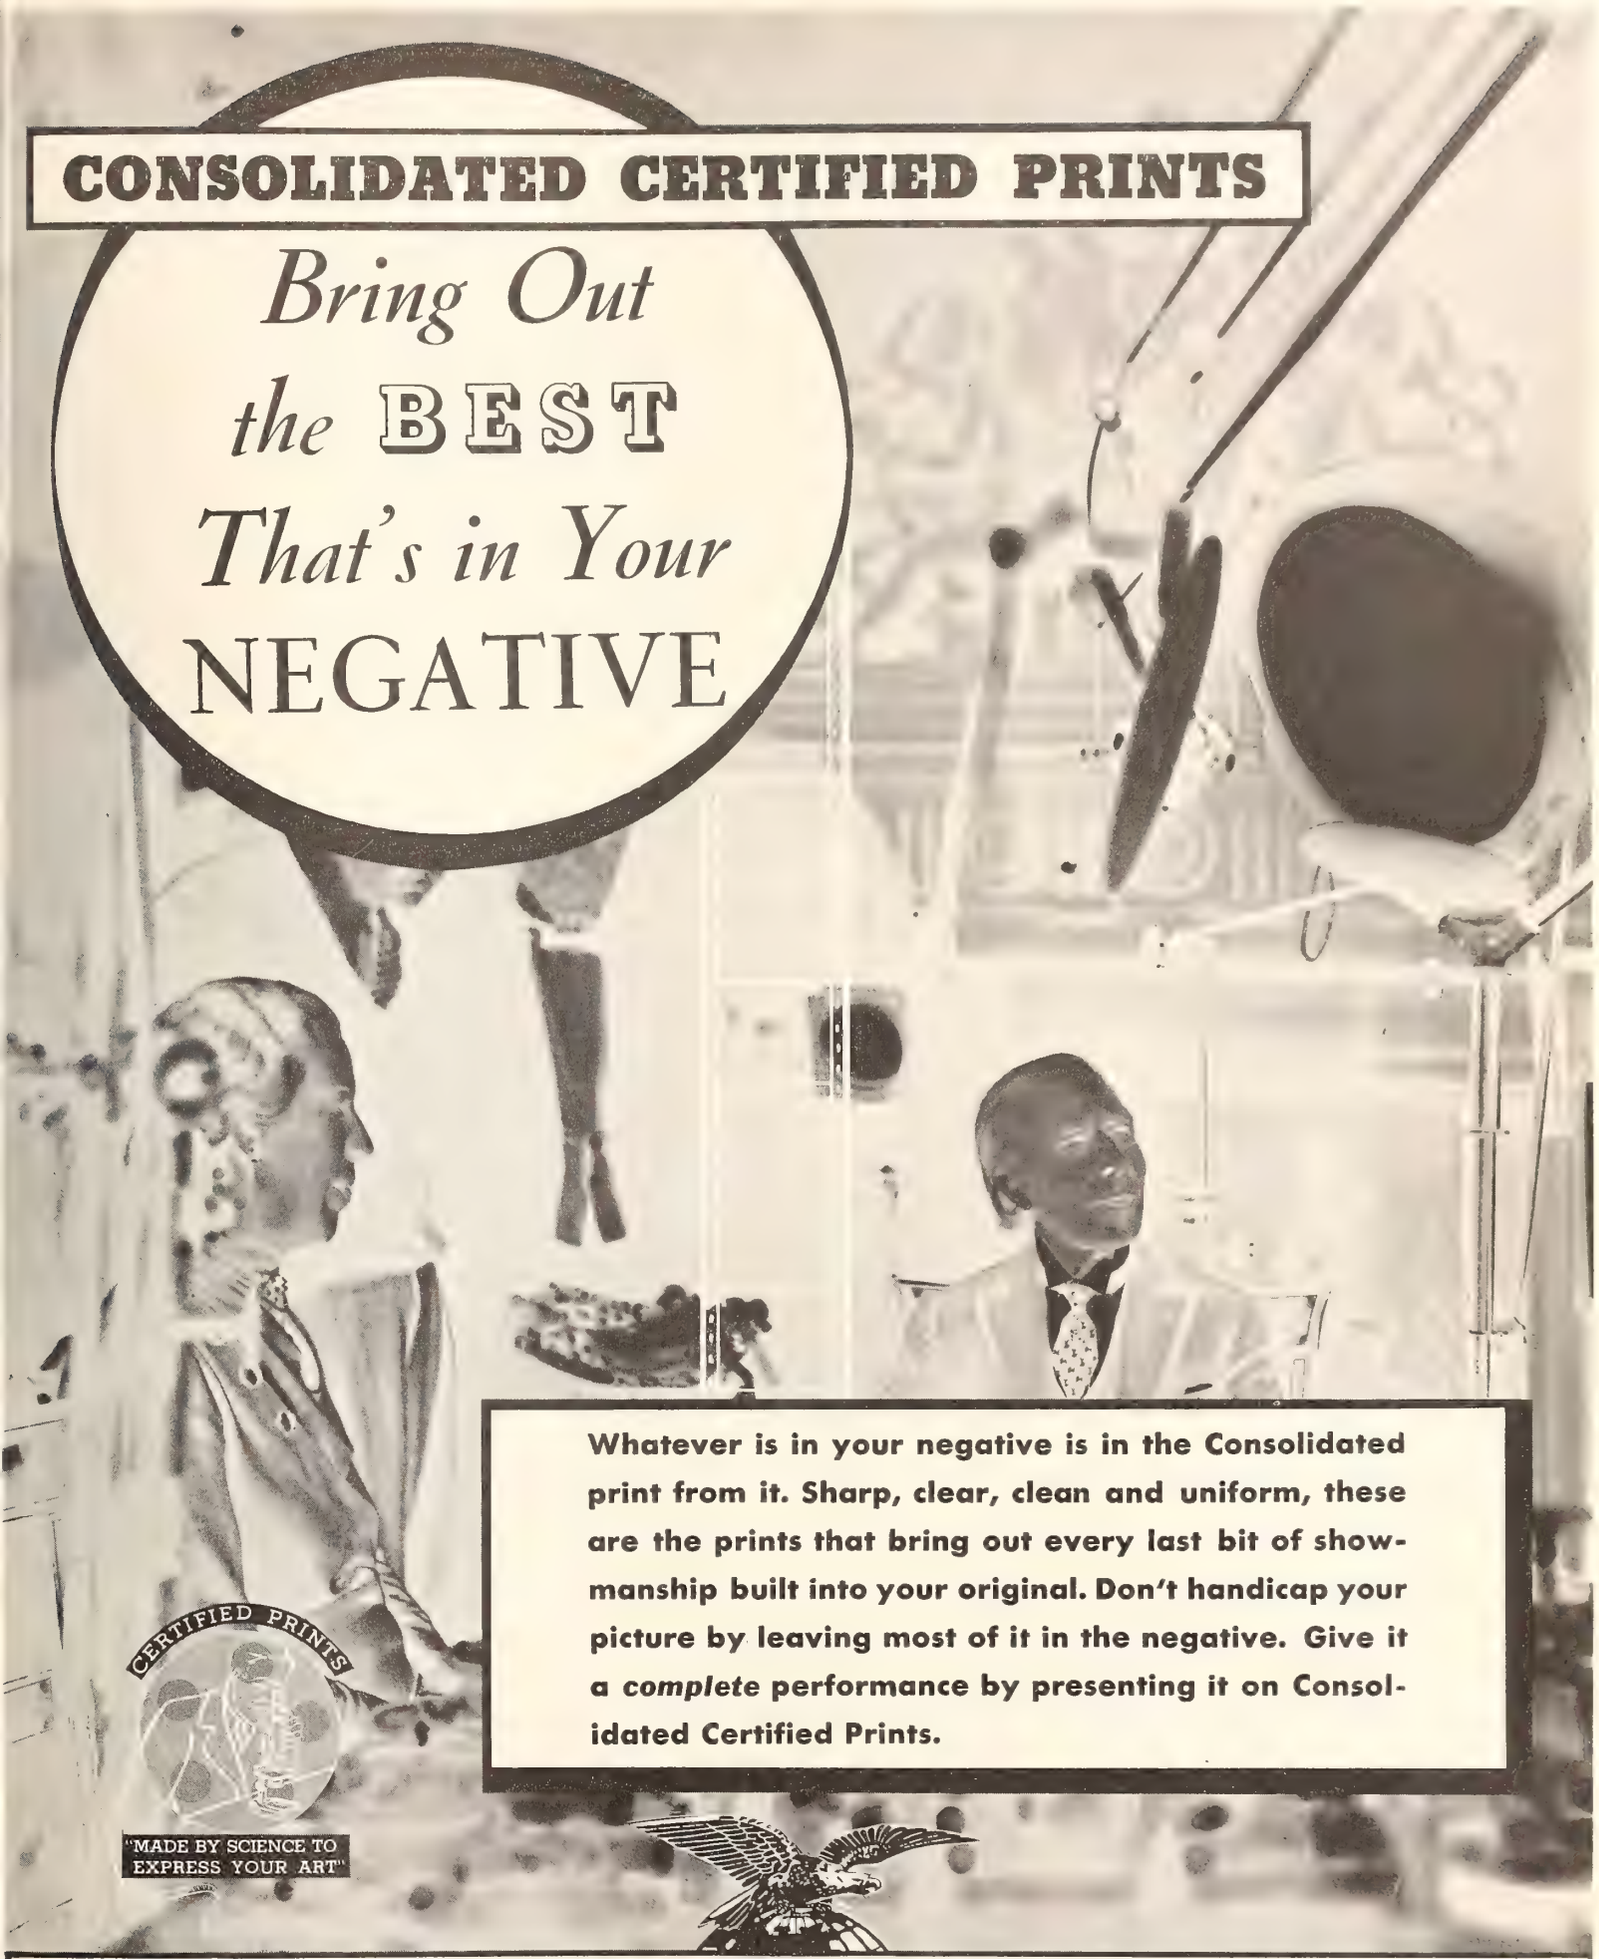
Final sessions of the annual convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in Los Angeles late last week were devoted chiefly to discussions of projection, studio lighting, sound and standardization. The convention, which ended on Saturday, also heard a paper discussing "Trends in 16 mm. Projection," by A. Shapiro, of the engineering department of Ampro Corporation, Chicago, who pointed out that in five years lighting intensity has increased so rapidly that 16 mm. film now can be projected in large auditoriums.

Mr. Shapiro told the engineers that industries are turning to widespread use of the narrow gauge film and that it is spreading rapidly in the educational field, predicting that in many small theatres 16 mm. projectors would spell the difference between profit and loss.

The failure of American pictures to compete with British product in India was blamed on jazz music, the underworld and slang, in a paper by G. D. Lal of Delhi.

The Society will elect a new board of governors at its fall meeting, to be held at the Wardman Park Hotel, Washington, D. C., October 21-24.

With Advertising Agency



Sam Robert Chernow, formerly connected with the motion picture industry for a number of years, has been named director of exploitation for Norman D. Waters & Associates, Inc., New York advertising agency.

Levine in From Coast

Nat Levine, president of Mascot Pictures, accompanied by the Mascot casting director, Gordon Molson, arrived in New York by plane from Hollywood on Wednesday to line up stage and radio talent for the next Mascot special, "Harmony Lane."

Library Successful In Film Cooperation

The Cleveland Public Library, cooperating with the industry by means of exhibits, displays and bookmarks, has been extremely successful, it is reported, in circulating books which have some association with the subject of the motion picture, in addition to the particular original book itself. The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America some months ago made the bookmark idea nationwide with its publication of "The Motion Picture and the Family," in which are published Cleveland Library bookmarks on coming pictures.

The exhibitor, it is said, may cooperate with the local library for the printing and distribution of the bookmarks. The magazine may be obtained regularly by addressing the MPPDA at 28 West 44th street, New York.

Warner Names Krieger

Lester Krieger has succeeded David Miller, resigned, as head booker for the Stanley-Warner houses, with headquarters in Philadelphia.

Treatizor Film Dissolved

The Film Treatizor Corporation has been dissolved through the filing of a certificate with the secretary of state of New York at Albany.

Faralla to Paramount

Dario Faralla has been appointed assistant to Henry Herzbrun, production executive at the Paramount studio.

Laemmle Reelected Universal President

At a meeting of stockholders of Universal Pictures Corporation last week at the home office in New York, the following officers were elected for the coming year: Carl Laemmle, president; R. H. Cochrane, vice-president; Carl Laemmle, Jr., vice-president; Charles B. Paine, treasurer; Willard S. McKay, secretary; Eugene F. Walsh, assistant treasurer; Helen E. Hughes, Edward Muhl, assistant secretaries; Samuel Sedran, second vice-president.

Papers Run "Les Miserables"

More than 700 newspapers throughout the country have contracted to run the serial version of Victor Hugo's famous work, "Les Miserables," the 20th Century adaptation of which is being released by United Artists.

Named State Censor

Mrs. Hester M. Fye, Waynesburg, has been appointed by Governor Earle to the censor board of Pennsylvania. She succeeds Mrs. Mary J. Kerr, whose term has expired.

New MGM Office

A new $50,000 brick building is to be constructed in Oklahoma City, for lease to MGM for 10 years. G. A. Paul is erecting the building.

Heads Fox Cutting

Louis R. Loeffler has resigned as a Fox associate producer to become head of the cutting department at the studio.

Interstate Plans to Expand with Suburbans

The Interstate circuit, Texas, is reported planning a general building program calling for new suburban houses in all principal cities where the circuit is located. The first will be the Tower in suburban Dallas, for which ground has already been broken. Locations are being studied in Houston, Fort Worth and San Antonio, among others. Numerous houses are expected to get underway before the end of the summer.

Coast Benefit Planned

A benefit for the relief fund of the Theatrical Mutual Association is to be held at the Dreamland Auditorium, San Francisco, June 5. Boxing, wrestling and 40 acts of vaudeville are planned.

Schine Declares Dividend

Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., has declared a dividend of 75 cents per share on its $3 preferred stock, payable June 1 to stockholders of record May 20.

Norris Transferred

Marshall Norris, of Principal Pictures Distributing Corporation, has been transferred from the New York to the Hollywood office by Lewis Hyman.

Superior Closes Deal

Superior Talking Pictures has closed a deal with Cameo Screen Attractions of Boston for the series of six Rough Rider westerns and six Range Rider westerns.

The new 4th issue of THE MARCH OF TIME brings to the screen three fast-moving, dramatic sequences: the "inside" on Washington politicians, the truth about Russia and the Pacific "war games"... all news subjects that can't fail to draw audiences from coast to coast.

THE MARCH OF TIME for June is backed by advertising campaigns in newspapers, on the air with "spot" broadcasting, and in national magazines.

Each month's issue of "The Newsmagazine of the Screen" spells bigger Box Office for theatres showing it. If you want details, write MARCH OF TIME DISTRIBUTORS, R.K.O. Building, New York City.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 268 (one of special group on sound).—(A) Explain why a flywheel is used in most sound-on-film reproducer sets. (B) As a projectionist, what do you consider to be the most fertile fields for improvement in sound system design, particularly with the object in view of greater convenience in operation of the equipment?

Answer to Question No. 262

Bluebook School Question No. 262 was: (A) What routine is followed before opening the show each day by the conscientious projectionist who handles sound equipment? (B) Many sound failures result from blown power fuses. Name one good safety precaution which is available to every projectionist to insure a minimum loss of time in locating and correcting cause of failure of this kind. (C) Many projectors are equipped with induction drive motors controlled by starting switches. If such a motor hums, but refuses to start, what emergency action may usually be taken to get it started?

The reply prepared by several sound engineers to Section A is as follows:

"(A) The conscientious projectionist will make it his unvarying duty to arrive at the theatre early enough to test thoroughly his sound equipment and thus detect any existing trouble in ample time to effect remedies before starting time. His inspection should include (1) adjustment of exciter lamp and check for sagged filament, (2) cleaning of all oil, bits of film, dust, etc., from all elements of the scanning system from exciter lamp to the photocell, (3) careful adjustment of all rheostats for exactly the right current delivery, (4) a careful checking of all meter reading, (5) test for sound on each projector, (6) if facilities are available each stage speaker should be very carefully tested for correct sound, (7) in cold weather, particularly with reproducer sets having gear box drives filled with heavy grease, the projectors should be warmed up until they will come up to normal speed within eight seconds."

The following "students" did very well: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; A. F. Sprafke; G. E. Doe; G. Thompson; C. Oldham; F. H., S. S. and P. Dalbey; J. L. Whitmore; J. Wentworth; A. F. Sprafke; C. Oldham; B. DeViett; A. A. O'Verko; H. Edwards; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; R. Carmody and P. L. Stone; D. Lally and F. Ferguson; H. Pitchkey and C. Mellinger; D. L. Andrews; M. and J. DeVoy; D. Lally and F. Ferguson; R. G. Crews and T. T. Davidson; J. G. Townsend; R. and K. Wells; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; E. Hodson and S. Johnson; T. N. Onby; B. DeVietti; L. Panley and F. T. Dodd; D. L. Sinklow; L. Grant and R. Geddings; P. H. Key; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; P. and L. Felt; L. H. Joy; H. D. Tomlinson; D. Davis; H. Hughes and E. Mantol; T. Turk; N. Goldberg; G. N. Guidotti and F. L. Savlor; N. F. DeCosta.

The answer of L. M. and C. B. Traxler to Section A is selected for publication. It is:

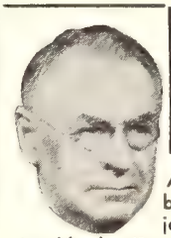
"First, lubricate those equipments requiring it and clean all apparatus thoroughly, including lenses, exciter lamp optical system and the exciter lamp itself, remembering that to secure perfect refraction of light rays all lens and reflector surfaces must be wholly free from anything in the nature of oil, and to have full passage of light all such surfaces must be free from dust, and all scum that such surfaces collect constantly from air, but in varying amounts according to air purity.

"Next the films must be examined, if not yet used, to make sure they contain no faults that may interfere with either safe or perfect projection, all such faults being noted briefly, report made to theatre manager and a copy enclosed with return shipment to exchange, or if the faults be bad, then mailed direct to the manager of the exchange, as per instruction in BETTER THEATRES Comments and the Bluebook.

"The sound system current supply (battery or otherwise) should be looked over and its condition examined—checked, they call it now—and such action taken with regard to it as seems necessary or desirable. The sound results from each projector must be tested, also from each loudspeaker. Readings of all meters of the sound system must be taken and such adjustments (if any are required) made as will cause exactly the proper current to reach each item of the apparatus.

"Test the intermittent of each projector to make sure no lost motion has developed. We have assumed, Brother Richardson, the room itself to have been cleaned by the janitor force. If not, the very first duty would be to clean it thoroughly, raising as little dust as possible.

"In addition to the foregoing, at fixed periods we come extra early and inspect all switches, electrical connections, force a strong air current around motor-generator armatures and make all the periodic inspections you have recommended."



Section B is answered by the engineers thus:

"A chart should be prepared and posted conspicuously, indicating the exact ampere capacity and location (back stage, rewind room, basement, etc.) of every fuse located between the house meter and each piece of sound equipment. Spare fuses of proper capacity should be located handily at or near each such fuse location."

Danielson says: "Know your equipment. Have an adequate supply of spare fuses of various capacities required. Determine the location of all fuses carrying sound current. Know the various causes that may blow fuses and apply that knowledge in your work."

Engineers treat Section C as follows: "In all likelihood, when such trouble occurs the fault is due to a defective centrifugal switch that may have either poor contacts or faulty adjustment. The motor will pick up and run normally if the flywheel be given a spin manually, possibly assisted by cranking the projector."

Barney DeVitti of Helper, Utah, says: "An induction motor has two separate windings; one for starting and one for running. If the motor hums but does not start, it means the current is reaching the running, but not the starting winding. This may be due to several causes—for example, blown fuse on starting winding, dirty switch contacts, defective starting winding, switch fails to close because of weak spring. Emergency action is: Rotate flywheel by hand in its normal running direction. This will give sufficient speed to enable the running winding to pick up enough power to bring the motor up to speed."

F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert—Grossed more than first showing last fall. I feel that the trailer did me a lot of good. It's hard to see why any theatre should have to double bill this show. Running time, 105 minutes. Played May 14-15.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

LAW BEYOND THE RANGE: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—If anything, this is better than an average western, and we packed 'em in last three nights of the week. Some say Tim McCoy is as good at the draw as William S. Hart in his best days.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Victor Jory, Fay Wray—Did good business. May Robson always draws here. Running time, eight reels. Played April 30-May 1.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

SWELL HEAD: Wallace Ford, Barbara Kent—Would be O. K. for a baseball benefit hookup. We got by without any kicks or praise. However, it's one on which your patrons will never ask you when you are playing it. Running time, 7 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

WESTERNER, THE: Tim McCoy, Marian Shilling—Very good riding with Tim McCoy at his best. Played May 15-16.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Another fine picture from Columbia Studios. Could not think of a single thing to improve it. The makers did not overlook a single thing to make it good. Regret to report I could not put it over; it may be that I should have placed it in my house last part of week instead of first part of the week position.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Good picture. Personally, I think this picture excellent, but it did a very poor business for me.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

First National

CASE OF THE CURIOUS BRIDE, THE: Warren William—Better than "The Case of the Howling Dog." These clue club pictures please. They are full of interest and entertainment. Good show to good business.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien—Here is a real picture and should do business anywhere. Pleased 100 per cent and did a little better than average. Played April 21-23.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler—A very good musical, better than the average. Plenty of song hits. Ruby Keeler does some fast stepping in this one. Helen Morgan sings one hit. Will please everyone. Business average. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 14-16.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Adolphe Menjou, Gloria Stuart, Alice Brady—A good picture, but cannot compare with "Footlight Parade" or other Warner musicals. Patrons were not satisfied. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 14-15-16.—George J. Recktenwald, Playhouse, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—The picture did a good business and made me some money, so naturally I feel O. K. about the production. I do not think it is as good as any of the old "Gold Diggers," but that don't make much difference. The picture if properly handled will make dough for any exhibitor and after all a picture that will do that is a good picture.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—A very good picture, although I did not think it as good as "Twenty Million Sweethearts." Failed to draw above average attendance. Played April 28-29.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

LIVING ON VELVET: Kay Francis, George Brent, Warren William—Good picture, but not as much velvet in it as we all expected. George Brent and Warren William both are fine lookers. But Miss Kay did not show the velvet and silk and satin as lots of my crowd expected. The name is a good draw for the first night, but the mouth-to-mouth advertising for second night not so hot.—George W. Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—A very good comedy-drama suitable for the entire family. Aline MacMahon and Guy Kibbee never better, but little Betty Jean Hainey steals the show. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 10-11.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Fine piece of work. Everyone pleased with it.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

MAYBE IT'S LOVE: Gloria Stuart, Ross Alexander, Frank McHugh—Well, I have gone a long ways to boost First National and Warner Bros., but if they are going to make many more failures like this one, my boosting days will be over. But on this picture, we were lucky enough to have a Vitaphone short that was the best I have ever played.—George W. Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell—Good, fast moving comedy that got the laughs from the patrons. Suppose this would fall into the program class, but some of these program pictures prove more satisfactory than many so-called specials. Running time, 63 minutes. Played May 3-4.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Very good picture; fine acting; patrons very much satisfied with the comedy part. Picture did a fair business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played May 5-6.—George J. Recktenwald, Playhouse, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—It's another traveling salesman. Just full of good light entertainment. It will please.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

WHILE THE PATIENT SLEPT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—This team's a favorite with our patrons and while this picture is different than their others, it clicked nicely all around. Good mystery, with enough comedy to carry it along at a good pace. Played April 26-27.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

BABOONA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—A magnificent photo-dramatic picture of African jungles, portraying the lives of jungle animals, their hardships, their romance and their living conditions in general. Very good. Average business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 1-2.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

BABOONA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—About the best animal picture ever run here, good photography and action. Drew about the average business.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

BABOONA: Mr. & Mrs. Martin Johnson—Best African yet. Would recommend double billing. Running time, 70 minutes. Played April 30-May 1.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

BABOONA: Mr. & Mrs. Martin Johnson—Good show. Just as good as Johnsons ever made and that's saying something.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn, George White—An excellent picture. One of the best in the musical line played this year. Some very fine tap-dancing, which the regular fans are still talking about. Average business. Running time, 10 reels. Played April 21-22-23.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn, George White—Better than his last one, with Cliff Edwards stealing the show. I am betting that for all of the George White directing, producing, scoring and what have you, that he did not do it all and that Fox was smart enough to put a director that knows more about what is screen fare than was shown when White went high, wide and handsome in the previous one which was a complete washout.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers—As usual, Rogers gives a good performance. Rogers is practically the whole show, but everyone well satisfied and drew the largest attendance of any show in seven months. Running time, 82 minutes. Played May 3-4.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—A nice program picture and certainly something different from the common run of pictures. Has a tinge of mystery, action, comedy, drama and romance. Drew some very favorable comments from our patrons. Story is set around a deserted mining town in the far west with some very amusing situations arising when least expected. Played May 1-2.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—A very amusing comedy well liked by all. Tracy, a lawyer, out on a duck hunt, crashes into Wendy Barrie in the depths of a Louisiana swamp in a terrific rain storm. Their adventures in a small back-woods hamlet with a bearded jury that fines Tracy for reckless driving, through the influencing smiles of Barrie are hilarious. Nothing extra, but nevertheless entertaining. Played May 10-11.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—His finest. A real treat for the entire family. Played to above average business during the three-day run. Running time, 8 reels. Played May 5-6-7.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—The combination of Rogers and Easter Sunday did things to the box office in a big way. This is the happy climax to all this star's pictures and the patrons left the theatre limp from laughter, with comments that it was the best show they had ever seen. That's a large order, but Will is the fair-haired boy with this town. Running time, 79 minutes. Played April 21-22-23.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—Patrons remark they believed it to be Rogers' best. Fair business. Most of all Will pleased, according to the way patrons acted, and enjoyed it. Played May 9-10-11.—George J. Recktenwald, Playhouse, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—Here is a pip. Almost as good as "State Fair." What a show. It leaves a profit, too.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore, Bill Robinson—Just about smashed a house record with this one. Thought "Bright Eyes" was good, but "The Little Colonel" even better in my estimation, although some patrons disputed me. We bought 1,000 pictures of Shirley to give away and did it make a hit! Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 12-14.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore—Well, when we ran "Bright Eyes" we thought we had about the best picture that could be made of this type, but "Little Colonel" is even better than "Bright Eyes' and the Technicolor ending just completes a perfect evening. Boy, what a picture! Hit 'em up on this one. You've got something.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

SPRING TONIC: Lew Ayres, Claire Trevor—Regardless of adverse reports from other trade magazines, this pleased our midweek audience very much. However, Fox had plenty of crust to price this Class B. Running time, 6 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—Well, we brought it back just to see if a good picture would click after everyone in town had already seen it. Boy, they turned out in a big bunches just like they did the first time, which proves that good pictures never grow old. My advice to you fellows is to bring back "State Fair" and a number of other good pictures. Put another picture with it and run a double bill and you'll make some money. I have run a lot of these old pictures back and made more the second time than the first. I would recommend for repeat engagements: "It Happened One Night," "A Lady for a Day," both Columbia; "The Footlight Parade," "42nd Street," Warner Bros.; "Whoopee" and "The Kid from Spain," United Artists; "Imitation of Life," Universal; "Cimarron" and "Little Women," from RKO; "The Virginia" and "Wagon Wheels," Paramount; "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," MGM, and others.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—A very good picture, well-balanced. Should draw wherever it is shown. Played to average business. Running time, 7 reels. Played April 18-19-20.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—Just average draw. Should have done better with the name of Harold Bell Wright to advertise.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—A very fine production; splendid acting, good story, some bits of comedy and Miss Young in a sinecere, splendid performance.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—A very excellent show. It held the regulars and brought in everybody who ever had an "operation." The trailer is O. K. It's big enough to stand alone in anybody's theatre. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 10-11.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

GB Pictures

EVENSONG: Evelyn Laye—A beautiful picture; good; yes, excellent music; fine in every way.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellinhag, Wash. General patronage.

Majestic

CHARMING DECEIVER, THE: Constance Cummings, Frank Lawton—This was a picture made in England and has a very decided English accent. The picture was clean and well done. Very fine recording. Everybody liked it and asked us to play more of that kind as it was different from the average cinema. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 17-18.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—Ninety minutes of laughs in their new full-length feature picture. Very good and well done; satisfactory to all. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played April 26-27.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—What she knew about men would fill a book. A comedy romance of the great stage hit. Average business. Running time, 84 minutes. Played April 28-29-30.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: All Star Cast—No doubt of it, this is one of the most finished productions ever to come out of Hollywood. Casting, continuity, settings, direction leave nothing to be desired. But how small town patrons will like it is something else again. In our case, I should say it registered favorably with about 75 per cent. Business not so good, due to strike conditions. Played May 10-11.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Edna May Oliver—Excellent. I do not know what more one could say.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombard, Chester Morris—Played this one on a double bill with "Babbitt" and it didn't mean a thing at the B. O. Fair programmer and that's all. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 15.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MARK OF THE VAMPIRE: Lionel Barrymore, Elizabeth Allan, Bela Lugosi, Lionel Atwill—A mystery program picture that lacked a very deep mystery in drawing power, although it was well liked by those who saw it. Average business. Running time, 6 reels. Played May 8-9.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

MARK OF THE VAMPIRE: Lionel Barrymore, Bela Lugosi—Not as spooky as the producers would have you believe. Seemed to please our weekend patrons. Average business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played May 17-18.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

RECKLESS: Jean Harlow, William Powell—This was advertised as a mammoth musical, which I must say is very misleading. The dances and the musical settings are poor. William Powell very good, but he could not carry the entire picture. Business very poor for the three-day run. I guess Warner-First National are the only producers who can blend music and story and get something out of it. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 7-9.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—Wonderful. That's the word. It's just wonderful. Here is a picture that every living person should see. It's so unusual. Look over your press sheet and give this picture all you have and if you get them in you will please them and they'll send their friends back the second or third night. Excellent.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—A very good and different animal picture. Pleased my patrons.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SOCIETY DOCTOR: Chester Morris, Virginia Bruce—This one is just fair. Business way below average on the two-day run. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 19-20.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

SOCIETY DOCTOR: Chester Morris—Very good entertainment. Rather short; so was the crowd. It takes box office names nowadays and sometimes that doesn't bring them in. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 17-18.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Town and country patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Jimmy Durante, Charles Butterworth, Maxine Doyle—Well, all in all, it is a picture along the line of amusement, not so bad, but nothing to rave about. In my opinion, pictures that have a tear now and then seem to bring them in at my theatre.—George W. Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

THIN MAN, THE: William Powell, Myrna Loy, Maureen O'Sullivan—Here is a real picture and will please everyone. Swell acting and story. Keeps patrons' interest from start to finish. Good business. Running time, 95 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

VANESSA: HER LOVE STORY: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—Personally, I enjoyed this picture very much and think it an exceptionally good picture. Good cast, good acting, good sound, perfect settings and an all round fine picture.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan—Excellent. The kind of picture the small town exhibitor lays awake nights praying for. A few more like this and I will be able to pay the interest on the mortgage. It's O. K. and no mistake. Did very good business here. Played May 11.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan—I believe it to be Beery's best acting since "Viva Villa." Fair business. Patrons well pleased as no one thing was overdone. I believe we should have more pictures of that type. Running time, 88 minutes. Played May12-13.—George J. Recktenwald, Playhouse, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda, Ted Healy—A howling sweepstakes comedy, very well liked by the regular fans. Played to average business. Running time, 7 reels. Played May 3-4.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda, Ted Healty—Just a fair program picture. O. K. on a double feature bill, but it will also be no great loss to humanity if you put it on the shelf. Did average business here. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 9.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda—The Lion roars, so does the exhibitor, so does the patron. Not much of a picture, even for a double bill. "How the mighty have fallen."—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

Monogram

GIRL O' MY DREAMS: Mary Carlisle, Creighton Chaney—One nice little comedy. Did extra midweek business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 7-8.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

LAWLESS FRONTIER: John Wayne, Sheila Terry—Another good western. Only one fault with it. Being taken on same location as another John Wayne made one think, "Didn't I see this one somewhere before?" John Wayne seems to be coming to the front with my folks. Running time, 52 minutes. Played May 7-8.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

NUT FARM, THE: Wallace Ford—Formula for emptying the theatre in a hurry in case of fire: just show this and open the doors wide; the patrons will do the rest. Must have taken all of two days to turn this out to the breathlessly waiting public. It's so amateurish that it is pitifully funny at times. Just forget you ever heard of it and let the exchange keep it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 4.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

NUT FARM, THE: Wallace Ford, Florence Roberts—We bought this thinking we were getting a picture with plenty of laughs. The only laugh was on us. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 7-8.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TRAIL BEYOND, THE: John Wayne, Noah Beery, Noah Beery, Jr., Verna Hillie—Terribly amateurish; good ten years ago. Ran it one night and pulled it. I have never seen worse than this one that bore the name of western. This kind is what kicks the props out of the western business and there is not a small town in the country that can't use some bang-up good westerns. But they can't just be thrown together and called a western. The rural audiences are just as discriminating in their tastes as the sophisticates are for their type.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TRAIL BEYOND, THE: John Wayne, Noah Beery, Noah Beery, Jr.—Not so good. Suitable for children of six and under, but for adults it's entirely too amateurish. After seeing and playing Zane Grey westerns produced by the big producers, this picture looks silly. Even the dyed-in-the-wool western fans laughed at this one. Did fair business here, but I heard a lot of squawks. Played May 8.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Carl Brisson, Mary Ellis, Edward Everett Horton—Plenty high class as a musical, but it had Carl Brisson in it and he is plenty good. Flair for comedy, good voice, a better stage presence than either Vallee or Crosby, and if you ask my audience, Brisson had more on the ball than either of the two and this was not what might be called a small town picture. It is, as I said above, a class picture, semi-costume and you know this Brisson had to be good to put a picture like this one over.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Duke Ellington and his Orchestra—Mae is shot in this town. My patrons don't like her and don't back down at saying so. Business good first night, but empty house second night. Good-bye, Mae.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Samll town patronage.

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan, Sir Guy Standing—An unusual thrill picture of the Michigan State Police, illustrating the crook-catching methods of this highly developed force. Average business. Running time, 7 reels. Played April 24-25.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Henry Wilcoxson, Joseph Schildkraut—No doubt this cost a fortune to produce. The settings, costumes, furnishings and trappings would account for plenty in themselves. But for all that, impressed by the magnitude of the production, our patrons' comments were unfavorable to the story and acting. Colbert is a big favorite here, but the opinion was that she was miscast. She never gave the impression she was Cleopatra; just Colbert. Business poor. Running time, 101 minutes. Played April 24-25.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ENTER MADAME: Elissa Landi, Cary Grant—When you get a picture under such a name as this one, all I can say is this: begin to cry for you are going to get a pain in the neck before it is over. It looks like this is enough said.—George W. Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred Mac-

Murray—Business was way off, and cannot think why, unless it is the title. Anyway, it is a crackerjack entertainment.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Very fine picture. Well directed and acted, held interest all through. Good entertainment.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Excellent. Here is a good picture that made us a lot of money. It will please any American audience in either big or small town.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronpatronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray, Ray Milland—A thoroughly enjoyable picture. It has the same element that proved so popular in "It Happened One Night." Fred MacMurray ought to go places. He has that free and easy style of Clark Gable in "It Happened One Night," but in no way imitating him. Get behind it and promise them an entertainment treat. Business above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Working class neighborhood patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Very good. Consider it on par with "It Happened One Night."—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Cesar Romero—Good comedy. Four dumb crooks restore a shy daughter, with a weakness for uniforms, to her wealthy father and bashful sweetheart. Good program picture. Played to average business. Running time, 7 reels. Played May 10-11.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—Not so hot.—S. R. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—It's got plenty of laughs; moves along full of life all the way through. Running time, 68 minutes.—George W. Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell—Spectacular in all ways. Only one woman in it and that for a short period. Fast moving, but some of the English terms were not understood. No one knew what the "Blues", which apparently was a swanky school that Tone came from, was. A lot of action and the picture was well liked.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—Worth all the years of waiting. Paramount promised a superlative production and it is in every detail. Will without doubt be among the best of the year. While this proved somewhat disappointing at the box office, the fault was not with the picture, but rather to local conditions. Audience reaction most favorable. Played May 5-6-7.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE IN BLOOM: George Burns, Gracie Allen, Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee—I do not have much to say about this one; it seems it is just a pastime picture. And now if you stop to think, all the pictures we play nowadays are along the same line, I mean the same amusement. And the big thing I mean, they fail to impress and draw, especially the second night. Only one out of fifteen gets mouth publicity. Running time, 80 minutes.—George W. Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Joan Bennett—A very good picture of its kind; did not draw. Bing Crosby is losing his drawing power, as the regular fans do not go for him as they did several seasons ago. Running time, 8 reels. Played April 14-15-16.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: W. C. Fields, Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—As far as our patrons were concerned, the whole show belonged to W. C. Fields. They're not too strong for Crosby here, but with Fields on the screen most of the time they tolerated the crooner. Really, Crosby was not very convincing as a killer. Business fair and the reacation quite favorable. Running time, 76 minutes. Played May 12-13.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields—Another good one from Paramount. The producers are making better pictures this year. Every company has some mighty fine pictures this season.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts—Hats off to Paramount for making this picture. A small town natural and pleased 100 per cent. Business above average. Running time, 73 minutes. Played May 11-12.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

FOUR REPORTERS JOIN CONTRIBUTORS

In four different states are located the theatres of the latest contributors to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department. Their names and their theatres are:

A. Engler, Royal Theatre, Hopkins, Minn.

Art Hunter, Cole Theatre, Cole, Mont.

H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas.

E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Edward Arnold, Arthur Byron, Paul Kelly, Peggy Conklin—This proved a decided flop. The drop the second day was more decided than the first showing that those who saw it reported unfavorably. I thought rather well of the picture as it is well done; a romance is woven into the story with a thrill finish, but evidently the cash customers didn't like the title and many of those who came didn't like this type of story. I am confident that business would have been better for me with almost any average picture.—J. W. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Working class neighborhood patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett—Claudette Colbert and Charles Boyer very good in this unusual picture. This drama has an insane asylum complete with doctors, nurses and patients for its background. Seemed to please most everyone and played to average business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played May 12-13.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Charles "Chic" Sale—Was disappointed in this feature. Not as good as previous westerns with Scott. "Chic" Sale is good. Played May 18-19.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Charles "Chic" Sale—A Zane Grey story means just one thing to his legion of followers, a Western. While this is laid in the West, it is not a Western as the fans know them. Rather it is a murder mystery in which possession of a radium ore deposit furnishes the motive for the dirty work. Our patrons liked it well enough and turned out in goodly numbers, but comments indicated the preference for this writer's true Westerns. Running time, 63 minutes. Played April 19-20.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Charles "Chic" Sale—This is the poorest Zane Grey picture I have ever run. It surely is not a Western and there is only one shot in the picture where there is a horse, so most of the children were disappointed. Business below average.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—Clever comedy, cast perfectly. All are high spot in their roles, but just average business for some reason that I can't account for.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts, Roland Young—Excellent. They don't make them any better than this one. Best business in months. Played May 4.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—Nice, clean picture, very different and most unusual comedy. Did not draw very good. It satisfied older patrons, but not the younger set. Charles Laughton's acting very different from other of his pictures, but as a whole, very good. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 19-20.—George J. Recktenwald, Playhouse, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—An exceptionally good picture. All members of the cast good except Laughton. Where in the world does anyone get the idea that this fellow appeals to an American audience. His voice is bad, in fact one can hardly understand him in any of his pictures. Ruggles (Charley) steals the whole show and it's mighty fine entertainment in spite of the fact that Laughton plays the lead.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—A good program picture well liked by those who saw it. Played to average business. Running time, 8 reels. Played April 18-19-20.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—Drew a few extra because of the dance numbers. Played May 9-10.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie—This is not only unusual, but good; has a new twist; a little different; and one gets to see and hear Ben Bernie.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—How in the world Paramount ever let this get by as a program picture is a mystery to me. If they realized it they have a "Covered Wagon" or better. This picture properly handled would have made the best outdoor picture since sound started. I call it the biggest and best picture of its kind produced this year and I am going to bring it back and make myself a lot of money as second run. You little fellows who have not already run this, just buy every form of advertising made. Raise your prices so the people will know you have a big picture. Tell your patrons it's better than the old "Covered Wagon" and that any person who says the picture isn't the best western ever made will get his money back. This picture is big.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—Ran this with "Duck Soup" and did 20 per cent better than average business for a Friday and Saturday. It is one western that is good and will draw. Running time, 57 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—This is truly the great American classic. This is the family type picture, something that appeals to the masses. In other words, a natural. Everybody liked it here. We're still hearing about it. It's a very sweet story about an orphan with red hair whose imagination gets her into many amusing situations, and at last into love with Tom Brown. A nice, clean, human story that everybody enjoys! Played May 12-13.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Mary Carlisle, "Spanky McFarland—A pretty good comedy drama but not as good as some of their previous pictures. The boy "Spanky" just about steals the show. Pleased 75 per cent and drew above average. Played April 26-27.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—I cannot say anything big for this one, only for old folks, who give it a big hand. But the gay young society crowd did not come back for the second night. I say to my brother exhibitors, get them in on the first night.—George W. Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—Worthy of praise from every angle. The story should please practically all classes, but we barely managed to do about average business after putting forth special efforts to bring them in.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Working class neighborhood patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Fay Wray—A very ordinary picture and no drawing card. Did not please any of the very few who saw it and drew the smallest crowd in six months on any picture. Running time, 76 minutes. Played May 9-10.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Irene Dunne—Hit a bad scarlet fever epidemic with this and didn't do well with it, but the picture is surely there. Running time, 12 reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Asaire, Ginger Rogers—I dunno! May it's in me. Here's how I classed them: "Rio," No. 1; "Divorcee," No. 2; "Roberta," No. 3. Don't be influenced by my report. I am satisfied with all three, as to entertaining, but 40 per cent of the gross makes me wish they wouldn't make 'em. My only New Year's resolution was "I won't be as easy picking this year." Running time, 105 minutes. Played May 16-18.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—A very good program picture but failed to draw. Pleased all who saw it. Running time, 77 minutes.—W. L. Stratton, Lyric Theatre, Challis, Idaho. Small town patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—This is really a good western. Not a common everyday western either. Was well liked by all of our patrons. Of course, they are all Zane Grey and Richard Dix fans. A good picture plus Zane Grey plus Richard Dix. What else but a good picture could it be? If you have any patrons who are a little sick of the general run of pictures, play this one and refresh them. Played April 26-27.—Chas. Summers & Son, Elite Theatre, Seiling, Okla. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

CARDINAL RICHELIEU: George Arliss—Here is a magnificent picture. Big in every respect, well produced on a lavish scale. George Arliss and all members of the cast excellent, but from a box office standpoint, a financial failure for me in this small town. It did not do an average business and with top film rental, my losses were heavy because I gave U. A. my best dates. This company produces some good pictures and no doubt in large cities they make a lot of money but in my small town situation they have proven unprofitable both individually and collectively. Goodbye, U. A. When I get a big de luxe house on Broadway, I'll get in touch with you. Until that time, me and my small town will have to be content with the class of stuff we understand and can afford. These people in the small towns are just as smart, just as intelligent and movie wise as the large cities, but unfortunately, we can't pay U. A. prices and show a profit. "Cardinal Richelieu" did the smallest Sunday-Monday business this year.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

CLIVE OF INDIA: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young—Another picture dealing with India, as was the "Bengal Lancers." Both were outstanding. Colman, as usual, was good in this role. The picture has action, good story and able support from Loretta Young, who brings sincerity to a role that could easily have been mushy. Both Colman and Loretta Young seem to have a sure touch of the dramatics that went with this picture. The more we see of Miss Young in what roles we have had her in, the more sure that she is going places. The picture did not have the business that it should have had for some reason that I can't understand. Certainly it is well directed, stays close to the story of Clive's life.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Merle Oberon, Ann Sothern—Good production, but Chevalier is about through at the box office. A lot of people don't care for him at all and that in spite of the fact that this one is his best picture so far.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

KID MILLIONS: Eddie Cantor, Ann Sothern, Ethel Merman—Just a fair picture. Not to be compared with any of the former Cantor pictures. My patrons were badly disappointed and the second and third day's business was hardly average. Our losses were heavy due to high film rental. If bought at a fair price it will be OK but it did only average business for me.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

SCARLET PIMPERNEL, THE: Leslie Howard, Merle Oberon—Wish I hadn't played it. Too heavy for this town.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Anna Sten, Fredric March—Good picture of its kind but does not appeal to the kind of people who attend my theatre. They do not like foreign stories or costume pictures and in view of high film rental, the picture was played at a loss as is usually the case with United Artists pictures.—S. N. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Anna Sten, Fredric March—Anna Sten is improving. Fredric March can always be depended upon to acquit himself with credit. The story "Resurrection" has been made with care and full advantage has been taken of the talents of the players and money has been spent freely. As a whole, this proves a highly interesting and dramatic offering. Drawing power a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Working class neighborhood patronage.

Universal

BOMBAY MAIL: Edmund Lowe—A very fine mystery picture and it was well received by all. Favorable comments on it. Recording good. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 17-18.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—Wonderful show but that type won't bring the gang here. Did 70 per cent of normal business. Running time, 110 minutes. Played May 3-4.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW YORK: Lyle Talbot, Heather Angel—Maybe so, but nothing, absolutely nothing happened at the box office or to the patron's emotions. Just a fair program offering that might have been a lot worse and a whole lot better. Another argument for double bill. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 1-2.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS: Alan Mowbray—Maybe the patrons were wrong, maybe I'm wrong too, but this failed to click. The book was a riot of fantastic nonsense, but the picture entirely missed the qualities of the original story, and before the finish, resorted to slapstick for laughs. Used as a preview, this passed, but a regular run would have been impossible. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 20.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones, Peggy Campbell—Buck Jones was all dressed up in this picture and believe me he looked fine. I do believe he would class big in a society drama, although as a westerner he is good as the best. Running time, 60 minutes.—George W. Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Excellent production from standpoint of box office. Plenty of action and comedy. We think Margaret Lindsay is easy on the eyes. The ayes have it. Running time, 86 minutes. Played May 10-11.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Town and country patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Action and plenty of it and photography that is outstanding. The story is an old one, but that is forgotten and forgiven since the interest is high pitched and fast moving action keeps the thrills coming at a merry pace. Audience reaction favorable and business O. K. Running time, 86 minutes. Played April 28-29-30.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

DINKY: Jackie Cooper, Mary Astor—A swell little picture that is made to order for the kiddies and will certainly please all their fathers and mothers. Plenty of comedy and story to this one. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 18-19.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak, Ned Sparks, Helen Morgan—Good. Enjoyed by all. Swell numbers well put.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

POP GOES THE EASEL: Three Stooges—Always kind of felt sorry for these boys but they sure make 'em laugh in this one. There's really nothing to it but slinging clay, but I have seldom heard such laughing. When they say oh! oh! gasp for breath, mop their eyes and go at it again, I call it ok. Running time, 20 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLIDAY LAND: Color Rhapsodies—This is a sweetheart. I bosted RKO's Sunshine Makers but this beats it. Wonderful music and it isn't over the head of a four-year-old. We little fellows don't pay enough attention to advertising some short features. Running time, seven minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

Educational

BIG BUSINESS: Marty May—What a pain in the neck this was. Terrible. Too bad the party responsible for this don't have to run it. Running time, 2 reels.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

DUMB LUCK: Marriage Wows Series—Just an average comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

FIRST SNOW, THE: Terry-Toon—A very good cartoon. Running time, 1 reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

HOW AM I DOING: Marriage Wows Series—My good friend Mr. Berg would pull a good two-reeler. By good one I mean League of Decency "good," and put in this one with "The White Parade." I didn't dare use it for I had in a lot that would criticize us. I showed it to some of my friends and the staff and they laughed until they cried. It's a corker, but don't show it in Sunday School. Running time, 20 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

RIP VAN WINKLE: Terry-Toons—Remarkable for a six minute cartoon. Enjoyed by all. Recording good. Running time, six and a half minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

RURAL ROMEOS: Harry Gribbon—Just fair. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE'S MY LILLY (I'M HER WILLIE): Will Mahoney—Boy, oh boy! Here is the best comedy since the days of the Keystone cops and custard pie twirlers. Mahoney is a natural who should be seen more often on the screen. Running time, 22 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

FOX MOVIETONE NEWS: Newsreel—This is my last week of Fox News and I feel kind of blue. They all have to have their share so Pathe comes in for six months. Lowell Thomas and Lew Lahr stand 100 per cent with us and I am in for a panning for the change, but old Pathe never failed us yet. Running time, 10 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BURIED LOOT: Different and interesting type of short. Hope we will have more like this.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

COLORFUL GUATEMALA: Fitzpatrick Travel Talk—Another excellent Fitzpatrick Travel Talk. Running time, 9 minutes.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

DONE IN OIL: Todd-Kelly—Fair, I suppose, but personally I just don't like this team. Women just don't seem funny to me. All right, girls, don't get sore. Maybe I'm wrong. Running time, 19 minutes.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Town and country patronage.

WINDY: "Chic" Sale—Fair; allright as a program filler.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Paramount

KING OF THE EVERGLADES: Grantland Rice Sportlights (New Series)—Interesting novelty reel. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO

BANDITS AND BALLADS: Musicomedies Series—Ruth Etting is quite a favorite here. If they would give her some modern songs it would please much better.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

BRIC-A-BRAC: Edgar Kennedy—A very good comedy that brought lots of laughs.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. General patronage.

DAY WITH THE DIONNE QUINTUPLETS, A: Specials—This is an interesting subject and drew a little extra business on a midweek date.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK: Toddle Tale Cartoons—Something a little different which proved quite satisfactory.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

OLD SPANISH ONION: Musicomedies Series—Not the best Ruth Etting that we have had but it was very good. Ruth always pleases—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Universal

OLD AGE PENSION: Henry Armetta—A swell chance to tie up with Townsend Clubs. While this is a burlesque on the situation, still those really interested in the idea will find it laughable. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Vitaphone

ALONG FLIRTATION WALK: Merrie Melodies—This all-color cartoon can be placed with the best of them. Running time, eight minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

GYPSY SWEETHEART: Winifred Shaw, Phil Regan—A very fine piece of entertainment. Lacked comedy. Seems as if comedies nowadays are anything but funny. We get enough songs, dances, etc., in our features. Why don't the comedy producers try to make comedies that are comedies Running time, 2 reels.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

LAW OF THE WILD: Rex, Rin Tin Tin, Jr., Ben Turpin, Bob Custer—Never have I played a serial that has held up as this one and I am glad to know that further adventures of Rex and Rinty are coming. There hasn't been a weak link in the 10 chapters shown.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy, Noah Beery, Jr.—Why did they put in "The Copper Room?" It was 20 minutes of nothing. I was not in the auditorium at either showing of this chapter but am reporting patrons' comments. The two following chapters came back ok.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

MORE SO IN SUMMER

We all know the answers to the problems of summer business. Comfortably cooled interiors, atmospheric fronts, discreet lighting, vigorous showmanship to combat outdoors opposition, carefully selected units in preparing programs to fit the tempo of the season—these are the showman's abc's in beating the heat. Matters they are indeed that require unflagging vigilance, but while assiduously pursuing every perfection of detail, gentlemen, give thought to your attitude when the heat waves roll and thunder.

Warm weather induces casualness, ease of mind, desire for relaxation that can be found in other spots besides the theatre. Thus the need of a crisp, flowery atmosphere, but more so than at any other time the demands of the summer season place a premium upon the manager's ability in making the folks to home—the attitude of a perfect host before guests.

If you are an amiable and charming fellow who looks forward to the summer period as a still larger opportunity to make your theatre a haven of enjoyment, then thrice blessed are you.

A NEW POLICY

In a recent interview, Arthur Mayer indicates that the policy of his new Rialto Theatre will be pointed as far as possible toward emphasis upon the showing of the actionful motion picture. Mr. Mayer is quoted to the effect that there should be further classification of theatres in the exhibition of various types of screen entertainment.

The Times Square section of New York, where is located the site of the new Rialto, is undoubtedly a most favorable location for such exhibition. Within reaching distance are a score of theatres catering to the amusement appetites of the Square's passing multitudes, which density of foot traffic has already made possible individual houses showing newsreels and short subjects exclusively. It is therefore reasonable to expect from these throngs a sufficient number of picture fans inclined to fast moving screenfare to make profitable a theatre dedicated mainly to such entertainment.

Similar projects might pay in other centers with relatively high traffic peaks and where bookings could be satisfactorily adjusted, but any general extension of this entertainment classification is not to be looked for under the present setup.

A big chest and above normal intelligence go together, according to findings recently announced by the American College of Physicians. Acrobats and professional wrasslers will please take a bow.

PLAN FOR MAILING

Theatremen who declared themselves vigorously against the rescinding of the regulation which allowed posting of unaddressed mailing matter are referred to William A. Collins, secretary-treasurer, Flaxville Theatre Co., Flaxville, Montana, who writes:

"For a number of years we have used the mail to distribute our heralds and announcements. When the new regulation came out I compared it with the method we used and did not change."

Collins' plan is detailed on a following page and there no doubt are other situations where managers have worked out satisfactory mailing methods which possess advantages not even found in the recent and much lamented post office ruling.

Our long years in show business have brought many instances of managerial ingenuity in overcoming what at first appear to be troublesome difficulties. Collins' mailing plan proves again that there are more ways than one to "skin the cat."

Sid Holland's entry that won the Quigley April Bronze was also chosen for second prize in the recent Paramount "Ruggles of Red Gap" contest. The unanimous vote of the Paramount judges further confirms the high merit of campaigns selected for Quigley Award honors.

RAYS OF PURE SUNSHINE

Among the recordings that give this feeble pen more than a little pleasure is the honor of reporting promotions of managers from the ranks. Let it then be moved and enthusiastically seconded that the membership drink a standing toast:

To Frank Boucher, who leaves the Maryland Theatre, Hagerstown, Md., to take the post of assistant to Hunter Perry, president, Dominion Theatres of Virginia.

To Arthur Esberg, who steps up from the Aztec Theatre, San Antonio, Texas ,to become City Manager, Interstate Circuit, Albuquerque, New Mexico.

To James Eshelman, from the Egyptian Theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D., to City Manager, Publix Theatres, Huron, S. D.

These rays of pure sunshine certainly help to dispel some of the fog banks that obscure the managerial horizon.

Elisabeth Bergner Monocled In "Escape Me" Display

Wire services and transportation led off in the tieups arranged for the opening of "Escape Me Never" at the Radio City Music Hall. Postal Telegraph had window showings with tiein copy in all branches and the prominent Fifth Avenue Southern Pacific window carried special display, as did chain opticians with posters of Bergner posed with monocle.

Extra billing, radio announcements and screenings were also reported to have whipped up additional advance interest.

Hodges' Free Chain Forms Contain Theatre Ads

The dime chain letter gag is very hot down in Florida, reports Jack Hodges, skipper of the Florida, in Jacksonville. Most urgent demand is for the printed form containing copy and space for names, says Jack, and he has printed up a lot of these for free distribution.

Theatre tiein is display ad at bottom of chain forms with copy informing patrons that these can be obtained free at box office. Ad of course is changed each week and it only takes a bit of multiplication to figure how many times the theatre plug is seen.

HELP!

I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang!

A Dime-Letter Chain Gang. No more dime chain-letters, please! I've run out of dimes and I've run out of addresses and if it keeps up I'll run out of town!

The doctor says I've either got to break the chain—or break down completely. So, on and after May 12th, no more dime chain-letters, puh-lease!

Sincerely,
JAKE ROSENTHAL, Mgr.
Iowa Theatre.

ROSY CRIES 'NUFF. He's a fugitive from the dime-chain letter gang, is Jake Rosenthal, of the Iowa, Waterloo, Iowa, who said so in two-column ad reproduced above.

Bamberger's Pop-up Advertises Radio Short

RKO is plugging "Trip Through the Fiji Isles" travelogue short with a neat pop-up four-page folder gotten out by Leon J. Bamberger, sales promotion chief. Action develops when folder is opened showing Fiji dancing maids. Back page is blank for exhibitors to fill in for further information.

Bamberger has also put out nice bit of literature on "Break of Hearts" with all necessary dope on the picture, synopsis and action photos of Hepburn and Boyer.

Daniel Minds Kids For Five Cents an Hour

Smart herald was distributed house to house by L. O. Daniel, Jr., Delman Theatre, Houston, Texas, with large head reading "Mothers and fathers, we take care of your children in perfect safety for five cents an hour!" followed by personal message on the ease of mind with which parents could leave their offspring at the theatre for the ten-cent admission that covered the two-hour performance.

Paramount Offers New Two-Sheet

Rodney Bush of Paramount reports new poster item, a pictorial two sheet in six colors designed to sell star name and title in one glance.

Poster is a silk screen process done much in the style used for hand painted lobby posters. Rodney says by using the silk screen process a greater brilliancy of color is achieved. Prices run around 30 cents.

Theatremen Using Chain Letter Gags

As to be expected, the boys are sure getting aboard the "chain letter special" and here are the highlights on some of the stunts this department has received recently on tieins with the get-rich-quick gag. They range from co-op advertising to lucky numbers in addition to trick copy to plug single dates.

Lucky Number Slant

The Liberty Theatre, Holbrook, Ariz., got out a mimeographed blank headed "Entertainment Club" with theatre name and address. Next listed were the names and dates of the six coming attractions, with instructions as follows:

Patrons were asked to sign names on the stub of numbered coupon and drop in lobby box, as name of picture at head of list was crossed off. This was to be done also with the second and third attractions, and during the showing of the latter the lucky drawing was held.

Trick Copy Letter

Manager Ernest L. Weppler, State, Conneaut, Ohio, put out his chain letter supposedly from Hollywood. Names of star in "Sweet Music," the coming date, were listed with instructions to go to box-office with 25 cents to see, etc., and etc.

Similar procedure was followed on "Our Little Girl" at the Saxe, Oshkosh, Wis., with the copy following the style of the regular chain letter but plugging the date.

Good Times Club

No doubt, the names of a flock of well known Hollywood stars on a chain letter should attract immediate curiosity and much interest. This was the slant figured by Manager Bob Sparks, Gem, Brownwood, Texas, who calls his the "Good Times Club" (for bigger and better laughs) and ties it to his date on "Mary Jane's Pa," as illustrated in accompanying cut.

Bob's copy follows along the lines of that used in the regular dime letter but he changes it to fit the plug on the picture. Result of course is a laugh in addition to an effective ad.

FAITH HOPE HILARITY

THIS CHAIN IS STARTED IN THE HOPE OF BRINGING A GOOD TIME TO YOU

Within three hours make five hundred copies of this letter (or as many as you can) take the top name off and put it on the bottom and it won't make any difference. Mail, wire or take to the friends to whom you wish laughs to come.

In omitting the top name take 15c to the Gem Theatre on Thursday or Friday, May 9 or 10 and ask to see Mary Jane's Pa. It will not be a charity donation because seeing Mary Jane's Pa will be worth many time that amount to you.

In turn as you leave the theatre you will be so happy you will want to go out and tell 15,625 people what a wow of a show it was.

NOTE: IS THIS WORTH A LAUGH TO YOU?

Have faith, my friend, and you will not be broken hearted.

Quigley Awards Committee
1790 Broadway - - New York

Combined membership of the Elkhart, Ind., Chamber of Commerce and service clubs convened on May 23 at a special luncheon to proclaim Sid Holland, representing the Elkhart Amusement Co., for his winning of the Quigley April Bronze on "Ruggles of Red Gap" at the Elco Theatre. Holland (right) received the Award from guest of honor Congressman Samuel B. Pettengill (left). Included in above group are the Club Presidents. Local papers carried photos and stories of presentation.

Paramount Announces "Ruggles" Winners

By unanimous vote of the judges, W. B. Shuttee, Main, Pueblo, Col., was awarded first prize of $600, in Paramount's "Ruggles of Red Gap" contest, in which over 100 theatremen were reported.

Judges also voted unanimously for Sid Holland, Elco, Elkhart, Ind., who took second money, $400. Sid's entry recently was awarded the Quigley April Bronze.

Third prize, $300, went to Herman Kersken, Warfield, San Francisco; fourth, $200, to Frank La Falce, Earle, Washington, and fifth, $100, Al Zimbalist, West End Lyric, St. Louis, Mo.

Twenty secondary prizes of $50 were given to: A. Shubert, Shubert, Gooding, Idaho; George Baker, Newman, Kansas City; Mel Morrison, Strand, Dover, N. H.; Joe Lee, Paramount, Brooklyn; Frank Moneyhun and Henry Sommers, Indiana, Indianapolis; Charles B. Taylor, Lafayette, Buffalo; M. S. Joiner, Orpheum, Vancouver; Milt Harris, State, Cleveland; Bill McElligott, Capitol, Aberdeen, S. D.; Herb Sabottka, 5th Ave., Seattle; Rockey Newton, Paramount, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Collins Details Mailing Method

Use of third class mailing permit allowing addressing to individual or box holder for one cent, is the mailing method favored by William A. Collins, Flaxville Theatre Co., Flaxville, Mont.

Small envelope holds down cost of mailing to $11.61 per thousand circulars for postage and envelopes as against $15 per thousand for postage only under the recently rescinded unaddressed regulation.

Collins says that his plan has further advantages of message being received in better physical condition; better attitude created in mind of receiver, and list can be selective. Addressograph fills in names.

Also Contacts Schools On "Edwin Drood"

Although the customary high powered lobby display was created on "Mystery of Edwin Drood" at Arthur Mayer's New York Rialto, the Dickens angle wisely was not neglected in selling this feature to the local schools, letters being sent to leading educators stressing the educational and drama slants of the picture.

The front was confined to the mystery angle with bats, graveyards (see photo) and other chill atmosphere. Flasher lighting and colored enlargements of action scenes drew further attention.

De Petro Presents Photo Of Shirley to Alyce McHenry

With the tremendous amount of interest displayed in the recovery of Alyce McHenry, the girl with the upside-down stomach, Phil De Petro, Boston Modern Theatre, contacted Fox and secured a photo of Shirley Temple with the requested inscription "Dear Alyce, I want to be brave and smile like you. Love, Shirley Temple."

When the photo arrived, Phil planted it with local paper along with other shots at the hospital where pictures of De Petro were taken presenting the gift. Needless to say, the theatre came in for some excellent good will and the stunt purposely was not tied into any Temple dates, since Phil didn't want to commercialize on the misfortune of the sick child. Accompanying cut shows De Petro (right) with prized photo.

When Phil played "Ruggles" he snared some extra stories by offering guest tickets to any oldsters who were present on the memorable occasion when Lincoln made his Gettysburg address. Also stressing the speech, letters were sent to English teachers in colleges inviting them to attend.

Caldwell Puts On Bridge Party for "Richelieu"

"A May Day Dessert Bridge" was held in the Loew Valentine Theatre building in Toledo with Wally Caldwell promoting refreshments and offering table prizes of guest tickets to "Richelieu." Printed invitations were issued to local women's organization and stunt broke two column stories.

Book windows were secured and department store featured a Richelieu turban hat with scene stills and theatre copy.

Hart Surrounds "Ruggles" With Numerous Contests

Ed Hart, Strand, Plainfield, N. J., surrounded his "Ruggles" campaign with plenty of gag contests, one of which was small shanty built in rear with costumes ushers hammering nails in house (see photo). Prizes were offered to patrons coming closest to guessing correct number of nails used.

Confectioner tied in with window display offering prizes on number of jelly beans in window; usher dressed as Ruggles at table in lobby offered guest tickets to patrons filling a club flush. Another stunt Ed used was a fingerprint club with five of staff dressed as leading characters, appearing at police headquarters to be finger printed for the non-criminal files. Gag broke papers with story on importance of this record in case of accident.

Cooper Cooperates With Nurses Association

Max Cooper over at the Fox Hackensack is gaining profitable goodwill by tying in with local drives as witness recent benefit run by Visiting Nurses Association when Max devoted his lobby to an exhibit supplied by the nurses (see photo). Letter of appreciation was received from the Association, suggesting that other theatres might be willing to cooperate in the same manner.

Each year, it has been Max's policy to help celebrate National Music Week by offering stage musical attractions in addition to screen program. This year he expanded this activity by having local high school bands and those from nearby towns appear on his stage. Event was also plugged through schools and Max reports the Week as highly successful.

Morris Ties Song Title To "Gold Diggers" Co-op Ad

A smart full page co-op ad was promoted by Larry Morris, St. George Theatre, St. George, S. I., on "Gold Diggers," featuring the title hit song "I'm Going Shopping With You" across top of page.

When Uncle Don of local radio fame made personal appearance, Boro President Palma met him with police escort and introduced the radio star to the audience. Larry also promoted autogiro toys which were distributed to kids during this performance.

Clown Entertains Kids For Kane's "Colonel" Date

The kids in Redwood City, Cal. had a swell time when Tom Kane at the Sequoia Theatre engaged the services of a circus clown who, through arrangement with superintendent of schools, appeared at assemblies, told children about Shirley Temple and announced that at Saturday matinee autographed photos of the starlet and ice cream would be given away.

Accompanying photo shows children gathered in front of theatre watching antics of the clown. Tom promoted the ice cream and truck used for clown street bally.

Police Tiein With Harris On "Whole Town's Talking"

A tieup with the Police Safety Campaign was effected by J. P. Harris at Loew's Corona-Plaza on "Town's Talking" with cards fastened to all telegraph poles reading "The Whole Town's Talking about the police safety campaign; cross on the green light and see, etc., etc."

Candid photographer on street snapped people handing out coupons tied in with picture and those whose likenesses appeared in lobby were given guest tickets. Flowers promoted from local dealer were distributed to ladies on opening matinee.

McManus Stages Dance Contest on "Reckless"

A Jean Harlow dance contest for "Reckless" was put on by Johnny McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, at local ballroom, with theatre awarding cup to best dancers. Daily mention of the contest was made in dancehall ads, and plugged in theatre copy.

On "Naughty Marietta" beauty salon featured a MacDonald hairdress, using cut of star in ads. Department store devoted window to styles worn by Miss MacDonald and men's haberdasher gave window over to male attire as exemplified by Nelson Eddy.

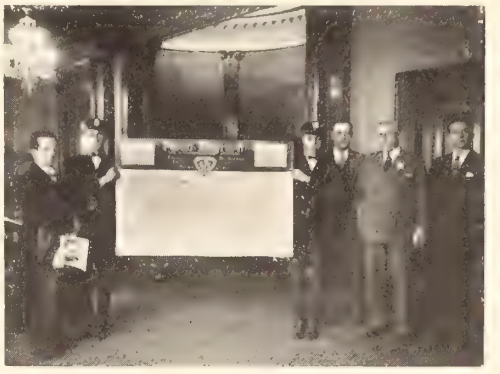
Kislingsbury Sells Merchants On Spring Fashion Opening



Calling on all the merchants in block on which his theatre is located, Fred Kislingsbury, Aberdeen, Aberdeen, Wash. sold them on staging a spring fashion opening on "Sweet Music". Shop windows were draped, trimmers prepared special spring displays and at eight o'clock in the evening of opening day, all merchants' windows were unveiled while the local high school band played in streets.

A double truck page printed in green was run, center of which contained theatre ad. On Saturday morning merchants released colored balloons from roofs of stores for kids assembled for the morning matinee.

Zimbalist Puts On Radio Contest to Plug "Ruggles"

With radio station tying in, Al Zimbalist, advertising director St. Louis Amusement Co., on his "Ruggles" date put over contest in which listeners were asked to submit letters stating why Charles Laughton was their favorite actor. Al also put on the coloring contest with promoted prizes awarded and samples of art work displayed in lobby.

Usher dressed in "Ruggles" butler suit covered congested districts with back placard reading "If you think I'm crazy, you ought to see," etc., etc. Another usher wore illuminated shirt front reading "Laff next week at," etc.

Giant invite was delivered to Mayor (see photo) and that's Al at extreme left, with Bill Hoppe, district manager, Mayor Dickman and Marvin Stiver, manager of the Lyric. Merchant cooperated by donating window for boy dressed in pajamas on cot with large sign, "I'm resting to see," etc.

Gettysburg Address Bally Used by Newton on "Ruggles"

One of the highlights of Rockey Newton's "Ruggles" campaign at the Paramount, Cedar Rapids, Ia., was street bally in which two ushers dressed as Laughton (see photo) set up soap box on which they delivered the Gettysburg address. On completion boys circulated among listeners and distributed heralds.

Local dealer tied in on newspaper bridge contest, offering refrigerator as grand prize, with other merchants coming through with lesser awards. Wrecked car parked in street with side banner "this car wrecked in rush to see," etc., etc. Doorman was dressed as butler, and buggy with two bannered white horses toured streets.

Schools Cooperate With Hulbert on French Films

Another way of increasing Saturday business was the stunt engineered by Charlie Hulbert, Strand, Richmond, Va., who contacted the heads of modern languages in the schools there and succeeded in making selected French pictures, part of curriculum. Shows are put on early Saturday morning, students charged regular admission prices and the first films to be shown under this plan were "Poil de Carotte" and "Mirages of Paris."

Doll Parade Tops Talbot's Temple Day

With the approach of Shirley Temple's birthday, Cliff Talbot, Arabian Theatre, Seattle, arranged a Saturday matinee party. A Temple doll was offered for the best dressed girl in grown-up clothes and another highlight of the party was a doll parade, in which prizes were offered for the best dressed, largest, oldest, smallest and funniest.

Prizes were also awarded for the best singer of "The Good Ship Lollypop" and each child was given a piece of the Shirley Temple birthday cake promoted from baker. All present signed names to huge birthday card which later was mailed to the starlet.

"BALLYHOO HAS GONE STREAMLINE"

—FRED C. SOUTTAR, LINCOLN THEATRE, BELLEVILLE, ILL.

SAYS THEATRE AD COPY READ WITH CONFIDENCE

Dear Mike:

I greatly enjoyed the recent discussion in the HERALD by different showmen on the value of the Ballyhoo in Theatre advertising of today. Since this seems to be a friendly comparison here's a couple of thoughts of my own.

Today we find many lines of business taking advantage of ideas which were formerly considered the exclusive theatre type of advertising. I refer mainly to the use of ballyhoo cars by various lines of business. On a recent Saturday afternoon four different cars were on view on the main street of this city. They were advertising tires . . . iceboxes . . . a political candidate and the opening of a new filling station. I think the same condition exists elsewhere.

Conditions such as the above have been an influence in the change of style in theatre advertising. While I have mentioned only the one, there are dozens of different ideas used by theatres which have been picked up and adopted by other lines of business.

Theatre Ad Styles Change

Theatres have realized this change in conditions. They have responded with a change in their own style of advertising. I believe that today theatre advertising copy is read with a great deal more confidence by the theatre goer than it was a number of years ago. The theatre is building confidence. Less Bally . . . more facts . . . smarter constructed campaigns hitting the vital points of the attraction and selling it to the people that it should appeal to, rather than a circus type of campaign that was simply a hit or miss proposition.

Yet, I don't think the ballyhoo has gone out of show business. It's gone streamline. You'll find it in use on the attractions that it should be used on, but on a picture that needs a dignified campaign it will be properly missing.

"Prepared For Summer?"

WEDDING WINDOW. Francis Deering, Loew's Houston State Theatre, secured this attractive window display for his premiere on "Wedding Night."

With the contributions from Round Tablers Souttar and Webster set down on this page, the discussion of the merits of ballyhoo in the smaller community now closes, at least for the time being. Much has been said on this important subject and it is hoped that statements from the various members have been of interest to all our readers. To Hal Lee, Babcock Theatre, Bath, N. Y., an extra bow for inaugurating this timely debate.

Harold C. Lee, in his recent statement is a perfect example of a smart theatre manager who has studied his situation and constructed his advertising along the lines that will get him the most results . . . more power to him.—FRED C. SOUTTAR, Lincoln Theatre, Belleville, Ill.

FINDS BIG PICTURES AID CO-OP PAGES

Dear Mike:

Does advertising, tie-ups and ballyhoo pay in the small towns?

We happen to be situated in a city of 10,027 inhabitants, with possibly 4,000 of these colored, and very little outlying rural population, this being due to our being almost completely surrounded by water and swamps. Yet we are believers of getting all the publicity possible for our theatre in whatever form our budget will permit.

The Carolina Theatre is located in the back of one of our finest buildings, and the arcade of the theatre is also the entrance to this building, which causes us to be unable to build any lobby fronts on our runs, therefore, we use our energy in the creation of outside advertising. This is a handicap as we feel pretty theatre fronts are a part of the battle of advertising and to no small degree. Although if this energy is put forth in other forms of outside advertising such as tie-ups and ballyhoo we have a world of things to do to keep us busy at all times. It is true with us, as well as with others, at times we have spent a whole week working on a tieup and it looked as if things were going through sweetly and crowds were sure to flock to the theatre, only to be disappointed when the theatre doors opened.

Our regular advertising constitutes special locations for each and every window card, three sheet and one sheet, and in the event of special publicity on a large feature we have extra cards printed and post the town with them in circus fashion. Our local daily newspapers cover the town like a blanket, therefore we are firm believers in giving them nice space. In return, they have always cooperated with us on any special attraction, giving us good space with readers and we have had editorials on pictures of such calibre as "Little Women," "The Thin Man" and "The House of Rothschild." About a year ago we started a "Theatre News" page in this paper to be run every Saturday and it has proven very satisfactory to the paper as well as to ourselves. Their readers appreciate the short articles listed on the pictures and in return we receive added patronage.

Quite often we have window tie-ups with the merchants and offer prizes in the form of passes to the theatre for those who solve our stunts. We do not believe in running too many co-op pages as it will eventually become monotonous to your public unless they are of a very appealing nature and prizes worth working for are offered.

We do want to mention here in connection with co-op pages, if our theatre has a large feature and we know we are going to draw the crowds down for the matinee, we do not mind at all going to our merchants, as it will bring them additional business, for the more people we or the merchants bring to the main street, the better their business and ours will be.

Ballyhoo is worked on all our pictures that we have an opportunity to work one on. We not only pick the pictures that we know we will have large crowds on but those we know are going to be hard to sell. The latter are very often a disappointment to us but we feel with continuous plugging we are keeping the theatre in their minds.

The above is written showing only how our operation of the Carolina Theatre is done and we do not say it will work in other cities of like size. What will work out fine in one city may be a failure in another. We still believe in advertising as much as one can for that is what brings the shekels into the box office.

Before closing, how about someone telling us through these pages how the guy gets along with just one sheet and a set of 11 x 14 tacked in their lobby? Perhaps you, too, have seen this same thing in your travels.—J. H. WEBSTER, Carolina Theatre, Elizabeth City, N. C.

ARE YOU SET FOR FLAG DAY?

Nationwide observance is being emphasized this year for the celebration of Flag Day on Friday, June 14, and interested theatremen will no doubt tie in with local ceremonies. Cooperation with schools, American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and other civic groups is recommended.

Theatres can be decorated with American flags, and in locations with large national groups, flags of other countries. Stage presentations such as Betsy Ross making the first American flag or Francis Scott Key composing the national anthem, might be put on with schools or little theatre groups.

Mass singing of "America" and "Star Spangled Banner", talks on the flag by prominent civic official, and flag ceremonies by honor color guard are also suggested.

Pollock Street Ballys "Reckless" with Skaters

Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., used a couple of street ballys for "Reckless," one of which was five girls on roller skates with back banners, who even skated into department stores. Number two was truck towing bannered wrecked car through streets and lettered rubber mats were placed on street crossings throughout downtown sections.

Autographed photos of Harlow and Powell were distributed through radio station, postcards with plug copy were mailed from New York and through tieup with paper, corsages were given to careful women drivers.

SUMMER OPERATION SLANTS

Some Timely Pointers on Keeping Air-Cooling Plant at Maximum Efficiency; Other Aids Suggested

by DICK WRIGHT
District Manager, Warner Ohio Theatres

Summer opposition is almost upon us. The manager who is on the job is making it his business to drive for additional patronage in spite of seasonal obstacles, and planning to effectively combat the lure of the outdoors, lakes-beaches-resorts-ball games, etc. Naturally you don't expect to keep outdoor diversion seekers from going to these places but you can spot your billing and media of out-door exploitation and thereby strikingly convince your patrons that you too, have some very fine attractions so that they will include your theatre in their recreation plans. Your immediate job is to map out plans and ideas to assist yourself in circumventing any seasonal drop-off.

In keeping with the feeling of early summer a noticeable spirit of freshness should be in evidence insofar as the general physical appearance of the front of your theatre is concerned. Fresh light colors in lobby posters . . . various shades of blues, greens, and occasionally light lavenders . . . silver paper backgrounds or silver flitter combined with any of the colors specified will make for an atmosphere of delicacy and coolness. New cut-out displays and lobby set-pieces made up in colors to harmonize with the summer season will add to the summery atmosphere.

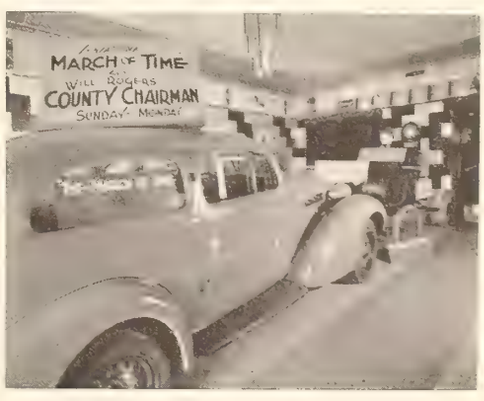
Fresh flowers provided to the theatre gratis through a florist tie-up will doll up the general appearance of the lobby and foyer and no doubt you will find several spots where shrubbery and ferns will assist you materially in establishing the general impression that your theatre is cool, comfortable and inviting. If you use ferns under your marquee don't let the sun burn them up but arrange to have them cared for regularly. To further carry out the summer atmosphere trellis work and vines can be used very advantageously as part of your displays. In your foyer and auditorium change the lighting effect from the warm tints of winter to the cooler shades in keeping with the general psychological effect.

The Cooling Plant

For the coming few months your worst enemy will be HEAT. Your theatre may or may not be equipped with a cooling plant. The manager who operates a theatre without a plant should instruct his cleaning staff to throw open every door and window in the early morning to permit the cool air to come into the theatre. At a designated time they should all be closed until opening time of the theatre. It may be necessary for your porter to sprinkle the roof and sidewalls of your building to drive off the heat in midday.

If your house is equipped with an air washer plant double-check to make sure that your house is sealed tight enough so that the cool air escapes only through your entrance doors. If the volume of air rushing out the entrance doors does not satisfy you then check again on the possibility of a skylight, vent, or back stage window being opened. In extremely warm weather when the temperature of the water in your spray tank is not low enough to have a cooling effect on the air passing through the tank you can get temporary relief by placing cakes of ice in the water tank which will result in the temperature of the water being lowered to a degree which will give the desired relief. In this instance it is best to use as much recirculated air as is possible. The relief obtained is only temporary, lasting from three quarters of an hour to a little over an hour, depending upon the amount of cakes placed into the tank. To keep cost to a minimum it is advisable to use this method only during peak matinee and evening performances.

As a basis of comparison a 1,200 seat house can be made very comfortable for a two hour period by placing 20 one hundred pound blocks of ice into the water tank; this method of cooling being resorted to only when the house is at least three quarters filled and the outside temperature above 85 degrees. Some ice dealers are able to furnish a "frost" color ice at a reduction in price which will answer the purpose just as well and at the same time be more economical.



If your theatre is equipped with a refrigeration plant the important point to bear in mind is to make sure that your plant is operating systematically so that your house at no time will become cold or chilly.

Every theatre manager will have his own particular problem in keeping his house comfortable . . . but a comfortable theatre is healthy and inviting, and the alert manager will make it his business to continually create this impression to his patrons.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

LIKE THE WINNING DOG TEAM, THE SIX FACTORS OF AIR CONDITIONING SUCCEED ONLY UNDER CONTROL . . . AUTOMATIC CONTROL

Like a Team of Huskies

AIR CONDITIONING DEMANDS Control

AUTOMATIC CONTROL cracks the whip over the six, otherwise unruly, factors* of year-round Air Conditioning. Without this control and coordination, they fail to provide properly heated, properly humidified inside atmospheres in winter, and cool, livable, dry atmospheres in summer. Under Automatic Control, they become effective Air Conditioning, controlling conditions in all kinds of weather and for all sizes of crowds.

Minneapolis-Honeywell, pioneer and leader for fifty years in the development of Automatic Controls, manufactures the Modutrol System, which will automatically control any Air Conditioning installation, large or small. The great versatility of this system makes it readily applicable to any standard or specialized installation. Under Modutrol guidance, that installation will operate at maximum efficiency.

Minneapolis-Honeywell has available a brief informative book on the vital subject of Air Conditioning and its Automatic Control. It is a clear explanation of a subject whose uses and terms are often misunderstood. Your request on your letterhead addressed to Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Company, 2822 Fourth Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minnesota, will bring you your copy.

IT PAYS TO "Modernize Main Street" with a New PITTCO THEATRE FRONT!

BEFORE: Here is how the New Venus Theatre, in Shreveport, La., looked before it was given new drawing power and new attractiveness by remodeling it with a Pittco Front.

AFTER: And here it is as it appears today, entirely changed by a new Pittco Front. No one, we believe, can deny that the change is all for the better! Cost of Pittco Store Front Products used on this job, including installation, was only $722.00!

THE movement to "Modernize Main Street" is gaining momentum every day. And theatre owners and managers who have joined the trend by remodeling their theatres with new Pittco Theatre Fronts, have found that it pays! For a new Pittco Front makes an outmoded theatre new and attractive again ... it impresses potential movie-goers with your theatre's progressiveness ... it lures them inside ... and results in boosting profits. The same qualities that make Pittco Store Front products so successful in the store front field, also make them ideal for theatre remodeling. And best of all, a new Pittco Front usually pays for itself in a short time by the added business it attracts.

The National Housing Act enables you to obtain money easily for theatre improvements, requiring only your promissory note as collateral. So decide now to remodel your theatre with a new Pittco Front! We recommend that you retain a local architect to design it for you, and that, if necessary, you apply for NHA funds to finance it. Our representative will gladly help you negotiate the loan. For complete information on Pittco Fronts, clip the coupon for our booklet "How Modern Store Fronts Work Profit Magic". This book contains numerous photographs of Pittco-remodeled buildings of many types and sizes, together with construction costs, resulting business increases, etc.

EQUIPMENT AND MATERIALS

A Department of Reports on Developments in Products Used by Theatres

CHAIR SEAT

● A theatre chair seat designed for adaptation to existing chairs, has been developed by the John J. Cable Manufacturing Company of Jamaica Plains, Mass. Spring construction is of unit type, and covering may be had in leatherette, or in other materials upon specification. The design includes provisions for adaptation to wooden chairs, which is effected by lowering the bracket.

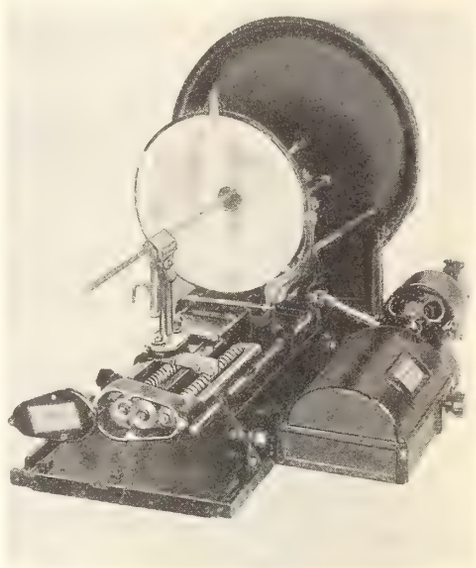
FIRE EXTINGUISHER

● A 2-quart vaporizing fire extinguisher discharged by air pressure and delivering either a solid stream or a fan-shaped spray, has been developed by the Pyrene Manufacturing Company of Newark, N. J. Constructed of copper and brass, it has top and bottom castings fastened to an inner and outer seamless shell, forming two chambers. The inner holds air under pressure, and the outer contains the liquid. There is no built-in pump, and the air supply may be replenished at any air-line having a pressure of at least 100 pounds. The extinguisher weighs 16½ pounds when fully charged.

FINISHING COMPOUND

● A liquid finishing compound for woodwork, floors, walls, metals, marble, and all painted surfaces, has been brought out by the Amiglaze Corporation of New York. The manufacturers assert that it is not affected by moisture or exposure, and that it eliminates the need of wax or oils.

WATER TREATMENT



● Chemical analysis and treatment of water to reduce scale and corrosion in boilers has been made available nationally—a service established by the Rathbun Company, Inc., chemical engineers, of El Paso, Tex. When personal representation is not possible, the company supplies special heating plant questionnaires and a standardized water sample bottle, together with mailing cartons. A report with recommendations is made on the basis of the information thus given.

SUPREX ADAPTER

● An adapter unit designed to permit use of copper-coated non-rotating carbons with existing lamphouses and related equipment, has been placed on the market by the S. O. S. Corporation of New York. The design is by Rudolph Miehling, prominent New York sound and projection engineer. The trade name is Suprex-Omatic.

For adaptation to low-intensity equipment, the unit has new negative jaws, inside dowsers, trip push shaft, motor speed control rheostat and a specific type of elliptical mirror. (Jaw and mirror are shown at top in the illustration.)

To meet conditions represented by the wide difference in burning rates between the positive and negative carbons, the Suprex-Omatic has a special front drive mechanism with interchangeable gears and separate feed screw, with a different pitch (shown at bottom of the adapter in the illustration).

End view of Suprex-Omatic adapter.

Another interesting solution to problems raised in adaptation is a rheostat unit designed to permit retention of existing motor-generators or rectifiers (or d. c. line of approximately 30 amperes), and motor. The rheostat unit operates in dual fashion to establish proper voltages at both the arc and the motor, by means of a Type 82 rectifier tube in the case of the former, and ballast resistors for the latter. Through this unit proper amperages may be controlled from existing current sources, including 110-volt d. c. mains.

The unit is built of chrome alloy and is enclosed in a rugged all-steel housing. It is equipped with a 50-ampere Weston ammeter.

Tests of this adapter were recently held at Loew's New York theatre before a number of projectionists from theatres in the metropolitan area.

MOTOR-GENERATOR

● A motor-generator especialy designed for motion picture projection arc supply has been marketed by J. E. Robin of New York, who designed it. Manufacture is by the Imperial Electric Company of Akron, Ohio.

Principal features include construction of armature and motor rotor on one rigid shaft, locked-in brush-holders and studs, one-piece rolled steel magnet yoke, and mounting specifications eliminating need of special cushioning and anchor bolts. In mounting two short pieces of flexible conduit goose-necked in connecting up with conduit boxes are required.

Modernization for the equipment dealer, too! Pictured here is a section of the new store of the Capitol Theatre Supply Company at 28 Piedmont Street, Boston, as seen from the office space on a balcony. Among the larger items handled by Capitol are Strong and Brenkert lamps and rectifiers, Garver rectifiers, Capitol and Brenkert spots, Ideal chairs, Da-Lite screens, Bausch & Lomb lenses, Imperial and Stabilarc motor-generators, Clough-Brengle amplifiers, Vallen curtain control equipment and sound and projection mechanisms and operating supplies. A general repair service for equipment is also conducted.

Ballast resistors are built in all-steel frames. They are furnished for either single arcs or duplex types, consisting in two separate sections for two arcs built in one housing and available in all ratings to suit the lamps, with suitable switches for current adjustment. Conduit boxes for both a. c. and d. c. leads are reversible and have a one-piece cover.

Control panels are of the dead-face type, constructed for flush mounting. The ammeter shows proper current ranges for standard carbon combinations, and the shunt has 24 leads. The field rheostat has extra steps to permit close voltage adjustment.

DECORATIVE VENEER

● A decorative material adapted to wall and other surfaces in theatres, and available in many colors and patterns, has been brought out under the name of Micarta.

Micarta belongs to the general class of synthetic decorative veneers being used extensively in modern architecture. It is a laminated material composed of many layers of paper or cloth pressed to uniform consistency under extremely high temperatures. The surface is smooth and moderately glassy. Colors and designs are molded into the composition itself.

The latter range through many types, including simulated woods, marble effects, floral and fabric schemes, and solid colors. Five forms of the material are available, called Micarta Celotex, Micarta Plywood, Micarta asbestos, Micarta Prestwood, and Micarta plymetal. The names indicate the differences. For example, Micarta Celotex has a sheet of the veneer bonded to each side of a Celotex core, forming, in addition to its decorative characteristics, a heat and sound insulator.

Micarta is applied in sheet form cemented directly to existing walls or in prepared panels, with the latter offering certain advantages, such as replacement of sections and greater durability.

SAFETY DEVICE

● A projector safety device to prevent film fire originating at the aperture from reaching the magazines has been brought out by the Paramount Device Corporation of Chicago. One of the units is installed for the upper magazine, another for the lower. The knife is spring-actuated with control through a fusible link, and as it cuts the film it seals the magazine slot.

AIR QUALITY

● Two interesting additions to the list of major factors determining the effect of the atmosphere upon human comfort, are made by Dr. S. H. Kintner, vice president of engineering of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company. These other factors, augmenting temperature and relative humidity, are air cleanliness and air quality. Perhaps everyone appreciates the significance of chemical balance in the atmosphere, but Dr. Kintner suggests, in a recent paper, the possibility that in formal consideration of the relationship of the atmosphere to comfort, especially in connection with mechanical control, emphasis on temperature and relative humidity obscures these other factors, cleanliness and quality.

"Dust," he points out, "is not alone an annoyance . . . it is a serious health menace as well. While it is not feasible to remove a large part of the dirt from the great outdoors, it is possible to control the cleanliness of the air that is circulated within a building."

But how about control of air quality?

"While it is possible by control means," says Dr. Kintner, "to produce an atmosphere in a room of the right temperature, of a satisfactory humidity, properly cleaned and of good chemical condition, reasonably free from odors, it still seems to lack that mysterious something that one finds in the mountains or at the seashore—that invigorating quality that makes one enjoy just breathing such air.

"Studies have been made to determine the cause of this difference. The most generally accepted theories now attribute it to differences in the kind of free ions that exist in the air. Some studies have been reported which show quite striking differences on persons subjected to these influences. When there is a preponderance of positive ions it appears to slow up the mental activities to such an extent that well educated persons, acting as subjects in the tests, are unable to add columns of figures that would ordinarily require little effort. Conversely, when the negative charges predominate there is increased mental activity and a feeling of buoyancy.

"These studies though not complete may eventually make possible the regular production of an ideal atmosphere. The method of securing such charges must originate from an electrical circuit which will produce electrons. Electrons are too small to be seen even under the most powerful magnifying glasses, still it is possible to see the result of their impact on certain surfaces which fluoresce from the bombardment. But it is interesting that these unseen minute ions may hold the secret of the ideal climate."

Troubles of the Dealer

As these may be partially indicated by a letter received the other day by a prominent equipment supply company from a recent customer. For no other purpose than to plumb the depths of our native tongue as a source of puzzled amusement, the letter, which was forwarded on to us, is submitted below, just as she was wrote:

Dear Sir: You said in your letter of March 11th that no company can operate at a loss, no matter how big or small. I advised that how I can operate ? I paid for new amplifier and now is very hard get booking and where I show picture with your amplifier every one I loss. nowant any picture from me how about it? it is right? I advised that if you ar in business then sell to customers good amplifier and any scrap. I bought brand new Sound head and the optical system is first class, also photo cell 58 all. 90 volt. We try the amplifier in theatre and the operator said that the amplifier is no good, because you take of the sign from top the amplifier where is DON'T USE DC CURRENT and the other sign take of the - - - - - - in - - - - - Why you tak of that, because you sel sold me scrap. I be glad satisfy but how I can be satisfy when everybody kick on the sound and when I come next time they no want heard for my picture I have headache from your amplifier I have no trouble in all my life like that. I have few sunday show and then I must doo something with the amplifier absolutely I cannot use this amplifier send me the new amplifier which I send to you the picture of the amplifier which don't doo any noise. Otherwise I send the amplifier immediately to the - - - - -, - - - - -, - - - - -, and he let the amplifier about two month at the Railway Express Co. he nowant take the amplifier and I have guarantee on this amplifier so now you are prooved whatkind people you have your guarantee does no mean nothing I advise that every good Company Change no matter what and make people satisfy just you doo wrong business it is schame. You don't care if is people satisfy, you ar glad when you have money in pocket-

BY WAY OF NEWS

● Herman A. DeVry, Inc., of Chicago, manufacturers of both professional and 16-mm. projectors, film reels and other motion picture apparatus, has purchased the machinery and good will of A. Schustek & Company, Chicago, makers of film printers.

Prominent among subjects announced for discussion at the convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago from June 15 to 19, are prices and dealer discounts. In making this known, J. E. Robin, president of the organization, called these "the most pressing problems of modern merchandising." The convention will also go intensively into recent developments in theatre equipment and attempt an appraisal of their bearing on the market. Manufacturers who have already scheduled exhibit space are Herman A. DeVry, Inc., Carbon Products, Inc., Baldor Electric Company, United Optical Company, Wenzel Company, Platter Sound Products Corporation, Brenkert Light Projection Company, Da-Lite Screen Corporation, Neumade Products Corporation, National Carbon Company, and the Continental Electric Company.

JUNE 1, 1935

FIGURES DON'T LIE . . .

But they can be incomplete. And very mysterious. The technique of higher accountancy can easily demonstrate these possibilities. In calculating theatre profits, for example. If theatre operation were always a matter of theatre operation, exclusively, the bookkeeper's tricks would not have enough practical value to sustain them, but unfortunately the business of exhibiting motion pictures sometimes gets confused with real estate promotion, stock selling and other irrelevant activities. Hence the value of distinguishing between real and apparent profits.

The distinction represents, of course, a kind of kidding—occasionally one's self, more often somebody else. But it is a form of kidding which has been convincing enough in the past to obstruct the adoption of any such method as Mr. J. T. Knight, Jr. suggests in this issue. To establish an "Equipment Reserve" fund is merely to recognize the reality of equipment depreciation. It is not depreciation on the books. It is depreciation in the equipment. In choosing to examine maintenance as a fact in theatre operation, Mr. Knight would seem to believe that this business has become ready, during the last few years, to accept what always has been really inescapable.

THE FEAR OF DARK THEATRES

The motion picture auditorium is no longer dark as once it was. But is it yet light enough? We know full well what that question invites from the projection fellows—we can almost hear thunder roll down upon us out of Scarsdale, where Mr. F. H. Richardson resides. Nevertheless:

It should be borne in mind that some people feel uneasy in an auditorium that is dark, or nearly so. This dread occasionally represents a phobia, while many are the persons who do not like to sit next to someone who cannot clearly be seen. It is annoying, too, to have to grope down an aisle and stumble over seated patrons. Modern lighting facilities permit elimination of these undesirable characteristics of the motion picture auditorium while at the same time contributing to a pleasing, economical decorative scheme. And with the screen illumination now available through the Suprex arc, at costs reasonable for even the small theatre, we do not believe that a higher level of auditorium illumination would necessarily create interference.

SOME MORE ABOUT GOOD TIMES

And from the same gentleman we cited in the May 4th issue. Mr. B. C. Forbes. Of course, we could go elsewhere for optimism. But this time we found him in Liberty, instead of in his own financial paper. And we like this kind of language well enough to repeat it:

"The nation's 15,000 banks are bursting with idle money, money itching to be profitably harnessed to useful, constructive activities. So colossal [a good motion picture word, that!] are the unprecedented excess bank reserves that more than $28,000,000,000 of new credit could be granted without resorting to currency inflation. . . . Yes, a business boom by and by is not only possible, but is as certain as the rising of the sun."

Which is certain enough for us.

G. S.

MATERIALS ADAPTED TO DESIGN IN MODERNE

By ROBERT O. BOLLER

Reviewing, in terms of today's theatre architecture, materials new and old—continuing a group of articles by a prominent architect

IN PREVIOUS articles, we have discussed the moderne vogue in motion picture theatre design, which is rapidly growing more widespread in the United States, and also recent important physical changes in showhouse planning. It should be of interest to the prospective builder or to the owner who wishes to modernize his present theatre to give some thought to the effects which can be obtained in the moderne style of architecture with building mediums to the use of which we have become accustomed over a long period, and also with newer materials which have sprung into popularity.

ESSENTIALS OF MODERNE

In spite of frequent clashes as to what the new style is and is not, we recall that designers generally are agreed that moderne calls for simplicity of line, reasonable proportion, honesty of material, and perfect functioning.

As to the motion picture theatre, I hope you have agreed with my previous conclusion that since we are not selling Ford cars or crackers, but dramatic art, to the public, we will not be content merely to erect factory type buildings of glass, steel, and concrete, but that the results of our labors must be architecturally satisfying.

ORNAMENT REDUCTION

Two of the most obvious results of the adoption of the moderne style of architecture are the elimination of the traditional cornice and ponderous ornament. Something as the tonsils and appendix have remained a part of the human body long after they have ceased to serve any vital purpose, the cornice has likewise been retained in one form or another through all the changing forms of architecture previously employed. Even in the trend toward simplicity in full swing today, we still frequently find designers unconsciously throwing horizontal bands into the upper portion of the body, which we might term a sort of scar to show where the cornice once was placed.

Although ornament, as such, is not approved by the radical modernists of Europe, American architects are continuing to use a limited amount of embellishment, but have learned to use it more discreetly, with an effect of low relief carving, rather than of bold jig-saw gadgets stuck or hung on a building after it is structurally complete. The marquee and electric sign are now planned an integral parts growing out of the theatre front. Simple bands tie the building together. Both vertical and horizontal lines are used for decorative effect.

SIMPLICITY

The simplicity of moderne should not be confused with monotony. The extremists across the Atlantic demand no dominant feature shall tower above the front—monotony appears to be their battle cry. But an American theatre operator rightfully expects his marquee and electric sign to be the most prominent note in his theatre exterior at night, and the whole exterior should be so designed that it stands out in an equally distinctive fashion from the drug stores, jewelry shops, and other places of business surrounding it, in the daytime.

HORIZONTAL AND VERTICAL

Reasonable proportion, another requisite of good moderne, has been an essential in every style of architecture. The new architecture has evolved two distinct types of building, the low, horizontal construction, which lends itself admirably to a flat, canal-cut country such as Holland, where it is suitably expressive of Dutch repose, and the vertical type found in our cosmopolitan centers. The horizontal moderne may be used with equal effect in the smaller and less congested communities of America, surrounded by the proper setting of flat or rolling prairie country. But restless and bustling New York seems to demand a vertical architectural version of moderne, the slender lines of which reach upward like the old Tower of Babel, almost to the heavens themselves.

HONESTY OF MATERIAL

But whatever class of moderne we choose, this new type of architecture calls for honesty of material. Often I am asked my opinion of materials simulating marble, stone, wood, this, or that. When a woman goes into a reputable jewelry shop with a desire for a diamond she cannot afford, instead of selling her a rhinestone imitation, a wise jeweler suggests a real stone of another variety within the reach of her purse, and for which she need offer no apology. So, in moderne design, when a client cannot provide an appropriation large enough to purchase the costliest materials, the sincere architect prefers, rather than to employ imitations of a questionable artistic value, to design the motion picture theatre in less expensive but honestly used materials throughout, so that the finished structure is genuine in every particular, and yet suited to the owner's finances.

CONCRETE

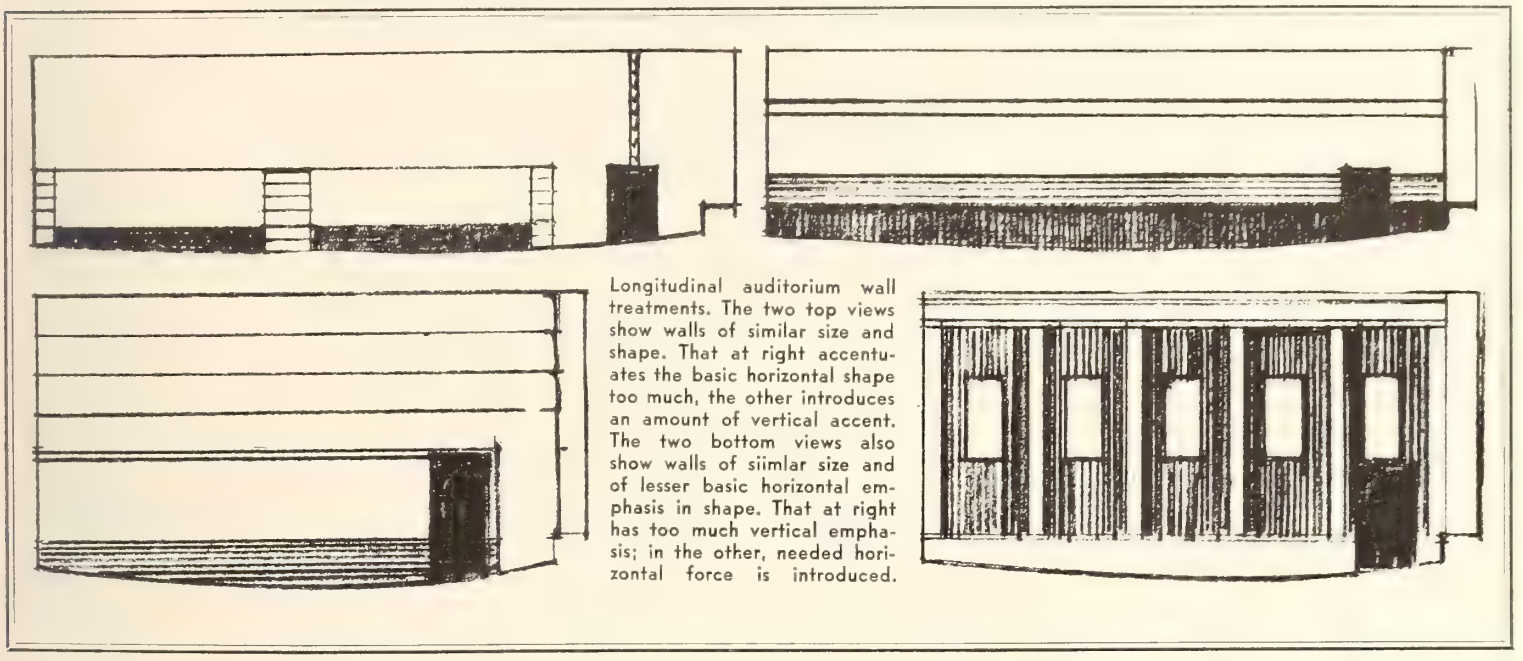
When we turn to a consideration of materials particularly suitable for use with the new style, we find first on our list that old friend of many years, reinforced concrete. This comes in either the type that is poured on the job in forms, or in precast blocks.

California has very effectively used reinforced concrete for walls poured into place for more than twenty-five years while the rest of the States have preferred steel frame and masonry construction. In California this type of cast work has been singularly successful because longer lumber is available for the necessary form work, the warm climate makes thinner walls possible, and also because the workmen of that locality have had many years of practical experience with concrete.

Hesitation on the part of Eastern and Middle Western builders in the use of reinforced concrete for exterior finish comes largely from the fact that their climates demand thicker walls, thereby increasing the cost of the construction; the lumber available is in shorter lengths and susceptible to shrinkage, leaving uneven and ugly joints at each break in the form; and their workmen are comparatively inexperienced in the finer points of this class of work.

Some of these obstacles are being overcome by the use of interlocking metal forms or the customary wooden forms lined with large sheets of hard board. The inner mat formed by the latter material prevents buckling and leaves very small lines of demarcation which may be ground smooth after removal of the forms. Offsets and panels can be formed and poured in the same way. Ornament, where used, may be poured by the mould method, or carved into the building later.

Pre-cast concrete blocks, in a variety of colors, are available for use in the same manner as stone or marble, but should be a sincere material standing alone, and not an apologetic imitation of any other building medium.



STONE

Stone is an ancient material with many new possibilities, even though the color

Longitudinal auditorium wall treatments. The two top views show walls of similar size and shape. That at right accentuates the basic horizontal shape too much, the other introduces an amount of vertical accent. The two bottom views also show walls of siimlar size and of lesser basic horizontal emphasis in shape. That at right has too much vertical emphasis; in the other, needed horizontal force is introduced.

I.—METHODS and MATERIALS

By EUGENE CLUTE

THE MORE severely simple type of modern auditorium design described in my preceding article, is probably best suited to sophisticated patronage, and it is often felt that something less severe is better in a theatre catering to people of less special tastes. Too often the latter consideration leads to gaudy treatment. This need not be so, for a good designer can create less severe forms without loss of dignity or of excellence in the results, and the modern style is broad enough in its scope to meet these requirements.

HORIZONTAL TREATMENT

An auditorium of fairly good size with a high ceiling, and either with or without a balcony, can be given good decorative character by dividing the walls horizontally with bands of ornament or narrow flat metal mouldings. The choice of materials for the treatment of auditorium walls is governed to a great degree by the acoustics of the house. Surfaces that do not require sound-absorbing covering may be in some such material as walnut Flexwood veneer, applied in horizontal bands with flat satin-finished chromium mouldings over the horizontal joints; or of the mahogany veneer with golden bronze strips. Flexwood is genuine wood veneer mounted on a fabric and applied like wallpaper.

Haskelite phemaloid, which is a wood veneer mounted on a backing of plywood cemented together with a synthetic fire-resisting substance, is very beautiful and lends itself to this decorative treatment. J-M Flexboard, an asbestos cement composition, comes in good, plain light colors with a pleasing texture effect produced by small flakes of asbestos fibre mingled with the cement and coloring. It is fireproof and inexpensive.

Salubra is washable, flat wall paint on paper and applied like wallpaper, and can be put on in horizontal bands with flat metal or Formica mouldings of contrasting color over the joints.

Sometimes it is desirable to use acoustical plaster on the main areas of the side walls, or on all of the walls. Such surfaces can be divided into horizontal bands several feet deep, separated by relatively narrow bands of relief ornament, say, from 6 to 8 inches wide, in hard plaster. The wide bands of acoustical plaster may be stippled lightly with color that will not clog the pores of the plaster too much. Stippling in a blended effect, grading from fairly dark at the base of the wall to a somewhat lighter tone of the same color at the ceiling is good.

If horizontal banding is used on the wall surfaces from the proscenium to the front line of the balcony, the portions of the side walls in back of this point, and also the rear wall, may well be covered with fabric in a rather large-scale, bold, all-over, modern style pattern of fairly strong but soft coloring. This is usually desirable, since acoustical treatment is fairly certain to be needed on these rear wall areas at least, and the use of a fabric covering permits of a free choice of whatever sound-absorbing material seems best suited to the requirements of the auditorium at this point. Acoustical material of any nature or degree of absorbency can be concealed back of the fabric.

It is often desirable to treat the side walls and ceiling adjacent to the proscenium in a dark color to enhance the brightness of the picture by contrast and to prevent any possibility of uncontrolled light being reflected by these front surfaces to the picture screen. This area may be in a plain color, or it may be graded from dark nearest the screen to a somewhat lighter tone away from it, by the use of separate bands, each of a little lighter shade. In this way a gradual transition can be effected to the light color of the walls and a contrast too harsh is avoided.

All of the walls of an auditorium may be covered with a fabric, and this is sometimes best because it permits the use of whatever acoustical treatment may be required in back of it. Fabric-covered side walls of plain or practically plain material, such as one having a small self-color pattern, may be divided into wide horizontal bands by flat metal mouldings or Formica mouldings, and the rear portion of these walls, together with the back wall, may be covered with a fabric in a bold pattern, which will be enhanced by contrast with the banded areas of plain fabric adjoining.

As a rule the use of a strongly patterned fabric on all of the wall surfaces is to be avoided, as it is likely to have a disturbing influence and to lack dignity.

The ceiling may be stepped up toward the center to a large plain central panel, each step being only a few inches deep; or it may be stepped up in concentric circles. The steppings should be wide and shallow and the ceiling free from ornament, as a prominent central feature should be avoided, for it is likely to draw attention away from the screen. Cove lights may be recessed in the ceiling to project light on the walls, and recessed down-lights afford an excellent means of lighting. The ceiling usually should be of acoustical plaster.

VERTICAL TREATMENT

Many of the more intimate auditoriums have comparatively low ceilings, while many of the smaller theatres (including a few but recently opened) are rather long and narrow and also have low ceilings. In such interiors, division of the side walls into horizontal bands is bad, for it tends to make the rooms appear still narrower and lower.

Where the ceiling is not very low, as in an arena-type house, or in one with a small balcony across the rear, and the auditorium is of ample width, it is often well to treat each of the two side walls as a single, big, plain panel above a dado, subdividing it into vertical panels. Wood veneers are suitable to this kind of treatment.

Where acoustical requirements call for a sound-absorbing surface, a scheme lending itself to vertical treatment can also be carried out in moire-fabric panels with narrow strips of wood set between them, either black or in a contrasting enamel color, and the desired acoustical material for a backing.

In an auditorium that is long, low and rather narrow, with the seats all on a single floor, a more pronounced division by verticals is needed. Skillful vertical division of the walls usually can make such a room very pleasing. But there are a number of pitfalls for the designer to avoid. Very often the vertical lines of panels and pilasters are made too pronounced and are repeated monotonously throughout the entire length of the room. As one's eye runs along the wall the effect is just as jarring as when one's finger is run along the teeth of a gear. Heavy, dark panel-framing, and pilasters used with light colored panels, crowd into the room. Strongly-patterned material in the panels lack repose, is too self-assertive, and it commonly looks cheap.

It is best, as a rule, to break up the length of the side walls into three distinct sections each treated differently. This avoids the endless repetition of panels and reduces the apparent length of the room effectively.

The section nearest the picture screen should be plain and dark in color to set off the picture and avoid the reflection of any uncontrolled light upon the screen. This section should be at least as long as the width of the screen. It may be banded vertically with flat dark contrasting mouldings.

The section at the rear has distinct functions. It is the area where the greatest need for sound absorption exists. It includes the floor area in back of the standee rail as well as a part of the seating. It may be regarded as a kind of foyer and may be somewhat better lighted than the other portions of the auditorium. The walls may well be covered with a plain

II—PLANNING VENTILATION

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

THE REMODELING of the auditorium is of course a job for an architect, but the time of remodeling affords an excellent opportunity to consider carefully changes in the air delivery points, the recirculation of air, and general air distribution. Any changes should be tied in with the new architectural treatment.

The old controversy was between the upward delivery system versus the downward system. Now that everyone is of one mind that the upward system is obsolete, the controversy is between the downward, ceiling pan delivery and the side wall or horizontal delivery system.

Many engineers are biased in their points of view; even whole companies adhere to one method with a conviction that one method is satisfactorily applied to all situations. This idea is definitely a fallacy and you should guard against it. The size and shape of the auditorium, whether there is a balcony and how much it overhangs the main floor, and how low the ceiling is at the top of the balcony, and whether adequate arrangements can be made for the return of recirculated air, all have definite bearing on the question: Shall it be ceiling pan delivery or side wall delivery?

CEILING DELIVERY

The ceiling pan delivery is entirely satisfactory for an air-conditioning system with complete refrigeration, and provided it is supported by an equally well distributed number of return or recirculated air points. Without the well distributed, recirculated air system it is many times quite unsatisfactory.

The ceiling type delivery is generally best suited to the high-ceiling, cube-shaped auditorium. This type of delivery definitely depends upon the fact that cold air is heavier than warm air and that the cold air will drop toward the floor. Frequently the delivered cold air picks up heat so rapidly that before it reaches the breathing line its movement is very sluggish, and under these conditions, if not accelerated by an adequate exhaust or recirculation system, it is far from satisfactory.

It seems that the one great argument of the advocates of this system is that there are no drafts. However, air can be moving as rapidly as 50 feet per minute and not be objectionable.

DOWNWARD TYPE

The downward delivery system has its place in theatre ventilation and air conditioning, but care must be exercised as to where it can be used to advantage.

SIDE WALL TYPE

The side wall or horizontal system of air delivery is ideally adaptable to the long narrow auditorium with a comparatively low ceiling; or to a wider theatre with higher ceiling but without any balcony; or to a stadium type auditorium. It can and has been used successfully in theatres with balconies where the overhang of the balcony is not too great. Of course, with side wall delivery, the entering velocity is much higher than with the downward system. This additional velocity is to make the air carry the desired distance and to create air agitation, which has a definite, added, apparent cooling effect.

The choice of the system is up to the theatre owner; whichever one is selected, he should establish the outlet grille locations and then let his architect plan the auditorium design around them. The proper location of air delivery points is much more important than architectural treatment and decoration. Frequently the change of location of outlets as little as two or three feet will make all the difference in the world, for better or worse, in air distribution.

GRILLES

Finally, the type and kind of delivery grille is very important. Previously grilles and registers were designed basically from the standpoint of free air opening and appearance. Today the modern grille or register does a more important job. A scientifically designed grille will give direction to the air flow, or diffuse the air stream, and regulate the quantity of air that passes through the grille. While performing all of these functions it is interesting to note that the modern grille is less conspicuous than its forerunner, which was made conspicuous by the very attempt to make it ornamental or decorative.

Grille design has been found an important factor in minimizing or amplifying the mechanical noise of the system. Be sure to get the type of grille best suited to the particular location and system.

I want to make this statement, that the field of air-conditioning is so constituted

Describing the Tower Theatre in Detroit, new neighborhood house seating 1,500 and presenting a distinctive decorative scheme

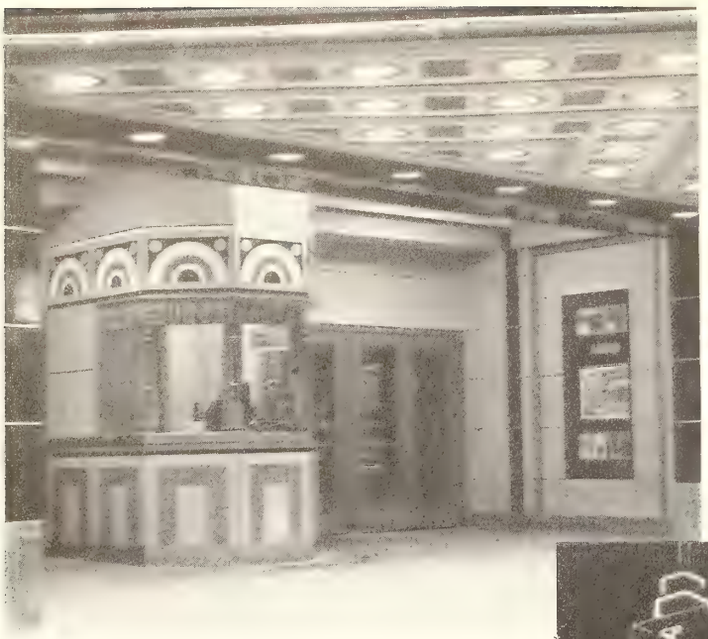
THE TOWER theatre, located in a fine residential section of Detroit, possesses and offers architecturally a number of unusually interesting features in construction and decorative treatment. Arthur K. Hyde of Detroit was the architect. The building was erected under a general contract by the Adler Contracting Company for Grandsteel Corporation, owners. The theatre is operated by the Tower Theatre Company.

In addition to ease of approach the location affords a maximum of advertising display, for the triangular tower (approximately 100 feet high) can be seen for miles in all directions. The property has frontage on three streets: 120 feet on Grand River Avenue, 129 1-2 feet on Fullerton, and 165 feet on Steel. The theatre faces north with a building width of 66 feet on Grand River, leaving to the east 35 feet, and to the west 17½ feet of theatre-owned frontage. From Grand River the building extends south to Fullerton with an axial length of 242 feet. The south or auditorium portion of the structure is exposed on three sides, giving ample exit facilities. Adequate parking space is provided on property controlled by the theatre.

CONSTRUCTION

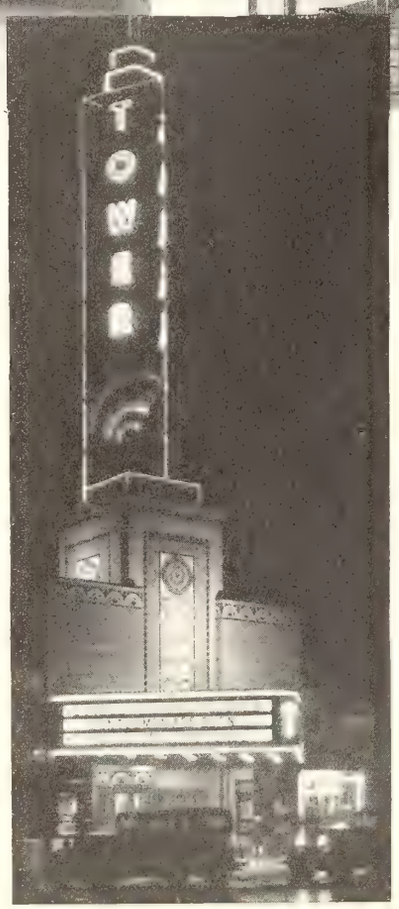
Structurally the building is a combination of steel frame and wall-bearing masonry. The auditorium is enclosed with steel trusses of 89-foot, 8-inch span, supported by steel columns and masonry walls. The (north) entrance portion, supporting the tower, is also of steel skeleton construction with masonry enclosing walls. All other portions of the structure are wall-bearing masonry supporting fireproof roofs both of poured concrete slabs and precast slabs. Both the open truss type and rolled structural steel members were used for roof joists and purlins.

In general the walls are constructed of hollow concrete masonry units of stock sizes faced on the exterior with hard-burned common brick. The Grand River Avenue frontage and returns have a facing of Glasiron Macotta instead of brick. Both brick and Glasiron Macotta facings are bonded to the wall proper with header courses. The hollow concrete units of Portland cement, with steel blast furnace slag used as the aggregate, are left exposed and become the interior wall surfaces of the theatre.



They were selected for three reasons: first, the variety of texture inherent in this material is pleasing, and when properly laid, presents a satisfactory appearance, eliminating the need for plastering or types of wall surfacing other than paint, thus tending toward economy; second, the porosity of the block provides a relatively high sound absorption compared with most structural materials or plastered surfaces, and thus is desirable from an acoustical standpoint; and third, the hollow spaces in the interior of the wall tend to insulate the interior against outside temperature.

Acoustical material of high absorption coefficient was required on the rear wall of the auditorium, covering 1,000 square feet. This was installed by the Johns Manville Company.



FRONT

The theatre entrance is flanked on each side by one-story shops, each 16 1-2 x 53 feet. Large poster panels incorporated in the return walls of the stores are illuminated and are visible to traffic in both directions on Grand River Avenue.

One of the features of the Tower theatre is its V-shaped marquee. Being one-half the area of a rectangular marquee of the same width and projection, and with less than three-fourths the exterior perimiter of the rectangular shape, its initial cost was considerably less. Moreover, the shorter perimiter requires less wattage for attraction panels and soffit illumination, while the V-shape affords two identical attraction panels which can be read from either side of the street in both directions. The exposed surfaces, including the soffit of the marquee, are of stainless steel and porcelain-enameled steel. Soffit lights are recessed in reflectors to eliminate the glare commonly associated with theatre marquees.

The tower from which the theatre derives its name is constructed of structural steel faced with porcelain enameled steel plates. Its main body is alternately triangular and hexagonal in plan and is topped with three hexagonals in set-back and trileafed finial. Actually the tower is a three-sided sign, each sign bearing the name Tower in 3-foot black porcelain-enameled letters, which project about four inches from the face of the tower and are illuminated with double neon tubes. The entire tower is illuminated by concealed lamps and visible neon tubes, sections of which are controlled by flashers. The square base of the tower is illuminated by concealed flood lights. All tower and marquee illumination is controlled from the box office.

An important and practical feature of the tower sign is the provision made for servicing its illumination or washing down its porcelain-enameled surfaces. A ladder extends the entire height of the tower and gives access to eighteen enclosed platforms, three at each letter level in the corners of the triangle, from which positions the entire surface of the signs reached safely.

The walls of the outside entrance are of Glasiron Macotta, with stainless steel base, and the ceiling is sand-finished plaster decorated in green, black and gold leaf. A center box office is also of stainless steel and Glasiron Macotta and divides the entrance and exit doors. At each end of the entrance is a recessed steel poster case.

Passing from the entrance, patrons enter the vestibule with walls of slag block decorated in a dark Chinese red. The ceiling is of plaster, sand-finished, with stenciled cornice in blue, red and black and fields of silver, gold leaf and blue. Like the entrance, the vestibule is illuminated by ceiling lamps concealed behind moulded glass set flush in dull nickel-silver frames. The wood doors with long glass panels and dull nickel hardware are decorated in black and silver.

LOBBY

The lobby is 53 feet by 30. Its floor rises gradually from the vestibule to the foyer, giving an average ceiling height of 21 feet. The walls are of slag blocks. A painted silver stripe separates the wainscot from the wall above, which is decorated light blue. Superimposed over the blue background above the wainscot is a modern conventionalized floral pattern executed in many colors.

The terrazzo floor is of modern pattern in black, brown, green and orange marbles and is divided by a black iron rail with aluminum ornaments. From two painted geometric designs in the field of the ceiling hang modern light fixtures of dull nickel, silver and bronze, with translucent glass panels and cylinders.

Leather-covered studded doors form a barrier to the disturbing hum of conversation of those waiting in the lobby.

FOYER

A subdued light from modern semi-indirect lighting fixtures of dull nickel metal and translucent glass illuminates the comparatively low ceiling of the foyer, which is richly decorated with large floral medallions of a conventionalized modern pattern.

The west end of the foyer gives access to the women's lounge and toilet, and similar accommodations for men are in a corresponding location at the east end. Opening from the foyer also is the stair to a mezzanine level, and a door to the caretaker's apartment.

AUDITORIUM

The auditorium, which is of single-floor plan, is 89 feet wide by 100 feet from proscenium wall to the back of the house. The capacity is 1,442. The average ceiling height is 27 feet. Slightly more than ordinary grade was given to the floor. The seats are upholstered in red leather, and the backs in mohair with a modern floral pattern of red and rust. They are arranged in three sections separated by two center aisles and bounded by two side aisles. The center section has 36 rows of 14 seats, while each side section, 14 seats wide, has one row less. Spacing between rows is 33 inches back-to-back,and chair backs are 20, 21 and 22 inches wide.

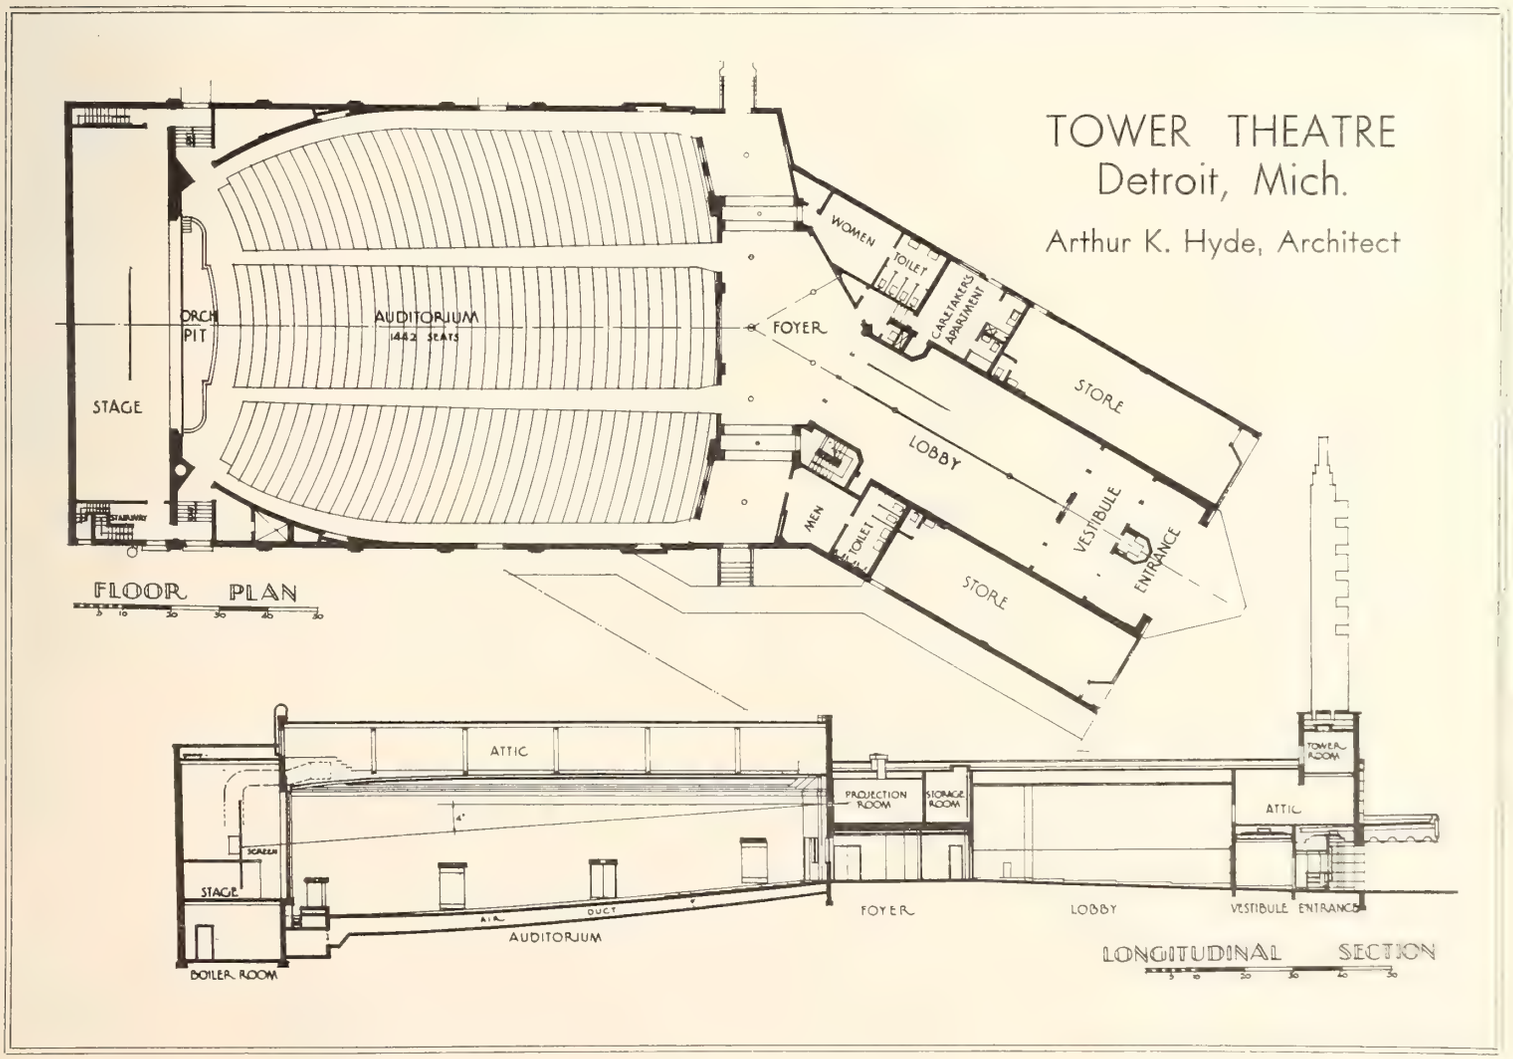
The walls of the auditorium are of slag block, laid in the same manner of coursing as in the foyer, and curve gently in on a large radius, stopping at wide masonry pilasters that frame the proscenium opening, which is 43 feet wide by 22 feet high. Decorating is carried out in red buff as a general wall color, with a darker shade in the dado, separated by a dentil course of deep rose. The proscenium curtains and other hangings are of deep crimson silk velour.

A minimum of decoration was used on the sand-finished plaster ceiling, which curves down to the proscenium beam from a point about one-third the length of the house. The ceiling panels are decorated in a light buff, with a double border around their perimiters in darker colors edged with wide stripes. The ceiling beams are ultramarine blue, with stenciled ornaments of orange, black and red on the soffit containing the openings. which are alternately heat grilles and illumination panels.

There are no hanging fixtures for illumination of the auditorium. In addition to the light panels in the soffit of the beams, which are lamped for both blue and white, troughs of lamps over exit doors and radiator recesses send a beam of blue light vertically up the side walls. In the wiring of the ceiling illumination, provision was made for future installation of dimmer controls.

PROJECTION

On the mezzanine floor, reached by the stairway from the east end of the foyer, are located the projection room, motor-generator room, the manager's office, and a large storage room. Entrance to the motor-generator room is through the projection room, but all others open from the second floor hall.



The projection room is 22 feet wide by 15 feet deep, with a ceiling 9 feet high. The walls and ceiling are decorated in a buff color, and the floor covering is green cork. The major items of equipment are Western Electric sound system, Simplex projectors, Peerless high-intensity lamps, and Hertner motor-generator. There is a built-in distribution panel for the projectors. Provision was also made for the installation of a spotlight and effect machine.

The angle of projection is four degrees. From the center seat of the first row, 23 feet from the screen, the angle of vision in a vertical plane is 25 degrees, and from the extreme end seats of the first row, the line of vision is at an angle of 35 degrees, with the screen measured in a horizontal plane. The screen is 23 feet, 8 inches wide.

HEATING AND VENTILATION

The boiler room, coal storage and a large storage room are located in the basement, which occupies the entire area below the stage. Steam is generated by a coal-fired steel tubular boiler installed with provision for future stoker. A masonry stack topped with a 16-foot length of steel stack (total height 75 feet) provides the draft. Above the stage at the east end is the fan room.

The heating system is a combination of direct radiation and recirculation of warmer air. Sufficient convector fin type radiators are located throughout all principal rooms, except the lobby, to maintain a required minimum temperature during the hours the theatre is closed. This is supplemented during operating hours by a blower, which drives the air, after passing over the heating units, through ducts in the attic space over the auditorium to the heat grilles in the ceiling. The return air is drawn out of the auditorium through mushrooms and is carried along in concrete ducts (one in each of the three sections of seats) under the floor to a vertical shaft rising to the fan room. At this point the air enters a chamber, where it is mixed with outside air drawn through louvres, whence it passes through the filters and heating units to the fan.

MAINTENANCE ON A BUSINESS BASIS

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

Is depreciation an operating factor or is it bookkeeping? Here, at last, is an analysis of the facts

SO MUCH has been written and set forth about the ills of the motion picture industry that one is rather hesitant to suggest that there is possibly another phase which needs consideration. As a matter of fact, as the industry pulls out of the doldrums, it is important that the following particular points be carefully considered at this time.

Some of the most imperative needs of motion picture theatres now are results of mortgaging their unearned incomes, through failure to provide properly for the actual creation of depreciation reserves to cover worn-out equipment and buildings.

The method of depreciating equipment investment in the past, in 90% of the cases, has been purely a bookkeeping transaction, a mechanism for reducing the amount of income tax to be paid. As for actually setting up a depreciation reserve in "cash in the bank"—well, such reserves don't exist. The net result is that the industry is on the up-swing of the business cycle with deteriorated buildings and equipment and not enough money to make necessary repairs, much less provide renewals. But the motto of good troupers is, "The show must go on," and so managers all over the country are making the best of rundown buildings and old, obsolete or worn-out equipment.

Gentlemen! The thearte is the industry's contact with its consumer market—the public. Is this showmanship? Is this good business policy? Is this good reason to expect the return of the S.R.O. signs?

Of course it is not. This condition results directly from submerging depreciation reserves with other reserves or accounts, or because depreciation deductions are considered as purely a bookkeeping formality. As equipment does wear out and does become obsolete, it has got to be replaced at some period in the life of every theatre, regardless of who owns or operates it. As this account must ultimately be paid out, it is a lien against present, or if you please, future income; hence the reference to it as a mortgage.

We will return a little later to a more detailed discussion of depreciation and pass on to the next phase of mortgaging the future income of a theatre. The theatre operator, being without ready cash, is confronted with declining box office grosses. Patrons will go to the competitor's theatre which has been remodeled and dressed up. The owner decides that to stay in business he must do something, and the only courses open are, first, loans from his bank (try and get one); second, a government loan (try and stretch $2,000 over a theatre's needs); third, complete refinancing or bringing in a partner (both difficult); fourth, time or extended payments for equipment; and fifth, order with impunity, pay the bills when he can, and be dunned every waking hour by creditors. The final solution is usually some combination of any or all of these methods. Every one of these methods is in some manner obligating the future income of the theatre.

The most noteworthy manner of hypothecating the financial future of the theatre is by expansion before it is time to acquire additional properties. Perhaps it is because the entire industry is speculative, from the very conception of the idea for a picture right through till it is stored away, that theatre owners are always willing to take chances. Whatever the cause may be, I know of but one major company whose policy of expansion has been soundly conceived and ably executed. From recent announcements it seems possible that this company may have forgotten the underlying cause of its outstanding success of the past. Too rapid expansion, or over-expansion, represents great obligations, as the bills must be paid in order that the income of every theatre in the group be pledged, directly or through inter-company loans, to meet the extra demands for money.

While all this may sound like "crying over spilt milk," it is not so intended, nor is this intended to be a post-mortem to determine the causes of the depression in the theatre business. It is well known that there have been few and small profits, and even having a theatre in the black before charge-offs, has been something to boast of. With the business of exhibiting pictures definitely on the upgrade, this is an emphatic reminder to prepare for a new future in an improved way.

DISTRIBUTION OF EARNINGS

LET US ASSUME in sheer optimism, that profits from picture exhibition are returning in substantial proportion. What are the considerations to be taken into account in distributing the earnings?

First, provide for adequate maintenance.

Second, provide for depreciation reserves.

Third, provide for contingencies.

Fourth, provide sinking fund for the retirement of preferred obligations.

Fifth, pay reasonable dividends.

Sixth, the remainder is available for reinvestment in the business.

It seems almost unnecessary to say much about "adequate maintenance" with reference to theatres. Most any theatre manager will agree that this is important. Frequently theatre operators intentionally attempt to "milk" the theatre or group of theatres, and purposely exploit the resources of the building and equipment to the point of collapse. And sometimes under-maintenance is the policy of the "smart" operator, generally working for someone else and with someone else's money, who wishes to represent net earnings as being higher than they actually are. The reverse of this—over-maintenance—is practically extinct in the theatre business, having died a natural death with the passing of 1926, '27, '28 and '29.

DEPRECIATION RESERVE

Providing for depreciation reserves is, in the final analysis, a bit complicated because there are several points of view that may be taken. The depreciation may with propriety be considered an operating expense and so distributed, to be a weekly charge on the records of the theatre, adjusted from year to year, or more frequently if found desirable. Sometimes depreciation is considered as a deduction from income before dividends are paid. Some hold that dividends should be paid first and deductions for depreciation follow.

Many times the deductions for depreciation change from year to year regardless of the capital equipment account. In good years large deductions are made, and in poor years smaller amounts are set aside. Some companies carefully estimate the life of the particular item of equipment and set aside a fixed percentage each year, while others arrange a sliding scale downward of the annual depreciation charge-off. By this method as much as 50% might be charged off the first year that the equipment is in operation.

Finally, and perhaps the most short-sighted policy, is failure to recognize depreciation write-off, acting on the assumption that the equipment is always kept in first-class shape.

DEPRECIATION IN ITS ACTION

IRRESPECTIVE OF ordinary repairs and upkeep, depreciation is inevitable, beginning the day the equipment is installed or turned over, and continuing at an increasing rate. Depreciation results from wear and tear, from obsolescence, and through inadequacy. For instance, no matter how carefully they are repaired or maintained, there is a time when the economic life of the finest pair of lamphouses is at an end. At any moment there may be a new development in lamphouses which will make obsolete those now in use. Again, how frequently have we experienced the necessity of changing a perfectly good pair of low-intensity lamps for a new pair of hi-low lamps, because of the inadequacy of the smaller type to give the necessary brilliance to the picture? This emphasizes the point that maintenance and depreciation are two different considerations, one does not completely offset the other.

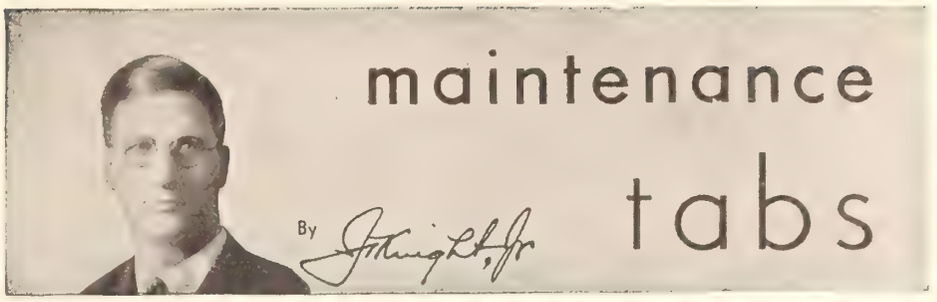
This last point is important for there is probably no other industry that is so continually flooded with new and improved ideas in equipment as the motion picture industry. Our industry involves so many arts and sciences, and has the reputation of earning such large sums, that despite the rather limited market it presents it still offers many inducements to scientists, engineers, manufacturers and artists. Depreciation is an inescapable fact.



In addition to the foregoing, there are frequently accidents or contingencies which from time to time overtake theatres and which lead to unusual and wholly unexpected deterioration of equipment and buildings.

In recent years the federal income tax laws have operated to call attention to depreciations wherever profits have been made. Corporations are allowed to deduct from the gross income and before paying taxes, a reasonable allowance for wear and tear and obsolescence. This, of course, permits a reduction in the amount upon which the income tax is paid. Unfortunately financial pressure has been so great that little or none of these deductions have found their way into a depreciation reserve fund.

A discussion of the third, fourth and fifth considerations for the distribution of earnings are unnecessary in this article as we are only searching for those items which are of the most importance and interest to the theatre manager—the jeopardizing of the present or future income capacity.

EXPANSION

The sixth and last consideration—the remainder available for re-investment in the business—is the portion of the earnings which may and should be used for expansion or the acquisition of additional theatres. If expansion should follow after this practice, it would be conservative, it is true, but it should be very healthy. There is one type of expansion problem which seems to be a constant threat to every theatre owner. It might be called "protective" expansion, where one theatre operator has to go into a certain location in order to keep out a competitor and thereby protect a going theatre. This type of expansion to some extent exists in most every industry, and is for the purpose of spreading out the market. However, in the picture business, too often such moves are directed toward another exhibitor rather than to develop a new market. It takes the power of money to come out on top in such arguments, and such necessary sums cannot be considered in discussing theatre accounts.

WASHED AIR COOLING (answering C. P.): In planning a washed air cooling system you will find 25,000 cubic feet of air per minute ample for your theatre. This quantity would result in a complete air change every minute and fifty-one seconds; it also indicates that every seat would be supplied with 55 cubic feet of air per minute. As you state the fans were installed "a good many years ago," I am quite convinced that they would not serve your purpose in the new plan. One new fan would be necessary. Apparently there is ground behind the theatre available or you would not have dug the well. I suggest that new equipment be installed in the rear of the theatre, near the well or up against the rear wall of the theatre, and that the air be delivered through grilles on either side of the screen. The lowest point of the grille should not be less than about 13 feet from the floor, but your ceiling height, being only 16 feet, makes it necessary to drop the grilles possibly to within 11 feet of the floor. If the well gives sufficient water at a temperature of 60 degrees F. or below, you should get unusually good results.

You have a wrong conception of the cooling tower described in the May 4th issue. It is designed to cool water which has been used in the condensers of refrigerating plants and has no place in the design of an evaporative cooling system such as you are planning. I assume you are interested in the cost of a plant as described. The following might be called only an intelligent guess:

A sheet metal house in the rear of the theatre to install the equipment in, will probably cost $245; duct work should cost about $400 (this includes insulation); fan, air washer, grilles and louvers, pumps, etc., should cost about $1,500; and installation will cost about $400. This makes a total of $2,545. You will receive bids for this job possibly as high as $4,000 and plenty of arguments as to why such a price is justifiable, but anything more than 5 to 6 dollars per seat is entirely too much money for evaporative cooling. (See Maintenance Tabs in issues of August 25, 1934, and January 12, 1935.)

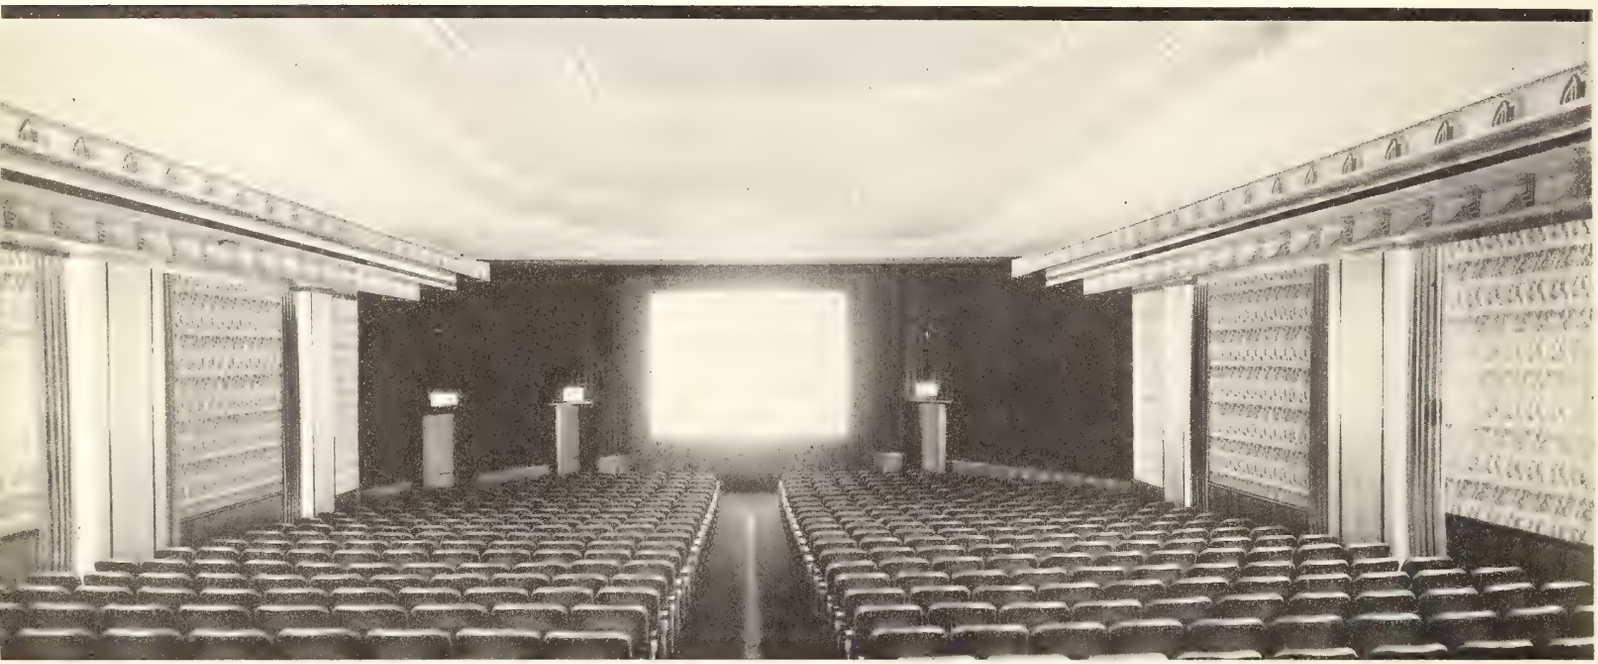
HEATING TERMS: Some of the most useful definitions and data are:

Degree-Day—A unit, based upon temperature difference and time, used in specifying the nominal heating load in winter. Very useful in comparing the cost of heating during one winter as against a previous winter. For any one day there exist as many degree-days as there are degrees Fahrenheit difference in temperature between the average outside air temperature, taken over a 24-hour period, and a temperature of 65 degrees F.

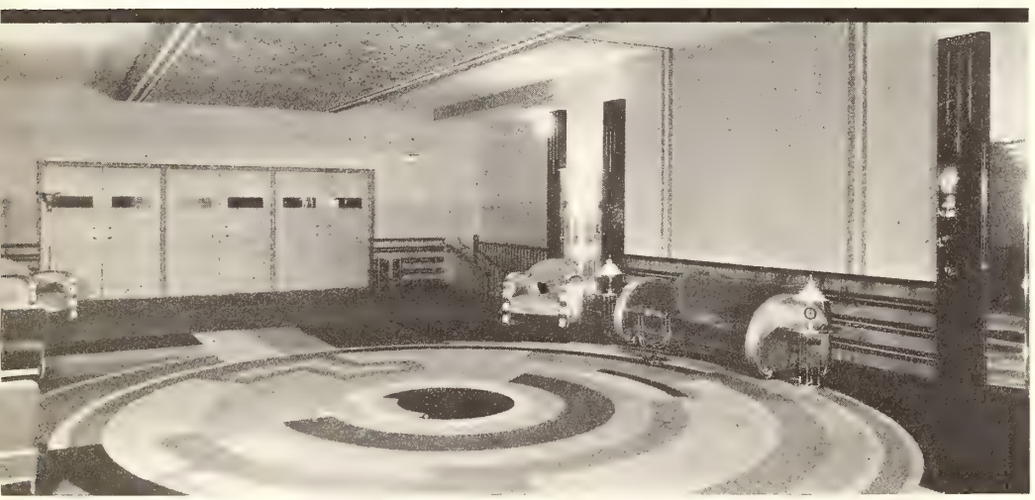
Boiler Horse-Power—One boiler horse-power is equivalent to 33471.9 B. T. U. per hour. This is the evaporation of 34.5 pounds of water at 212 degrees F. per hour to steam at 212 degrees F.

British Thermal Unit (B. T. U.)—Is substantially equal to the quantity of heat required to raise one pound of water from 65 degrees to 64 degrees F. One B. T. U. is equal to 777.5 foot-pounds of work (this is known as the mechanical or work-equivalent of the B. T. U.) One B. T. U. is equal to 0.293 watt-hours (the electrical equivalent of the B. T. U.). One B. T. U. is equal to 252.02 calories (the calorific equivalent of the B. T. U.); also, 56.92 B. T. U. per minute is equal to one kilowatt, and 3415.2 B. T. U. is equal to one kilowatt hour (Kw. hr.).



All of the above definitions may seem somewhat technical and perhaps out of place here. But next fall I want to present an article on heating, and everyone interested should be familiar with the usual heating terms.

PURCHASE OF EQUIPMENT



THERE IS one more result of failure to have cash on hand for adequate repairs, renewals and major replacements. The market for second-hand equipment and furnishings has a destructive effect on the manufacturers and distributors of new equipment. The theatre operator, pressed by the necessity of making some improvements by replacements, but without ready money, turns to the second-hand market for relief. No general condemnation is made here of the use of second-hand equipment. However, by using second-hand equip-

A SMALL THEATRE DESIGN IN A TRANS-LUX HOUSE

Corner of cosmetic room.

WHILE FOLLOWING in general the plan and principles of design much earlier adopted by the Trans-Lux Movies Corporation for its short subjects theatres, the latest Trans-Lux theatre represents certain modifications of previous schemes. The theatre is part of a commercial building 48x116 feet fronting on Flatbush Avenue in Brooklyn, N. Y., built under a general contract for the Brooklyn Assets Corporation. Thomas W. Lamb was the architect.

The total seating capacity is 551, arranged in 27 rows on a single floor. Chairs (by the Ideal Seating Company) are modernistic design and leather-covered.

Rear projection is employed, as in all Trans-Lux houses. The projection room is 24 feet wide and 8 feet deep. Equipment consists in two Simplex projectors and RCA sound system. The maximum screen size possible is 11 feet, 8 inches by 16 feet. Distance from the first row to the screen is 15 feet.

The theatre is entirely air-conditioned through a plenum system, with mechanical refrigeration and hot air heating. The fuel is coal, and is fed by an automatic stoker.

The facade and entrance area are of stone and Carrara glass, with aluminum trim. In addition to the marquee and vertical sign illumination, floods provide further exterior lighting. Between the entrance area (where the patron passes through a turnstile) and the auditorium is a spacious foyer designed to function also as a general lounge. Treatment is modern, with plaster walls having silk hangings, and deep-pile carpeting. Lighting fixtures are of etched glass.

The auditorium is lighted from a single light trough at the rear. Wall treatment consists in walnut wainscot, satinwood pilasters and heavy silk drapes in rust and gold. The ceiling is tinted a blue-green and pointed with gold leaf. Auditorium acoustical treatment consists in acoustical plaster at walls and ceiling, which is augmented by the carpeting and the fabrics on the wall.

A men's smoking room and a women's cosmetic room, with adjoining toilet facilities, are located on the basement level.

LAW APPLYING TO EQUIPMENT BUYING

By LEO T. PARKER

A selection of recent litigations involving legal rights of parties to contracts for the purchase of goods

TOO MANY law suits involving theatre owners result from disagreements and misunderstanding of contracts for the purchase of theatre equipment and supplies, because it must be admitted that one who has elementary legal knowledge may avoid most litigations involving contracts of this nature.

This is true since one who knows that an adverse verdict is inevitable, will not start suit, whereas if it appears that a favorable verdict is logically certain, then the other party to the controversy may be induced to agree to a reasonable compromise, particularly if his attention is directed to recent higher court decisions involving the same or similar points of the law and which clearly determine the legal status of the parties.

In other words, when two persons enter the courts to settle a dispute, it is almost certain that both think themselves justified, and each anticipates a favorable verdict. Obviously, one of the litigants is doomed to disappointment, and incidentally he must suffer considerable expense, and in addition both parties waste valuable time and effort during the prolongation of the controversy.

For these reasons it is advisable, and practical, for theatre owners and managers to keep a record of the higher court cases referred to from time to time in these pages of BETTER THEATRES. By this simple method may be saved a great deal of expense, time and effort that would otherwise be wasted in unwise legal suits.

FORFEITURE OF DOWN PAYMENT

PAYMENT BY a theatre owner of part of the purchase price or consideration applying to theatre equipment, with the provision that it shall be retained by the seller to whom it is paid, on default of the theatre owner to complete the contract, is ordinarily regarded as a liquidation of damages. Moreover, this down payment can not be utilized to reduce the amount owed on the contract by the theatre owner for monthly or weekly payments which he promised in the contract to pay, but failed to pay.

CASE

For example, in Electrical Research Products, Inc., v Haniotis Brothers, Okmulgee, Okla. (39 Pacific [2d] 36), it was disclosed that a theatre owner named Haniotis contracted for the installation and use of Western Electric sound reproducing equipment in his theatre. Under the terms of the contract, however, as an installation charge, the theatre owner agreed to pay an initial sum of $3,250, with $1,300 of this amount to be paid upon acceptance of the agreement, and $1,950 on completion of the installation of the equipment. In further payments Haniotis agreed to pay $104 each week. In addition thereto the contract provided for payments of $43.75 per week for the first 26 weeks, then $37.50 for 26 weeks, and $30 per week for the balance of the term of 10 years, which weekly payments of $43.75, $37.50 and $30 per week, respectively, were for service inspection charges. The equipment was installed, and was used by Haniotis from August 14 to December 24, when Haniotis ceased to operate the theatre and assigned his interest therein, including the contract, to the Okmulgee Theatre Company.

The seller of the equipment was notified of the assignment, and the theatre company notified the seller that it would not assume the contract between the seller and Haniotis unless the seller agreed to a modification of the contract. Negotiations were entered into relative to the modification of the contract, but no agreement was ever reached. In other words, Haniotis still was responsible on his original contract with the seller by which he agreed to pay $104 per week plus the service charges.

The theatre company, at the time it purchased the theatre, agreed in writing with Haniotis to assume the lease or contract which had been entered into between the seller and Haniotis covering the Western Electric equipment. The theatre company took possession of the leased theatre premises and used the sound equipment from December 24 to February 14. During the time the theatre company was in possession of the theatre, using the equipment, no payments were made to the seller under the contract.

The seller filed suit to take possession of the equipment and to recover damages or payment for use of the equipment from Haniotis on December 24 (the date Haniotis assigned the lease to the theatre company) to February 14 (the date the seller filed suit to recover possession of the equipment).

DECISION

The higher court held that the down payment made by Haniotis must be forfeited as it was simply a guarantee that he would complete the contract, and that he must pay the seller the agreed rental amounting to $104 plus $43.75 per week from the time he stopped the payments on December 24 to February 14. This court said:

"The transaction is to be classified as a bailment for hire. Where the bailor (seller) resumes possession of the hired chattel before the end of the agreed period, the bailee (theatre owner) is liable only pro tanto for payment of the hire; but he may agree to terms that will compel him to continue payment under any circumstances. Broadly speaking, it seems to us that the case presents a situation where the defendants (original owner) have by valid terms made themselves liable for the entire rental provided in the contract. . . . A payment by a theatre owner to be in part payment of the purchase price or consideration of theatre equipment, with the provision that it shall be retained by the seller, to whom it is paid, on default of the theatre owner to complete the contract, is ordinarily regarded as a liquidation of damages."

In accordance with the holding of this recent higher court decision (reported in February 1935) it is quite apparent that when a theatre owner makes a down payment, in purchasing equipment, he will not be credited with this amount on overdue rentals or service charges which he failed to pay. And this is true even when he sells the theatre to another.

Therefore it is well to know that when selling a theatre, the seller may relieve himself from future liability on contracts of this or other nature only by entering into a separate agreement with the seller of the equipment, by the terms of which the latter relieves the original theatre owner and agrees to hold the purchaser of the theatre solely liable on the contract.

REFUSAL TO ACCEPT GOODS

A THEATRE OWNER is under no obligations to accept and pay for merchandise if he can prove that before he signed the contract he informed the seller of the intended uses or purposes to which he intended to put the goods, and that the delivered merchandise is incapable of producing satisfactory results;

LOW-COST SMALL TOWN REMODELING

AFTER REMODELING

[The modernization of an "opry house" of the vintage of 1890 into a motion picture theatre adapted to a cultured community of 1935, is bound to be of special interest. Hamilton, N. Y., moreover, has a regular population of only 1,700. The architect for the remodeling was Peter M. Hulsken, conductor of the "Planning the Theatre" department in BETTER THEATRES. He has prepared the following brief description.—THE EDITOR.]

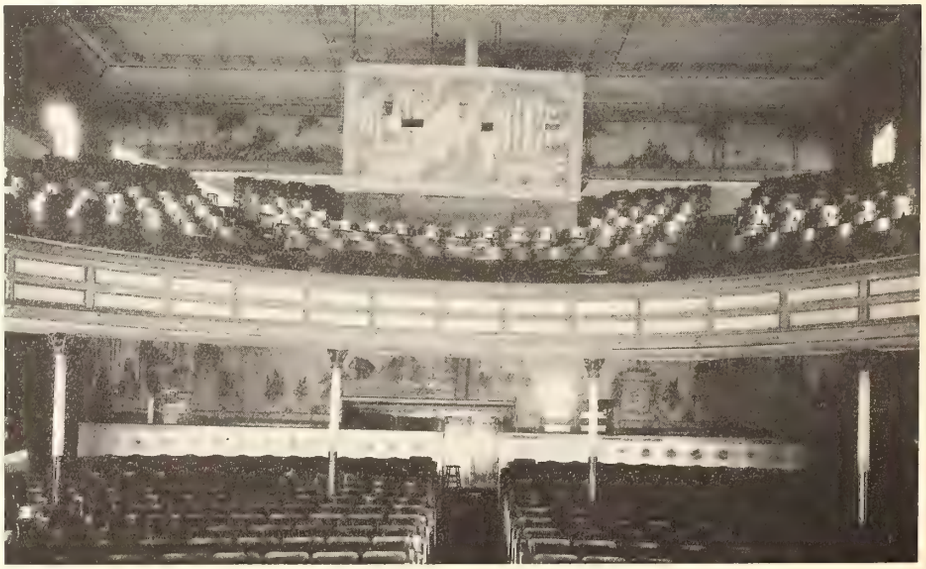
THE SHELDON Opera House in Hamilton, N. Y., was built in 1890. Toward the end of last year the Schine circuit purchased it with the intention of remodeling it and adding it to its group of motion picture theatres in New York State. The old Sheldon was certainly an antique affair. It had a large stage, two tiers of ornate boxes and a steep balcony, to say nothing of pillars and a mass of old-fashioned decorations.

The problem was to transform the auditorium into a modern theatre with good technical conditions, acoustical and otherwise, and of course at the lowest cost possible. Hamilton itself has a population of only 1,700, augmented by 1,000 students and 200 professors of Colgate University, which is located in that city. There are also several small towns within a radius of six miles. It was decided to provide for a seating capacity of 717, with 543 seats on the lower floor, and 174 seats in a balcony.

The remodeling, in its major aspects, consisted of removing the gridiron, reducing the size of the stage, lowering the ceiling, construction of a new balcony and a new fireproof projection room, the installation of a new heating, cooling and ventilating plant, new plumbing, toilets and new electric wiring. Inexpensive materials, which would require the least amount of maintenance and still provide for proper acoustical qualities, were imperative.

For the new ceiling a sound-absorbing tile and board were selected. By the use of different patterns in application, and the liberal use of a V-groove cutting plane, and by covering the joints with foil-covered strips, satisfactory results have been obtained. These materials are in their natural colors, and no paint is used on the ceiling.

The walls were furred out and walnut-grained sheet-rock was used for the wall surfaces. All blocks are in standard sizes, no piece has been cut. To prevent waste of material, the joints were covered with white metal strips. The only plastering required in the auditorium was at the soffit of the balcony and the front and side walls of the projection room. This was done in a colored acoustic plaster. The only painting required was on the plaster wainscoting along the side walls and the natural wood trim around the wall panels.



The foyer and lobby were redecorated. The wall treatment was carried out in five horizontal bands, starting at the baseboard with the darkest tone, and each following band two shades lighter. The jointing is done in 1-inch silver stripes. The foyer is done in a tangerine shade with blue ceiling, and the lobby in a pea green.

The electric light fixtures in the auditorium are of the bracket type 5 feet high. Each is provided with 20 lamps of five different colors, with the white house light on top. Outside of four recessed light fixtures under the balcony no other fixtures are used. The foyer and lobby are lighted with trough type fixtures at the ceiling.

The outside lobby has a tile floor; inside lobby and foyer are carpeted.

The result of this remodeling was the transformation of an old obsolete opera house into a modern motion picture theatre. The name has been changed to the State. The entire cost of this remodeling, exclusive of equipment and fees, was $16,000.

RICHARDSON'S New

BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A PRACTICAL GUIDE TO GOOD OPERATING AND QUICK TROUBLE-SHOOTING

A new Blue Book by Richardson is always an event of signal importance to the motion picture industry. It is being issued at this time to meet the truly urgent demand of thousands of users of the old Blue Books for an accurate, modern evaluation of the changes and refinements in the art and science of sound reproduction and projection including all the apparatus. Richardson's expert knowledge of the craft he has taught and followed for more than three decades makes this latest treatise, in the opinion of leading authorities, the most comprehensive, most useful projection manual ever published.

700 Pages of Text, Charts and Data

The new Blue Book contains nearly 700 pages and 153 illustrations—photographs and schematics of every description. It is 6x9 in size with large readable type for easy visibility in the projection room under all conditions. It is entirely original from cover to cover, not a line of type from any of the many previous editions being used. Its low price of $5 and its handiness in one volume are among the many innovations.

Author Will Autograph First 200 Copies

Because of the wide demand from projectionists and theatre managers for autographed copies of the new BLUE BOOK, Mr. Richardson has consented to autograph 200 books to go to the first 200 buyers. The prompt return of the coupon will reward you with one of these highly prized autographed copies.

1 IN ONE HANDY VOLUME

The new Bluebook is complete in one handy volume. It is a great improvement over the former expensive and cumbersome three-volume sets.

2 COMPLETE and UP-TO-DATE

The new Bluebook does a three-fold job: (1) it gives a detailed description of the construction, wiring and functioning of every piece of sound and projection apparatus used in a modern projection room. (2) It gives all the instructions for the operation and maintenance of this equipment and (3) it contains a complete trouble-shooting department as a first-aid in breakdowns.

3 QUICK-FINDING INDEX

An extremely simple but comprehensive indexing system makes the new Blue Book a truly great aid to working projectionists. Whatever problem comes up in the day's routine is covered on the instant with hardly more than the twirl of your thumb. Projectionists of long experience in the projection room will be first to appreciate this remarkable time-saver.

4 QUICK TROUBLE-SHOOTER

And it is, within its 700 pages, a practical trouble-shooter, which alone entitles it to a place in every projectionists tool kit.

THE ROXY: A TRIUMPH OF THE SCREEN

A promise—on a carbarn—and the realization. The sketch at extreme right is an architect's rendering of the Roxy auditorium.

THE ROXY theatre was formally opened the night of March 11, 1927, with every one of its 6,000 seats occupied, many of them magnificently, for the high-and-mighties of the metropolis were there. In at least one instance, according to reports of the time, a hundred dollars had been offered for a pair of tickets, to no avail. And this theatre was essentially an establishment of the motion picture!

Never had artist engineer and showman united quite so unrestrainedly to glorify the once-lowly film-play. A theatre huge beyond precedence, utterly wanton in elegance, disclosed at last with all the pomp and ceremony of a royal jubilee! Surely no form of entertainment could deserve more than this, ever.

Though it was opened in March the Roxy theatre celebrates the anniversary of that event in May, with a special program, a gigantic birthday cake, gifts for patrons. And where once presided S. L. Rothafel, the "Roxy" of whose expanding dreams this theatre had seemed the ultimate, Mr. Howard S. Cullman is now the official host. Eight years have passed since that night in 1927.

Not a long time, eight years. But eight years can close one epoch and inaugurate another. These included the hysteria of 1929, the frenzy of 1930, subsequent years of revision in most methods and in many, many minds. In glancing back upon the establishment of the Roxy theatre we cover a single, swift period of change.

Today one may see how the Roxy came as the culmination of those prodigious efforts, beginning along about 1914, to create a new type of theatre with the film contributing a co-equal or even the chief interest to the program. Certain ambitious spectacles had broadened the appeal of the screen while measuring, at the same time, the latent powers of its medium. Samuel Lionel Rothafel was among those who early saw the possibilities. Then when David Wark Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" confirmed their vision, many more than they were persuaded that the motion picture but needed theatres that were worthy of it. The "palaces" wrought by the architect from these aspirations ended definitely the film's identification with "nickelodeons."

And the greatest of these palaces on that gala night in 1927, was the Roxy.

Nearly 6,000 seats—even more, it was said. Not one organ, but three giant instruments especially designed and fabricated by Kimball according to a complex scheme unifying a vast assembly of sounds. A radio broadcasting studio. Baths. An emergency hospital!

Equipment was of course not merely complete—it covered facilities never before specified for a theatre of any kind. Much of it represented engineering here achieved for the first time. And the unprecedented array of functions thus represented was provided for in a structure as architecturally gorgeous as it was vast.

design of new dimensions. The style is one of lavish ornamentation in patterns derived chiefly from the early Spanish plateresque period, and partly from the Italian Renaissance. Decoration is almost entirely in relief. Representing the creative labors of eight sculptors, who were assisted by scores of artisans, the interior is extravagantly laden with scrolls, allegorical panels, friezes medallions, columns, niches, architraves—seemingly every architectural device that lends itself to the embellishment dictated by the style.

Furnishings, naturally, were in scale. For example, the foyer rug. It is an oval Chenille woven—especially, of course—by the Mohawk Carpet Mills to fit a recessed space 58 feet long and 41 feet wide. Its life was estimated to be two years. It is still in service, though millions of patrons have trod it in good weather and bad.

Yet a symbol of the prestige won by the motion picture since its nickelodeon days, the Roxy measures its greatness today in other terms—terms, be it said, that represent the newer and doubtless larger mission of the cinema. The operating policy is still generous, programs continue to feature a stage offering. But the stage entertainment is intimate, rather than spectacular, with more dependence placed upon the screen. Feature pictures available to the Roxy today are not the most prominent, but are chosen for their family appeal—and this in the Times Square district of New York! Success supplies, if not the explanation, at least justification. When Mr. Cullman took charge the weekly gross was about $10,000 a week. During the past year the weekly gross has averaged $30,000. The top admission price is now 55c.

Facilities are approximately the same as they were, so far as the physical resources of the house are concerned. A change has been made by Mr. Cullman at the stage, however. An addition has been built so as to bring the performance closer to the audience. Special microphones have been intalled to take the performer's voice intimately to the farthest reaches of the vast auditorium.

The changes that have come really emphasize the historical permanence of this immense playhouse. It is enduring brilliantly, though change came upon it, quite vitally, soon after it was opened. Herbert Lubin headed the original proprietors. William Fox quickly followed. Now Mr. Cullman's trusteeship, with a reorganization currently underway. The manging director today is Irving Lesser. Other department heads are:

Morris Kinzler, director of advertising, publicity and exploitation; A. D. Shurtleff, treasurer and comptroller; Marion Sanders, personal representative of trustee; Fanchon & Marco, in charge of stage production; Edward J. Burke, house manager; John Hammel, chief of service; J. W. Anderson, chief of maintenance; Frank Ruddock, chief projectionist; John Richards, chief of sound; Frank Schmieder, chief electrician; William Brown, chief carpenter; Robert Anstett, chief property man.

OPERATION OF THE SUPREX ARC LAMP

By HARRY RUBIN

The second article in a series on Suprex projection illumination and developments associated with it in practice

PROJECTION LAMPS for burning Suprex carbons differ materially from other common types. While the arc is of high intensity, due to the nature of the carbon, yet the lamp is a combination of low-intensity and hi-lo lamp principles.

The carbons are burned in a horizontal plane as in low-intensity. A reflector is used without condenser, as is common to both low and hi-lo lamps. The similarity to the hi-lo is in the carbon feed mechanism, which allows the feeding of the positive carbon at a faster rate than the negative. However, the positive carbon is rotated in the hi-lo lamp, whereas Suprex operation does not require rotation of this carbon.

Most of the lamps now on the market have separate feed screws linked together so that the speed of feed of the positive carbon can be regulated independently of the negative sped. This is a feature most desirable because, as has been explained in the preceding article, the ratio between the burning time of the positive carbon with respect to the negative carbon, varies directly in proportion to the current consumed in the arc. If a single feed screw is used to feed both the positive and negative carbons, the threads of the said screw must be cut with a definite feed ratio, which ratio must be pre-determined by the lamp manufacturer, and such a pre-determined ratio means that an arc current of only one value in amperage can be used if the crater is to be kept anywhere near the correct distance from the mirror and thus maintain proper focal distances.

It is not the writer's intention to describe any particular make of lamp, but to point out what in his opinion is most desirable, technically, from the standpoint of operating results and minimum attention.

The Suprex arc requires that the crater be kept or maintained in a definite position with respect to the mirror. The light intensity changes materially with slight changes in the distance between crater and reflector. The ideal lamp would be one in which the crater to reflector distance could be maintained exactly throughout the burning of a complete positive carbon, without having to make a single adjustment of any of the lamp controls. Perhaps this is too high an ideal from the viewpoint of a manufacturer, but from the viewpoint of the practical projectionist, it is the feature most desired. The nearer any lamp comes to meeting this ideal condition, the more desirable is that lamp.

As explained in my previous article, the negative carbon is consumed at approximately the same rate when burning the minimum ampere rating of the carbon as when burning the maximum. The positive carbon, however, is consumed at an ever increasing rate as the arc current is increased. Thus the two feed screws, even though they are independent of each other, are not completely divorced, as through the driving mechanism the negative screw is driven by the positive screw. It can therefore be seen that as the positive screw is speeded up or its speed retarded, the negative screw is speeded up or retarded in proportion.

I believe that the ideal would be to have the negative carbon driven at a substantially constant speed, which, of course, could be adjusted to the desired rate of speed; and the positive driven at a speed which would automatically vary with slight changes in the arc current, with an adjustment, of course, to vary the speed of the positive to suit the average current consumed at the arc. Such a lamp would probably require separate motors for the two carbon feeds.

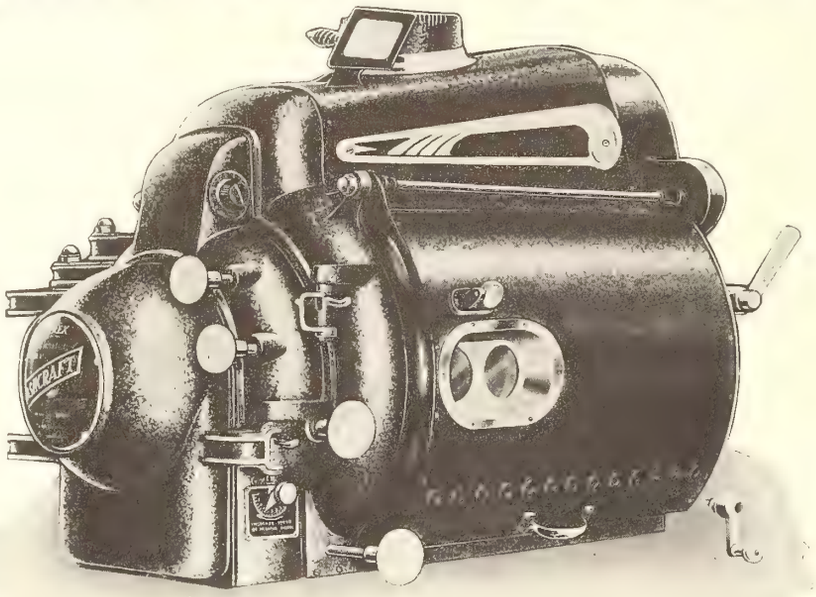
MAGNETIC FLUX

The arc is greatly affected by a magnetic field, which field may be obtained by the use of a permanent magnet or an electromagnet positioned properly with respect to the arc. Without the use of a magnet the tail flame of the arc surrounds the positive crater in an almost uniform layer. The arc in such a condition lacks stability, and slight disturbances, such as a change in the alignment of the carbons, will cause the crater to burn off on one side and produce a noticeable change in the light intensity.

By introducing the proper magnetic field in the vicinity of the arc, the magnetic flux below the arc is increased, and the flux above the arc is decreased. This drives the tail flame upward and assures greater stability to the position of the arc stream and the form of the crater.

In the lamp employing this magnetic field it is important that the axis of the negative carbon be slightly below that of the positive to compensate for the angular direction of the arc stream. It is of course imperative that the magnetic field be of the right direction. Therefore if the magnet is removed from the lamp to make repairs, be sure, when it is replaced, that its polarity is correct.

The effect of the magnet is to steady the screen illumination, and its effectiveness can be readily observed.



VENTILATION

The Suprex arc is also affected greatly by draft. Too much ventilation or draft within the lamp will cause the tail flame to become distorted and cause considerable variation in screen illumination even to the extent of causing the light on the screen to flicker. The draft should be sufficient to clear the lamp of spent gases, but should not be severe enough to affect the arc and tail flame.

REFLECTOR SIZE

Much has been said and claimed with respect to greatly increased illumination obtained from increased size of reflector, but I do not believe that tests bear these statements out. It is true that a larger reflector having greater curvature makes a difference in the distance from the crater to the reflector and from the reflector to the aperture, but the screen illumination is not greatly increased over that obtained from a smaller reflector, within certain limits. The greatest change in light intensity is obtained by increasing the arc current, and it will be found that with identical arc currents that changes of reflector size from 10 to 14 inches will make little if any change in the light intensity, provided, of course, that each size of reflector tested is placed in proper focus with respect to the crater and aperture.

PITTING

The suprex arc causes considerable pitting upon the surface of the reflector, caused, I believe, from Cerium, one of the products composing the core of the positive carbon. This pitting is continuous so long as the arc is burning, and perhaps is somewhat minimized by a reflector design which will permit of the greatest possible distance between the reflector surface and the crater.

A device which will save a reflector and prolong its useful life is a shield curved to fit over the face of the reflector.

SOOT

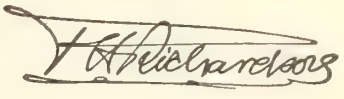
When the Suprex arc is struck, or when the arc is operated too close together, a black or gray soot is liberated from the carbon. Therefore when striking the arc, the carbon should be separated as quickly as possible, and the lamp should be provided with a protective shield which covers the top half of the reflector during the time the arc is struck and moves away from the reflector when the dowser is raised. This reflector protector serves to minimize reflector fogging.

A good arc viewing device should be part of the lamp and should give a clear and distinct view of the arc on the image card, so that the projectionist can easily note whether the crater is in proper position.

CARBON HOLDERS

The carbon holders in the lamp should be of the floating or self-aligning type, and the negative aligning fork should be adjustable up and down in order to set the axis of that carbon slightly below the axis of the positive carbon, as required by the magnetic flux before mentioned.

The lamp should be designed so that the positive carbon holder can clamp a full-length 12-inch positive carbon at its extreme end, thus obviating the necessity of retrimming except after the positive carbon is ready to discard.



The measurement of the light intensity by ordinary methods employing a photometer is very misleading in measuring the light from a Suprex arc, unless proper filters are used and account taken of the color of the light. The Suprex light is very white, and while taking ordinary readings with the photometer without filters, it may be noted that the readings obtained with the Suprex light, as against a low-intensity light, may not show as great a difference as might be expected, but with filters and color comparison taken into account it will be found that a very marked difference exists between the two sources of light.

In the next article sources of power for the arc, and the effect of the current from various supply devices or sources upon the arc, will be given.

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

GOOD EYESIGHT A NECESSITY IN PROJECTION

OF LATE I have had occasion to reflect on how important it is that every projectionist have normal eyesight, or be equipped with eyeglasses that will correct his defects in vision. Periodic examinations should be required, as vision not infrequently changes materially in a relatively short space of time.

It is very evident that projectionists must be able to see the screen image as it actually is, not as it seems to defective eyes. Fortunately all ordinary defects in eyesight may be discovered, analyzed and corrected by any competent oculist, inexpensively. However, it is very often the case that people have defects in vision without being aware of the fact. Usually such defects have come on very gradually. They may be small and of little account in ordinary walks of life. When, however, they are present in the eyes of one who must, under rather difficult conditions at best, judge of the sharpness of definition of a screen image that will be viewed for a considerable space of time by hundreds, or perhaps by thousands, of people, the matter assumes real importance.

I recall an instance that occurred during one of my trips some while ago. Visiting a theatre, I remained through an entire show, observing that the screen image definition was decidedly poor. It was the same through the newsreel, a scenic, a cartoon and the feature. It therefore obviously was not due to fault in the films.

Visiting the projection room I talked with the projectionist as he prepared for the next show. He was quite indignant when I spoke of the poor definition, declaring it to be sharp. An examination of the projector optical trains showed the lenses to be of the best and thoroughly clean throughout. When the show started I sharpened the focus, whereupon the good brother was much disturbed, finally blurting out: "There's something wrong, Mr. Richardson. You have yourself spoiled the focus. Are you kidding me?"

With his consent I called the manager, had him examine the picture as I had set the definition, and watch closely while the projectionist "sharpened" the focus according to his idea. "Why, Sam," said the manager when the thing was done, "what's wrong with your eyes. That's much worse than it was. I've noticed for quite a while the picture did not seem as sharp as it used to be. You had better have your eyes examined and get a pair of glasses."

I left next morning and don't know what happened, but here very evidently was a case where a man's vision had altered for the worse rather fast, and he did not realize that fact. The point is, though, it might alter again, as may the vision of any man; therefore periodic examinations are necessary.

It would seem very reasonable, indeed, that the eyes of all projectionists should be examined by an oculist at not too infrequent intervals—say once a year. It would also seem perfectly reasonable that theatre managers should demand satisfactory evidence in the form of a certificate from an oculist of recognized standing that the vision of an applicant for position as projectionist is normal, the term "normal" to be construed as normal without eyeglasses or as corrected by the applicant's present glasses.

Projectionists can certainly have no objection to such a demand by theatre managers. It imposes no real hardship upon them. Remember, the average person does not himself know whether his vision is or is not normal without an examination.

Incidentally, in this connection, since there are all kinds of projection distances, I consulted a very competent oculist to make sure I was correct in my notion that eyeglasses serve perfectly at any distance. The answer was, "Eyeglasses have infinity of focus after the first 20 feet."

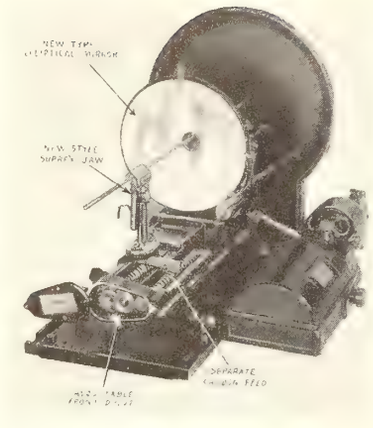
FIRST "MOVING PICTURE MACHINE"

FROM LONDON Conrad L. Egglestone writes, "As an owner and user of your most valuable 'Bluebook of Projection,' may I ask you a question? I have recently had an argument, the question being: When was the first moving picture machine made and used; also, what kind of a movement did it have? May I add that while you edited a department in one of our motion picture publications some while since I read your articles with great interest and benefit.



"Why did you stop? We have had nothing even one-third as good since. Our periodicals, while excellent in many ways, seem to fear to say anything favorable for the projectionist, or to do anything in his favor except tell him how to run his machines. We have one monthly magazine published by a projectionist organization (not a labor union), but it seems to be the same."

As I remember the matter I stopped writing for the English publication because they stopped my pay, and they did that because I insisted on telling theatre managers things they did not like to read.

As to the "first moving picture machine," I assume you mean the first motion picture projector. Terry Ramsaye tells us in his "A Million and One Nights" that the first experiment in persistence of vision, upon which the illusion of motion in pictures rests, was conducted in 1824, employing a card upon one side of which was drawn a bird, and on the other a cage. When the card was twirled the bird seemed to be confined in the cage.

Michael Faraday later carried on a long series of experiments, says Ramsaye, and he, together with Dr. Joseph Ferdinand Plateau and Dr. Simon Ritter von Stamp-fer, simultaneously discovered or contrived precisely the same device for viewing hand-drawn pictures in such manner that motion was simulated. These pictures were mounted in sequence on the rim of a disc. They were viewed through corresponding slits in a parallel disc. "This," says Ramsaye, "was the first motion picture machine."

However, just who it was who first succeeded in actually projecting a life-sized screen image, no one knows or probably ever will know. There are conflicting claims, none of which can be either proved or disproved. It probably was first done publicly in New York City by Woodville Latham in the spring of 1895, though only in very imperfect form. Later in the same year (June) Thomas Armat succeeded in applying the intermittent movement and rotating shutter to projection, and using a very imperfect projector in which these two vital features were incorporated, showed life-sized screen images (motion pictures) at the Cotton States Exposition in Atlanta, Ga. This occured in September, 1895, and was so far as I am able to ascertain, the first commercial exhibition of life-sized motion pictures.

A little later Thomas A. Edison, who brought the motion-picture-on-film into being, manufactured the Armat Vitascope, and motion pictures became an actual commercial institution early in April, 1896.

H-I VOLTAGE AND AMPERAGE

JOHN L. GARRISON of Johannesburg, South Africa, calls for help half-way around the world, thus: "You may remember me as a correspondent of your department some years ago. I was located in Denver Col., then. Now I'm way over here, and believe you me I like it, only it is hard to get reliable first-hand information. We have no Richardson here to throw out a helping hand.

"Well, here is what I want. I have a new high-intensity spot and can't seem to get good results from it. I use a 11-millimeter positive, and 70 amperes. The arc voltage is about 50. Please answer immediately, giving all the information you can, for I'll have to wait a good while for my answer at best."

I have correspondents in far New Zealand, Australia and several other foreign countries, but it is seldom that I get a letter from Africa. I shall ask Friend Garrison to give us some projection dope, if he will, concerning his part of the world.

With high-intensity spots it is essential that correct amperage and arc voltage be used and maintained. For an 11-millimeter positive you should use 80, not 70 amperes, and the arc voltage should, and for good results must be, 55 instead of 50. That probably is your trouble.

I might mention, however, that with some H-I spots it is very essential that exactly the right focal length condenser be used. You have not advised as to what make of lamp you have and, anyhow, I probably would not be in possession of much if any data concerning it, as it probably is of English make. You must consult the maker of the lamp about that point.

Without further advice as to your equipment I cannot offer further information. I am forwarding, however, an instruction book on H-I arcs put out by one of our manufacturers, from which you may get help.

WIDTH OF LIGHT SLOT OPENING

TEX LOGAN, who is in charge of projection at the Palace and Tex theatres in Burknett, Tex., writes, "Please advise us as to the exact amount of opening the light slot of a Universal Sound Lens should have. We have ours adjusted to three-thousandths of an inch. Is that correct?"

The latest equipments are provided with an opening of approximately one mil (one-thousandth of an inch).

I would appreciate reports from projectionists using different equipments as to the exact width of the slot and what results have been noted if width has been at any time altered. Reports such as I am asking for have much value provided they are based on exact measurements, because they come from men using the various equipments and therefore able to note actual results.

TROUBLE WITH UNEQUAL FOCUS

JOHN J. REDMOND, projectionist at the Regal theatre in St. Joseph, Mo., is having trouble that he describes as follows:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: This is my first letter to you, but I am in trouble, hence, here I am. Am having an out-of-focus effect I am unable to clear up. If the picture is focused sharply in its center it is out at the sides. If it is focused evenly it is blurry all over. It is the same with both projectors. The projectors are Motiograph DeLuxe on Western Electric base.

"This is a suburban house with no balcony and no projection angle. Films 115 days old but in good shape. Projection room is in the center of the house. Projection distance 81 feet, 16-foot picture. Lenses were 5-inch, but we had them ground down to 4¼ to give a larger picture. They are Super-Lite.

"Have put on new aperture plate tracks and new tension shoes without effect. All adjustments in accordance with instruction book, but cannot get a clear focus. All prints run the same. Have had experts here, but no one seems to be able to tell us what is wrong."

From what you have said, Friend Redmond, the out-of-focus effect plainly is not due to buckling the film over the aperture. You say you have had the lenses re-ground, and that I think is where your trouble lies. I say that for the reason that it apparently cannot be charged to anything else.

As I understand matters, a 5-inch E. F. lens is "corrected" as exactly that. It is not corrected as a 4¼-inch lens and to re-grind it to 4¼-inch E. F. I am certain would very seriously disturb the corrections, and might very well have the effect you describe.

The information submitted also suggests that something is out of alignment. Whether this is because a lens element has been put out of proper relationship in the process of reducing the equivalent focal length, or because the aperture plate is not perpendicular to the axis of the lens, or the axis not in line with the projector aperture center, cannot be determined by the evidence at hand.

It would be advisable to borrow a lens, perhaps from a supply dealer conveniently located, and to find out whether the fault lies in the lens or elsewhere.

SAME LENSES, DIFFERENT DISTANCES

F. FREISTOCK of the Cumberland theatre in New Cumberland, Pa., presents the following problem: "Will you kindly quickly advise me what focal length projection lenses will project a 14-foot picture at 83 feet? Am moving my screen farther back. Have a pair of 5.5-E. F. projection lenses that project a 12-foot picture at 66 feet. Could we use them to project a 14-foot picture at 83 feet?"

To advise exactly of what equivalent focal length a projection lens should be to project a certain width of picture at a given distance, it is very necessary to know exactly the projection distance (distance center of lens barrel to screen center) and the exact width of the projector aperture. Even then results are not sure to be exact, for the reason that lens manufacturers themselves allow a small "tolerance of error" in the markings of lenses. That is to say, if a lens is marked, for example, 5 inches E. F., it may vary from that measurement slightly.

If you want a certain size of picture, exactly, at a given projection distance, it always is best to have your dealer supply you with the right lenses, properly matched, which usually is done by trial and error.

As to your present lenses, the problem is simple. Once the light leaves a lens it diverges (spreads out) evenly, theoretically forever, unless stopped by some obstruction. Your present lenses spread the light from nothing to 12 feet in 66 feet, which process will continue indefinitely if there be no screen or other obstruction.

This of course means that the beam spreads (12x12) 144 inches in 66 feet, or 120 divided by 66 equals 2.181818 inches per foot. It then follows that if the projection distance be 83 feet, the picture width would be 2.181818 times 83, which equals 181.090894 plus, or say 181.1 inches, or 15 feet plus a very small fraction of an inch.

Exhibitors, managers and projectionists may thus calculate the width of picture any lens will project at any distance, provided they know what width it will project at any one distance.

As to the rule for calculating the projection lens focal length to project a picture of given width, it is as follows: Ascertain the exact projector aperture width in fractions of an inch. Measure the exact distance from the center of the lens barrel to the center of the screen surface. Multiply the one by the other and divide by width of desired picture, in feet. The result will be the equivalent focal length of the required lens. However, such calculations cannot be depended upon unless measurements are exact.

NON-DESTRUCTIVE CHANGEOVER CUES

C. B. BALDWIN of Decatur, Ga., says some very kind things about the Bluebook, orders a copy of the new edition, and says, "Here is a suggestion to projectionists who have been complaining about Standard Release Print cues being cut off reel ends in doubling-up or otherwise.

"Only a few seconds are required to punch out a few small black discs from opaque (black) film, using a medium-sized punch. Then at proper distance from end of reels in which the regular cues are missing, cement one of the discs to back of the film. Unless the film is itself quite dark at that point, they will be plainly visible on the screen, but be sure and space the S. M. and C. O. cues the proper distance apart (about 11 feet) so that the projectionist who runs the prints after you may use them without trouble.

"Now, brothers, have a little patience. You can punch out a supply of markers from just a little film, and it takes only a trifle longer to attach them than it would to butcher things up by using a punch on the film itself. By this method you won't work any injury to the film, will have your markers all right, and will retain your own self-respect. Very recently I received a print with holes the size of a common leadpencil punched in it, which same of course had to be cut out of the new print. It would seem that exchanges should put a stop to such outrages."

Yea, verily, they should, and if proper inspection records were kept they doubtless would. However, proper inspection and the careful recording of damage would make inspection somewhat slower and that would of course cost more. It is the case of the loss of a nickel that drops out right in front of the eyes, versus a dollar that drops out without being noted. It would really seem that sometime, somehow, exchange managers, viewed as a whole, would wake up to the obvious heavy loss incurred by failure to make careful records of unnecessary film damage such as punch marks, and put a complete stop to it by forcing punch-mad projectionists to pay for the damage.

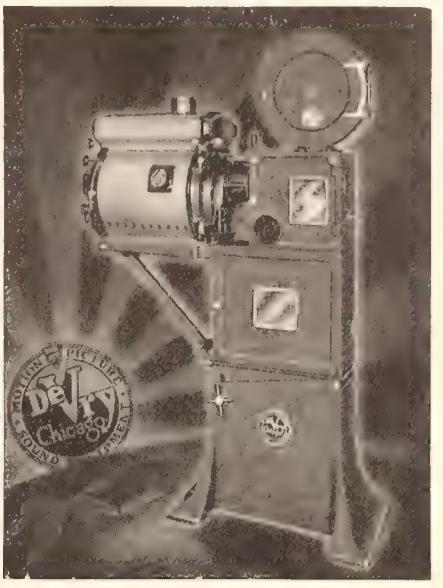
This simple suggestion by Brother Baldwin is the most practical method of affixing useable changeover signals yet evolved. If the film where the mark must be placed be very dark, it should be no hard job to prepare a sharp pointed tool—or to obtain a sharp awl—and scratch a thin ring around the edge of the marker. That, if carefully done, would be some extra trouble, but only an occasional one.

FURTHER MATERIAL ON FLICKER



HARRY H. STRONG of the Strong Electric Corporation of New York, writes, "Note an article in your department, April 6 issue, 'An Odd Case of Flicker,' which, it is quite obvious to me, is a case of synchronous flicker. The projectionist has not given very much data relative to his equipment. I assume, however, he is using low-intensity lamps supplied by single-phase rectifiers and has recently installed a new screen having a highly reflective surface, either beaded or aluminum.

"Since flicker tendency is directly affected by brilliancy, as you have expressed it, with the old, low-reflection-power screen, the flicker, while there, was not visible. It is, however, to be expected that with a picture as small as 13 feet and a high-power reflection surface, the synchronous flicker effect would be quite visible enough to be objectionable.

"May I suggest that you recommend that this theatre either increase its picture size to lower the level of illumination, or else increase the house lighting so that the relative screen illumination or brilliancy is diminished. The most satisfactory way would be to use a screen with less highly brilliant surface, but as the new screen is installed it probably would be best to increase the auditorium illumination.

"We have experienced this trouble in many installations where very small, highly reflective screen surfaces are used. However, the trouble usually disappears in a short while—as soon as the dazzling effect of the new screen surface has worn off. May I suggest that we always are very willing to co-operate with theatre men in such matters. However, they should give full, complete details concerning their equipment."

I thank Mr. Strong for his suggestions. In this case, however, Mr. Strong apparently has not taken into consideration the fact that no mention is made of a. c. being used at the light source, therefore I assume it is a d. c. arc. Of course the use of single-cycle current at the arc would produce some waver in the light, but hardly enough, I think, to induce visible flicker. My own analysis was based on d. c. at the arc, with sufficient alteration in projection speed because of fluctuating line voltage to induce visible flicker, with increased illumination due to the new screen surface.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

HAVE BEEN READING the Planning the Theatre department of BETTER THEATRES some years but never thought I'd have the opportunity to write you. However, Ole Dame Fortune seems to be making a play for me. I am contemplating moving into a town of 8,000 population. There is one theatre in operation there already and there is no opposition within 30 miles. I will have $15,000 to use. If possible will you kindly supply me with the following information:

How much space will I need to erect a 700 seat theatre? (I will want a stage proportionately.) Can a balcony be placed in the theatre to help take up some of the 700 seats? Will this amount of money allow me to furnish seats and equipment?

Before I submit my problem to an architect I would prefer your advice because of your varied experience along these lines. Sincerely trust you will advise me accordingly.—J. E. G.

The Answer:

IT WILL TAKE a ground space of 50x120 feet to erect a theatre with a seating capacity of 700 seats on one floor. This is figured on a basis of space for a 16-foot stage, a 10-foot lobby, and a 6-foot foyer.

There would be a center bank of thirteen seats across, with aisle on each side, and two wall banks of six seats across each. A balcony could be placed in such a theatre, but it would increase the cost considerably, and also increase the cubic content because it would require a higher ceiling. Without a balcony the minimum ceiling height above the high point of the auditorium floor should be 17 feet. I doubt very much if $15,000 will be sufficient to erect such a thatre by the regular methods of construction. This amount certainly could not include any equipment.

For estimating puposes, I advise that the minimum cost should be based on 18c per cubic foot. This rate includes general contract, plumbing, heating, ventilation and wiring contracts, but no equipment such as projection, sound, drapes, carpet, seats, and electric light fixtures.

The Question:

I WOULD like to know the best way to go about remodeling a building 43 feet wide, 146 feet long, and a 14-foot ceiling. I would like to have an idea of how to remodel this so as to make either one or two small stores in front, still leaving room enough for about a 600- or 700-seat theatre.—J. C.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The Answer:

TO REMODEL a building 43 feet wide and 146 feet long into a theatre seating from 600 to 700 seats I suggest as follows:

Plan for a center bank of twelve seats across with an aisle on each side and with two wall banks each of four seats across. This will give twenty seats across the width of the auditorium. This will require 35 rows of seats, or 87 feet, 6 inches for 700 seats,

If we further plan for a stage 15 feet deep, and a cross aisle or foyer 7 feet wide, there will be left approximately 20 feet for the depth of the store rooms.

I suggest that you plan the entrance to the theatre in the center of the front with a store room on each side. These stores, I am afraid, will be only 12 feet wide, as you will need at least 16 feet width for the lobby.

The Question:

I HAVE JUST subscribed to your magazine and now would like to avail myself of your advice and get some suggestions. I am remodeling a small country theatre, seats 250, only two shows a week, 25c admission. I will put on shows for four days when opened. Summer business is better than winter, as many folks spend vacation in this territory. It is the only theatre on an island of 2,500 population. The building and equipment has been terrible. Just a dignified barn. I can't put in very much money but must improve it now in order to get more business. I have enclosed a rough sketch I made up; trust you can help me on the questions I am asking.

I have copy of your May 4th BETTER THEATRES and I notice the new designs on the walls are very severe and plain. Is that the trend? We have three false windows on each side and at first intended to use them and put a panel of wallpaper inside and drapes outside and then electric light on this. Would you advise covering them all over?

Our walls will be all acoustic tile. Ceiling at present will be painted. Can't afford covering, and they say I don't need it covered as it is a 15-foot ceiling.

If we do not use windows with panels, how can I put in an economical lighting effect? That is what I want your suggestions on, how to get lighting effect you folks talk about at not a great deal of expense. Also, we have two exit doors in the middle of the building. Should we leave them or put them at each side of the stage entrance? Which is the better?

Now when you put the acoustic tile on the wall, some suggest coloring the grooves. Well, what color should they be, and how do you color them, and how far apart should they be? Would aluminum paint in grooves be too much? As you can see by the sketch the first four feet of wall has paneling of the tile effect of wood veneer. We are using that on account of contrasting color with the acoustic tile. Also should the wall be broken with some change in pattern, or should we just run it straight through?

We have an opening in the ceiling, and there are some colored glasses (small) there. We could probably put lights in them. But just now I want to put the building in shape to get good pictures and good sound, which has not been the case previously. All suggestions you have to offer will be appreciated.—G. L. E.

The Answer:

SINCE YOUR inquiry is quite lengthy I will try to answer your questions in the order they appear in your letter.

The modern trend in theatre designing is to keep the treatment very plain with as little ornamentation as possible, and to select a material which requires the least amount of upkeep and which does not have to be redecorated every few years, so a material which has a natural surface and good acoustical qualities represents a good selection. Since the auditorium is only 56 feet deep, I suggest that the false windows on each side be entirely covered so as to permit a continuous wall surface. The material which you selected for the walls is satisfactory, but on account of your having wall aisles, I do not advise you to use it for the wainscoting. I do not believe that this surface will stand the wear and tear caused by people brushing against it. It would be far better to build a cement plaster wainscoting about 3 feet, 6 inches high.

For illumination I suggest the use of wall brackets about 4 feet, 6 inches high and 10 inches wide, made out of flashed opal glass with a strip behind for at least 20 small bulbs so that you may obtain a color effect, which can be easily changed by resetting the colored bulbs.

I should prefer to place the exit doors near the stage so that the wall surface will remain unbroken and so that the space now occupied by a cross-aisle can be used for seating.

For coloring of the grooves in the wall material I suggest silver or aluminum leaf. The grooves should be as far apart as the standard sizes of the wall material, which is 24 inches. If the openings in the ceiling are not larger than 24 x 24 inches, you may place in them recessed light pans with an obscure or flashed opal glass front.

Should the ceiling be of metal, it might prove desirable to use a paint undercoating, which reduces to some degree the sound reflection. Paint the panels a very light tan, the ribs a shade darker than the tone of the wall surface, and the small ornamental bead mouldings silver or aluminum.

The Question:

I AM contemplating remodeling a two-story brick building 100x37 into a theatre. How many seats could I put in it? Would it be possible to install a balcony?

There is a basement under the entire building. Must this be filled in to comply with the building code of this state, leaving room only for the men't toilet and heating plant?

What would the approximate cost be, not including the seats, projectors or sound system?—W. L.

The Answer:

A BUILDING 37 feet wide and 100 feet deep can be remodeled into a theatre with a maximum seating capacity of 400 seats on one floor. This is based upon an allowance for a 10-foot lobby, a 6-foot foyer, and a 12-foot stage or platform. It will be possible to install a small balcony.

I do not know of any State theatre building code demanding the filling in of a basement under an auditorium. However, they do demand that the boiler and coal room be built of fireproof materials.

I am unable to give you an approximate cost of such a remodeling job as you have not told me anything about the construction and the condition of the present building. I also do not know if you intend to leave the present second floor in place and how this is supported. Should you desire to remove the second floor, I will have to know how the roof is supported.

I also need more information regarding the front—if this is to remain or to be rebuilt. If you supply more data regarding these matters I will be happy to advise you further.

range is more limited than is the case with concrete or terra cotta. Varied shadings of stone from the same quarry can be used for either vertical or horizontal bands. Carving in low relief, backed with gold leaf, forms a strikingly effective ornament with stone in moderne design.

BRICK

Brick standing alone gains depth and interest of design by setbacks; stone, terra cotta or metal bands may be added to make a wealth of variety; coursings of different shades of brick and the use of varied mortar colors all may contribute to the architectural detail.

TERRA COTTA AND TILE

For years terra cotta has been meeting the demand for a substantial material with a maximum color range and varied finish, and is available in black, gold, aluminum, blue, and practically any other color for use in moderne effects.

May I pause here to remark that many persons jump to the conclusion that only black and bright metals can be used in moderne architecture? Nothing could be further from the truth. The most delicate pastels or the richest hues of deeper color are equally appropriate in the new design.

Colored tiles present interesting possibilities, and used in connection with metals or terra cotta, are productive of unusual effects. Care must be exercised with both terra cotta and tile that the surface shall not be broken up into unnecessary small planes.

MARBLE AND TERRAZZO

Marble continues to hold its place as one of the popular materials in the upper price brackets. Its subdued but rich colors, combined with metals in the new fashion, lend an atmosphere of dignity and quiet elegance to the motion picture theatre. Imitations at their best can never hope to equal the satisfying quality of natural marble.

Pre-cast terrazzo in varying shades is another material which is being used for exterior walls as well as floors, and as a thin veneer for theatre fronts can be employed effectively in new designs.

The host of installations of Ideal Chairs subscribe to the general acceptance of the new equipment.

Ideal Chairs were born of a handicap—lean depression years.

With no silver spoon in its mouth Ideal Seating grew to sturdy maturity in the short span of five years. It took real character to attain such a legion of friends in such a short time.

But then, consider these characteristics . . . the lulling comfort of the deep spring cushions . . . the stunning upholstery . . . distinctive design . . . the silent ball-bearing self-aligning hinge . . . the staunch construction which will withstand years of severest usage without constant servicing.

themselves to the average pocketbook because of their low cost, their plasticity in application, and their wide color range. Fifteen years ago there were many inferior stuccoes on the market, which gave this material a bad name generally, but at present there are many splendid products of this sort for the owner's selection, any of which will be permanent.

Any of the thinner materials mentioned above adapt themselves to veneer work over existing walls, and if properly applied will not extend the face of the exterior more than an inch beyond the building line. The main objection to the use of terra cotta or brick in the modernization of theatre fronts is the fact that they add practically 5 inches to the face of the original structure, and it is usually wiser to use the thin veneers.

GLASS VENEERS

The new glass veneers, a solidly backed product not to be confused with transparent glass, are proving exceedingly popular at the present moment. They come in sizes and thicknesses suitable for application over existing exteriors, and their wide range of color, glossy and dull finishes, and possible use in a multitude of varied designs, make a complete transformation of any building possible. This material may be etched with designs, inlaid like mosaics, or insets of gold leaf or silver may be added for rich effects. So long as the joints are properly protected, this new material is impervious to the weather.

HARD BOARDS

For interior work, there are various new hard boards in large size sheets, finished in enamel and applied on wood furring strips over existing walls. The same manufacturers make a panel or sectional material of baked enamel on a metal or asbestos base for exterior work. Most of these sheet materials can be used in blended shades for decorative effects with comparatively plain surfaces.

METALS

The most popular metals in use today for both interior and exterior decoration are aluminum, stainless steel, monel metal, and the older metals, copper and bronze, run a close second. Metal mouldings are much in demand. I am awaiting with interest the introduction of some treatment whereby aluminum and other bright metals can be held to the beauty of their original lustre, so that they will not look, after exposure to the elements for a few months, so much like old sheet metal.

MIRRORS

Mirrors continue to be both useful and ornamental in confined spaces, such as a lobby with a very low ceiling, or rooms which of necessity are smaller than might be desired. They give depth and height to any room and may be used in etched ornamental patterns or broken up into designs.

WOOD VENEERS

Thin sheets of wood veneer mounted on canvas offer a wealth of new suggestions for interior work. This variety of wall covering shows the natural beauty of the wood grain, and can be waxed to a rich finish. Many rare woods of matched patterns as prominent as stripes in a tiger skin are now available. The material is applied like wallpaper.

INSULATING BOARDS

Where building codes and ordinances do not require strictly fireproof motion picture theatres, insulating board is frequently used in interior work. National advertising has familiarized the public with most brands of this material. It may be applied in tile effects or in large sheets, and may be decorated either before or after erection. Corkboard is also available in either blocks or sheets, and can be applied and decorated in the same manner. These materials can be left in natural colors and ornamented with painted stencil designs for pleasing and economical effects. Needless to say, either the insulation or corkboards have considerable acoustical value.

New materials are constantly being introduced to meet changing requirements in design, but with the wealth of material already at hand, offered in a price range to meet the individual theatre owner's appropriation, the planning of a new theatre or the rehabilitation of an existing one should prove an interesting problem to both owner and architect during the coming year.

fabric of fairly light color, and divided into horizontal bands or squares by metal mouldings. A fabric with a rather pronounced modern pattern in colors on a light ground can be used here, either unbroken or divided into horizontal bands or squares.

The relatively long wall surface connecting these two sections may be divided into vertical panels, with or without pilasters, above a dark, plain dado that comes only a little above the chair backs. The panels may be in a moire fabric, or may have a small pattern in the weave in a solid light color. In back may be acoustical treatment. The panel framing and pilasters should be of very slight projection, simple and in a fine wood. The pilasters should be reeded or fluted to break up sound. Acoustical plaster may be used for panels and frames, with reeded or fluted hard-plaster pilasters. If acoustical material is not needed, panels of Flexwood or Flexboard are excellent.

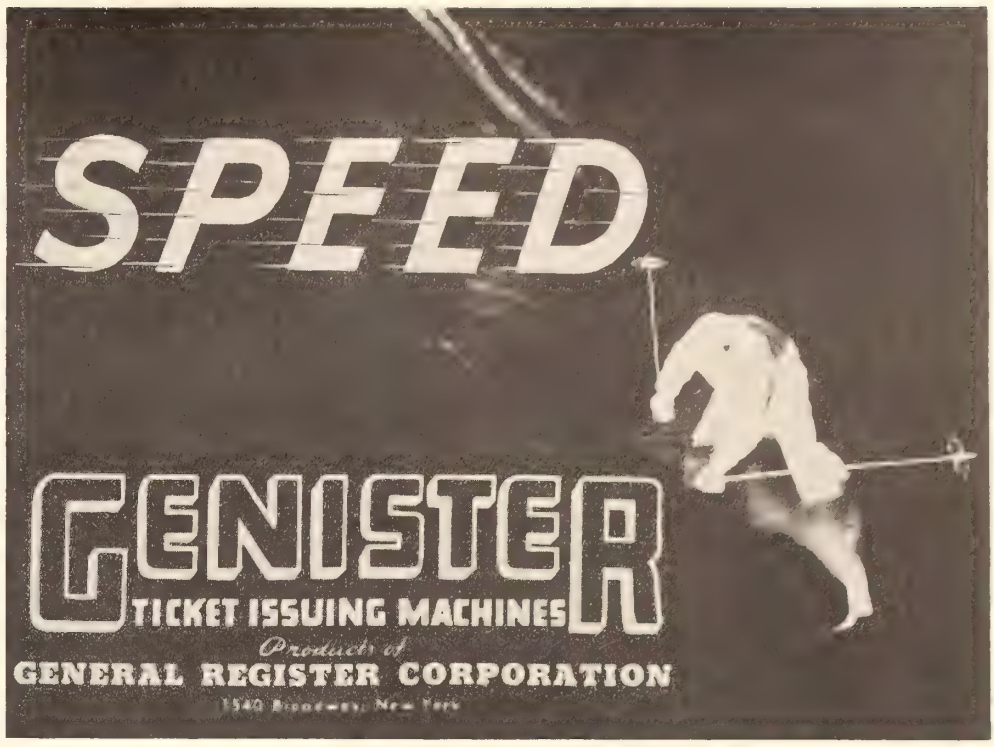
The ceiling of the section next to the screen should be in a somewhat lighter tone of the same color as the walls at this point. It may contain concealed lamp bulbs in reflectors pointing downward and equipped, with concentric louvers of metal, recessed flush with the ceiling.

The lighting of the main section may well be from rows of lamps concealed in the sides of a hung ceiling and projecting their light upon curved ceiling surfaces at top of the walls.

A good color scheme for such an interior would be: Walls next to screen fairly dark gray-blue divided by black vertical mouldings; ceiling here medium gray-blue; walls of rear section plain chartreuse (light greenish yellow), fabric or painted in a modern pattern in yellow-greens, green-blues and rusty reds on either a bone white or chartreuse ground; ceiling of rear section bone white or oyster white; panels of main section, light blue-gray moiré or almost plain, light blue-gray fabric; wood of panel frames and pilasters, walnut; dado, painted midnight blue, almost black; edges of pilasters, lacquered dark ultramarine blue; upholstery of chair backs, either light Chinese vermilion, terra cotta or deep ultramarine blue in mohair pile fabric; chair backs of modern flowing lines with metal edges chromium plated or enameled in dark ultramarine blue; carpet with small modern pattern in tones of blue-gray, or of fairly dark, plain blue-gray.



If mahogany wood is used, the panels may be extremely light tan; the front section, a darker tan; dado, deep purple-brown; chair backs, jade green; rear section, light coral; ceilings, white toning to light tan; carpet, in tans, light and dark shades. Or the dado may be black, the walls soft, light jade green.

that the company that manufactures compressors is primarily interested in selling refrigeration, the company that manufactures fans is interested in selling fans, no one but the sheet metal man is really interested in duct work, and no one but the air-conditioning engineer is interested in distribution and all of the combined phases of air-conditioning. To the specialist in manufactured products everything else other than his equipment is a necessary evil, and he is usually quite satisfied if the other phases of the job function only sufficiently well to cast no reflection on his own equipment. That is why some concerns that call themselves air-conditioning companies feel that they can afford to "standardize" on one method of putting air into any and all auditoriums.

In the remodeling of your auditorium, the re-design of the delivery and recirculating systems may pay more dividends over a longer period of time than most any other single thing that can be done.

ment the theatre operator is walking headlong into high maintenance costs and usually a makeshift job, with years of interruptions, disappointments and only partial satisfaction. Frequently the higher maintenance costs and the interruptions have more than made up the difference in cost of new equipment.

There is one possible exception to this, and that is the transfer of equipment between the theatres of one circuit. In this case the history of the equipment is known and it is as familiar as an old shoe, which may have been an excellent shoe in its day and still have a substaintial remaining life.

A general consideration of theatre equipment leads to this conclusion: that specialized equipment for theatre use has relatively a small market, according to the usual conception of markets, for manufactured products, and the manufacturers of worthy specialized equipment must be kept in business because we are dependent upon them. Their prices are to some extent established by the number of units they sell over a period of time; hence every second-hand item that is used is maintaining the high prices of new equipment.

The continuous expansion of the second-hand markets for theatre equipment is caused basically by the lack of cash to buy new equipment, and is creating a condition as unfavorable (of course on a much smaller scale) as in the automotive industry. The result will be continued development of details and refinement by manufacturers of new equipment to add sales argument or incentive for their product, or the attempt to manufacture cheaper products. This cheapness must be reflected to some extent in cheaper quality, which means shorter life. In terms of the theatre, this means accelerated wear and tear, higher maintenance, and quicker obsolescence, and necessarily more rapid replacement. In terms of the industry, this will result in an ever-growing, ever-increasing second-hand market. And this means that the general public will probably profit most, the industry will do more business, spend more, work harder, and earn less. The theatres must pay the bills of the industry as a whole and all of the specialized allied lines of endeavor for the industry.

Second-hand equipment is only a very temporary expedient. Get back to the sounder policy of lower maintenance costs, slower depreciation rates, and longer life, with increased comfort and appearance and ultimately more efficient results. Consider very carefully whether your job is one for second-hand equipment or deserves new equipment.

Don't mortgage the present or future income from your theatre by cheap buying or wrongly conceived ideas of maintenance and depreciation.

moreover, if the theatre owner accepts delivery of merchandise under the same circumstances he is not obligated to pay for them.

Doubtless a buyer in such a position must take reasonable care of the goods, but nothing more than that can be demanded of him. Accordingly he is under no obligation to return the goods to the seller, and after notice that the merchandise has not been and will not be accepted, the seller must assume the burden of removing it.

CASE

For example, in Ver Organ Company v McDonald, Milwaukee, Wis. (258 N. W. 359), it was diclosed that a theatre owner explained to a seller that he desired to improve and increase the volume of his pipe organ. The theatre owner alleged that he was told by the seller that he would get the required volume by installing French horn and vox celeste additions to the organ; that relying on the representations of the seller he was induced to enter into an agreement for the installation of the two units, and that when the units were installed they did not increase the volume of the organ. The theatre owner refused to accept the units and ordered the seller to remove them. The seller refused to do so and filed suit to recover the contract price, contending that the buyer could not rescind the contract after he had accepted delivery and installation of the units.

However, it is interesting to know that the court held the buyer not liable for payment, and said:

"The time within which the buyer may rescind must necessarily vary with the circumstances of the case. . . . The immediate consideration is whether the period elapsing, when not agreed to, has been long enough to result in prejudice to the seller."

Therefore it is quite apparent that a theatre owner may within a reasonable period of time, after accepting delivery of merchandise, inspect the same and if such merchandise does not conform to the specification and description which he gave to the seller, then the theatre owner may without liability refuse to pay for the material or equipment and notify the seller to take the unsatisfactory merchandise.

PROPOSAL AND ACCEPTANCE

ESTABLISHED LAW holds that if a theatre owner breaches a valid contract of sale, the seller may sue and recover full damages amounting to the loss resulting from the theatre owner's breach. However, one is never liable on a contract, though he breach it, unless the evidence clearly indicates that either the theatre owner or the seller accepted an offer which was submitted by the other party and which resulted in a valid contract.

In other words, if a seller offers or makes a proposal, to sell merchandise, and the purchaser accepts this offer unconditionally, then a valid contract is completed. If, however, the purchaser does not accept the offer unconditionally, but makes a new offer to the seller, then in order that a valid contract is completed the seller must accept the purchaser's proposal unconditionally.

CASE

For example, in Marshall v. Berrien (257 N. W. 714, Michigan), it was disclosed that a purchaser wired a seller and offered a stated price for a specified grade of merchandise. The seller immediately wired that the price would be satisfactory for a grade that he stipulated and which, however, was not the same grade specified by the purchaser. Without waiting to receive the return answer from the purchaser the seller shipped the merchandise on the same day. The purchaser refused to accept the shipment, although he delayed three days in wiring the seller not to make the shipment.

The seller filed suit against the purchaser to recover the loss he sustained when he sold the merchandise on the open market and which was $523.

The question presented the court was whether there was a valid and enforceable contract, or whether there was simply an offer by the purchaser and a counter proposal by the seller, which resulted in no valid contract. Also, the question arose whether the purchaser's failure to reply until three days after receiving the seller's wire could result in a valid contract by implication.

The higher court held that a valid contract had not been completed.

AUTHORITY OF SALESMAN

THERE ALWAYS has existed doubts and confusion in the minds of theatre owners, and officials, as to when and under what circumstances a salesman may make an enforceable contract for his employer.

Generally speaking, a salesman has no authority to make a binding contract of sale without the approval or acceptance of his employer unless expressly so authorized.

In other words, the extent of his authority is to solicit orders and transmit them. And up to the moment the employer actually accepts the order or contract, no valid contract exists. Therefore, notwithstanding printed or written provisions in the order to the contrary, the theatre owner may cancel the order any time before the salesman's employer accepts the order.

Also, it is held that when a notice of countermand is given to the same salesman or agent who took the order before acceptance by his principal, it was the agent's duty to communicate such notice to his employer, and his failure to do so did not relieve the employer from the legal effect of the notice (24 [2d] 384, citing cases). Obviously, however, any special agreement between the theatre owner and the salesman's employer is valid by which it is agreed that the salesman has authority to make valid contracts, and under these circumstances the theatre owner is bound to fulfill the terms of the contract as soon as the contract made with the salesman is signed.

Another important question frequently discussed is whether a valid contract is completed where the salesman does not transmit the complete agreement to his employer for acceptance, and as a result of this failure the employer accepts only part of the agreement between the theatre owner and the salesman. These important points of the law were decided in the late case (March 22, 1935) of Floor v Mitchell (41 Pac. [2d] 281, Parowan City, Utah).

CASE

The facts of this case are that a manufacturer's salesman entered into a conditional sale agreement in writing with the Aladdin theatre whereby it agreed to purchase a talking picture equipment. The equipment was to be installed for use in the Aladdin theatre, and the sum of $500 was to be paid at once, and the sum of $325 was to be paid upon completion of the installation. This contract which was a printed form contained clauses, as follows:

"That this contract shall not be regarded as executed until accepted by the seller at its office in Salt Lake City, or by its agents duly authorized. Salesmen not authorized to accept contracts for National Corporation. It is understood that the seller shall not be bound by any agreements or representations not contained in this agreement."

In addition to this regular contract and without knowledge or authority of the manufacturer the salesman and the Aladdin theatre entered into a secondary written agreement, known as Exhibit B, as follows:

"The National Corporation guarantees Talking Picture device against all defective parts, with the exception of Tubes in amplifier for a period of six months.

"Also guarantee to give satisfactory sound, or we will remove the device and refund all monies with the exception of installation charges."

Exhibit B was made in duplicate. The original was kept by the manufacturer's agent presumably to be sent to the manufacturer with the regular contract. However, the salesman did not send this Exhibit B secondary contract to his employer, but sent only the regular printed contract which the manufacturer or employer accepted and proceeded to install the equipment in the Aladdin theatre.

Later the Aladdin theatre was not satisfied with the equipment and refused to continue making the agreed payments. The manufacturer filed suit contending that the secondary Exhibit B agreement, in which the salesman had guaranteed satisfactory performance of the equipment, was not a part of the binding contract because the salesman had not sent it for approval.

The counsel for the theatre argued that no valid contract was completed because the manufacturer had not accepted the exact contract made with the salesman and, therefore, no liability could exist.

It is interesting to know that the higher court held that a valid contract had not been completed and that the Aladdin theatre was not obligated to pay for the equipment.

PARAMOUNT STABILIZES

THIS week's developments in Paramount Pictures, signalized by the election of Mr. John E. Otterson to the presidency, the continuation of the services of Mr. Adolph Zukor, founder, as chairman of the board, and Mr. George Schaefer as general manager, bring that great concern to an official stabilization which it has long sorely needed.

The election at Paramount concludes the major outwardly visible moves aimed at putting the concern officially under way on the course of its progress as a rehabilitated and important entity of the industry. This step brings to an end many of the inescapable uncertainties which could be considered no contribution to the progress which, under many difficulties, has been made in the last two years.

The reelection of Mr. Austin C. Keough to the post of secretary and Mr. Walter B. Cokell to the treasurership also denotes a policy that looks upon Paramount's new day as no day of revolution.

The motion picture industry generally will regard the new equilibrium of Paramount with approval and satisfaction.

LIGHTER OF LAMPS

WE who live by the lights of Broadway and the marquees that beckon to box offices across the land have something to share in the eighty-second birthday celebraton last week of Mr. William H. Meadowcroft, for more than fifty years secretary and assistant to the late Mr. Thomas A. Edison. It was Mr. Meadowcroft, then young in the Edison Laboratory organization, who saw in the newly invented incandescent lamp the possibility of the electric light sign. He made for the Electrical Club of New York the first sign spelled out in bulbs. It was many years before the light sign industry got under way, but it was Mr. Meadowcroft's notion that made Broadway the Great White Way of the years before ruby neon came. Mr. Meadowcroft celebrated his birthday by taking the day off from the laboratory, staying at his home in Boonton, New Jersey, to greet calling friends. He still reports daily at his office in the Edison plant at West Orange, and works from 9 to 4.

SHIP RE-RELEASED

THIS week the newsreels are screencasting the glories of the Normandie, and the radio has proclaimed its wonders. Meanwhile what a remarkable dither of activities is involved! We are sometimes told that the motion picture industry is hectic. Consider the Normandie, racing over seas, an unfinished ship with scores of carpenters and fitters, concealed from the passengers, working away in breathless haste, with the ship the while approaching a great pier in New York that is hardly more than a steel skeleton yet. It seems that nothing was complete for the maiden voyage but the passenger list and the publicity releases. It was a pre-release voyage.

COLUMBIA ARRANGES

THE realignments in process and pending in the production organization of Columbia Pictures Corporation tend toward an increased assurance for the future of the concern by way of division of picture making responsibility and a reduction of the hazards inherent in one-man institutions.

Mr. Ben Schulberg, seasoned and capable, has been acquired as a producer, and meanwhile under negotiation is an arrangement by which Mr. Frank Capra becomes a unit producer. This will be seen as continuing for Columbia the services of the man who has put his creative stamp on an extraordinary sequence of pictures of high merit, a sequence including all the important Columbia hits save one.

Now by the same motion Columbia will avoid the one-man risk. Corporations which invest in creative ability must be true investors, not speculators, and diversification is as much a precaution in manpower as in dollars. No concern can be sure of holding the services of its creative contributors always and against all odds, nor can it afford to be at the whim of the elements of chance which inevitably surround the individual.

Columbia has too much at stake to remain a one-man plant.

IT is our mild pleasure to report that a big official Chinese conference on the national motion picture industry was presided over by none other than Mr. Yeh.

WEATHER NOTE

THE motion picture can regard with interest the progress of the air-conditioning industry. Screen theatres were first to utilize manufactured weather. About 1926 department stores began to apply it to their high pressure merchandising. Today installations are estimated: amusement places 22,500, hotels 26,000, banks, which always seemed a little cool, 20,000, hospitals 9,400, department stores 1,500, and railway passenger cars about 4,500. The next big field is the home, and prices look too high for promise of great volume. And that makes theatre comfort still a drawing asset.

THIS WEEK---

ALLIED-RKO SETTLE

A threatened fight between RKO and Allied of the Northwest, authorized by numerous exhibitors to represent them for one year in sales deals with RKO, was halted last week when RKO dropped vaudeville at the Orpheum in Minneapolis. Allied had objected to the continued use of bargain shows at the Orpheum. Boycott of Radio product was threatened. . . .

MGM ADS

MGM has signed non-cancelable contracts for more than $600,000 worth of outdoor advertising during the summer, according to Donahue & Coe, New York advertising agency. It covers 10,000 24-sheet posters monthly for six months in 1,500 cities. There will be a tiein with newspaper and magazine space. . . .

CAMERAMAN'S NERVE

In the current Pathe News is pictured, exclusively, according to RKO, the tragic death of Helen Carver and Orville O'Neill, swept from an automobile top into the flood waters of Fountain Creek, near Colorado Springs, Colo., last week. At the risk of his life Cameraman Paul Koons took the shot, standing waist-deep in the water.

"STARS" ELIMINATED

Star ratings and other symbols have been eliminated by New York agreement from all advertising of product by affiliated theatres. It is reported numerous independent theatres in the Metropolitan New York area are voluntarily doing likewise. Affiliated theatres will make the policy national. . . .

VAUDEVILLE DROPPED

The RKO Albee in New York has dropped vaudeville from its program for the first time since the house opened 10 years ago. Circuit heads have not determined whether to make the policy change permanent after the summer period. . . .

CONTRACT DECISION

Both Reliance and Warner claiming the services of Robert Donat, young English player, now in London, whose success in "The Count of Monte Cristo" brought him into demand, Justice Goddard in New York court last week ruled that Donat was not under contract to Warner. . . .

EXAMINERS

Governor Harry Nice of Maryland has appointed Meyer Leventhal and Nelson D. Baldwin, Baltimore, to the board of examiners of motion picture operators. Mr. Leventhal is a pioneer exhibitor, while Mr. Baldwin long has been an operator. . . .

FILMS RECOGNIZED

Recognizing the historic value of the motion picture, the New York Historical Society has placed on exhibition the Harold Seton collection of old photographs, including those of such veterans of the screen as Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Theda Bara, William S. Hart and others. It is considered recognition indeed from such a conservative institution as the Historical Society. . . .

PATRON AID

Appearing in New Haven at a subscription price of $1 per year is a new publication, "Theatre News," which calls films the most "efficient means for idea communication in the world," and supplies local information on current films. Published by the New Haven Council of Theatre Patrons, the 15-page pamphlet is edited by Jack W. Schaefer of the "Journal-Courier." . . .

PHOTOGRAPHERS

Irving Lippman and William Fraker, both Columbia Pictures photographers, took the second and third awards, respectively, for their work in the professional photographers' portrait group at the San Diego Exposition. Drummond Young, not connected with the film industry, won first place. . . .

PARENTS BLAMED

Contending that motion pictures are designed solely for entertainment, Hal Hode, of Columbia Pictures, told 300 assembled at the Philadelphia Motion Picture Forum last week that the entire responsibility for the moral character of the younger generation rests with the parents. He said there is little hope of educators and the industry agreeing because films favored by educators are not in demand at the box office. . . .

MEEHAN AT REPUBLIC

Leo Meehan has been signed by Robert E. Welsh, executive producer, to act in an advisory capacity on the production of "The Harvester," to be produced by Republic from the Gene Stratton-Porter novel. The Chicago Coston Circuit, Warner controlled, is reported to have concluded a product deal with MGM, seen as the first break in the united front of a Chicago theatre group which refused to accede to MGM's percentage and preferred playing time demands. The circuit was part of the group, including Essaness, booked by the combine headed by Aaron Saperstein.

JOHN HAMILTON

John Hamilton, for 17 years chief engineer at the New York Rialto, now being razed, and known for years for his benefactions to needy theatrical and sporting folk about Times Square, died last week at his Brooklyn home at the age of 68. Born in Scotland, he had been a New York resident for 50 years. He was a member of the International Union of Operating Engineers. . . .

YESTERDAY'S SCREEN

A breath of yesterday in the motion picture has come to New York with the opening, in Greenwich Village, of Sully's Showboat, where, with the title "Nickelodeon Nights," will be reproduced many of the first efforts of the screen, in an atmosphere completely the nickelodeon of years ago, including the piano player. . . .

NEW SEASON FEATURES AT THREE HUNDRED MARK

Universal, Fox and Republic Hold Conventions; Four Distributors to be Heard From; Total Features Up to 330

Sales convention announcements this week brought to the three hundred mark the number of feature productions to be made available to exhibitors in the new season, and four of the large companies were still to be heard from.

Seven companies made known a total of 292 pictures in connection with conventions, Paramount's announcement of 65—the largest total to date from any one distributor—coming in advance of next week's gathering. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's field forces are telling theatremen about the company's coming 50 features, one having been added to the pre-convention listing.

Independents carried the figure to a total of 330, with Liberty planning an even dozen, Chesterfield and Invincible nine each and Imperial seven features.

Product announcements made at sales conventions held during the week by Universal, announcing 42 features; Republic, 46, and Fox, 54, will be followed in a few days by disclosures of the numerical and material nature of the new programs of Warner Brothers, Radio, United Artists and Columbia.

However, all distributors have been working in the field for weeks negotiating preseasonal sales, and now that the sales convention period is nearing an end, the marketing competition is reaching its height.

Pre-season product promises made by distributors to exhibitors for 1935-36 assumed further tangible form with the purchase during May of 51 story properties, embracing some 23 original manuscripts, 19 books and nine plays, acquired by 14 companies, as follows:

Company	Originals	Books	Plays	Totals
Chesterfield	1	..	..	1
Columbia	4	1	..	5
Harmon	..	..	1	1
Lesser	..	1	..	1
London (U.A.)	..	3	..	3
Lorre	..	..	3	3
MGM	5	3	1	9
Paramount	8	2	4	14
Radio	1	..	..	1
Supreme	1	..	..	1
Universal	1	4	..	5
Warner	..	2	..	2
Totals	23	19	9	51

Virtually every company in the business continued this week to engage in activity of one kind or another to round out its new product line and to determine policies of selling.

Fox concluded its three-day convention at Chicago over the weekend, Fox-Educational announcing 52 two-reelers, and 58 one-reelers, 12 of which will be made by Truman Talley's Movietonews division. Previously, President Sidney R. Kent had announced 54 features.

Mascot Pictures announced 20 features and four serials.

Still more independent production enterprises were launched.

Paramount, on the eve of its national sales meeting, next Thursday, announced 65 features and listed 15 titles. The company will follow through with five regional conferences.

RKO Radio arranged for two more Technicolor features from John Hay Whitney's Pioneer Pictures, and advanced preparations for its convention June 17.

Republic's home office executive contingent and franchise holders were in session at Cincinnati.

Universal's convention opened Wednesday and was to close Friday, presided over by R. H. Cochrane and James R. Grainger, and addressed by Carl Laemmle, who made the trip to Chicago from the Coast.

Warners' eastern forces entrained for Burbank, Cal., to participate, starting June 13, in the corporation's first international sales meeting in five years.

Story-buying activities in April and May were record-breaking, studios acquiring some 150 properties in those eight weeks with which to establish the foundation for the new season's programs.

The trend in purchases continues toward the original manuscript and published novel, although plays acquired in May were slightly in excess of previous months, except in April when 13 plays were bought out of a five-year record of 100 requisitions for the month.

There were many promising purchases during May, among them: Louisa Alcott's popular novel, "An Old Fashioned Girl," acquired by Republic; Clarence Buddington Kelland's "Efficiency Edgar," to Fox; Lloyd Douglas' book, "Green Light," a Warner purchase; Guy Bolton's "Murder Man," purchased by Metro; Ursula Parrott's novel, "Next Time We Live," to Universal, and Victor Hugo's "Ninety-three," a Warner acquisition.

Zane Grey's "Outlaws of Palouse" went to Columbia, while Metro got Edward Childs Carpenter's new play, "Perfect Gentleman." John C. Moffitt, Kansas City Star movie editor, had his new play, "Roaring Girl," taken by Paramount, and Universal bought Faith Baldwin's "Spinster Dinner." One of the outstanding deals was closed by Paramount with Oscar Straus for his "Stormy Spring," including three Straus melodies.

Another Zane Grey story, "Thunder Mountain," went to Sol Lesser, for Fox release. Paramount also purchased E. Alexander Powell's story on the life of Garibaldi, while a play, "Without Regret," by Roland Pertwee and Harold Deardan, was another Paramount acquisition.

ther rounded out 1935-36 schedules and actual production plans follow:

Barnstyn

Burroughs Tarzan Enterprises, Ben Cohen, president, disposed of world rights to "New Adventures of Tarzan," in both feature and serial form, to J. C. Barnstyn, who sailed Tuesday for six months in Holland.

Du World

New season's distribution deals were closed by Du World Pictures with Affiliated Film for "Beast of Borneo" in the south; Sack Amusement for "Sword of the Arab," "Beast of Borneo" and "Dawn to Dawn," for Texas, Oklahoma and Arizona, and with Capital Film, Philadelphia, for "Stars in the Making," "Sword of the Arab" and "Yokel Dog Makes Good."

Fox

Fox Film Corporation on Saturday concluded its three-day sales convention in Chicago, with distribution department meetings conducted by John D. Clark, general manager of sales, W. C. Kupper and Edmund Grainger; and with sales meetings conducted by William Sussman and Nat Finkler. James A. Clark presided over a meeting of the ad sales department. Previously, the Fox delegates heard described the titles and available talent credits of the 54 features for 1935-36 (See MOTION PICTURE HERALD, June 1, page 40).

Fifty-two two-reel comedies and 58 one-reel subjects will make up the Fox-Educational short subject program, it was announced.

The two-reelers:

12 Star Personality Comedies.
12 Musical Comedies.
8 Coronet Comedies.
8 Frolics of Youth.
6 Tuxedo Comedies.
6 Young Romances.

The one-reelers:

26 Terry-Toons.
10 Song-and-Comedy Hits.
10 Treasure Chests.
6 Adventures of a Newsreel Cameraman.
6 Along the Road to Romance on the Magic Carpet of Movietone.

Educational will produce all of the two-reelers and three series of the one-reelers, Movietone News, Inc., contributing the newsreel cameraman adventures and the "Magic Carpets."

Joe Cook, Buster Keaton and Ernest Truex will again be seen in the two-reel subjects, while Buster West and Tom Patricola have been signed to do six each. Warren Hull will continue in the "Young Romance" series, and Tom Howard and George Shelton are again slated for comedies.

Frank Moser and Paul Terry will continue to produce "Terry-Toons," Philip A. Scheib acting as musical director of these cartoons.

Truman Talley will produce, Lew Lehr will edit and Ed Thorgersen will act as narrator of the two Movietone series.

E. W. Hammons, Educational president, told the delegates his company will continue to divide its company production between New York and Hollywood.

Sidney R. Kent's announcement at the convention of the new alliance with the Schenck-Zanuck 20th Century Pictures company was received enthusiastically.

Hampton

Jesse Hampton, former producer and more recently an investment banker, was due in Hollywood from New York to consider re-entry into independent production for the new season.

Mascot

Nat Levine's Mascot Pictures, doubling its feature production schedule from the ten released this season, announced, besides four serials, the following 20 features:

TIGER VALLEY, first of four specials, novel, by Reginald Campbell and published by Richard Smith.
POCOHONTAS, special, about American history.
LEATHERNECKS HAVE LANDED, special.
YOU'RE ON THE AIR, special, radio-musical.
THOUSAND DOLLARS A MINUTE, Saturday Evening Post story, by Everett Freeman.
SWIFT LIGHTNING, book, by James Oliver Curwood.
FILM STAR'S HOLIDAY, by Peter B. Kyne.
MY BROTHER'S KEEPER, original, by Gerald Beaumont.
HITCH-HIKE LADY, original story.
THIRTY FATHOMS BELOW, book about the sea.
ONE SWEEPSTAKE RARE, Cosmopolitan Magazine story, by Frances Cockrell, published as "One Sweepstake Well Done."
ALMA MATER PRINCESS, original.
YOU'RE IN THE NAVY NOW, comedy.
THIRTEEN GIRLS IN LOVE, original.
MISSING SKULL, mystery yarn.

Eight westerns, in addition, will star Gene Autry, under supervision of Armand Schaefer and direction of Joe Kane. They will have music.

Titles and story material for the four serials to be made at Mascot's North Hollywood studios will be announced later.

Mascot's president, Nat Levine, arrived in New York over the weekend on a talent search and for conferences on distribution plans.

In Hollywood, Ken Goldsmith resigned as production supervisor, and said he will join a major company.

Melford

Frank Melford, in New York from Hollywood, was said to have in mind an undetermined number of features for production in 1935-36.

MGM

The production staff of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at Culver City was enlarged with the appointment of Jack Chertok, formerly head of the company's music department, as head of short subject production and assistant to Harry Rapf, an executive producer; and with the appointment of Max Siegel, of Broadway stage activity, as assistant to Irving Thalberg. Hunt Stromberg, another executive producer, also got a new assistant, Dashiell Hammett, who will serve as an editorial aid, starting with "The Foundry," slated for Wallace Beery.

Paramount

The new Paramount company did not wait until it opened its sales convention, June 13th to 15th, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York, to announce a production schedule of 65 features although the specific nature of the complete program was withheld until the sales meeting.

However, the company did mention 16 of the new productions, as follows:

THE CRUSADES, produced by Cecil B. DeMille, with Loretta Young, Henry Wilcixon, Ian Keith, C. Aubrey Smith, Katherine DeMille and Alan Hale.
THE BIG BROADCAST of 1935, Norman Taurog directing Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie, Ethel Merman, Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland.
PETER IBBETSON, Henry Hathaway directing Gary Cooper and Ann Harding.
THE LAST OUTPOST, with Cary Grant and Gertrude Michael.
ANNAPOLIS FAREWELL, which Alexander Hall is directing at the United States Naval Academy, with Sir Guy Standing and Richard Cromwell.
SO RED THE ROSE, Stark Young's southern classic, directed by King Vidor, with Margaret Sullavan, Pauline Lord and Randolph Scott.
WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND, by Zane Grey, to be directed by Otto Lovering.
ROSE OF THE RANCHO, musical from David Belasco's play, Marion Gerin directing Gladys Swarthout.
THE MILKY WAY, Leo McCarey directing Harold Lloyd.
TWO FOR TONIGHT, with Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett and Mary Boland, to be directed by Frank Tuttle.
HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE, Mitchell Leisen directing Carole Lombard.
WITHOUT REGRET, to feature Kent Taylor and Elissa Landi, with Harold Young directing.
SOUP TO NUTS, Norman McLeod directing George Burns and Gracie Allen.
THE PHANTOM BUS, to be directed by Max Marcin.
COLLEGIATE, to star Joe Penner.
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT, Walter Wanger producing and George Raft and Alice Faye starring.

74 Players, 80 Writers

The new product will be made by 74 players, 19 directors and 80 writers definitely under contract, and by others who will be added during the season.

Fifteen of the 1935-36 productions are already in production, five before the cameras and ten in preparation.

The Hollywood studio's executive staff, which will function under Henry Herzbrun, vice president and general manager, and Ernst Lubitsch, managing director of production, numbers 27, and includes nine associate producers and five supervisors.

Dates of the five regional sales meetings to follow the national convention next week in New York will be as follows: June 17 and 18, at New York, attended by branch representatives from Boston, Maine, New Haven, New York, Brooklyn, New Jersey, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Washington, Cleveland, Columbus, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, in charge of Division Manager Joseph J. Unger. Canadian representatives will also attend at New York.

June 22 and 23: Peabody Hotel, Memphis, attended by exchange representatives from Atlanta, Memphis, Charlotte, Jacksonville, New Orleans, Dallas, San Antonio and Oklahoma City, in charge of Division Manager Charles M. Reagan.

June 21 and 22: Palmer House, Chicago, attended by representatives from Chicago, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Sioux Falls; presided over by Division Manager Reagan.

June 24 and 25: Elms Hotel, Excelsior Springs, Mo., attended by representatives from Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Des Moines; presided over by Division Manager Reagan.

June 28 and 29: St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, attended by representatives from Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Denver, Salt Lake City; presided over by Division Manager Reagan.

Shooting has been completed on all of the 1934-35 product, the remaining six pictures of the 22 in work being in the cutting room for release between now and August 31.

Lou Diamond, in charge of short subject product, announced that Paramount will release six "Popular Science" subjects next season. Tentatively in line on the shorts schedule are the six series of single-reel Paramount Pictorials, Betty Boops, Headliners, Varieties, Grantland Rice Sportlights and Popeye the Sailor subjects.

Popular

Franchises were closed for 1935-36 product with E. M. Loew for New England and with L. K. Brin, for Wisconsin and upper Michigan.

Radio

John Hay (Jock) Whitney's Pioneer Pictures this week closed with RKO for the release next season of two additional Technicolor features, both to be produced by Merian C. Cooper, and to follow "Becky Sharp," on this year's schedule. Mr. Cooper is now producing "She" and "Last Days of Pompeii" for Radio, both in black and white.

Robert Trillo, RKO's manager in Spain, closed with Alliance Films, Portugal, for distribution in that country of the entire 1933-34 and 1934-35 products, the deal including short subjects and features.

Republic

More than 100 franchise holders of Republic Pictures, from as far west as Dallas, will attend the first sales convention, opening Friday, and continuing over the weekend, at Cincinnati. The second is tentatively set for San Francisco, June 20 and 21. (Product announcement appeared in Motion Picture Herald, May 18.)

Attending the Cincinnati convention from the New York home office will be W. Ray Johnston, president; Edward A. Golden, sales manager; Edward Finney, advertising and publicity director; Herman Gluckman, in charge of Republic's New York distribution, and Madeleine White, assistant to Mr. Johnston. Following the meeting Sales Manager Golden will tour Republic exchanges.

In New York M. H. Hoffman, president of Liberty Pictures, was discussing an arrangement whereby his company would produce a feature series next season for distribution through Republic. Mr. Hoffman would retain the Liberty trade name.

Meanwhile Trem Carr, vice-president in charge of production, was proceeding with filming in Hollywood, having signed Leo Meehan to advise on "The Harvester," Gene Stratton-Porter story; Lewis D. Collins, to direct four features, starting with "Legion of the Lost," and Arthur Lubin, to a long term directorial contract, requiring four pictures per year, starting with "Two Black Sheep," from Warwick Deeping's Cosmopolitan story. James Knox Millen, playwright, also received a contract, to adapt Meredith Nicholson's novel, "House of a Thousand Candles."

Universal

The first official action in Universal's 30th year of picture making took place Wednesday morning when the three-day sales convention opened in the Tower Ballroom of the Stevens, Chicago. Seventy sales and home office executives answered the roll call sounded by R. H. Cochrane, executive vice president, and James R. Grainger, general manager of distribution, then took over direction of the meeting.

On Wednesday Mr. Grainger announced the ten productions required to complete the contract obligations of the current year, these including "Show Boat," two Irene Dunne pictures, a John Stahl production and one with William Powell. On Wednesday afternoon Mr. Grainger took up plant operations and held a general discussion on the completion of the year from the standpoint of sales and distribution.

On Thursday Mr. Grainger announced the 42 features which Universal will make in 1935-36, together with the completement of short product aggregating 219 subjects, including 104 issues of Universal News, and including 27 two-reelers, four serials with a total of 104 reels, 52 one-reelers and the newsreel.

Edward Arnold, star of Universal's "Diamond Jim," the lead-off picture next season, was honor guest at a luncheon on Thursday and a dinner Thursday night is scheduled for Chicago newspaper men, to be given by the advertising and publicity department, headed by Paul Gulick.

On Friday Carl Laemmle, president, will address the convention and the meeting will then be adjourned.

Sales policy was explained by Mr. Grainger, who also made the concluding address.

Home office executives in attendance included: Leo Abrams, R. V. Anderson, O. C. Binder, Edward Bonns, P. D. Cochrane, R. H. Cochrane, Max Cohen, E. F. Cox, Charles Ford, E. T. (Peck) Gomersall, James R. Grainger, Paul Gulick, Charles Kirby, M. L. Koppelman, William Kraemer, Charles Leonard, F. J. A. McCarthy, Willard S. McKay, Nate G. Manheim, Dave Miller, Sam Sedran, Sydney Singerman, Andrew Sharick, Herman Stern, Joe Weil and Sig Wittman.

Mr. Laemmle headed the production delegation from Universal City, including Jack Ross, Edward Arnold and John LeRoy Johnston.

"Both the production cost and the footage announced by the company is the greatest in its entire history," it was said. The budget allowance is $12,500,000. The 42 feature releases will be as follows:

DIAMOND JIM, novel, by Parker Morell, with Edward Arnold, Jean Arthur, Binne Barnes, already completed, under direction of Edward Sutherland.

There will be six additional features and also six westerns starring Buck Jones.

Among the two-reel subjects will be 13 Mentone pictures made with radio and vaudeville stars, 13 comedies and one special subject entitled "Camera Thrills."

The single reelers will include 13 "Oswald, the Lucky Rabbit" cartons; 13 "Studio Novelties," 13 "Stranger Than Fiction" subjects and 13 "Going Places."

Universal's newsreel will again feature Graham McNamee as narrator.

The serials will include Buck Jones in "The Roarin' West," "The Adventures of Frank Merriwell," by Burt L. Standish; "The New Exploits of Tailspin Tommy," and another newspaper strip, "Flash Gordon."

Warners

Warner Brothers' "Convention Special" train left New York Wednesday night with the company's eastern delegation to the first Warner international sales convention in Los Angeles, June 10th to 23rd. The train will make stops en route to pick up sales representatives and exhibitors, and to visit points of interest, traveling through the southwest.

From the home office went Gradwell Sears, Andy Smith, in charge of distribution; Norman H. Moray, Vitaphone sales manager; Bob Mochrie, Carl Lesserman, H. S. Bareford, Mort Blumenstock, Stanley Shuford, Herb Crooker, Arthur Sachson, H. M. Doherty, Harry Rosenquest, Mike Dolid, Charlie Kemke, Joseph Kelly, and C. L. Tietjen.

TRACING HISTORY OF STAGE IN MIDWEST

The history of the theatre in Kansas City in the three decades prior to the time the cinema swept the stage out of the realm of popular entertainment is the subject of a series of reminiscences by Austin Latchaw in the Kansas City Star, under the title: "The Enchanted Years of the Stage."

For nearly a quarter of a century the Star's dramatic critic, and now editorial and feature writer, Mr. Latchaw is chronicling the story of the "Living Theatre" in Kansas City in its period of greatest glory, from the middle '80s to about 1912.

IT'S OTTERSON PRESIDENT AND ZUKOR CHAIRMAN

Schaefer Elected Vice-President of Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Fortington Is Named Chairman of Executive Committee

Swift and unanimous action taken this week by Paramount stockholders in approving completely the plan of reorganization virtually returned one of the oldest and largest motion picture corporations to normal operations after two and a half years of receivership. A new board of directors was ratified and the board in turn selected the management of the new company by electing:

ADOLPH ZUKOR, Chairman of the Board.
JOHN EDWARD OTTERSON, President.
GEORGE J. SCHAEFER, Vice-President.
AUSTIN C. KEOUGH, Secretary.
WALTER B. COKELL, Treasurer.
H. A. FORTINGTON, Chairman of the Executive Committee.

Mr. Otterson, for the last seven years president of Electrical Research Products, Inc., sound equipment merchandising subsidiary of Western Electric Company, will sever all connections with Erpi before June 17th and devote his entire time and interest to his new office; contingent, however, upon acceptance of his resignation by the Telephone Company affiliate.

Thus will the new Paramount and its new management start off with a new slate in the new season of 1935-36 when it meets in annual convention next Thursday morning at New York's Waldorf-Astoria hotel to launch its first product program for sale to the exhibitor, backed by a strengthened production line of 65 features and talent structure of 74 stars and feature players, 80 writers and 19 directors, all controlled by contract.

At a special meeting called for the purpose Monday and Tuesday, at headquarters in the Paramount Building at Times Square, stockholders of the old Paramount Publix Corporation took action by ballot to carry into effect the reorganization plan provisions as approved by Judge Alfred C. Coxe of the U. S. district court and accepted previously by the creditors and stockholders in the proceedings under Section 77 B of the Federal Bankruptcy Act, which have been pending in district court in New York since June, 1934.

The stockholders first acted to change the present capital stock to provide for an authorized capital as follows:

NO. OF SHARES	CLASS	PAR VALUE	TOTAL VALUE
300,000	New 1st Pfd.	$100	$30,000,000
650,000	New 2nd Pfd.	10	6,500,000
4,500,000	Common	1	4,500,000
TOTAL AUTHORIZED CAPITAL.....			$41,000,000

JOHN EDWARD OTTERSON

The foregoing capital structure was called for in the reorganization plan.

The stockholders formally reduced the old common stock consisting of 3,382,524 shares, with a $10 par value, to 845,631 shares with a new par value of $1 each, in order to carry out the provision of the plan for the exchange of one-quarter share of new for one share of old. The new increase in capital then was authorized from $845,631 to $41,000,000.

Wall Street "unofficially" estimated that earnings applicable to the bonds and stock of the new company in the first quarter of this year were about $2,000,000, and that since the company will start with at least $20,000,000 in its treasury, payment of interest and dividends on the new securities should be, according to Dow, Jones, "a matter of only a short time."

Next the stockholders voted to provide for a board of directors of from 16 to 18 members, divided into three classes for terms of one, two and three years each, until the annual election in 1938, after which time all directors are to be of one class, elected for one year each. The new board includes a number of men who are comparatively new to the motion picture industry, notably H. A. Fortington, who took a leading part in forming the group that finally arranged the company's affairs.

Mr. Fortington is not well known to Wall Street, but represents important British interests. He is general attorney and financial secretary of the powerful British Royal Liverpool group of insurance companies, comprising a dozen companies headed by the Royal Insurance and the Liverpool, London and Globe. Mr. Fortington is understood in Wall Street to represent substantial holdings of Paramount bonds and stock owned by this group, and acquired in comparatively recent weeks.

The new Paramount board, as ratified by the stockholders Tuesday morning is constituted as follows:

REPORT BLOOM MAY HEAD ERPI

For One Year

Robert K. Cassatt, senior partner of Cassatt and Company, Philadelphia bankers.
William S. Gray, Jr., president, Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company.
Charles E. Richardson, former Paramount trustee in bankruptcy.
George J. Schaefer, vice-president, Paramount Pictures.
John E. Otterson, president, Paramount Pictures.

For Two Years

Gerald Brooks, of E. F. Hutton and Company, former Paramount Publix director and representing the Paramount Stockholders' Protective Committee.
Stephen Callaghan, former judge of the New York supreme court, representing Allied Owners Corporation.
Duncan G. Harris, of Brown, Wheelock, Harris and Company, Inc.
Henry R. Luce, president, Time Magazine and Fortune Magazine.
Charles A. McCulloch, director of the First National Bank of Chicago and of the Texas Oil Company.
John D. Hertz, Lehman Brothers. (Mr. Hertz had acquired a large block of Paramount Publix stock in 1931 and became chairman of the finance committee, resigning in 1933 after a disagreement with the management).

For Three Years

H. A. Fortington.
Percy H. Johnston, chairman of the board of Chemical Bank, and a former Paramount Publix director.
Maurice Newton, member of Hallgarten and Company, and a former Paramount Publix director.
Floyd B. Odlum, president, Atlas Corporation, the investment trust that recently acquired important interests in Fox Film Corporation in conjunction with British interests.
Frank A. Vanderlip, former chairman of the National City Bank, and a former Paramount Publix director.
Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board, former president of Paramount Publix Corporation, and founder of the company.

When the stockholders' meeting opened, presided over by Mr. Zukor, there were present representatives or owners of 2,327,484 of the 3,382,524 common shares outstanding, equal to some 72 per cent. Of these, 2,110,222 were in the hands of the Stockholders' Protective Committee. No dissenting votes were cast.

Proceeding, the stockholders voted to change the corporate name from Paramount Publix Corporation to Paramount Pictures, Inc., adopted by-laws for the reorganized company and otherwise carried into effect the provisions of the plan.

Paramount Pictures, Inc., the name of the reorganized corporation, evolves from the Famous Players Film Company as organized by Adolph Zukor in 1912; Famous Players-Lasky Company, in which Jesse Lasky, now a Fox producer, joined Mr. Zukor in 1916; the Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, adopted in 1927, and Paramount Publix Corporation, the last previous change, made in 1930.

Apparently authoritative sources indicated on Wednesday that Edgar S. Bloom, president of Western Electric Company, was being mentioned as successor to John E. Otterson in the presidency of Electrical Research Products, Inc., a Western Electric subsidiary. Mr. Otterson was elected president of the new Paramount Pictures earlier in the week.

In some quarters the possible installation of Mr. Bloom as Erpi president, the while continuing to serve as president of Western Electric, was viewed with special interest in view of the policy of the Telephone Company and allied corporations in not favoring interlocking executive arrangements.

The board of directors of Western Electric will meet before June 17 to take action.

The stockholders appointed Bankers Trust Company, transfer agent, and the Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, registrar for the first preferred stock; the Manufacturers Trust Company, transfer agent and the Lawyers County Trust Company, registrar for the new second preferred stock; and the Commercial National Bank and Trust Company, transfer agent and the Chemical Bank and Trust Company registrar for the common stock.

The new board of directors met, for the first time, at four o'clock on Tuesday afternoon in the Paramount Building, and concluded the election of officers within four hours after their own ratification by the stockholders.

Associated with Mr. Fortington, chairman, on the executive committee will be John D. Hertz, Maurice Newton, Gerald Brooks, Duncan G. Harris, Stephen Callaghan, Percy H. Johnston, Adolph Zukor and Mr. Otterson. All are board members.

Broadway and Wall Street had been expecting Mr. Otterson's election, his name having been mentioned variously in this connection over a period of weeks, although it had been reported that one of the conditions set down by him was that he would not accept unless the board was unanimous and unless his election, too, would be agreeable to Mr. Zukor.

In announcing the installation of the board and the election of officers, the corporation said: "It is expected that the reorganization proceedings before the district court will be so far completed that the properties which have been in the hands of Mr. Charles D. Hilles and Mr. Eugene W. Leake, as trustees, can be turned over to the administration of the corporation under its new board and officers about June 17th." On that date the court will be asked to issue a final decree discharging the receivership.

Zukor 23 Years in Industry

The activity in the industry of Adolph Zukor, new chairman of the board of Paramount Pictures, Inc., is closely knit into the industry's development over a period of 23 years.

Born in Ricse, Hungary, Jan. 7, 1873, Mr. Zukor emigrated to this country when 16. In 1892 he went to Chicago, where he was successful in the fur trade. Returning to New York, in 1903 he ventured with Marcus Loew into the penny arcade theatrical novelty. Mr. Zukor subsequently became treasurer of the Marcus Loew Enterprises. In 1912 Mr. Zukor formed Famous Players Film Company. Four years later Mr. Zukor's company and Jesse L. Lasky's Feature Play Company combined under the name of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. At the same time, to insure stability of the distribution outlet for the company's productions, the merged organization absorbed Paramount Pictures Corporation, a distribution and sales company.

Under Mr. Zukor's management and guidance some of the most famous stars of the screen were developed. The company was one of the first producing-distributing organizations to erect theatres in the key cities of the country, and this led eventually to the establishment, in 1926, of Publix Theatres Corporation, subsidiary of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In 1927 Famous Players-Lasky changed its corporate name to Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation and in 1930 to Paramount Publix Corporation. The stock of Mr. Zukor's company constituted the first motion picture shares to be registered on the New York Stock Exchange.

Otterson Erpi Head in 1928

John Edward Otterson, industrialist, engineer and business executive, the new elected president of Paramount Pictures, Inc., and subsidiary companies, was born in Allegheny, Pa., March 29, 1881, and was graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., in 1904 and from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology five years later.

He served in the United States Navy from 1900 to 1915, retiring as a naval constructor with the rank of lieutenant. For the next six years he was with the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., and was president at the time he left the company to join Winchester

49 from M·G·M

(and they will make box-office history!)

WAITING!

Signal for the march to your box-office is the appearance of the First Lady of the Screen Norma Shearer. It happened thrillingly with "Riptide" and "Barretts of Wimpole Street." They're waiting . . . eagerly!

KARENINA!

Greta Garbo's completed production of "Anna Karenina" in which Fredric March co-stars is the Garbo-thrill that swept her to world fame. What they've yearned for of heart-throb and pulse-exciting romance awaits your patrons. Her greatest of all time!

TOPS!

No age limit when Clark Gable comes to town. From six to sixty they're paying guests at your show-shop. That million dollar personality is one of the big reasons why "China Seas" is BIG!

NATURAL!

Diamond-in-the-rough describes best the hearty, human loveableness of Wallace Beery. He delights the mass audience. At his best in "China Seas" that hit of all hits!

POPULARITY!

Deserved! Because pictures like "Chained" and "Forsaking All Others" have intrenched scintillating Joan Crawford at the top. Feminine allure and dramatic power are nowhere so exquisitely blended. Star of stars!

CHARM!

There's only one Bob Montgomery in picture business. In a class by himself because he combines romantic appeal, boyish charm and a swell comedy sense. When Bob's on the screen, all the girl friends and their escorts are on hand to greet him!

PLATINUM!

Perfect setting for a seductive box office jewel, Jean Harlow. Her romance with Clark Gable in famed "China Seas" out-thrills unforgettable "Red Dust." The flappers and their boy friends adore Jean!

FAME!

They refer to him as The Thin Man just as often as they call him William Powell. By any name he's box-office! Slick, suave, appealing, he's a delight. The gay sequel to his famed hit is an assured success.

STARDOM!

The public makes stars. No other personality of the year was so unmistakably chosen for electric lights as charming, natural Myrna Loy. Watch for further adventures in the life of Mr. and Mrs. Thin Man, a hit-sequel to that great hit!

IDOL!

Welcome Nelson Eddy to marquee fame! Never in all the history of pictures has one thrilling appearance catapulted a personality to the very top! Editorials, critical notices, audience comments, exhibitor reports... all agree that the stalwart, handsome singing hero of "Naughty Marietta" is slated for 1935-36's greatest male popularity!

GLORY!
Born to sing love songs to the millions reaching for romance! Jeanette MacDonald won a new and vaster popularity as "Naughty Marietta" and she sings on to greater entertainment heights!

DEVOTION!

On the covers of many fan magazines her blonde beauty is evidence of a continued desire of ticket-buyers for the langorous Constance Bennett appeal. Her following is large—and loyal.

COPPERFIELD!

They'll see Freddie Bartholomew again in Garbo's greatest picture "Anna Karenina." The future of this appealing lad is plainly marked. He is destined to be the greatest child box-office draw of all time!

TROPHY!

A year ago, Charles Laughton won the highest honor this industry can bestow, the Academy Award. Since then he has continued to build as a creator of roles, as a box-office name. The public says it: "What an actor!"

SONGBIRD!

Grace Moore in a big M-G-M musical production is promise of beauty, thrill and romance on your screen. Worthy recipient of praises and prizes for the joy she has brought to the millions. Exquisite voice! Radiant physical allure!

M-G-M!

The First Company has engaged the Marx Brothers, First comedians of show business, and has given them a brand new box-office idea. They have completed a record-breaking tour to try out this idea before audiences. Only M-G-M does it!

ACTOR!

The appearance of Lionel Barrymore in a picture is guarantee that another perfect characterization will be recorded in the Film Hall of Fame. M-G-M proudly gives another season of a great actor to your patrons.

NEW!

Watch Spencer Tracy under the banner of M-G-M! Grand actor, forceful personality, established popularity...and the plus quantity is the STAR-building magic of the STAR company. He's coming into his own in 1935-36!

THANKFUL!

Not even Hal Roach or M-G-M were entirely aware of the amazing world-wide popularity of Laurel-Hardy. Telegrams, cables, barrels-full of letters protested the parting of these beloved comics. Result: they're happily re-united. The world they've cheered is thankful!

WINNING!

The real thing. When he acts, it's your boy and every boy. When his voice sobs, it's Jackie Cooper living a true-life role that clutches at the hearts of the folks out front. Jackie's got millions of friends!

CHINA SEAS

is COMPLETED and will be released in August. It is one of the GREATEST FILMS EVER MADE! starring

CLARK GABLE · JEAN HARLOW · WALLACE BEERY

Based on novel by Crosbie Garsten. Directed by Tay Garnett. Adapted by Jules Furthman

WHEN you glimpse Irving Thalberg's production of "China Seas", you will get an idea of the kind of product M-G-M will flash on the industry in the new season. From now on the title "China Seas" will be mentioned wherever film folk meet. You will read about it often in the trade press.

Behind a wall at the M-G-M studios is one of the most amazing sets created since "Ben-Hur." It is the harbor of Hong Kong, noisy, crowded, colorful. Here is enacted the pulse-pounding drama between Clark Gable, as the hard-bitten sea-faring man; Jean Harlow as the frank lady of the Oriental ports and Wallace Beery as the bluff trader who also seeks Miss Harlow's affections. The power and the elemental thrill of Gable and Harlow in this picture is even more tempestuous than it was in "Red Dust."

"China Seas" deals with fierce loves, bitter hatreds and dangerous intrigues and is played against a background of tropical hurricanes and pirate raids. Aboard the wheezy old liner Kin Lung, as she beats down the coast from Hong Kong to Singapore, are not only the group of white people in her cabins but also a wild assortment of Malay gangsters in her forecastle. Storms batter the Kin Lung and all but disable her. Pirates capture her and torture Gable, her skipper. The pirate raid is a scene never to be forgotten in the action annals of films. And right out of the headlines, too, for this coast of China is the last stronghold of pirates today. This stark, throbbing panorama comes to the screen for the first time in what is destined to be one of the most lustily exciting screen dramas of our time.

WIFE vs. SECRETARY

Based on the novel by Faith Baldwin in Cosmopolitan Magazine

LISTEN to this yarn . . . and visualize it portrayed by BIG STAR names . . . and produced in the de luxe M-G-M manner with backgrounds of Park Avenue penthouses, swanky Palm Beach, beautiful Bermuda. Faith Baldwin, the authoress, who knows what-the-public-wants, has given here in full, rich measure, a sparkling comedy drama. She relates her high-voltage story in the ultra modern manner, and yet with a tug at the heart and a primitive elemental thrill of the soul. Briefly, a combination business executive and society playboy in love with his wife engages in a harmless flirtation with his beautiful secretary. This man finds it possible to be crazy over two women at the same time and true to both of them. The secretary doesn't want another woman's husband. She doesn't know that side of him. She's in love with her boss, a different kind of loyalty and devotion that the modern world of business causes to happen. On the other hand, the wife doesn't truly know the man at the office. But audiences will be excited by this true-story-telling, because these human relationships happen in their own lives. The showman-producers of M-G-M sensed this in the selection of this story. Their judgment has been confirmed by the overwhelming response which Miss Baldwin's story has received nation-wide from readers of Cosmopolitan Magazine. It is one of the HIT magazine features of the year. It will be one of the HIT screen attractions of '35-'36 in a Star-Studded, de luxe M-G-M entertainment.

BROADWAY MELODY OF 1936

Cast: JACK BENNY, ELEANOR POWELL, ROBERT TAYLOR, SID SILVERS, BUDDY & VILMA EBSEN, JENNY LEGON, FRANCES LANGFORD, SHIRLEY ROSS, UNA MERKEL, STUART ERWIN, JUNE KNIGHT, NICK LONG, JR., Etc.

Director, Roy Del Ruth. Book by Jack McGowan and Sid Silvers. Music by Brown and Freed. Dances staged by Dave Gould. Special Dance Number by Carl Randall.

OKAY, gentlemen...tell us it was a long time coming ... tell us the public has patiently awaited another smash romantic musical to equal M-G-M's one and only original "Broadway Melody." But don't forget to add that all the dreams have come true ... here is "Broadway Melody of 1936" to top its famed predecessor with its talent, with its music, with its production wonders and with its story that combines heart-throbs, dramatic suspense, a million laughs and a wallop at the end to send them away cheering. It was the exciting human interest story of M-G-M's earlier success that kept them clinging to the edge of their seats. The "Broadway Melody of 1936" is blessed with a dramatic love story twice as intense, with twists and unexpected developments in rapid-fire, breath-taking profusion. Unique methods of introducing song and dance and spectacle, make this a model of ingenuity. Carl Randall's "Magic Dance" number, mystifying as a Houdini trick and beautiful to behold, is a brand new note on the screen. Numbers like "I've Got A Feeling For You," "Broadway Rhythm" and "Lucky Star" blaze a new trail for music and spectacle on the screen. And that WALLOP at the end ... a surprise finish with a bang! And what a cast, headed by radio favorite Jack Benny. And those gowns by Adrian! Sing out the good news..."Broadway Melody of 1936"... a success-picture that will pack them in for the biggest money's worth of joy they've ever had in their lives.

A TALE OF TWO CITIES

RONALD COLMAN

and big name cast, including

ELIZABETH ALLAN, BASIL RATHBONE, DUDLEY DIGGES, EDNA MAY OLIVER, CONSTANCE COLLIER, HENRY B. WALTHAL, REGINALD OWEN, WALTER CATLETT

Based on the Charles Dickens novel. Adapted to the screen by W. P. Lipscomb, who did the famed script on "Les Miserables." Jack Conway, Director

AT this time when BIG spectacular productions defy all precedent in what they can do at the box office, M-G-M comes along with the BIGGEST! "A Tale of Two Cities" is Dickens' most celebrated action romance, read by millions, known the world over.

The drama takes place in London and Paris during the thunderous days of the French Revolution. Ronald Colman plays the part of Sidney Carton, handsome English idler who falls in love with Lucie Manette, French beauty. Lucie, after securing the release of her father from the grim prison Bastille, marries Charles Darnay, a titled French nobleman who greatly resembles Carton. Darnay bravely faces the terror of Paris to rescue an old family servant; he is betrayed by the shrewdness of the relentless Madame Defarge, a wine-seller, and is thrown into the dread dungeons of the Revolutionists. The spectacle approaches its unforgettable climax when Ronald Colman, as Carton, taking advantage of his resemblance to the condemned Darnay, saves the husband of Lucie whom he loves dearly, by substituting himself in the dungeon and going to his death on the scaffold instead of Darnay.

How fortunate that writer W. P. Lipscomb, whose screen story of "Les Miserables" is so widely credited with that picture's success, should be the one selected to tell the story of "A Tale of Two Cities" for the screen. Go back in your memory to the most glorious M-G-M giant attractions that have stirred the world and be assured that "A Tale of Two Cities" will top them all!

THE FORTY DAYS OF MUSA DAGH

Based on the novel by Franz Werfel. Screen play by Carey Wilson and Talbot Jennings.

THE most electrifying announcement of recent times was the flash to the world that M-G-M had bought the year's best seller, "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh," and that this remarkable novel would be filmed by Irving Thalberg as one of the most staggering production-undertakings of all picture history. No wonder this news-flash sped to the four corners of the globe, because the book, with its heart-stabbing story, had gripped the sympathetic attention of a world-audience. More than a hundred and seventy thousand copies were rapidly sold and the presses have been pouring forth additional thousands ever since! Why? Because this is life's blood, vivid on the printed page . . . the drama of the people of seven Armenian villages who, during the first year of the World War were cut off from the rest of the world. Facing extermination at the hands of the Turks, their beautiful daughters fleeing from the bestial approach of the soldiery, struggling against inhuman odds to preserve their lives, this wretched band entrenched themselves in the wild fastnesses of the holy mountain Musa Dagh. At their head was a handsome and wealthy young Armenian who yielded a life of ease and luxury in Paris to lead his distressed people. A mountain forest fire, a devastating avalanche, the endless replacement troops of the enemy, the distracting love of a beautiful woman . . . all these plagued him, but for forty memorable, world-shaking days he and his little band held out. And then at desperation's last stand, when the French cruisers arrive for the breath-taking rescue, there is climax on climax to win the tears and cheers of all audiences. There are actually 63 name parts assuring a host of the industry's stars in the brilliant cast of next season's towering entertainment. Salute now the genius of Thalberg, for this picture is destined for inclusion among the rare few immortalized in the Screen's Hall of Fame! Backed by a $2,500 Prize Contest now current in Modern Screen Magazine in cooperation with M-G-M and the publishers, Viking Press.

THE GREAT ZIEGFELD

WILLIAM POWELL

and Big Name Cast

By arrangement with the estate of Florenz Ziegfeld and presented in an original story by William Anthony McGuire

EVERYBODY wanted it! M-G-M got it! So big in possibilities, so gigantic in stature for proper presentation of the most magical name in show business . . . that only M-G-M could handle it! ZIEGFELD! What a wealth of showmanship it represents for every highway and byway of the globe! It is the symbol of this generation's ultimate vision of what's top in the show world! A trade-mark on any theatre's marquee that pre-sells a giant entertainment GLORIFYING THE AMERICAN GIRL. Only M-G-M has the rights to "The Great Ziegfeld," a name that's worth its weight in gold, built up by years of glamour and scintillating headliners. The production of this picture is being undertaken by the M-G-M studios on a scale ranking with the most pretentious in its history. William Powell has been chosen for the role of Ziegfeld. Harriet Hoctor, dancing star, is the first of a long list of celebrities engaged. Of many lavish scenes, a typical example is the Lion Ballet being staged by the renowned dance director, Seymour Felix, in which countless beauties, trained lions, ponies, dogs and other animals take part. William Anthony McGuire, who wrote the original story, will be associated in its production. McGuire's background of hits gives you an idea of what he can do..."Whoopee," "Three Musketeers," "Kid Boots," "Roman Scandals," just to mention a few that poured millions into box-offices! And that's why Mr. Exhibitor may safely dust off the S.R.O. sign...or better yet, get himself a few extra ones, for here comes M-G-M's "The Great Ziegfeld."

GARBO and FREDRIC MARCH in ANNA KARENINA

The Cast: GRETA GARBO, FREDRIC MARCH, FREDDIE BARTHOLOMEW, MAUREEN O'SULLIVAN, MAY ROBSON, REGINALD OWEN, BASIL RATHBONE, REGINALD DENNY, PHOEBE FOSTER, JOAN MARCH and 15 more!

THOSE who have been priviliged to see the completed production of "Anna Karenina" state without reservation that this is the Garbo picture for which the fans have yearned. This is the Garbo to yield tears, to grip souls, to thrill a romance-hungry world. Beautiful wife of a neglectful Russian government official, she meets the handsome Vronsky and their lives become fatefully joined. Their overpowering love surmounts tragedy and social ostracism. Their story is tear-dimmed, yet exquisitely beautiful, a drama so gripping it reaches deep into the public heart. Garbo is magnificent. Fredric March, newly applauded in "Les Miserables," is handsome and powerful in his role of lover. Freddie Bartholomew makes his first appearance following his "Copperfield" triumph and is definitely on the way to stardom. The skilled direction of Clarence Brown prophesies a headline triumph of the next season!

AFTER THE THIN MAN with WM. POWELL • MYRNA LOY

A NATURAL because the fans are waiting for it. And Dashiell Hammett, the author, Goodrich and Hackett, the adaptors, and W. S. Van Dyke, the director, are conspiring again to repeat the record-breaking success of their previous popular entertainment, "The Thin Man." The sequel is equally smart in dialogue and much more dramatic in story, with the delightful romantic feeling between William Powell and Myrna Loy that the fans loved.

First in Story Properties

Following are part of M-G-M's great story properties from which many of the 1935-36 productions may be selected

Simmons Company as president. In 1924 Mr. Otterson became associated with the International Western Electric Co., of which he was general commercial manager when three years later he was made a director and vice-president of Electrical Research Products, Inc. He was elevated to the presidency of Erpi in 1928 when the film industry entered the sound era.

Mr. Otterson also is president and a director of most of the international subsidiaries of Western Electric. He is a director of Exhibitors' Reliance Corporation, New York; the American Arbitration Association, New York; New Haven Hospital and New Haven Chamber of Commerce, and is a member of the U. S. Naval Institute, Navy Athletic League and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Alumni Association.

Schaefer Up from Ranks

George J. Schaefer, new elected vice-president of Paramount Pictures, rose from the ranks of the company. Born in Brooklyn Nov. 5, 1888, and receiving his education in the Brooklyn public and high schools and Heffley Institute, he entered the automobile manufacturing business, remaining until 1914. His first position in the film industry was as secretary to L. J. Selznick, remaining with him until 1916 when he was named assistant sales manager of World Film Co. His promotion to district manager followed a year later. In 1920 he joined Paramount as booker at the New York exchange and a year later was elevated to district manager of the New England territory. In 1926 he was appointed sales manager for District Number 1, and his subsequent rise brought him into the general sales manager's post. Later he was made vice-president and general manager of Paramount Pictures Distributing Corp.

Keough Succeeded Ludvigh

Austin C. Keough, reelected secretary, has served as head of the legal department for the Paramount Publix Corp. and was secretary of the older organization. He long was counsel for Publix Theatres and upon retirement of Elek John Ludvigh as general counsel for Paramount Publix assumed his present post.

Cokell Joined in 1920

Walter B. Cokell, reelected treasurer, has held the post the past two years. He was born in Denver and educated at Denver University and New York University. He started with Paramount in May, 1920.

While Paramount stockholders were moving toward reorganization, steps were being taken to clear up the $23,644,255 claim by Allied Owners Corporation against Paramount. Hearing was to be held Thursday before Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe on approval of the agreement between the Paramount trustees and Allied providing for settlement of the claim by allowing the claim of $5,000,000 in the reorganization proceedings.

The Allied Owners' claim settlement is included in the Paramount reorganization plan but has not been aproved by the court due to the inability of Allied trustees to complete reorganization of that company. Approval of the settlement is essential to completion of Paramount's reorganization.

The settlement provides for the issuance to Allied of new Paramount securities in settlement of the $5,000,000 claim, the payment of $150,000 in cash, the purchase of the Alabama in Birmingham, and the leasing of the Paramount, Brooklyn; Paramount, Fremont, Ohio, and Paramount, Glens Falls, N. Y. In addition, the Paramount trustees are to pay $1,500 cash to Al E. Reuben, trustee in bankruptcy, for Publix-Ohio Corporation, and releases to Loew's, Inc., on three theatres formerly in the Allied group.

Approval of a reorganization plan for Allied Theatre Owners was postponed until Friday when it came before Federal Judge Robert A. Inch in Brooklyn earlier this week. The delay again was due to the lack of an agreement with the U. S. Treasury Department on an income tax claim.

Schaefer Claim Up June 11

The $98,563 salary claim of George J. Schaefer, as general manager, will be heard June 11 before Special Master John E. Joyce on petition of the Paramount trustees to settle the claim by allowing $55,000 in the reorganization proceedings. June 19 has been fixed as the date for hearing before Judge Coxe on the question whether the $5,000,000 A. B. Momand antitrust suit can be allowed as a claim in the reorganization proceedings.

The circuit court of appeals on Tuesday reserved decision on the application of William Yoost, Paramount bondholder, for leave to appeal from the decision of Judge Coxe approving the Paramount-Erpi agreement providing for settlement of Erpi's $19,000,000 claim. His petition to appeal was opposed by Paramount counsel. A decision is expected in a few weeks.

AYLESWORTH DENIES MERGER DISCUSSED

The New York Herald-Tribune on Wednesday said: "Radio Keith Orpheum and Paramount have come to no decision on merging, it was learned yesterday. Admittedly, the matter has been discussed but both sides are so far apart as to preclude amalgamation at this time. Discussions will nevertheless be continued, it was intimated, as it is contended the merger might result in operating economies." Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of RKO, said this report was not founded on fact and that there have been no such negotiations or discussions.

Gift Rage Sweeps Australia Again

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

The gift hullabaloo again has broken out here, and the inducements to patrons range from a parcel of crockery to a lounge suite! Future distributions include radios, vacuum cleaners, more furniture, and other gifts, while one exhibitor carried the line in his billing matter—"Bigger and Better Gifts Next Saturday!"

Realizing that the whole thing was getting out of control, the New South Wales Exhibitors Association called a general meeting and decided, with but two dissentients, to approach the Motion Picture Distributors Association with a request that someone apply the brake and apply it fast. The distributors replied that they were right behind the exhibitors; but the task of calling a halt and that of causing a halt were vastly different propositions.

In the earlier days of films in Australia, exhibitors hit on the idea of giving the children lollies at the matinees. From plain lollies the gifts grew into the form of an expensive chocolate, until finally the night patrons began to share in the spoils, and the mere chocolates were displaced by blocks of land and motor cars. In the smaller suburban houses, it was only a matter of time before you could go to the pictures by tendering a packet of tea or a couple of empty bottles—anything, provided it was saleable and approximately to the value of the admission prices. The result was that whatever dignity or goodwill the motion picture had built round itself completely disappeared and it was long before it regained it.

The swift action of the exhibitors' and distributors' associations in counteracting the revival of this old evil is to be commended. Donations of free gifts to patrons are tantamount to price reductions, and, rather than reductions, it's a general price increase that this industry needs most now.

North Dakota Owners Will Meet on June 11

Members of the North Dakota Theatre Owners Association will meet in Fargo, June 11, to consolidate exhibitor forces in the state "for mutual protection," according to an announcement by O. K. Engen, secretary. A new scale of dues provides for an assessment equal to each theatre's gross on May 10, this year, with a $10 minimum.

SOVIET SCREEN MISSION FINDS U. S. INDUSTRY COOL—N. Y. CLUB LISTENS

Comrade Boris Shumiatsky Is Interviewed and Tells Plans for Expansion and Continued Red "Educational" Program

by TERRY RAMSAYE

IN a curious, indirect fashion the Soviet Motion Picture Industry established contact with and had audience before the motion picture industry of the United States, through the agency of the Motion Picture Club of New York, in session assembled for this week's weekly forum. The occasion leaves Russia's motion picture relations with the American industry in a state somewhat kindred to the diplomatic status between the nations, a recognition without recognition, a lot of conversation, very little understanding and no business. Meanwhile bouquets and polite exchanges of kind words with thorns under the blossoms were abundant.

The all-Russian program of the Motion Picture Club in New York came in sequel to a visit of a part of the Russian looking-and-seeing delegation to Hollywood, with approaches, semi-official to the organized industry, arriving at not so much. There was a Hollywood visit but no official contacts. Officially the American motion picture industry does not know the Russians are here.

Meanwhile with that undisturbed, persistent adherence to the program which characterizes all things Soviet, the who's who and what of the industry of the U. S. S. R. looks America over and plans ahead, as smilingly, as politely, as enigmatically diplomatic as a Japanese admiral functioning as a butler.

If one may deduce, and one may deduce amply, the representations of the representatives of the Soviet cinema indicate nothing beyond a continuance of the rigidly state controlled motion picture program of the years since the Red Revolution. There is not even remote prospect that the Russian cinema will go any farther into the amusement business than is absolutely necessary to keep the populace looking at the propaganda laden screen. If the words of the Soviet's spokesmen before the Motion Picture Club are to be taken for what they said, the State is still and ever will be the Screen, over there, for the State's purposes.

The cautiously rehearsed expressions of the Russians aimed at substitution of the word "education" for propaganda, and an inference that henceforward art should count for more than in the heated direct action days, but the only modifications in the Red screen tune are in the suavity of words used, not in the policies themselves.

There were careful words that an optimistic sales manager might interpret as a promise of a vast Russian market for American screen wares, but only a sales manager could hope on such words.

Most important among the spokesmen for Russia was Comrade Boris Z. Shumiatsky, no less than the head of the Soviet Motion Picture Industry, in person.

By reason of the ingenuity of Louis Nizer, presiding, Comrade Shumiatsky was interviewed before the gathering and the assorted microphones with a series of questions and answers, interpreted from English-to-Russian-and-back by facile bi-lingual Colonel Boros Morros, managing director of the Paramount Theatre in Times Square.

In sum Comrade Shumiatsky, in answer to questions, said that the screen is so much the instrument of education that it must ever be considered an instrument of the state, that Russia has today some 3,000 theatres wired for sound and must immediately proceed to increase the number to 40,000, that production is financed by the state, that star values and careers are decided upon by the state.

Many other things were said, but none that could be interpreted as indicating that there is now or will be under the rule of the status quo in Russia such an institution of the screen as the American motion picture industry.

It was the admission, official and unofficial, of the Russians that a study was was being made of the American industry because of its superior technological attainment, its facility with the tools.

Comrade Shumiatsky set forth that in the year 1935 the Soviet industry would be producing a total of about 300 feature length productions and about an equal number of shorts including what the Soviet calls newsreels and cartoons. It was indicated that there was afoot a plan in France for an exchange of newsreel material with Pathe-Natan and perhaps in the United States with Paramount News.

For censorship questions Comrade Shumiatsky had very brief and simple answer. He said in substance that there are seven soviet republics. No picture is released in any of them without the approval of the Commissar at the head of the republic. The approval of one of them is usually followed by that of the other six. It is that simple.

Discussing the star system and salaries was rendered equally simple. The worker of promise goes to the government's film academy for further training—and is rewarded as seems fit. In the Russian industry, it seems, there are no salary negotiations —and emphatically no star's agents.

When the irrepressible Harry Hershfield sent via Mr. Nizer a question as to "what colors will be allowed on the Russian screen if they get Technicolor," Comrade Shumiatsky abandoned his prior calm and took off into an eloquent dissertation which when boiled down from Colonel Morros' translation meant "Russian pictures will always be Russia, or Red." It was put in another, esoteric manner, a manner of saying that pictures should reflect the art and attitude of the nation of their origin.

Others on the dais, members of the Russian delegation, included V. Verlinsky, president of the Amkino Corporation, New York; Friederich Ermler, president of the Association of Directors and Actors of the U. S. S. R.; Vladimir Nilsen, president of the Faculty of Cinema Technique of the Motion Picture Institute of Moscow, famed as a camera man, and G. Melamed, consul general of the U. S. S. R.; Josef Zimanich of National Screen Service; Phil Reisman, RKO's foreign manager, and Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Oliver Saylor, a celebrated student of the Russian theatre and friend of Russian art, also spoke.

Among those present was Matty Radin, the highly successful exhibitor of Russian films at the Cameo and Acme theatres in New York.

The Russian situation and its art of the cinema is as was. So are screen relations with the American industry.

The Soviet leaders who were guests of the New York Motion Picture Club on Tuesday were to be, with the exception of Vladimir Nilsen, guests of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at its weekly luncheon meeting Thursday, at the Hotel Edison near Longacre Square. Tom Howard, Broadway comedian, will entertain.

Deny Destroying Duovac Equipment

Seven employees of Electrical Research Products, Inc., co-defendants with Western Electric Company and American Telephone and Telegraph Company in the anti-trust action brought by General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation, denied destroying or mutilating Duovac and other non-Western tubes in sound equipment of the defendants, as the trial, in its seventh week, neared an end in United States district court at Wilmington, Del.

Harry J. Mayer, installation engineer; Arthur F. Brolin, service engineer; Arthur J. Rademacher, district supervisor; Olan W. Hancock, service engineer; Emil F. Hamberger, engineer; William C. Clarkin, engineer, and William S. Weatherspoon, service supervisor, made the denials.

The incident in question was at the Chaloner theatre in New York, where tests were being made with Duovac and Western Electric tubes. Mr. Mayer testified that two Duovac tubes in Erpi sound equipment in the Chaloner were "glassy" and that he told Bill Jessop, projectionist, who testified for the plaintiffs more than a month ago and Manager Fein to have the tubes replaced. He denied removing them himself and also denied injuring them. Mr. Brolin denied removing a Metropolitan tube from the theatre and nipping the prongs.

Arthur E. Axt, another Erpi service engineer, refuted the previous testimony of Nathan Goldman, president of Duovac and denied a threat was made to remove Erpi equipment from the Cameo theatre in the Bronx because Duovac tubes were used.

E. C. Mills, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, in rebuttal of John E. Otterson's testimony, denied he had insisted upon a clause in the publishers' contract that songs were to be released only for pictures to be reproduced on Erpi equipment. He said Erpi executives and counsel had written in the clause.

Edwin C. Shriber, Erpi sales representative, was questioned concerning previous statements by Jacob Levin, New York salesman for General Talking Pictures. Mr. Shriber denied there was any discussion with the operators of theatres in Hopewell and Williamsburg, Va., to the effect that unless the theatres were equipped with Erpi sound they could not get films.

Refutes Duovac Testimony

Franklin T. Woodward, attorney associated with Western Electric, placed on record a condensed picture of Erpi's patent position. He told of amplification and speaker suits against Stanley Company of America, General Talking Pictures, Pacent Reproducing Company, Pacent Electric, Sol Wallerstein, Silvertone Corporation, Maiden Toledo, Inc.; C. A. Fox, Biophone Corp.; Kersten Radio Equipment Company, Amphion Corporation of America, John T. Day, Ultra Sound System, Incorporated and Cinema Supplies, Inc.

R. Earle Anderson, treasurer of Erpi, testified concerning the license agreements between Erpi and theatre operators and owners.

Film Shown in Rebuttal

A feature film was shown for Judge John P. Nields by the plaintiffs on DeForest equipment. The court adjourned Tuesday afternoon to the theatre in order that the showing might be read into the record of the trial. The films, rushed direct from Hollywood, were shown as part of the rebuttal of Samuel E. Darby, of New York chief counsel for the plaintiffs.

The DeForest equipment was brought from New York and installed in 24 hours by eight engineers of General Talking Pictures under the direction of Chester Tappan, chief engineer. Three armed guards stood watch over the equipment in the projection booth and in the theatre. The entire showing was handled by David R. Hochreich, Vocafilm president, who is preparing a $65,000,000 suit against the same defendants. He represented Max A. Schlesinger, GTP president, in the installation.

The program did not even mention the feature picture, but it did poke a little fun at the defendants. It read: "The General Talking Picture Corporation presents the DeForest Phonofilm Sound System in a demonstration performance at the Playhouse, Wilmington, Del., evening of June fourth, 8:30 o'clock, with no apologies to Electrical Research Products, Inc."

BIP to Increase Theatres to 300

Theatre holdings of British International Pictures in Great Britain will be increased to 300 by the end of the year from the present total of 240, said John Maxwell, chairman of the board, on arrival in New York Tuesday. The company has 40 houses under construction and a score more will be acquired, he added. Each new theatre will average 2,000 seats and cost $250,000.

Mr. Maxwell will decide the company's future policy in this country on the basis of a survey conducted the last three weeks by Arthur Dent, general manager. This is Mr. Maxwell's first visit to America in four years.

BIP is spending from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 a year on production, and plans to make 25 pictures this year. Five now in production are "Invitation to a Waltz," "My Heart's Delight," "The DuBarry," "Old Heidelberg" and "Music Hath Charms." Talent is being sought in Hollywood.

From England comes word that for the second time in recent months, BIP is reported to have turned down an offer to purchase Gaumont British.

Warner "G Men" Suit Opening in Chicago

Arguments were to be heard this week in Chicago federal court on a report of a hearing before a master of chancery on charges of unfair competition in advertising brought by Warner against Indiana Amusement Enterprises and Publix Great States. The suits grew out of Warners' charge that the circuits were using the title "G Men" in advertising the United Artists film, "Let 'Em Have It," in their typographical arrangement of the phrase "government men."

Allied to Lay Plans In New York June 16

Unfinished business remaining from the recent national convention in Atlanta will be taken up at a two-day session of Allied's board of directors at the Warwick hotel, New York, starting June 13.

Among those attending will be Abram F. Myers, general counsel; Sidney Samuelson, president; Nathan Yamins, director, Fall River, Mass., and Ray Branch, director, Detroit.

Cites Improved Standards

Industry standards have improved under the guidance of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, said Mrs. Leo B. Hedges, film chairman of the California Congress of Parents and Teachers, in a radio address at Los Angeles Tuesday night. The talk was the first of a series over KFWB.

Bach Returns From England

W. A. Bach, president of Audio Productions, returning Tuesday from a two weeks trip to England, said that with the favorable reception of the "Musical Moods" series abroad the company plans 12 more for the new season. He revealed a deal with the Lyons Tea Company to produce an industrial reel for exhibition in Great Britain.

U. S. TO ACQUAINT EXHIBITORS WITH $50,000 REMODELING LOAN LIMIT

Application of Loan Widened to Include Air Conditioning, Seats, Organs, Lighting, Stage, Booth and Other Items

Major physical improvement of theatres in the larger communities is now possible under extension of loan guarantees by the Federal Housing Administration from the previous limitation of $2,000 to a maximum of $50,000. The President last week approved an amendment to the National Housing Act raising the maximum to the larger figure.

With funds thus made available for large-size repairs and remodeling, a vast new field is opened up for long-delayed modernization effort by theatres. The increased maximum is applicable to improvement loans on practically every type of structure except private dwellings.

Applicability Clarified

Immediately developing out of the Presidential extension of the loan insurance maximum was a determination of policy on the eligibility of certain types of equipment purchases under FHA loans, and a decision by the Administration to conduct a campain to outline to theatre owners the advantages accruing to them under the extension.

The Administration, in its campaign, which will get underway on Thursday, will set forth, for the first time, the nature of theatre equipment that may be purchased. Heretofore there has been much confusion both in Administration and exhibition circles over the eligibility of various types of accessories under a loan, due to the fact that the Administration at Washington many months ago had ruled that loans could not be made applicable to any removable equipment.

Differences of opinion arose as to what constituted "removable" and what represented "permanent" equipment. Now the FHA has decided that any part of or all of the loan may be spent on air conditioning, electric signs, fire prevention equipment, additional exits, rewiring, painting and redecorating, lighting fixtures, seats, ventilating systems, intra-theatre telephone systems, organs, rest rooms, plumbing, marquees, theatre fronts, ticket booths, flooring, new ramps, acoustical plaster, store space, stage remodeling or enlargement, dressing rooms, platforms over the orchestra pit, new offices, permanent cyclorama to include screen on stage, permanent stage platforms, new sign or carpentry shops, glass partitions to divide seats and the foyer, permanently installed projection equipment, smoking rooms and any type of structural rebuilding.

The FHA found that exhibitors generally, except those operating the smallest theatres, were unable to take advantage of the Federal Housing Act because, for the most part, they planned improvements which would cost several times the heretofore limited maximum of $2,000.

Not only will the Administration explain in its campaign how theatre owners can borrow substantial sums locally, through banks, with the loan guaranteed by the Government, but it will also explain to exhibitors some of the ways in which they can utilize such money in remodeling, re-equipping and otherwise rehabilitating their properties.

Officials of the FHA indicated that they will take more than ordinary interest in extending the loan facilities to the motion picture industry because of the enthusiastic cooperation which exhibitors have given the Administration in carrying the modernization program generally to the public through the distribution of literature and the showing of Federal Housing reels to audiences.

Administration Outlines Plan

"The National Housing Act, passed by Congress in June, 1934, included a property modernization plan of vital importance and great promise," it was declared in the Administration's outline to exhibitors.

"The modernization section of the National Housing Act as originally planned provided for the rehabilitation and repair of homes, farm properties, office buildings, factories, etc. Credit extension to the amount of $2,000 was made available for modernization purposes through lending agencies approved by the Federal Housing Administration and insured by it against loss. No security other than good credit reputation and reasonable assurance of ability to repay the amount within a five-year period in regular monthly installments was required.

"The $2,000 maximum amount of credit available for modernization purposes, however, limited the possibilities of the larger enterprises which required larger sums for reconstruction and the replacement or addition of equipment," and consequently, the FHA continued, "as a further impetus to business and in order that the larger concerns also might benefit to the fullest extent, an amendment to the National Housing Act has been passed by Congress and approved by the President, raising the $2,000 limit to $50,000.

"The motion picture industry has given consistent support to the Federal Housing Administration program and now, by the enactment of the amendment to the National Housing Act, is in a position to reap great benefit in the renovation of many of its theatres through the credit facilities offered."

Remodeling Suggestions Made

"A motion picture theatre is more than a building where pictures are shown. It is to many people a haven of refuge where one may remain for a short interval of peace away from outside strife, forgetting pain and disappointment in the distraction of news events or comedies, and interest in the joys and sorrows depicted on the screen," the FHA said.

"Motion picture enthusiasts have grown to expect pleasant, comfortable surroundings, as well as entertainment, for their price of admission. Many improvements to that end are available through the modernization credit plan. During the hot summer days it is most delightful to step into an air-cooled theatre for rest and entertainment, and the important theatres especially in the larger cities are air conditioned.

"Electric signs proclaim the feature film from afar and mean advertising money well spent. Safety must be considered at all cost and the installation of fire prevention equipment and additional exits may be the means of avoiding panic and of saving lives. Rewiring, too, may be necessary as a precautionary measure, and for economy in possible reduction of insurance premiums.

Administration Will Inform Theatremen of Ways to Utilize Money in Remodeling and Re-equipping Their Houses

"Paint is a great renovator and its use inside and out improves the appearance of a theatre. New lighting fixtures may be ornamental as well as useful. Comfortable seats add materially to the enjoyment of the program. Ventilating systems are not all they might be in many theatres and attention to that important matter may add to attendance. An intra-theatre telephone system to connect stage, office, box office, projection booth and lobby will save time and prove of great convenience.

Organ, Marquee, Flooring

"The owner of a motion picture theatre who has long wished to install a pipe organ may do so under modernization credit. Attractive rest rooms must be available, and those newly added or renovated demand the latest improvements in plumbing fixtures. The approach to the theatre should invite patronage and offer a welcome to the entertainment, and a new marquee and new or remodeled ticket booth may contribute to a favorable impression and increase business. Flooring is important. Wooden floors may be relaid or substituted for present flooring. Any of the applied floor coverings qualify for modernization credit.

"Accidents must be avoided, and with that in mind attention might be directed toward releveling ramps. The addition of acoustical plaster to present walls may be advisable. If extra space is available, it might be converted into small stores and thus reduce rental.

"Enlargement of the stage to take care of stage shows deserves consideration, as well as construction of dressing rooms, and the building of an attractive platform over the orchestra pit."

"Other building suggestions," the FHA advised, "might include offices under a balcony; permanent cyclorama to include screen on stage; permanent stage platforms for better installation of forms behind screen; a sign shop or carpentry department underneath the stage. The erection of glass partitions to divide seats and the foyer; the installation of new permanently installed projection equipment; converting empty organ chambers into glass enclosed space for the benefit of smokers, are other suggestions that will improve many present theatres. All of the work may now be undertaken and financed over a period of five years or less under the new provisions of the National Housing Act."

Carl Laemmle this week filed a general denial in Los Angeles court in answer to Frank Mastroly's suit against Universal for living expenses while in New York for the company.

HIGH COURT TO RULE ON STANDARD CONTRACT

Supreme Bench Grants Fox a Review of Minnesota Arbitration Case on October 7th

The legality of the Standard License Agreement, that instrument more generally known as the standard exhibition contract, which governs contractual relations between theatre owners and exchanges on product, will finally be determined by the United States supreme court.

Meeting Monday for the last time before its summer recess, the supreme court at Washington granted a petition of Fox Film Corporation for a review of the decision of the Minnesota supreme court holding the contract null and void. The case will be argued and decided at the fall term of the court, which begins October 7.

Second Time Before High Court

This is the second time this case has been before the U. S. supreme court. Early in the year it granted a petition for a writ of certiorari, but on February 18th dismissed it as having been improvidentially granted in view of the fact that no final judgment had been entered by the Minnesota courts. A decision by the state supreme court on April 11th paved the way for a new appeal.

The suit was initiated by Fox in an effort to collect $1,838 claimed due under two contracts calling for the delivery of 46 pictures to A. B. Muller, Minnesota exhibitor, who, it was declared, refused to accept or play, or pay the license fee for any of them.

Charged Conspiracy

The exhibitor defended the case on the ground that the contracts were illegal in their entirety because of the inclusion of arbitration clauses outlawed in the Paramount case in New York, and contended that the contracts were formulated as the result of combination and conspiracy among the ten large producers and distributors, in violation of the antitrust laws, and were in restraint of trade and interstate commerce.

At the trial it was agreed that the printed portions of the contracts were substantially the same as the contract involved in the Paramount case.

In their decisions, the Minnesota courts agreed that the arbitration clause was illegal and held that its illegality permeated the entire contract and rendered it invalid.

Gary Cooper Quits Hollywood Hussars

Mobilization of Hollywood's own private army, "The Hollywood Hussars," was interrupted briefly last week when the home office of Paramount in New York issued the following formal statement to the press:

"Gary Cooper (Paramount star) has announced his withdrawal of all support and implied endorsement from the organization known as the Hollywood Hussars, having learned that instead of a purely social group the men behind the promotion were urging it as a national organization of a semi-military-political nature.

"Printed matter and newspaper advertisements issued by the group have carried word that Cooper is the founder. This Cooper also denied. Arthur Guy Empey is listed as 'Colonel, Commanding,'"

"Colonel, Commanding" Empey, in commenting on Mr. Cooper's resignation, said:

"There is no hard feeling. The organization has outgrown the purpose for which Cooper organized it and intends to expand nationally. Cooper feels he doesn't want to be part of so extensive a body. The Hussars, however, are not a Fascist or a political group."

Mentioned Military Plans

Organization and the proposed procedure of the Hollywood Hussars was explained in Motion Picture Herald on May 11, based on information supplied, upon request, by the office of Colonel Empey at the Hussars' headquarters at the Hollywood Athletic Club. It was said that Mr. Cooper was not only the founder but had promised to contribute substantially to the development. They also said the Hussars was intended as a regiment so equipped that it could cope, within an hour, with any emergency "menacing the safety of the community." There was a definite mention of military plans and social activities throughout the entire prospectus, including training in equitation, marching and camping, weapons, military duty and the like.

The Hussars, answering the request for an explanation of their purpose, said, "We are solemnly pledged to uphold and to protect the sacred principles and ideals of our country." "Americanism," they added, "is an unfailing love of country; loyalty to its institutions and ideals; eagerness to defend it against all enemies; undivided allegiance to the flag; and a desire to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and posterity. Americanism is the foundation upon which we are building the Hollywood Hussars."

Mentioned as staff members, besides some score of active and retired regular United States Army officers, were: Edward Laemmle, Universal director; Harry D. Howell, former president of the Shrine Club, as second in command, and Jack Smalley, western manager for the Fawcett "fan" magazines.

Action Entirely Cooper's

Paramount's home office explained later this week that Mr. Cooper had requested the press department to announce his withdrawal from the Hussars, and that there had been no suggestion of such action made by the corporation.

There are two cavalry troops in Hollywood in addition to the "Hollywood Hussars." Both are older than the Hussars, and both, unlike the Empey troop, admit women to active membership. The Hussars, which charges initiation fees and monthly dues, permits women to act as hostesses at social affairs, as members of the social governing board, membership to which may be obtained upon payment into the regiment fund of not less than $100.

The original and oldest troop of the three is the "California Lancers," organized three years ago by a group of business men headed by Lieutenant Colonel Marco H. Hellman. The second troop is the "Victor McLaglen Light Horse," founded 18 months ago by the star. Rivalry between the three organizations is keen. All were ostensibly founded for the same purpose, to promote sportsmanship, and, as patriotic organizations, to stand ready to protect American citizens in emergencies.

Each of the three put forth separate claims to superiority. The "Lancers" boast that they are the only California mounted unit chartered by the state, and the only one of the three permitted to bear arms. The McLaglen troop is proud of its drum and bugle band. The Hussars claim the best equitation school. But all three claim they are prepared to meet any emergency requiring the use of cavalry.

Unlike the others, however, and one of the contributing causes to Mr. Cooper's resignation, the Hollywood Hussars "have determined to make our regiment the model which will inspire other communities to organize similar bodies of trained Americans throughout the country."

Warners Report $4,182,603 Cash

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and subsidiary companies report for the 26 weeks ended February 23, 1935 a net operating profit of $119,736, after deducting all charges including amortization and depreciation, but before deducting federal income taxes, as compared with a net operating profit of $78,855, after similar charges, for the corresponding period the previous year. However, after deducting federal income taxes (including federal income tax on taxable profits arising from discount on bonds purchased during the period) the net operating loss was $133,515.

The net profit from operations for the 26 weeks before amortization and depreciation of properties, and federal income taxes, was $3,151,045.78.

Current Assets $18,848,333

During the period $754,214 was credited direct to deficit account, representing profit of $740,993 on the redemption of funded indebtedness retired during the period, and other items amounting to $13,221.

The consolidated balance sheet as of February 23, 1935, shows total current assets of $18,848,333, including cash of $4,182,603. Current liabilities (other than mortgages and funded debt maturing within one year) were $12,404,441.

Working assets, related to current liabilities by a ratio of 9 to 6, were $2,187,177 greater than on the same date in 1934, and current liabilities were $378,082 less. Too, the corporation's cash position was considerably improved, the $4,182,603 cash on hand at the end of last February comparing with cash of $3,463,436, on the same date in 1934.

Production inventories—films on hand, completed, or in production, were valued at $11,649,870, and rights and scenarios unproduced totaled $993,308, at cost, less reserves.

Liabilities were: Notes payable, $402,580; purchase money obligations, $378,254; accounts payable, $6,312,605; sundry accruals, $3,713,848; due to affiliated companies, $208,718; royalties payable, $648,528; reserve for federal income taxes, $253,251; advance payments of film deposits and such, $486,653; remittances from foreign subsidiaries, held in abeyance, $541,782; purchase money and contractual obligations maturing serially after one year, $895,089.

Mortgages and funded debt included: $32,600,500 in optional six per cent convertible debentures, series due 1939, and $53,824,830 in mortgages and other bond issues (including $112,800 sinking fund payments and installments in arrears; $14,300,000 standing demand and other mortgages; and $2,955,000 installment payments, maturing within one year, subject in part to renewal).

Deferred income and miscellaneous items were listed at $1,956,623. Capital stock was set down at $19,006,722, represented by 3,801,344 shares of common stock issued and outstanding, and $5,670,885 represented by 103,107 shares of preferred stock at stated value of $55 per share.

Capital surplus was $56,325,484, less deficit of $16,178,723.

KANSAS CENSORS SUGGEST FOREIGN PRODUCERS STUDY U. S. STANDARDS

Board Chairman Says "A Nous la Liberte" Falls Short of Standard Set by the Production Code and the Reviewers

That it is advisable for foreign producers seeking access to the American market to familiarize themselves with American production standards was indicated in Topeka, Kansas, last week, when the state Board of Review prevented a showing of "A Nous La Liberte," a French-made film.

The board's rejection forced a last-minute cancellation of the performance, which was sponsored by the Topeka Cinema Guild at the Woman's Club. The ban was predicated on the censors' view that the film suggests a bad moral lesson in describing an escape from prison and subsequent crimes by the fugitives without any compensating punishment.

Miss Hazel Myers, Kansas board chairman, pointed out that "A Nous La Liberte" falls short of the standards established and maintained by the Kansas Board of Review and the film Production Code. She said Kansas censor regulations are in agreement with the industry's Production Code and indicated the French film was unacceptable from both viewpoints.

Parallels British Situation

The situation thereby created is similar to that which prompted British producers, last month, to undertake a study of the American Production Code in order to familiarize themselves with our standards and to proceed accordingly in the treatment of their product intended for export to this country. Their action apparently became necessary after some London producers experienced difficulties in marketing their pictures here, and resulted in the Film Producers' Group of the Federation of British Industries agreeing that hereafter in their product for export they will aim for full compliance with the Production Code as it now governs American-made pictures.

The Kansas board chairman believes that if foreign producers find it impractical to conform their export produce to the dictates of American standards, their representatives in this country should take it upon themselves to ascertain the requirements of the various cities and states where censorship prevails before making shipment into these localities.

The latter assertion is prompted by the fact that a print of "A Nous La Liberte" was received for reviewing at Kansas censor headquarters in Kansas City, while in transit from New York to Topeka, on the day of the scheduled showing. No provision was made in event the film would be rejected or required editing. Miss Myers said the Cinema Guild or the New York distributor misunderstood the time element involved as well as the state censor regulations.

Guild representatives protested the showing was for a private group, but the board determined otherwise since it had been advertised as a public performance and tickets had been sold to the general public. Concessions might have been in order if the film actually had been restricted to Guild membership, said Miss Myers.

The Topeka Cinema Guild recently was organized to screen films of foreign make and others which ordinarily do not receive a commercial showing in that city. It claims among its subscribers Rabbi Efraim Rosenzweig, two Washburn College professors, the principal of Topeka High School and other educators, ministers and prominent business men in the Kansas capital.

Few Foreign Films in State

The Kansas review board has had scant experience with foreign product other than British, but probably will have a larger opportunity since the Midway, a Kansas City, Kansas, neighborhood house, is planning to devote itself exclusively to Russian, Polish and other extraneous films of interest to its clientele, largely foreign-born.

While Miss Myers would not express an opinion whether Soviet photoplays would or would not be acceptable in the light of state censor regulations and American traditions, she intimated subversive propaganda would not be tolerated.

Foreign pictures so far have not been the problem in Kansas that they are in states of greater urban population, such as New York. According to information furnished by Irwin Esmond, director of the motion picture division of the New York State Department of Education, 126 films of foreign make were viewed by the department in the last twelve-month period, practically all of feature length. In Kansas, five foreign language pictures were submitted in the same period.

Sees Quality Improved

In contrast to the action taken in the case of "A Nous La Liberte," the Kansas board has approved the pictures in the current "G Men" cycle dealing with the United States Government's brand of justice meted out to criminals.

The moral content of films as a whole has improved materialy since the industry's Production Code Administration became effective, said Miss Myers, but product of small independent companies still invite major surgery. She said no major company's release has been rejected entirely in recent months. The Kansas board's objection to British-made films is that they contain a generous sprinkling of oaths which grate on the polite American ear. Otherwise Miss Myers finds them generally wholesome.

French Restrictions Extended One Year

French restrictions permitting the importation of 94 "dubbed" versions each six months, have been extended for one year from July 1. The regulations provide that "dubbing" be done in France. The foreign division of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America expressed the opinion that at an annual rate of 188 pictures a year, the requirements of American distribution in France are adequately met.

Women Credited With Film Gains

The advance in the moral and artistic standards of the motion picture recently is largely due to the work of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and similar organizations, in the opinion of Mrs. Alice Ames Winter of the public relations department of the Hollywood office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Mrs. Winter was guest of honor and speaker at a luncheon given last week in New York by the MPPDA at the Town Hall Club, on the occasion of Mrs. Winter's first visit to New York in five years. Seventy-five leaders of women's organizations in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania were present.

According to Mrs. Winter the pressure of public opinion against objectionable films has been crystallized and directed by the motion picture committees in the federation. Eventually, she said, the effect of the moral crusade was felt at the box office.

"Through these five years," said Mrs. Winter, "I have watched the finer elements in the studios come to the fore. It is not by elimination, but by creation, that the movies move. The Federal Council of Churches was accurate when it voiced the opinion that motion pictures were not to be improved with scissors."

"During the past five years," said Mrs. Winter, "the films have undergone the greatest change that any medium of expression has ever undergone in a like period. About a year and a half ago Hollywood decided, instead of producing Pollyanna stuff, which they knew we would not like, to inject real drama and improved artistic methods into acceptable films."

Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA, presided at the luncheon and directed an open forum discussion.

Paramount Crash Victims May Sue TWA Air Line

Suit against TWA Air Line is expected to be filed shortly in Missouri by victims of the recent plane crash near Macon, Mo., which resulted in the death of one member of a Paramount production unit and injuries to five others.

Paramount's legal department in New York had not been instructed this week to bring action for the company, and suits contemplated will be initiated by the company's attorney at Kansas City on behalf of individual victims, it was said. C. G. (Pat) Drew, electrician with the unit, was still in the Samaritan Hospital at Macon this week but was to be removed to Hollywood over the weekend.

BRITISH PROGRAM COST UP TO 40% OF GROSS SINCE BLOCK SALES DIED

Distributor Profits Rise Under the New Film Act But the Talking Pictures Are Called Larger Factor Than Law

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Bureau of Motion Picture Herald

On October 1 next, the revolution in trade methods imposed on the British industry by the Cinematograph Films Act of 1927 will reach completeness. On that date, the obligation to show a quota of 20 per cent of British films will be imposed on exhibitors, bringing their quota for the first time to the same figure as that applying to distributors, who have been on the 20 per cent level since April 1.

The quota is the feature of the Films Act most frequently discussed in the press. This is an understandable matter when one realizes the legal and financial problems it imposes on importers. It is nevertheless important to remember that the Films Act is in two major parts and that Part One, imposing certain very important restrictions on film booking, has been in operation in a maximum form since October, 1930.

Booking Restriction to Stay

The uncertainty which undoubtedly exists regarding the future of the quota does not extend to the booking restrictions provisions of the Act. It may be that, at the end of 1938 when the Act expires, the quota will be allowed to lapse. Some leading British producers already begin to regard it as superfluous; they have built their studios and established their goodwill and they find no advantage in the facts that the Act keeps in existence a number of weak production units and leads to the production of a flood of indifferent films, which absorb dates.

Whatever happens to the quota—and political as well as business considerations enter into that problem—it is in the last degree unlikely that the Government will allow the trade to lapse again into a system of unregulated booking. The Act appears to have rendered permanent a booking system based on two fundamental principles:

No film may be booked until it has been shown to the trade and officially registered.

No booking may be made for a date more than six months after the date of signing the contract.

The last-named provision has operated since Oct. 1, 1930. Until Oct. 1, 1928, the "booking period" was 12 months and from that date until Oct. 1, 1930, it was nine months.

These provisions sometimes are described as a prohibition of block booking. Strictly, they are nothing of the kind. They stop blind booking by demanding proof of the physical existence of a film in England before a contract can be taken on it, but the six months limit is the only other condition imposed. It is still strictly legal, however commercially impracticable, for a distributor to book an exhibitor a line of, say, 48 first and 48 second features for display within six months of the date of the contract.

It is a fact—even if its interest is chiefly theoretical—that if a legitimate or variety house decided to "go talkie" in a hurry it could legally book itself solid for six months by a deal with one distributor. Its difficulty would lie in the practical impossibility of finding films, not in any provision of the Act. That fact illustrates what has happened in England since the booking restrictions clauses became fully effective; block-booking has not been made illegal but rendered unworkable.

Impracticable in England

There is no question at all that the policy, in the American sense of output booking, is now completely impracticable in England. The 52 weeks a year contract, in which films are indicated by working titles, star names, or numbers, is illegal; any such contract is illegal even if it operates within the legal six months booking period, but that alone might not have killed the practice. It has also become commercially obsolete owing to a trade development which has no direct connection with the Act, though in a time sense it has run parallel with it.

This development is the growth of percentage booking, which came in with the talkers and is now firmly established as a basic principle of distributor-exhibitor trading.

Talkers introduced the factor of scarcity effectively for the first time in the history of the British trade. Before sound, the market was glutted with films. Most of its booking evils arose from the fact that distributors were trying to unload upon 4,000 British theatres, running a weekly or twice weekly change, practically the whole of an American studio product capable of supplying 15,000 theatres which changed three or four times a week. It was this disproportion between output and outlet which forced release dates ever further forward until in 1926 there were British theatres booked for two years ahead.

Talkers and "Sharing Terms"

There was a scramble for the early talker successes and distributors exploited it by demanding "sharing terms,"—previously opposed consistently, and for the most part successfully, by the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association. The new principle implied previews by exhibitors and a policy of single picture booking. Simultaneously the Act was operating to make these practices obligatory. Which was the greater factor in the situation may be a matter of argument; undoubtedly the practical result was that the booking restrictions section of the Films Act operated exactly as the authors of that law desired.

The overshadowing influence of percentage, based on talker shortage, is still the dominating feature of the booking situation in England. It is an answer to almost all the doubts one sometimes hears expressed as to the practical working of the legally imposed booking system. The belief that exhibitors and distributors, respecting the letter of the law, have conspired to defeat its spirit by "gentlemen's agreements," taking the place of the old formal contract, is a complete misunderstanding of the situation.

It is probable that, if silent production had continued on the old scale, evasion of the Act would have been widely practiced. Today, though the practice of certain theatres playing certain products regularly has not been killed either by percentage or by the Act, the difference between this implied agreement to deal on a 52 weeks a year basis and the old blanket contract is fundamental.

Variable Percentage

In the first place, there is no deal on the basis of a flat price for good and bad pictures; the great majority of contracts are on a percentage basis. In the second place, that percentage is variable. In the third place, though "understandings" exist which maintain the principle of continuity, formerly based on contract, they are terminable—and are in fact terminated—without notice. Short term options have replaced the old block booking deals.

Underlying and explaining this revolutionary change in the trade situation is the fact that bargaining power has passed from the exhibitor to the distributor. Instead of picking and choosing their films exhibitors have to fight for them.

There is no temptation to a distributor with a good product to get behind the Act; its provisions are all in his favor. A distributor with a bad product cannot find theatre owners willing to conspire with him.

Due to a further significant change in trade conditions, even good second-class product is having a bad time in England just now. In silent days it was possible to classify films and theatres jointly. Product A went to the A, or first-class, theatre and so on down the scale until distributor J was left with a contract for all his films in a low class house of small capacity. Nowadays, the A film plays successive runs in varying grades of theatres and the J film finds business with difficulty, because the owner of the J theatre finds it better business to run A films, no matter how late.

THEATRE STANDARD UP

Theatre Standard Elevated

Concurrently, there has been a raising of the theatre standard. British houses have decreased in numbers and increased in class. There has been a great growth in the number of first-runs, accentuating the importance of the big picture as against the program effort. The increase in the number and quality of British films has removed the incentive to grab an American output.

With the assistance of all these favorable trade conditions, the Films Act has substantially achieved the objects for which it was drafted. It has cleared the books, it has helped British production by an early release, and it has placed booking, broadly, on the basis of quality.

There remains the question of cost.

The routine observance of the Act has implied a certain revision of office practice by distributors, but the increased cost is not great in itself and it cannot fairly be ascribed to the Act when entirely different accountancy in any case would have been demanded by the supersession of flat price booking by percentage.

A greatly increased cost for prints was until recently a feature of trading under post-Act conditions; instances could be cited where a hundred talker prints were demanded to supply bookings which would have been covered by 30 copies of a silent film. This was a first-run problem and it was largely solved when distributors divided the London release copy demand by half by making the south of the Thames release a week later than north of the river.

J. C. Squier, general manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in London, told me that this expedient had been so successful in preventing the prints situation getting out of hand that, for "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," MGM used approximately only the same number of prints as for the silent "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," fourteen or so years back. The increase in office costs under new conditions he described as "slight."

Distributors Gainers

Distributors, therefore, are definitely gainers by all that has happened since the booking restrictions of the Act came into force—though it does not follow, and is in fact not true, that they owe their increased revenue directly to the Act. Similarly, exhibitors cannot justly blame the British parliament for the fact that they are paying a whole lot more for their films. If film scarcity is ever again replaced by overproduction, the Act, which at present assists the distributor to sell his pictures singly and dearly, will enable the exhibitor to pick at his own price from a number of films competing for limited dates.

At the present moment, in the opinion of good judges on both sides of the industry, the British exhibitor is paying for his films an average of 40 per cent of gross receipts. What he paid in silent days is harder to arrive at. Certainly many an exhibitor got away with a booking cost of 10 per cent or even less. In those days, American distributors estimated the United Kingdom as about 10 per cent of the market. Nowadays, some of them look to the United Kingdom for 40 per cent of world takings. The inverted resemblance between these figures more or less accurately represents the change in the economic basis of the British trade since the Films Act began to operate.

The situation, due to the causes stated, is unlikely to change immediately. The British public shows a pronounced intention of confining its patronage to big pictures and big stars and there is no sign of overproduction of either. The exhibitor is likely to continue to pay more, and the distributor to receive more, under the trade conditions now established. The situation would not be altered, in any vital sense, if the Films Act were relaxed.

Austro-German Film Agreement Is Renewed

The Austro-German film agreement, in force for several years, has been renewed for another year, according to reports to the Department of Commerce from George R. Canty, trade commissioner at Berlin. According to the agreement, markets are assured for 120 German and 12 Austrian features at an exchange ratio of 10 to 1, without regard to existing contingencies; the exchange of educational and other short films is assured at the same ratio; both countries agree to assist actors and technical personnel; Germany agrees to assist Austrian producers in the matter of locations, in return for which Austria will not support any productions liable to raise objections in Germany.

Educational Films Are Used Widely in Sweden

Motion pictures are becoming of increasing importance in the field of education in Sweden, according to a report from trade commissioner Basil D. Dahl, Stockholm, to the department of commerce at Washington. The country's largest producer has established an educational department. There are 2,750 selected educational films in stock. Last year, according to the report, it was estimated about 4,000,000 people saw the educational subjects. A few of the larger schools in the country have installed sound equipment. A proposal that Swedish schools receive a grant from the government for renting educational films has been laid before the legislature.

Swiss Industries Use Films

The industries of Switzerland are being publicized abroad through the motion picture, according to a report to the department of commerce from the American consulate general at Zurich. The financing comes for the most part from the Swiss industries and partly from the Swiss office for the development of trade.

American films have gained in Switzerland because of the waning popularity of German product, according to a report to the Department of Commerce from Zurich.

India Film Activity Shows Gains in Year

Gains in the motion picture activity of India have been marked in the past year, according to reports from George C. Howard, United States trade commissioner in Calcutta. There are between 460 and 500 film houses wired for sound in the country, which compares with approximately 360 a year and a half ago. Most of the equipment is of American made.

Two new studio operations are the Napta Studio in Calcutta and Sound Studio, Ltd., in Bombay. Another development is the Tollygunge, a million-rupee development in a Calcutta suburb, backed by a Mr. Sarkar.

The Motion Picture Society of India has become a registered society under the Indian Companies Act, it is announced from Bombay. The officers are: B. V. Jadhav, president; Rai Saheb Chuni Lall, vice-president; V. G. Motwane, treasurer; K. S. Hirleakr and Jaswantrai Mehta, joint secretaries.

In an effort to inculcate in the public of India the value of the film as a medium of education, the society has imported educational subjects from America, England and Germany, showing them to school children and college students in particular.

The secretary of the Motion Picture Society of India recently conducted several members of the Bombay customs office on a tour of Bombay studios, for the purpose of indicating the justification of the society's contention that the machinery used in production and reproduction of films should be classified as machinery for industrial purposes, and therefore be liable to a 10 per cent import duty only.

Polish Theatre Total Drops

The total number of motion picture theatres in Poland has declined considerably in 1933, about 600 now operating in the country, of which about 200 are equipped for sound, according to commercial Attache Clayton Lane at Warsaw. Most of the smaller houses have closed, because of losses. It was reported 1,446 films were imported into Poland during 1933, the United States supplying the majority.

Colombia Lowers Taxes

The national defense tax of 10 per cent on the gross receipts of theatres in Colombia has been representing a saving of about ated scale, representing a saving of about 3.5 per cent of the former tax, and lowering direct taxes on exhibitors to about 20 per cent as compared with 23.5 per cent previous to the modification.

Paramount Firm in Guatemala

Paramount Films of Guatemala, Inc., has been organized at Guatemala City, with Saul E. Jacobs as manager, for the distribution of Paramount product in Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador, Nicaragua and British Honduras.

W. E. Sound for Rodriguez

A 35mm. portable Western Electric sound system has been installed in the Mexico City home of former Mexican president General Abelardo Rodriguez. Former president Plutarco Calles has similar equipment in his home.

LOCAL CODE BOARDS DISBANDING; 17 SUITS ARE ORDERED DROPPED

Continuance of Code Wage Scales and Working Conditions Advocated; Academy Talent Agreements Stand

The Administration's drafting under pressure of emergency legislation to restore the Blue Eagle on a restricted basis in conformity with the Supreme Court's ruling nullifying the NRA was preceded this week by the following code developments in the motion picture industry:

The Code Authority started immediate liquidation, disbanded the Local Grievance and Local Clearance Boards and the Hollywood subdivision and discharged all staffs.

Attorney General Cummings ordered the Department of Justice to abandon several hundred suits against code violators, including 17 involving the motion picture code.

Expressions were forthcoming from within the industry urging a continuance of code wage scales and working schedules. There was no evidence that any employer action was contemplated adverse to labor.

Word came from Hollywood that the NRA invalidation will not affect agreements reached for the benefit of talent by the Academy.

"Bank Night" was the only trade practice declared to be unfair by the code that gained headway since the supreme court decision removed the restraint. However, Allied informed members they are under no obligation to obey any code requirements.

There were indications that distributors will continue in effect sales contracts as provided in the code, including the 10 per cent cancellation.

The film code, with all others, was relegated to the limbo of the dead by the President in an official statement Tuesday that no effort would be made during this session of Congress to get around the proscriptions of the supreme court's decision.

However, the President announced, he will seek approval of the Clark resolution passed by the Senate May 14, continuing the NRA until April next. The organization will be skeletonized and will devote itself to compilation of statistical material as to the results of the codes, to be used as a basis for any legislation sought next session.

In New York a 90-day code "truce" and establishment of a new NRA regulating interstate commerce within the limits of the supreme court decision was advocated by 150 representatives of local code authorities. Proposed by the Industry and Business Committee for NRA Extension, the plan recommends a Congressional commission to provide for voluntary codes for companies in interstate commerce, and that state legislation be passed to care for intrastate commerce. A resolution was adopted calling on the President to convene a national conference in Washington on Monday to act on these proposals, one of which provides for freedom for industry from prosecution under the Sherman anti-trust laws.

Immediate and economical liquidation of the affairs of the Code Authority unanimously was authorized Monday, at a special meeting at the headquarters in New York.

Notice for a regular meeting on Thursday was rescinded.

Liquidation was placed in charge of the standing finance committee of the Code Authority, consisting of Nathan Yamins, chairman (representing independent exhibitors); Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, and Harold S. Bareford, of Warner Brothers.

The executive secretary, John C. Flinn, was authorized to engage Price, Waterhouse and Company, certified public accounts, of New York, to make an audit of the accounts.

The secretarial staffs of the 31 local offices of Clearance and Zoning Boards and Grievance Boards and the code's production division in Hollywood were instructed by Mr. Flinn to transmit all records of the activities of such boards to a central storage place in New York and the leases on local quarters will be terminated at the earliest possible date. The secretarial staff will be discontinued on June 15.

Legal matters pending before the Code Authority and the local boards have been referred to the standing Legal Committee of the Code Authority, consisting of Austin C. Keough, chairman, of Paramount; J. Robert Rubin, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Willard S. McKay, of Universal, and Nathan Yamins, representing independent exhibitors.

Seventeen Film Code Cases Dropped

Announcement of abandonment by the Department of Justice of the several hundred suits, including 17 film cases, which were underway or contemplated as a result of violations, came over the weekend from Washington.

Titles on the complaints read as follows:

Congress Theatre, Inc., vs. Code Authority, Sol Rosenblatt, et al.; pending in the federal district court, New York.

Independent Theatre Owners' Association vs. Code Authority, M. H. Aylesworth, members of the New York Grievance Board and members of the New York Clearance and Zoning Board; Federal District Court, New York.

Morris Rosenberg, American Building Maintenance Company vs. Nathan S. Strauss, Jr., James F. Hodgson and John C. Flinn; Federal District Court, New York.

Oxnard Theatre, Inc., vs. Grievance Board and Paramount Pictures Distribution Company; Federal District Court, Los Angeles.

O. W. Lewis vs. Code Authority and MGM; Federal District Court, Los Angeles.

Northern States Amusement Company vs. Grievance Board and certain distributors; Federal District Court, Minneapolis.

Gem Theatre and Helen W. Meyers and Catherine Owen, trading as Cozy Theatre, vs. Grievance Board, Universal, and Southwestern Theatres, Inc.; Federal District Court, Oklahoma City.

Don Thornburg vs. distributors and Grievance Board; Federal District Court, Des Moines.

Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., vs. Don Thornburg and Grievance Board; Federal District Court, Des Moines.

Central States Theatre Corp. vs. Grievance Board and Fox; Federal District Court, Des Moines.

Shelby Theatre Corporation vs. Grievance Board, RKO, United Artists, Universal and Gaumont-British Pictures Corporation; Court of Common Pleas, Cleveland.

General Theatres, Inc., Aladdin Theatre Corporation, Centennial Theatres, Inc., vs. Code Authority Grievance Board, MGM, Denham Theatres, Inc., and International Amusement Company; Federal District Court, Denver.

Robb & Rowley Theatres, Inc., vs. distributors, Grievance Board and V. E. Hamm; Federal District Court, Dallas.

S. & C. Amusement Company, operating Palace Theatre, San Antonio, vs. film exchanges and Grievance Board; Federal District Court, Dallas.

Queen Theatre Amusement Company, New Liberty Theatre, Fort Worth, vs. Code Authority, Grievance Board, Columbia, and Interstate Circuit, Inc., operating Hollywood, Worth, Majestic and Palace Theatres; Federal District Court, Dallas.

B. F. White vs. Columbia; Federal District Court, Dallas.

Brady Amusement Company vs. Paramount; Federal District Court, Dallas.

The disposition of films already impounded by the code boards for failure of exhibitors to cease and desist from unfair trade practices under the code is still to be determined. In San Francisco a suit was filed in United States district court by Nasser Brothers Circuit and Sam Levin Theatres, naming every exchange in that city defendants and demanding the release of all features already impounded, claiming nullification of board rulings.

Distributors Indicate Retention of Sales Contracts Provided in Code, Including 10 Per-Cent Cancellation Clause

Urge Code Wage Scale Continuance

Continuance of wage scales and working schedules as stipulated in the motion picture code was urged by Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association, of New York; Y. Frank Freeman, Publix theatre executive; by Edward L. Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who, after conferring with officers, passed the recommendation on to all MPTOA members, and by Abram Myers, chairman of the board of Allied States Association. There were no reports of wage slashing or increased work schedules from the field.

One of the first to announce continuance of NRA working conditions was David Sarnoff, president, on behalf of Radio Corporation of America, parent company of RKO, NBC and other amusement divisions. E. E. Alger, learning of the nullification of the NRA, ordered a 5 per cent increase in wages for employees of his 10-theatre Illinois circuit.

Labor contracts between studio crafts and producers cannot be disturbed, regardless of the NRA nullification, and Pat Casey, producers' labor contact, this week advised the producers to continue in effect all labor code provisions, at least temporarily. Acceptance of Mr. Casey's suggestion was expected.

Nor will the outlawing of the NRA affect agreements reached for the benefit of workers by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, it was believed in Hollywood.

There was no apparent breakdown of other trade practice clauses that cannot be restrained now the code is dead. In distribution circles in New York it was felt that the sales departments at this time favored continuance of contract forms adopted under the code. This would include retention of the 10 per cent cancellation clause on block purchases. Sales heads so expressed themselves at a joint meeting held with Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors.

FOX DECENTRALIZING ADVANCED; SCHENCK-FOX 'MET' PLAN OKAYED

Evergreen and Hamrick Pool Theatres in Seattle and Portland; Fox Expansion in Wisconsin Is Indicated by Deal

Indicative of the progress toward reorganization of the Fox theatres in the East and Middlewest, and the strengthening of Fox West Coast and subsidiary holdings elsewhere in the West, these salient factors developed this week:

Decentralization of operations of Fox Midwest and Fox Rocky Mountain divisions is underway and is expected to be completed in 30 days.

The federal court in New York, following a hearing, tentatively approved the amended reorganization plan for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses submitted jointly by Joseph M. Schenck and Fox Theatres.

Evergreen State Amusement Corporation, a Fox West Coast subsidiary, and John Hamrick, independent first-run operator in Portland and Seattle, pooled their theatres in both cities.

Acquisition by Fond du Lac Amusement Company, a Fox unit, of the Retlaw theatre in Milwaukee is seen as the first step in an expansion move by Fox which eventually may embrace at least 10 other cities in the state.

Discussions were resumed this week on the pending 10-year contract between Spyros and Charles Skouras and the Chase National Bank executives for operating management of National Theatres Corp.

Greater authority will be vested in the local divisional operating heads at Kansas City and Denver under a plan of decentralization being worked out by Skouras and National Theatres. The new setup, which will become effective with the final windup of the Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain receiverships in the federal court at Kansas City, contemplates transfer of the general bookkeeping department from Los Angeles to the divisional headquarters.

Rhoden, Ricketson at Sessions

Elmer C. Rhoden, Fox Midwest operating head at Kansas City, and Rick Ricketson, in charge of Rocky Mountain at Denver, are in New York this week for conferences with Spyros Skouras and Fox Film and Chase National Bank factors relating to reorganization. Also attending the conferences, which will extend into next week, are H. J. Fitzgerald, operating the Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, Inc., at Milwaukee and Mike Rosenberg of Evergreen State Amusement Corporation, a subsidiary of Fox Columbia, which is controlled by National Theatres. New season product deals and operating policies also are being discussed. Charles Skoures, Fox West Coast president, is also attending, with Jack L. Sullivan of Los Angeles.

Skouras Theatres has acquired the Glen, Glen Cove, L. I., and the Westwood, N. J., bringing its eastern holding to 50.

The Midwest decentralization, as completed, will provide more expeditious handling of operations. While accounting and auditing departments had been moved from the coast more than a year ago, all bookkeeping functions are now to be established at Kansas City and Denver, with only general records going to Fox West Coast in Los Angeles and a periodical report to Spyros Skouras in the East.

In Ricketson's division will be included 70 theatres in Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico and most of Nebraska. Mr. Rhoden's group will comprise 120 houses in Kansas, Missouri, Southern Illinois, Iowa and Beatrice, Neb.

Hearing Set for June 27th

Federal Judge Julian W. Mack set June 27 for hearing on confirmation of the amended reorganization plan for the Fox Metropolitan circuit, at a hearing Monday at which he gave the setup tentative approval. Final reorganization is expected in July or earlier.

Following various criticisms and suggestions of the accepted amendments to the plan sponsored by Joseph M. Schenck, Judge Mack entered an order holding the proposal fair, equitable and feasible, and declared he would permit the bondholders' committee to begin soliciting assents to obtain the necessary two-thirds creditor affirmation to place the plan in effect. The committee will be given 15 days to complete the work and is to report back at the next hearing. If the necessary assents are on hand, the plan will finally become effective June 27.

While no objections to the plan were raised at Monday's hearing as a result of Mr. Schenck's affiliation as chairman of the board of Fox Film, Archibald Palmer, bondholders' attorney, asked if Mr. Schenck's new arrangement meant that he would not have the power to sell Twentieth Century product to the Fox Metropolitan circuit on reasonable terms. Palmer was told by Isadore J. Kresel, counsel for Mr. Schenck, that this was not the case. Mr. Kresel suggested the possibility that the Twentieth Century product, now that it is to be released by Fox, might well be claimed as a right by Fox Metropolitan under its franchise with Fox Film.

The hearing was enlivened by the introduction of a new proposed reorganization plan by J. Herbert Stern, self-described "financier," submitting an offer for Fox Metropolitan of cash and securities representing 100 cents on the dollar.

After hearing Mr. Stern's proposal, Judge Mack observed his plan differed only slightly from the one proposed by Si Fabian, which was rejected by the court as less favorable to the bondholders than the Schenck-Fox Theatres plan. While Judge Mack pointed out that reorganization plans had been under consideration for weeks past, he indicated that he would have no objections to Mr. Stern's proposal, or any other, being placed before the bondholders.

Keith's Financial Setup is Outlined

Application has been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington for registration on the New York Stock Exchange of 64,304 shares of seven per cent cumulative preferred stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and $6,036,000 of first general six per cent gold mortgage bonds of B. F. Keith Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of K-A-O. All of the securities have been issued.

The subsidiary structure of K-A-O, it is revealed in the statement filed, consists of 29 subsidiaries, 13 of which are inactive local realty companies. K-A-O also reported ownership of 99.85 per cent of the bankrupt Orpheum circuit, which has 40 subsidiaries. In addition to the seven per cent preferred stock, K-A-O has outstanding 1,206,381 shares of an authorized issue of 2,000,000 shares.

Listed as holding 10 per cent or more of any class of securities are the Chemical Bank and Trust Company of New York, as trustees, 21,674 shares, or 33.71 per cent, of the seven per cent and 1,204,613 shares, or 99.85 per cent, of the common, and M. J. Meehan & Company, New York, 25,600 shares, or 39.81 per cent, of the seven per cent issue.

Top Salaries Listed

Directors, and their remuneration during 1934 were: Herbert Bayard Swope, chairman, $11,245; L. E. Thompson, president from Sept. 6, $25,140; David Sarnoff, $140; M. H. Aylesworth, $320; M. J. Meehan, nothing.

Top salaries paid last year were to Mr. Thompson; N. J. Blumberg, vice-president, $23,830, and A. E. Reoch, vice-president, $18,080. Eleven others received a total of $78,484, and seven who resigned received $82,841, including a former lawyer and assistant secretary who was paid $23,490 for 87 weeks, while the former president received $20,400 for 13½ months.

Stock holdings of officers and directors included: Leon Goldberg, vice-president, 200 shares of seven per cent preferred; A. J. Handel, assistant secretary, 10 shares; Malcolm Kingsberg, vice-chairman of the board, 200 shares; Peter J. Maloney, director, 200 shares; M. J. Meehan, director, 26,800 shares; William F. Whitman, assistant secretary, 25 shares.

The report disclosed an indefinite term contract dated April 10, this year, under which Mr. Swope, together with certain other officers and employes to be named by him, were to receive, in addition to salary, the first $50,000 of the consolidated net profits in excess of seven per cent of the outstanding preferred stock and 10 per cent of the consolidated net earnings in excess of seven per cent and $50,000. Half of the $50,000 and 40 per cent of the additional 10 per cent was to go to Mr. Swope, the rest to be divided among the others.

The B. F. Keith report named only two directors not included in the K-A-O list, J. E. Lambert receiving $14,310 and Leon Goldberg, $10,560. The subsidiary reported payments of $222,597 to RKO Service Corporation for management service last year and $26,690 to RKO Film Booking Corporation for booking service.

Stock holdings of officers included: M. H. Aylesworth, director, $5,000 in gold bonds; Mr. Goldberg, vice-president, $15,000; Mr. Kingsberg, vice-chairman of the board, $15,000; O. R. McMahan, comptroller, $1,000.

SCHENCK IS FOX COORDINATOR; UNITED ARTISTS ADDING TO PRODUCT

Schenck Will Have Full Charge of Fox British Production; Fox Twentieth Century Is the New Name of Affiliate

As the new chairman of the board of Fox Film Corporation, Joseph M. Schenck announced in London this week that he becomes "coordinator" of Fox production, entailing, among other factors, complete charge of Fox British production, which provides for 12 pictures a year at an average cost of $400,000. The purpose of Schenck's trip abroad is to complete the long-pending deal which will tie United Artists with the Deutsch-Donada circuits totaling 150 theatres.

Mr. Schenck revealed that under the arrangement with Fox the company which he heads and which he withdrew from United Artists last week will be known as Fox Twentieth Century. He retains his substantial interest in United Artists but proposes concentrating his personal activities on the new Fox affiliation.

Winfield Sheehan's position as vice-president in charge of Fox production remains unchanged, said Mr. Schenck, while Darryl F. Zanuck will be a Fox vice-president and producer. Mr. Schenck said it was his intention to continue as active head of United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc.

Denies Gaumont Acquisition

Mr. Schenck's successor as United Artists president will not be named until after his return, expected on June 20th, when directors and stockholders will meet in New York.

There has been no apparent move on the part of any United Artists owner to acquire Mr. Schenck's one-sixth interest in the company. An acquisition of this nature would upset the balance of power among company members unless the voting stock were allocated equally among the factors.

Mr. Schenck in London denied reports circulating among the British trade that Fox is negotiating to acquire complete ownership of Gaumont British. He said Fox merely is interested in maintaining its present holdings, and personnel is not being disturbed.

Beaverbrook Alliance Reported

Lord Beaverbrook, dominant figure in the former Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd., which subsequently was absorbed in the Gaumont British structure, is reportedly behind Mr. Schenck in his negotiations for the Deutsch-Donada circuits, which would become affiliated with the United Artists theatre corporation. The object, according to Mr. Schenck, is to keep the circuits independent and away from any domination by either Gaumont British or Associated British Cinemas. Mr. Schenck or Maurice Silverstone, U. A.'s managing director in England, will join the board of the British circuit interests.

Mr. Schenck announced an extensive expansion program for Fox in England which he personally will direct. Under this plan, he said, Fox proposes to finance independent producers, concentrating activity at the new Korda studio as well as the British and Dominion plant. All production will be aimed toward the American market.

Until the British phase of Mr. Schenck's new activities crystalizes, it is expected that Fox's proposed purchase of the Wembley studio will be held up. Reports link U. A. and Mr. Schenck with General Distributors, Ltd., the company formed by C. M. Woolf following his retirement as joint managing director of Gaumont British. Mr. Schenck said he plans to discuss production with Mr. Woolf.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, told the company's annual sales convention at Chicago that the Twentieth Century affiliation was the "best indication" as to whether or not his goal "was to make Fox the biggest company in the industry."

Goetz Will Retain 20th Century Post

William Goetz will retain his post as general manager and associate producer of 20th Century Pictures under the company's new affiliation with Fox, he indicated this week on his return to New York from London aboard the Normandie. He said definite production arrangements will be settled at a conference in three weeks on the Coast, in which Joseph M. Schenck and Sidney R. Kent will participate.

Also arrived was Rufus LeMaire, MGM talent scout and business agent for George Arliss. Mr. LeMaire denied he had been named a producer by Louis B. Mayer. Both Mr. Goetz and Mr. LeMaire discovered a new actress, Marcelle Chantel. If Coast tests are successful a joint deal for her services will be made. The agent said he saw no picture material in the plays now being offered abroad.

Max Gordon said he had not closed a deal whereby MGM would participate in financing of stage shows produced by him. He said, however, that discussions had been held. Jack Connolly, general manager of Pathe News, returned from an inspection tour of foreign offices. A. J. Richard of Paramount News made several staff changes, especially in the Paris office.

Cleveland Delays Dual Plan

Limitation of duals to one change weekly, other than Sunday, is reported as the plan of the Cleveland Exhibitors' Association, which delayed a meeting scheduled for June 4 when the single feature proposal was to be presented. Date of the meeting now hinges on the drafting of an acceptable agreement.

United Artists Negotiating with David and Myron Selznick; Mary Pickford to Make Three or Four Films for Season

Speculation as to the identity of new product sources to fill the breach caused by withdrawal of Joseph Schenck and Darryl Zanuck and their Twentieth Century Productions from their United Artists affiliation this week paralleled an indication that producer-members are planning to increase their output.

At the same time, there was a reported feeling among the United Artists factors in Hollywood that the new president to succeed Joseph M. Schenck, who resigned last week to become chairman of the board of Fox Film, should not be a producer.

Al Lichtman, vice-president in charge of distribution, was in the forefront of company executives mentioned for the presidency.

Mr. Lichtman's election, however, would not meet the unanimous accord of all company members, according to one view which held Douglas Fairbanks the most acceptable candidate. There is considerable doubt expressed on the Coast that Mr. Fairbanks desires a return to active direction of the company's affairs.

Negotiations are reported underway with three units for release through the company. Mary Pickford, in Hollywood, said United Artists had been negotiating with David O. and Myron Selznick to join the production roster. Walter Wanger was non-commital on reports he had been offered a producer post involving six or eight pictures with finances guaranteed in addition to an option to purchase an interest in the distributing company at the end of a year. Emanuel Cohen, former Paramount production head, is another whose name has been heard in the discussions in Coast circles.

A company announcement this week listed four productions before the camera, five ready for shooting and six others in preparation, and said the various production units "have launched their new season's product with a maximum of activity." Because of the new developments Miss Pickford terminated a stage tour.

Samuel Goldwyn Busy

Samuel Goldwyn faces his most active year in many, several films planned.

Reliance announced six films. Two for immediate production are "Amateur Girl" and "The Melody Lingers On." Alexander Korda at London Film Studios is completing two scripts. One is "100 Years From Now" and the other "The Man Who Could Work Miracles." Edgar Wallace's "Sanders of the River" is scheduled for early release. At British and Dominions studios, Herbert Wilcox is at work on "Come Out of the Pantry," starring Jack Buchanan. "Peg of Old Drury," with Anna Neagle starred, starts in two weeks.

Chinatown Squad

Mystery Melodrama

A lively combination of mystery, aptly set in the atmosphere of San Francisco's Chinatown, and melodrama, as the Chinatown squad of the local police investigate one murder which leads to another, this picture has those elements which are salable in that they appeal to two basic and perennial interests of the motion picture going public, action and mystery.

Those two elements are, obviously, the angles on which the exhibitor should concentrate in selling the film, which, incidentally should be good for playing at almost any time during the week, including the weekend. The cast offering comparatively little in the way of box office drawing power on the marquee, the selling had best be in the direction of the story and its elements, making whatever use of the title suggests itself in order to indicate the character of the picture.

In the lead is Lyle Talbot, supported by Valerie Hobson, Hugh O'Connell, Andy Devine and Bradley Page in particular. They all perform in satisfactory fashion, O'Connell and Devine providing much of the comedy material with which the picture is thickly spotted. The comedy, and a certain amount of suspense, on the whole add to the effectiveness of the film.

Talbot, ex-detective on the Chinatown squad, is driving a Chinatown sight-seeing bus, and takes his charges into a cafe for dinner. Clay Clement, engaged in some sort of shady deal, comes in to confer with the cafe owner, Yee. He makes two phone calls, takes a private dinner booth, and shortly after a girl in black, who had previously visited Clement's apartment, to find only Devine, his assistant, takes a booth on one side of him while Arthur Hoyt takes that on the other side. Devine breaks into Clement's booth to find him stabbed to death. O'Connell, Talbot's former buddy on the squad, and his not too brilliant rival, reaches the scene and proceeds to do the wrong thing. The girl, Miss Hobson, with Talbot's assistance, poses as one of his passengers, and gets away through O'Connell's stupidity. She gives Talbot the wrong address. Page arrives to see Clement after he is murdered.

It develops that Clement had taken $75,000 from the representatives of a Chinese Communist organization with which to buy planes to ship to China. He owed his broker, Page, $10,000. When his body is found there is no money, nor the letters that Miss Hobson wants, nor the Chinese jade ring which is apparently an open sesame. Suspects include Hoyt, Devine, the girl, Page and Yee.

Talbot, to protect the girl when she seeks his assistance, and with whom he is falling in love, plunges into the investigation, unofficially, and proceeds to upset O'Connell completely. He learns that Miss Hobson had been engaged to Clement until she understood the truth about him. The letters she then wrote are what she is after. Yee, in hiding, leaves his place, trailed by Talbot, is murdered on a ferryboat, and the missing ring stolen from him, he having taken the ring from Clement after the murder.

Putting clues together, piecing the puzzle, Talbot, with a lively sprinkling of action, comedy and suspense, finally pins the crime on the murderer, Page, who had killed Clement for the money he knew him to be carrying. The romance completes the film.—AARONSON, New York.

No More Ladies

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

For entertainment and showmanship purposes, "No More Ladies" seems to be the kind of attraction in which theatre goers like to see its lead players, Joan Crawford and Robert Montgomery, and in which exhibitors like to have them. The story is smart, sophisticated comedy romance drama. It is produced in lavish, yet tasteful and good looking settings. It moves with speed and ease. Intimate in spots, it never goes overboard, so that there should be no worry as to its moral character. Comedy in action, dialogue and situations forms a refreshing contrast for its more serious dramatic moments.

The plot is comparatively simple. Marcia, very much in love with Sherry, cannot resist him, even though his conduct as a carefree, irresponsible playboy continually has her in a position where she never knows what to expect of him. Knowing the kind of home-wrecking, heart-breaking, yet lovable fellow he is, she marries him; fearful of what the future may develop. At the very first opportunity, Sherry, who has filled himself with a lot of high ideals, cheats and in his alibi makes the mistake of incriminating Edgar, who happened to be enamored of the girl he stole, and was with Marcia and her grandmother Fanny, at the time he stole her.

Following a suspense packed dramatic situation in which Sherry pleads for forgiveness, but in which Marcia gives no sign of relenting, she invites all the people, unbeknown to her husband, to a weekend party at her country home. With comedy becoming the prevailing quality, Marcia, using Jim, whose home Sherry had once broken up, Caroline, the erstwhile object of his affections, and Theresa, the girl with whom he had cheated, she gives Sherry a dose of his own game. Together with Jim, she makes Sherry suffer unendurable tortures and the party becomes so loaded with the atmosphere of something likely to happen that befuddled Sherry, now knowing that he loves Marcia and knowing that losing her, especially to Jim, would be the most horrible thing in the world, is at his wit's end to know what to expect. However, everything is adjusted satisfactorily, with Sherry taking a vow that there shall be no more ladies.

Always gay and interest-holding, the picture combines its various elements in a manner that makes lively entertainment. There being a pair of good names to concentrate on for primary selling purposes, the supporting cast is of better than usual value. Miss Crawford's gowns being a veritable fashion show, the picture is one that should stir much interest among the feminine patrons. At the same time, its general character is such that it fully justifies plenty of attention from the men.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Charlie Chan in Egypt

(Fox)

Mystery

While this feature deals with a familiar character and an equally familiar brand of amusement, there is much which is entertaining and valuable from a showmanship point of view. The Chan series having proved its audience and commercial value, this one not only preserves all that has proved appealing in the others, but adds to it with much that is new and different. As such it is not only an attraction that should fully satisfy the Chan fans, but one in which the crime sleuths and general run of patrons should find much to hold their attention.

Though Warner Oland is again in the role he created, practically all the other players are new to Chan pictures. The production itself is located in a new and intriguing situation and the way in which the story is told gives it an atmosphere that is completely different and refreshing. Moving in the tempo characteristic of its predecessors, it makes a punchy use of suspense; combining its motivating mystery with drama, romance, comedy and action which establishes the attraction as entertainment not entirely dependent upon the popularity of previous Chan films.

The story, set among the tombs of long dead kings, deals with an attention-holding subject. Professor Arnold has found a fabulously valuable tomb. Though his expedition is sponsored by a French Archeological society, various findings turn up in rival museums. Chan is sent to find out why. Brought face to face with the unfathomable mysticism of ancient taboos and the wily schemes of avarious moderns, he finds the professor missing, then dead and a host of circumstantial and extenuating facts that cast suspicion upon practically everyone in the cast. Working patiently, making use of his Oriental philosophy together with ultra modern scientific methods, Chan, at great danger to himself and those whom he is endeavoring to protect, makes

The story moves fast, yet in doing so cleverly conceals the basic plot. So built that it is difficult to center suspicion on any character until the climax, it contains unusual suspense. The Arizonian

(Radio)

Western Melodrama

The box office returns which this picture nets depend to a great extent upon a proper realization of its character plus the amount of thought and sales effort devoted to it prior to opening date. "The Arizonian" is not a cowboy picture. It's a melodrama of the west, timed in a theatrical way to one of the new country's most interesting periods. Essentially it's the story of a man whose courage and daring and the quickness and accuracy of whose guns brought law and order to a previously lawless community. Not historical by any stretch of the imagination, it is basically action, thrill and suspense screen material, all of which is entertaining and much of which is amusing. Smartly directed so that the necessary theatrical and showmanship values, those noted, together with romance, conflict, comedy and novelty of combination are logically incorporated, the picture is acted in a unique spirit.

It opens in an exciting manner, as the stage coach-robbing McCloskey gang, intent on returning the heroine, Kitty Rivers, to town, is rudely interrupted by the appearance of the Arizonian, Clay Tallant. Taking the lady back to town, Tallant finds it a lawless place, dominated by the badmen who, in league with crooked sheriff Mannen, enjoy nothing more than shooting up town marshals. Once more cowering the mob, Tallant, who discovers his brother Orin is in love with Kitty and thus the stage for romantic conflict set, takes the marshal's job. First administering a complete beating to the gang's prize gunman, Shot-gun Keeler, Tallant makes a friend of the imported badman, Randolph, who was hired to polish him off.

The inevitable conflict eventuating between Mannen and Tallant, he, Randolph and Orin are jailed on a trumped up charge. The jail set afire as an easy means of ridding the gang of their menace, the trio are saved. Then follows more of Mannen's dirty work in liberating a prisoner to kill Tallant, which is followed by a fight in the smoke of the burning jail, of which Tallant is the sole survivor. Randolph, Orin and Mannen as well as all his minions dead, the Arizonian, who brought law and order to the town, of course wins the girl.

Not a big picture, it's the kind of attraction with which exhibitors in the neighborhood houses and those in smaller towns can do much. In the lead role, Dix is the he-man hero with the physical strength and mental temperament to fit the role ideally. Margot Grahame's part is of minor importance, but she nevertheless handles the romantic requirements acceptably. Preston Foster adds interest in the role of the badman gone straight, while Louis Calhern, Joseph Sauers and Frank McCloskey are a trio of villains that audiences, youngsters especially, probably will have a grand time hissing and booing.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Let 'em Have It

(United Artists)

Drama

Another in the current cycle concerning the activities of the federal operatives in their organized attack on crime, this is thoroughly capable of standing on its own feet, without comparisons of any sort, as a piece of genuinely exciting and action-filled drama. Extolling the heroism, the intelligence and the courage of these federal policemen, the film has romance, some comedy, well handled for effective contrast, and, above all, dynamic action and suspense.

More than others of the cycle it goes deeply into the manner in which the federal operatives draw upon the knowledge of science in making leading facts of the tiniest clues. In that sense, although it may tend to slow up the picture here and there, it nevertheless imparts a phase of real interest. The work of the ballistic experts, matching gun barrels and shells; of the finger-print experts, making marks talk; of the rebuilding experts, who construct the figure of a man from the clues which are a bit of hair, a footprint, a glove; the forestry experts, who indicate from where a man came by a tiny spot of pollen found in a lost glove, all these give a new and different kind of interest to the picture.

The cast is strong, with Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce, Alice Brady (for comedy), Bruce Cabot, Harvey Stephens, Eric Linden chiefly cast. All, including the minor players, do excellent work. Cabot, in the, for him, unaccustomed role of a gangster leader, gives an especially strong portrayal of Keefer, the brains of the marauding outlaws.

There can be no question of the timeliness of the picture's theme. On that and the fact that the exhibitor has here a strong, powerfully-told story, the campaign may well be built, making the most of the cast names and the title at the same time. The often-expressed atmosphere of brutality, the gun battles and their resulting slayings, and the whole weighty atmosphere which is a necessary and justified part of the picture, makes it inadvisable as material for children.

Arlen, Stephens, Gordon Jones become buddies as they enter the service and go through the rigorous training. They are assigned to a suspected kidnapping plot, involving wealthy Miss Bruce and her young brother, Linden. Stephens is an old acquaintance, they attend a party at the Bruce home, and spring the trap which captures the leader of the mob. They strongly suspect that Cabot, the Bruce chauffeur, had more than a little to do with the plot, and are able to send him up for carrying a gun.

Although it means almost the breakup of the budding romance, Arlen attends the parole board meeting when Cabot's turn comes, and where Miss Bruce is fighting for Cabot's release, and insists he be made to serve his full term. He is overruled. Cabot, free, starts on his reign of terror. Meanwhile Linden joins the federal forces, for which Miss Bruce holds Arlen responsible. Cabot raids bank after bank, while the federal men try trail after trail, and all the history-making newspaper headlines are reenacted. Linden gets a tip, does not wait for the three others, is captured by Cabot, and murdered. Miss Bruce blames Arlen, and he obtains a roving commission to get Cabot. Then is reenacted the face-changing episode, given almost horrible effectiveness as the doctor, who is killed, brands Cabot's initials into his distorted face. Eventually, in an action-packed sequence, the federal men raid the Cabot hideout, the film ending with the round up of the gang, the death of Cabot and conclusion of the romance.—Aaronson, New York.

The Scotland Yard Mystery

(British International)

Mystery

Mystery in respect to title, this screen adaptation of a play by Wallace Geoffrey is concerned chiefly with the manner in which an officer of Scotland Yard brings a murderer to book, rather than with his discovery of that murderer, at least insofar as the audience is concerned. There should be interest in watching the workings of the detective mind and method, since mystery as such is lacking for the audience. It must be obvious to any patrons, early in the film, just who is the perpetrator of the crime.

The picture is an English importation and as such is characterized by the distinctively British accented speech of the players. Whether or not that condition will present an obstacle to the exhibitor showing in the regular run theatres of the country is a question that the exhibitor will have to decide for himself, in the light of past experience.

The cast, although it is headed by Sir Gerald du Maurier, one of the better known English players, in all probability will be unknown to the general run of audiences in this country. The selling should concentrate, therefore, on story and title, making the most of the Scotland Yard angle, which in itself may well be a source of drawing power, striking the perennial interest of the film-goer in all that Scotland Yard signifies. A slight romance is worked into the story of murder, body-snatching, a newly developed serum which produces in the victim a condition apparently of death, and through the use of which a huge insurance fraud is perpetrated by the brains of the gang. Inspector Stanton, when he definitely establishes the identity of the man, is faced with a dilemma. The murderer holds the inspector's daughter as hostage for his freedom.

The insurance company, for which the fiance of the inspector's daughter works as a doctor, is faced with dismissal when four people he had passed as healthy, die, costing the company many thousands of dollars. The inspector unofficially investigates, and when a fifth victim is so disposed of, takes up the matter officially. A disgruntled director of the company takes the matter up with the highest officials of the Yard, and the inspector finds his job at stake unless he discovers the murderer. Exhumations of the supposedly dead men reveal that their coffins are filled with rubbish.

Dr. Masters, one of Scotland Yard's chief medical analysts, and a close friend, officially, of Stanton, is early revealed to the audience as amazingly the brains of the gang which is perpetrating the frauds, and who actually kills one of his gang when the latter becomes frightened. Slowly but surely Stanton uncovers one bit of evidence after another which point more and more in the direction of Dr. Masters. Finally cornered, Masters, with some rapid action, kidnaps Stanton's daughter, and when Stanton comes to arrest him, shows him the girl apparently dead, and issues his ultimatum. Stanton refuses, worms the relieving secret out of him and revives his daughter. Masters, with his woman accomplice, makes his escape, is caught at the airport and dies of his own serum, the antidote having been accidentally destroyed.—AARONSON, New York.

Mimi

(British International)

Drama

"Freely adapted," according to the credits, from Murger's "La Boheme," this dramatic story of the younger artists of the Latin Quarter of Paris features at least one name well known to the regular run of American audiences, that of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. Gertrude Lawrence, extremely popular English actress, probably will be known to audiences in the metropolitan centers. The others are likely to be unfamiliar.

The story, a simple romance of a young and budding playwright and the girl who gives him her wholehearted devotion, with an interjection of entertaining comedy and a concluding note of weighty tragedy, makes for a picture of general appeal. Concerned as it is with the sincere but unconventional attitude toward life of the Latin Quarter's artists, the production appears suitable only for adult audiences.

The film has been well mounted throughout, its atmosphere authentic in appearance, with occasional excellent bits of photography, and often set against the background of the music of Giacomo Puccini. The "Barcarolle" from the "Tales of Hoffman" is excellently played as the background for an effective masked ball. Miss Lawrence sings one number well.

Although the film as it stands is long, it holds the interest throughout, shifting from moment to moment from sharp drama and emotional stress to light and lively comedy or romantic happiness. The selling by the exhibitor may well take the line of emphasizing the name of Fairbanks, indicating the origin of the story through explanation of the title and making the most of the sympathy-inspiring phases of the story itself. Copy angles which may arouse the interest of the feminine patrons especially should be easy of development.

Fairbanks, young playwright, is happy in his garret, starving with his four friends, a painter, a poet and a philosopher, and the feminine friend of the painter. Miss Lawrence (Mimi) leaves an influential actor, Austin Trevor, meets and falls in love with Fairbanks, and gives him her undivided devotion. She spurs the young playwright, and he writes "La Boheme" a play of young artists in the Latin Quarter. Through her influence with Trevor, Fairbanks' play is read, and accepted through the interest of a leading actress, Diana Napier, in the playwright.

At the brilliant masked ball, under the urging of Trevor, she goes off with the actor, believing that Fairbanks' future rests in his friendship for Miss Napier. Later, fleeing from Trevor, she is caught in a rainstorm and falls ill. Eventually Fairbanks finds her, Miss Napier understands and the play goes on. It is a huge success and simultaneously with that success, Miss Lawrence dies, as the film ends. —AARONSON, New York.

College Scandal

(Paramount)

Comedy Mystery

Stark melodramatic mystery and frolicsome comedy together with light romantic love interest are combined in this attraction. Novelty is lent to the familiar, yet proved worthy entertainment and showmanship material, by setting it in the atmosphere of a college campus. As such it is the kind of show that should not only prove interesting to the crime sleuths because of its motivating premise, but due to the other colorful elements introduced should prove attractive to the everyday regulars. Its showmanship is the kind commonly given to features in which eerie mystery and unexpected comedy alternately provoke gasps and laughs.

Smartly tempoed and mixing its ingredients so that the element of suspense is cleverly maintained, the yarn has a punchy opening. As the result of a hazing, a student dies. The tragedy weighs heavily on his mother's mind. In college, Professor Seth Dunlap is in love with Julie Fresnel, daughter of the bereaved woman. She also has other suitors, two of whom were participants in the fatal hazing. As one and then the other is mysteriously killed, Sally, Seth's sister, and reporter on the college paper, takes a hand in tracing the killer. Naturally, and for comedy purposes, her antics are not appreciated by the investigating police.

The picture rushes toward its climax when Seth, whose romance with Julie has become a tender thing, is in danger of becoming a third victim. But Sister Sally's sleuthing has not been for naught and she leads the officers to a devilishly devised situation which, backfiring on its perpetrator, reveals Mrs. Fresnel as the semi-demented killer.

Possessing a novelty of setting and action which is accentuated by the believable acting of the principal players, the picture is one that, given the benefit of an intelligent advance which capitalizes all the values, should prove acceptable entertainment.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Produced by Albert Lewis. Directed by Elliott Nugent. Assistant director, Lonnie F. D'Orsa. Original, Beulah Marie Dix and Bertram Millhauser. Screen play by Frank Partos, Charles Brackett and Marguerite Roberts. Music and lyrics by Sam Coslow. Sound, Earl Hayman. Film editor, William Shea. Art directors, Hans Dreier and Bernard Herzbrun. Entertaining

One of the Mentone musically [illegible] of shorts, this has considerable of entertainment included. Among the specialties which have their moments as the entertainers at a bridge party are a knockabout comedy band, a soprano, a clever eccentric dancer and two English-accented comedians acting as joint masters-of-ceremonies. On the whole an entertaining number.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Cookie Carnival

(United Artists)

Excellent

One of the latest of the Walt Disney Silly Symphonies series, this, in full and riotous Technicolor, pictures the cookie carnival and especially the cookie parade to choose a queen. A lowly ginger cookie finds a weeping Cinderella, and so dresses her that she is chosen queen. As she decides upon a king, each in turn performing, are Angel Cake, Devil's Food cake, rum cakes and many others, pictured most cleverly. Of course, eventually, the ginger friend is selected king. An enjoyable subject for children and adults.—Running time, eight minutes.

INDEPENDENTS FORESEE NEW OPPORTUNITIES
NATIONAL FILM LIBRARY HEAD ON COAST
ROSENBLATT PLANS NO STUDIO AFFILIATION
TEN PICTURES START, SEVEN ARE COMPLETED

MERGERS completed, and rumors of mergers yet to come, have whetted appetites of independent producers and distributors who see from the combinations a greater opportunity for production of independent films during the coming year.

Independents, sensing that such merging must of necessity create a shortage of pictures, claim that if, for instance, Paramount and RKO should unite, as rumored, the result would be that the combined product of both studios would not exceed 80 pictures, whereas as separate companies, they produced more than one hundred.

Based on the buying custom of exhibitors, who as a rule do not book more than 75 features from any one company, independent producers realize mergers favor their interest as exhibitors would balk at booking as many as 96 pictures from one source. The Warner Brothers-First National combine a few years back afforded independents opportunity to produce and market between 10 and 20 additional pictures, when those two major companies linked interests.

Independents are following the situation closely, with major producers and distributors alike expectantly waiting further news.

National Film Library Underway

At last a genuine national film library is under way.

"Our purpose is to give motion pictures the same recognition as books have had in the National Archives," said Captain John G. Bradley, director of the Division of Motion Pictures for the National Archives in Washington, D. C. "So far as I know, we are making the first consistent three dimentional recording of history and collecting the first great national film library."

Captain Bradley won his presidential appointment to the newly created post last January. It is for life. He is in Hollywood for a general look at studios.

Already 5,000,000 feet of film have been collected. This includes many war-time newsreels. The national film library will be built through purchase, gifts, and a production department maintained by the National Archives.

Ten Films Finished, Seven Start

Ten pictures were completed during the final week of May and seven started. Fox and Paramount each have three of the finished product, MGM two, and Monogram and Republic one. MGM and Warner started two; the remainder being credited to Fox, Goldwyn and Paramount.

In the group completed at Fox is "The Dressmaker." Directed by Harry Lachman, the cast features Tulla Rolf, Clive Brook, Robert Barrat, Nydia Westman, George Hassell, Mlle. Smirnova, Leonid Snegoff, G. P. Huntley, Jr., Lionel Belmore and Andre Cheron. Second picture, "Welcome Home," has James Dunn, Rosina Lawrence and Arline Judge featured with Charles Sellon, George Meeker, William Frawley, Charles Ray, Arthur Hoyt, Raymond Walburn, James Burke, Frank McGlynn, Jr., Harry Holman and Ethel Wales. The third, "Orchids to You," will present John Boles, Jean Muir, Charles Butterworth, Harvey Stephens, Ruthelman Stevens, Sidney Toler, Spring Byington, John Qualen, Patricia Farr, Arthur Lake and Arthur Treacher. William A. Seiter directed.

At Paramount "Shanghai" (Wanger Production) was finished. Loretta Young and Charles Boyer are starred. The support lists Warner Oland, Alison Skipworth, Fred Keating, Hedda Hopper. James Flood directed. "Men Without Names" moved to the cutting room. In this Fred MacMurray, Madge Evans, Lynne Overman, David Holt, John Wray, J. C. Nugent, Leslie Fenton, Herbert Rawlinson, Elizabeth Patterson and Dean Jagger will be seen. Ralph Murphy directed. The third film, "Accent on Youth," co-stars Sylvia Sidney and Herbert Marshall and the support has Phillip Reed, Holmes Herbert, Catharine Doucet, Astrid Allwyn, Ernest Cossart, Samuel Hinds, Florence Roberts, Laura Treadwell, Lon Chaney, Jr., and Nick Foran.

"Escapade" (tentative title and formerly "Masquerade") was finished at MGM as was "Calm Yourself." In the first, which Robert Z. Leonard directed, are William Powell, Luise Rainer, Mady Christians, Virginia Bruce, Frank Morgan, Henry Travers, Reginald Owen and Loura Hope Crews. The second completed feature will present Robert Young, Madge Evans, Betty Furness, Nat Pendleton, Ralph Morgan, Claude Gillingwater, Hardie Albright, Shirley Ross, Louise Henry and Richard Tucker. George Seitz directed.

Monogram completed "Make a Million." The cast includes Charles Starrett, Pauline Brooks, George E. Stone, James Burke, Guy Usher, Norman Houston, Monte Carter, Jimmy Aubrey and George Cleveland. Lewis D. Collins directed.

In "Westward Ho," first feature for the new Republic Pictures (formerly Monogram) John Wayne, Sheila Mannors, Frank McGlynn, Jr., Jack Curtis, Yakima Canutt, Bradley Metcalfe, Hank Bell, Maray McLaren, Jim Farley and Dickie Jones will be seen. R. N. Bradbury directed.

The two pictures starting at MGM include "O'Shaughnessy's Boy," in which Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper are together again with the support including Spanky MacFarland, Willard Robertson and Leona Maricle, and which Richard Boleslawski is directing, and "The Murder Man," which features Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce, Harvey Stephens, Louise Henry and Robert Benchley, being directed by Tim Whelan.

At Warner, "Little Big Shot" went before the cameras. The present cast lists Robert Armstrong, Glenda Farrell, E. E. Horton, Sybil Jason, J. Carroll Naish and Edgar Kennedy, Michael Curtiz is directing. Also in work is "The Irish in Us." It has James Cagney, Pat O'Brien and Frank McHugh in the principal roles.

Fox began work on "Here's to Romance," a Lasky production which will present Nino Martini, Anita Louise, Genevieve Tobin, Mina Gambarelli, Reginald Denny and Madame Schuman-Heink. Alfred Green is directing.

Goldwyn started "Dark Angel" in which Herbert Marshall, Fredric March, Merle Oberon and Katherine Alexander are the principal players. Sidney Franklin is directing.

For Paramount, Wanger started "Every Night at Eight." With Raoul Walsh directing, the cast will feature George Raft, Frances Langford, Patsy Kelly and Alice Faye.

NEW FILM PROCESS FOR PICTURES AND RADIO MAY BRING MANY CHANGES

"Cellaphilm", Non-Inflammable, Non-Deteriorating, Is Only One-Fourth the Thickness of Nitrate, and Is Sprocketless

A new sound-on-film process from which revolutionary changes are promised in the manner and method of producing and purveying entertainment to motion picture and radio audiences, and which, if adopted, would require some changes in projection mechanism, has aroused considerable interest in both amusement branches. In Hollywood, Fox and Columbia were reported to be looking to the process with much favor, and Columbia was said to have offered financial backing.

Eugene DeRue is at the moment in California representing the sponsors of the treatment, called "Cellaphilm," made in France by persons whose identities will not be revealed for the present, although Mr. DeRue seems to have made extensive dickers with various Hollywood interests.

Cellaphilm is described as a non-explosive, non-inflammable, non-deteriorating film without emulsion. As a result it is only one-fourth the thickness of regular nitrate film but is said to have greater tensile strength. Examination of a sample in hand shows that the film feels and weighs about the same as the average cellophane paper and has the same pliability.

Freeman Lang in Hollywood admitted that machinery for reproducing "Cellaphilm" entertainment for sound-on-film broadcasting soon will be put on the market at a cost of approximately $125 to $175 in de luxe models. A home model also wil be made available at a slightly lower price and will include a loudspeaker. Manufacturing has started following long periods of tests.

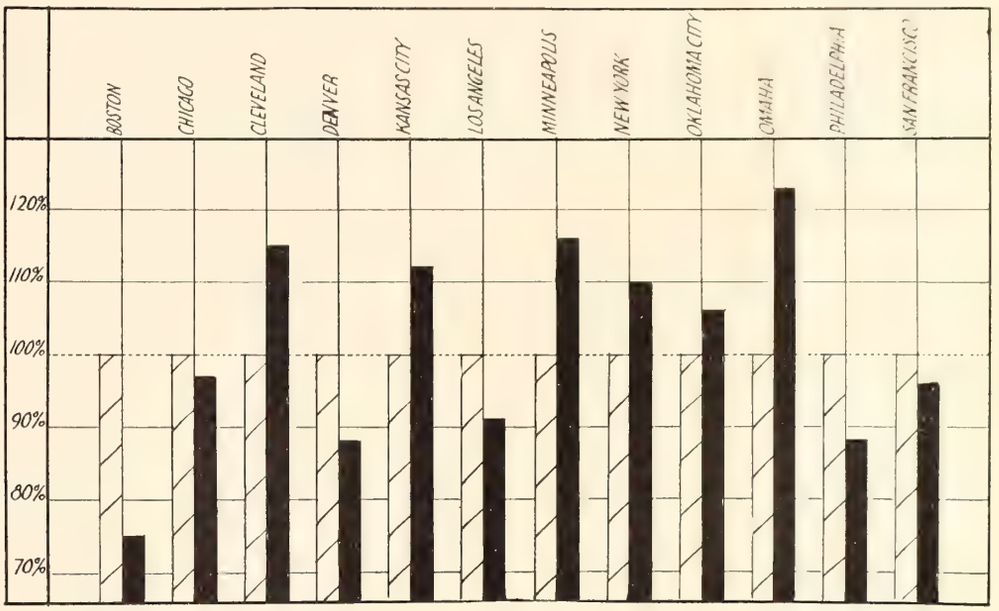
Has No Sprocket Holes

Light striations for sound and photography are impregnated straight through the film by means of a light-sensitive chemical. If the film becomes scratched it may be polished without having any effect on the sound. Prints are made from positives and not negatives, as in the case of the present nitrate film.

Both the picture and sound are shot on regular nitrate film first and then Cellaphilm prints are made. No cost figures are available as yet, but the film price is said to be much less than nitrate. There are no sprocket holes on Cellaphilm. A photo electric eye control with guide spokes is used instead and may be installed at small cost on any projector.

Cellaphilm is to be adapted immediately to radio broadcasting. Six different sound tracks running parallel on the standard 35mm film will give a four hour program on one reel. The savings thus accruing on the shipping costs of electrical transcription disc records are said to be considerable. Furthermore, nitrate film cannot be used in radio stations without special fireproof projection booths and then only after approval of fire departments.

Mr. DeRue has taken sample reels from several studios for processing in Cellaphilm in France. The first laboratory equipment is understood to be due in Hollywood any day from Paris.



In "canning" entertainment for radio broadcasts on Cellaphilm, it was pointed out that it would be a comparatively simple matter to put on the air 4,000 feet of the film with its more than four hours of sound recording, the recording machine being stopped at a pre-determined point and again started to complete the program.

Broadcasters say one of the advantages of the new Cellaphilm lies in its durability, due to the striations not being merely on the coated surface, but being impregnated throughout the entire thickness of the stock so that scratches cannot interfere with the sound and enabling its use over and over again without loss of definition.

A complete library and rental service will be made available soon for broadcasters through the Freeman Lang sound studios.

The possible effect of Cellaphilm in motion pictures would be felt more in distribution and exhibition than in production and would involve a weight reduction of prints, thereby effecting lower shipping costs. On the other hand, the fact that the stock is one-fourth the thickness of regular nitrate film would obviously require a scrapping of the present highly standardized reel frames, print containers and the like. Too, there has always existed widely divergent opinion on the practicability of any system of projection not using sprocket holes.

The broadcasting of sound entertainment from motion picture film was reported this week to be gaining ground rapidly, especially on the west coast, where the practice was started several months ago by Warners' Station KFWB. The broadcasters see in the spread of the use of sound-on-film recordings in radio a solution for the requirements imposed by the Federal Communications Commission that at every electrical transcription broadcast announcement be made that "this is an electrical transcription made for broadcasting purposes." The film method is not noted in the regulations.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, compares the business done in each of twelve key cities during the seven-weeks period from April 13 to May 25, 1935, with the receipts for the same period in 1934. The black bars indicate the more recent grosses, while the shaded bars represent the business in the 1934 period. In each city these 1934 receipts are taken as 100 per cent.

Audiences Object to "Transcription"

Broadcasters have long objected that the audience does not react favorably to the word "transcription," generally considering it a medium of presentation inferior to that which utilizes "live" talent. The question whether this announcement can be eliminated is scheduled to come up before the Commission on June 18, but even though the FCC may not act favorably on the broadcasters' plea, they believe that the Commission will not take steps to amend the regulations to include film.

Possibilities of film broadcasting have been brought to the fore by the business of this type being placed by Bromo Seltzer. The Don Lee network on the west coast, which heretofore has allowed little, if any, film recording broadcasts, has made an exception in the case of Bromo Seltzer's Pathe News of the air, and it was announced that reproductions of the film's sound track will be done over Station KHJ, Los Angeles, and broadcast over all stations in the Don Lee chain.

Close Western Deal

Advance Film Exchange has closed a deal with Spectrum Pictures to handle metropolitan distribution of Bill Cody westerns produced by Spectrum.

NINE PER CENT OF THEATRES EARNED 50 PER CENT OF BOX OFFICE INCOME

Each of 900 Houses Showed Annual Receipts of at Least $100,000, Recent Report of Census Bureau Indicates

Nine hundred motion picture theatres, or less than 9 per cent of the 10,143 houses surveyed by the United States Census Bureau in its 1933 investigation of amusements, accounted for box-office receipts of $199,019,000, or nearly half of the national admissions gross of $406,542,000, it was disclosed by a further analysis completed last week by the bureau. Each of these 900 theatres reported annual receipts of $100,000 or more.

The Census Bureau in this, the fourth of a series of breakdowns of statistics on theatres' earning power, placed the 10,143 theatres in the following groups:

NO. OF THEATRES	GROSS PER THEATRE	TOTAL GROSS
900	$100,000 to more	$199,019,000
1,201	$50,000 to $100,000	83,689,000
2,529	$20,000 to $50,000	81,065,000
1,854	$10,000 to $20,000	26,829,000
1,412	$5,000 to $10,000	10,667,000
1,759	$1,000 to $5,000	5,022,000
488	Less than $1,000	251,000

The 1,201 theatres in the second group ($50,000 to $100,000 gross per theatre) earned during 1933 approximately 20 per cent of the national box office income, while the 2,529 houses reporting admissions of $20,000 to $50,000 earned 19 per cent; 1,854 grossing between $10,000 and $20,000 got 6 per cent, while 1,412 receiving each between $5,000 and $10,000, grossed only 2.5 per cent. One per cent and one-tenth of one per cent were grossed, respectively, by the 1,759 grossing between $1,000 and $5,000, and the 488 reporting receipts of less than $1,000.

Further study by the Census Bureau of the distribution of theatres and grosses shows that one or more of the larger theatres with annual receipts in excess of $100,000 were reported from all but nine of the 47 states, and the seven states of California, Illinois, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania reported nearly 600 of the 900 houses or some 75 per cent of the theatres in this $100,000 group. The relation of grosses to theatres were reported, geographically, as follows:

State Group	No. of Theatres	Percent of Theatres	Total Grosses	Percent of Gross
New England....	608	6	$35,661,000	9
Middle Atlantic..	1,819	18	139,693,000	34
E. No. Central..	2,106	21	81,738,000	20
W. No. Central..	1,653	16	32,393,000	8
So. Atlantic.....	1,014	10	30,807,000	7
E. So. Central...	496	5	9,722,000	3
W. So. Central...	1,027	10	23,291,000	6
Mountain	468	5	9,133,000	2
Pacific	952	9	44,104,000	11

The analysis shows that the five East North Central States are in the only group which has a gross proportionate to the percentage of theatres and total gross. Middle Atlantic States, having only 18 per cent of the total theatres, grossed 34 per cent of the whole income, whereas the Mountain States and the West North Central reported grosses out of all proportion, inversely, to the percentage of theatres.

Analysis of the 122 legitimate houses with receipts of $8,611,000 which were surveyed by the bureau shows that 20 had receipts in excess of $100,000, taking in a total of $6,190,000, while 17 had receipts between $50,000 and $100,000, taking in $1,258,000, the remaining $1,163,000 being shared by 85 theatres.

A further study of the exhibition situation reveals that of the 10,143 houses canvassed, 7,184 were in operation uninterruptedly in 1929; 1,435 were opened or reopened, in 1930, 1931 or 1932; and 1,524 were opened or reopened in 1933. Of the 1933 openings and reopenings, 226 were in the first quarter of the year, 410 in the second, 507 in the third and 381 in the fourth.

The Bureau also made a study of circuit vs. independent operation, but in this instance bulked all amusements and did not show theatres separately. A total of 29,737 amusement enterprises were canvassed, 26,922 of which were independent and 2,815 operated by chains, the figures showing that while the latter accounted for only two per cent of the number of establishments they took in 18 per cent of the receipts.

Bogus "Schools" Active on Coast

Ever since the Better Business Bureau in Hollywood with the aid of the Los Angeles district attorney's staff and United States postal authorities, together with the assistance of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, struck at bogus acting schools that operated in the open prior to 1930, Hollywood considered the practice had been eliminated. Now the "racket" has been revived in the production colony under various subterfuges.

Dating from early 1934 the Producer's Association bureau of information has received some 22 written inquiries on reported bogus schools, 60 telephone inquiries from individuals and more than 75 have come from the Better Business Bureau, postal authorities and other law enforcing agencies throughout the country.

Parental Opinion Governs Choice of Films, Study Shows

Summing up the indirect results of a recent survey among 1,054 elementary school pupils of Los Angeles, the local Parent-Teacher Association, which conducted the study, concludes that the double feature is too lengthy for child patrons, that mothers play an important part in the selection of their children's screen entertainment, and that the family night program is highly desirable.

It was discovered that 53 per cent of the children involved attended film theatres at least once each week, 20 per cent attended at frequent intervals and for 24 per cent the motion picture was a rare occurrence. The study indicated that 50 per cent of the children preferred to attend pictures with their parents, and many attended neighborhood theatre junior matinees.

Tales of adventure were the favorite type of 53 per cent of the children, historical films ranking a close second, followed by animal pictures. Sixty per cent of the children said they sought the advice of their mothers in selecting pictures to be seen. One out of three children declared they left the theatre tired and tense, pointing to the inadvisability of double features for children.

The fifteen pictures listed as "best" by the children were: "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Treasure Island," "Judge Priest," "House of Rothschild," "Count of Monte Cristo," "Gay Divorcee," "One Night of Love," "Here Comes the Navy," "Circus Clown," "Bring 'Em Back Alive," "Alice in Wonderland," "Hideout," "Barretts of Wimpole Street," "Baby Take a Bow," "Wagon Wheels.'

16mm. in Large Hall

A 16mm. motion picture was projected recently with a new 1,000-watt Bell and Howell Filmo projector before an audience of 4,000 in Constitution Hall, Washington, D. C., in connection with a National Geographic Society lecture. The Society reported a "most satisfactory projection."

CHINA INCREASES TAX ON FOREIGN PICTURES

Producers, with Central Party's Assistance Assured, Lay Plans to Boost Home Industry

(Special Correspondence from Shanghai)

Producers in China, brightened by a government decision to increase the censorship fee for foreign motion pictures, have embarked upon a threefold plan to increase and improve product, as follows:

An economic bloc for furtherance of the home industry will be established.

To expand manufacture of equipment, under the auspices of the Central government; and, to improve product, technicians and specialists in production are to be trained.

Exportation of Chinese pictures is to be pushed.

More than 50 representatives of Chinese producers met at the second National Motion Picture Conference, called by the Central Party Publicity Committee. Yeh Chu-tsang, chairman of the Committee, pointed out at the start that the government and the motion picture companies should jointly share the responsibility of promoting the domestic film industry, that the companies themselves must follow up the guidance and assistance work of the various agencies for those purposes. Mr. Yeh urged also that producers keep before them the twin goal of instruction as well as entertainment, in fashioning studio output.

Fang Chih, secretary of the Central Party Publicity Committee, told of measures adopted by the Central government as a result of the first conference, last year. Mr. Fang reported on the activities of the Film Direction and Guidance Committee of the Central organization.

The Central authorities sent representatives to Szechwan, Hsikang, Ninghsia and Inner Mongolia to make promotional pictures of the customs and living conditions of the Northwest.

Studios have been instructed to plan product in line with the New Life Party Movement, in depiction of the national virtues.

A concomitant of the encouragement of local production has been the increasing of censorship assessments against foreign made pictures, as well as suppression of foreign pictures adjudged of an immoral character. A committee is being set up to rate domestic product with awards for the meritorious.

The government is actively assisting in film production and in development of equipment.

Arrangements have been made with the National Economic Council to film silkworm breeding processes for improvement of the silk industry.

Censorship is to be accelerated. Whereas the 50 pictures censored last year were returned to the companies in two to four days, the plan is to cut this time down to 12 hours.

The ministry of foreign affairs has been asked to take up through diplomatic channels the suppression by the foreign settlement authorities of pictures approved by the Central Film Censorship Board, formed jointly by the ministries of education and the interior.

Scenarios must pass two examinations to avoid money losses to the producers, said Chen Chien-hsui, representing the Central Film Scenario Examination Committee, who added that 234 volumes of scenarios were examined last year. Love and unemployment themes predominated, he said.

From Canton it was reported that hereafter theatres in South China must flash a portrait of Dr. Sun Yat-sen at the end of each performance, at the same time reproducing the National Party song.

RCA Establishes New Visual Products Branch

John K. West has been named to manage a newly established Visual Sound Products Department of the RCA Manufacturing Company, to handle sales of 16 millimeter sound-on-film amateur film cameras, 16 millimeter sound projectors, for school, home and industrial use, slide film mechanisms and sound advertising trucks. District branch offices were established for the new department at New York, Chicago and Hollywood, headed, respectively, by E. F. Kerns, C. S. Kernaghan and Mark Smith.

Mexican Industry Urges Government Reduce Tax Burden

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

Mexico's infant motion picture production industry, instead of becoming "big and strong," as was predicted confidently in the beginning, during its short four-year existence, has developed into a pretty sickly baby, for it cannot live on promises. There are even indications that the infant will pass out altogether if something substantial isn't done for it, and done immediately.

That is the essence of a petititon the more important native producers have addressed to the finance ministry, asking that the federal government keep at least some of the promises it made the industry long ago. The petitioners request that the government start the ball rolling by exempting the industry from all of the numerous taxes excepting that on its income, for five years. The petition states that the industry doesn't mind paying an income tax; and then, that the industry has hardly any income.

Pointing out that Japan, Spain and the Argentine are helping the film industry by exempting it from levies for five years; that Italy has put up a 10,000,000-lira fund to aid domestic production, but that Mexico has done nothing for its cinematographic industry except make promises, the petition cites the following taxes Mexican producers must pay: patent impost; 13 per cent of gross receipts for cinema in the federal district, which includes Mexico City and is this country's largest population center; 25 per cent of cinemas' gross receipts in several provincial cities; stamp tax on receipts and documents that must be issued in the conduct of the business; taxes of 6 per cent to 10 per cent on production (depending on the length of the picture and cost); duties on material that must be imported; censorship fees for the federal district; censorship fees to the state department for pictures that are intended for export; the "absentees tax" (an impost, put into effect last year, demanding from 2 per cent to 4 per cent on all money sent abroad, with the exception of funds for the purchase of merchandise that is to be retailed in Mexico), and the income tax.

According to the plea, with the exception of two or three, no film made in Mexico by a native company has even earned its cost. Money spent by Mexican interests in making pictures is an experiment, but not an investment, the petition says. Most companies that entered the field since 1931, the year in which Mexico made a definite start at production, have quit after their first production. At least 37 properly organized companies have tried production in the past four years.

The petition was signed by the following enterprises: Producciones Proa, S. A.; Industrial Cinematografica, S. A.; Aguila Films Mexico;—Producciones Contreras Torres; Producciones Duquesa Olga; Compañia Nacional Productora de Peliculas, S. A.; Internacional Distribuidora, S. A.; Impulsora Cinematografica, S. A.; Asociacion Azcarate; Garcia y Pezet; Asociacion Pinson, and Pezet y Azcarate.

PLAYWRIGHTS VISION LOSSES IN FILM BIDS

Fear Financing of Legitimate by Hollywood Would "Kill" the Plays Awaiting Production

Broadway managers and playwrights are apprehensive of the threatened "invasion" of the field of stage play financing by Hollywood motion picture companies, basing their anxiety upon the theory that such a development would virtually eliminate the competition afforded in the bidding for screen rights to legitimate productions.

Playwrights and the Dramatists' Guild especially are perplexed as to what course should be adopted. As the Guild never before has been confronted with a problem of this kind, it is expected settlement upon a policy will require several months.

That at least four major film companies tentatively are planning a schedule of about six stage productions each was reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD recently. Under such circumstances it is considered more than likely that these companies—Warner, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, and possibly RKO—would enter into an agreement not to bid up film rights.

Fear Death for Plays

The playwrights, while objecting to the possibility of materially reduced prices for film rights, also charge that wholesale subsidization of the legitimate theatre by Hollywood is almost certain to take many plays out of circulation while awaiting possible production.

Under the rules of the Dramatists' Guild a manager may obtain a six-month option on a playwright's work and by paying a nominal renewal fee, may hold the play for another six months while deciding upon a definite production program or while casting about for motion picture financing of that program.

How in the past film rights to Broadway plays were jockeyed through competitive bidding to prices far beyond the expectations of either producer or playwright was exemplified by Sam Goldwyn's paying of approximately $100,000 for the Alex Yokel production of "Three Men on a Horse," which will be Eddie Cantor's next picture.

Consider Court Test of Sunday Law

Actors' Equity Association is considering asking for a court of appeals test of the constitutionality of the Berg state law legalizing Sunday performances of legitimate attractions. Such an appeal would, it is reported, be based on the contention that one day off in seven is guaranteed only to legitimate actors.

Frank Gillmore, Equity president, said he always has considered the Berg bill unconstitutional and that, in the event Paul N. Turner, Equity counsel, is of the same opinion, the Equity council would be unable to act on the bill.

The section of the bill on which Equity is basing its contention is as follows:

"Every employer operating a place in which a legitimate theatre production such as dramatic and musical productions are shown or exhibited shall allow all employees, including the performers in the cast therein, at least 24 consecutive hours of rest in each and every calendar week, but this shall not apply to any place wherein motion pictures, vaudeville or incidental stage presentations or a combination thereof are regularly given throughout the week as the established policy of such place."

Mr. Turner said he expected a report on the constitutionality of the bill would be ready some time this week.

Egyptian Amusement Tax Modification Is Likely

Second and third run exhibitors in Egypt are renewing their continued protests against the amusement tax which has been in force since December 11, 1933, when the Egyptian government levied the tax, reports Charles E. Dickerson, Jr., commercial attache at Cairo. Previous protests have been useless, but with the opening of the winter cinema season, it is reported the government has almost decided to reduce the tax as it affects the lower admissions as soon as Parliament opens.

Mexico Takes Three Films

The Mexican government has arranged with Paramount Distributing Corporation for the reissue in Mexico of "Tabu," "The Man I Killed" and "Design for Living," to be included in the new Repertory Cinema whose free showings throughout the country are expected by the government to bring a new educational note to the people.

64 YEARS A SHOWMAN

George Washington Bailey Doesn't Let Cherry Trees Interfere with Imagination

At twelve years he landed on his head when something went wrong in an aerial act. It cost him his hearing, but he stayed with the show. Ever since he has stayed with shows, though he has fallen hard several times from a bank account standpoint. He's George Bailey, manager of the Cozy theatre, at Zwolle, La. He is 64 years old and he has been in show business 64 years. But he does not boast that his full name is George Washington Bailey, for the man who was among the first to present "The Sinking of the Battleship Maine" would not claim the cherry tree legend for his own. Mr. Bailey has imagination.

He was born with the smell of sawdust in his nose at a time when studying the audience was something every showman did, when "psychology" was not a household word and managers learned through experience, not from book stuff crammed into their heads.

His father was Gus Bailey, a distant relative of the Barnum partner; his mother was Mollie Kirland Bailey, the South's most famous show woman. It was this dashing Irish lass who announced to her parents at the age of 14 that she was going to marry Gus Bailey and, when they disapproved, eloped with him.

The Baileys had a difficult time of it. Gus' father had a circus; the married couple traveled with it. But Mollie had ideas of her own. She wanted her own show. Money was scarce, but she had an abundance of imagination and knew how to apply it.

Starts with Borrowed Horses

Twice denied forgiveness by her father, she borrowed some of his horses and a few wagons, and the Mollie Bailey show started out on the road. It started with Mollie, Gus, his brother Alfred, and Mollie's young half-sister. It developed into a first class traveling show which today would be called a vaudeville unit.

It was in this show that George Washington Bailey broke in. His arrival was not exactly propitious. Mollie Bailey had the customers in the habit of looking for her with the show. She had built her personality into a living trade mark for clean shows in an era when, like today, not all shows were family entertainment. But during the season of 1871 the customers missed Mollie. They asked Gus why. He was noncommittal—noncommittal until a telegram delivered Feb. 22, 1871, told him of the arrival of George Washington.

The "Flying Trapeze"

The mother rejoined the show as soon as possible, taking him with her. He was one of nine, and he was to be a showman, as soon as he could walk.

What took him first was "the daring young man on the flying trapeze." He wanted to be an aerialist. At 12 years came the unintentional plunge to the ground. In the ensuing years he was carried out of the ring 21 times, while working his act with four brothers and one sister. Fourteen times the canvasmen had to sluice him with buckets of water to bring him back to consciousness.

Once he took to training dogs and had a dog act which played the tent shows and vaudeville circuits. But there wasn't as much novelty as he wanted. The next season he took the road with a troupe of trained goats, and still says they were the best trained goats in America.

Then Mr. Bailey turned to the mechanical end of the circus. He became boss light man with his mother's shows and others and doubled in the parade. In the band he hung up some kind of record, eventually playing every instrument except the clarinet. Today he would be a grand bet for a one-man jazz band, with tap dancing and acrobatics for good measure.

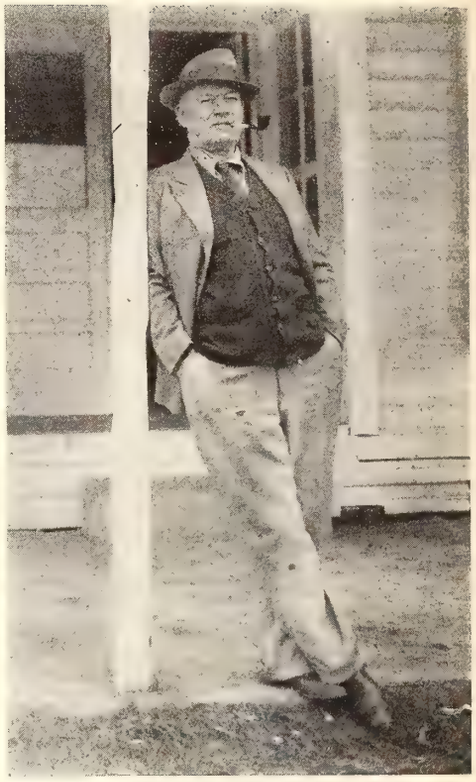
But he wanted his own show, just as his mother still has hers. He got it and pulled it through a tough season. Friends were hard up, Bailey helped. Then he didn't have a show.

Just a Family Outing

Reports came through of a large gathering almost 300 miles away. In anticipation of tremendous business, he pushed a new wagon-show over the long trek, only to find that the big reunion was a family affair and all of 12 persons had come in for it. That broke the second show. Bailey went back to vaudeville circuits and other shows until he had accumulated enough money to launch a third show, one of the finest on the road. The show was clicking; the territories seemed to have money. Then one night someone was careless and George Bailey's pride became a funeral pyre to his hopes.

Into Motion Pictures

There was a change coming in amusement trends. Mr. Bailey sensed it, turned his back on the canvas and sawdust and went out to buy pictures. The first he tried was "The Sinking of the Battleship Maine." It played Houston to success.



As a tent show owner and a vaudeville trouper, his activities had covered a southern and midwestern area. Now he was to use his knowledge of one section to try out exhibition. In the ensuing years he owned and operated motion picture theatres in Navasota and Cooper in Texas, Griffin, Hope and Coffeyville in Arkansas, and Basile, La.

Still Uses Circus Tactics

His latest enterprise is a small house in Zwolle, La.—the Cozy. With the instinct of the showman, he has associated with him in the enterprise Mayor Joe B. Parrott of Zwolle, Tom H. Stoma, and other community leaders.

Mr. Bailey employs circus tactics for the Cozy. In the old days he did a slack wire act before the show to get the customers interested. Today he is apt to step out with a cornet, play a few tunes and tell the passersby about the show. It works.

He also believes in outdoor paper and does his own "sniping."

GEORGE W. BAILEY

It was at the Cozy that he pulled off what he considers his biggest piece of ballyhoo for a motion picture. The house was playing "Lost in the Stratosphere." Bailey contacted an old-time balloon ascensionist and parachute jumper and arranged for him to do his jump into a lot at the rear of the theatre. The parachute, folded, was on display between jumps.

Bailey believes in pictures, "but like other commodities," he warns, "they must be sold cheap enough and plenty of comfortable seats provided."

Television in Color Reported in Belgium

Natural color television made possible by a screen lamp which can be produced for about $10 is an invention reported this week from Brussels, Belgium. The inventor is Leon Damas, amateur radio experimenter.

German radio authorities, sponsoring the development of television, announced at the first television congress in Berlin that the 1936 Olympic Games would be broadcast by the visual method. The announcement was the high point of the congress at which television apparatus now available was demonstrated and recent developments were discussed.

HAPPINESS AND FILMS

55 Newspaper Publishers of Iowa Join in Drive Launched by Ralph Branton of the Blank Circuit

by MARTIN J. CHICOINE
Des Moines Correspondent

The selling and promoting of that intangible luxury known as happiness burst across the map of Iowa on Easter Sunday morning, the brainchild of G. Ralph Branton, general manager of A. H. Blank's Tri-States theatres.

The campaign of "Let's Be Happy" is an indirect selling idea as far as theatres are concerned, but so contagious is its message that 55 of Iowa's leading newspaper publishers have chimed in with the original tune composed by Mr. Branton.

"Let's be grateful we're Iowans and let's quit sobbing and smile!"

That was the keynote of Mr. Branton's selling talks to the Des Moines Register and Tribune, Des Moines' Chamber of Commerce, and to other editors and business leaders of the state. For a week he was busy preaching the doctrine to luncheon groups and dinner clubs.

Spreading the Good News

Earl Hall, of the Mason City Globe-Gazette, has been named chairman of the state "Happiness Movement." From his office in the Savory hotel in Des Moines, Mr. Hall will issue bulletins and news dispatches recounting the latest good news about Iowa. Good news may include more money, better times, when prices go up, when the first crops break through the rich Iowa top soil. He must gather enough of "good news" and the newspaper must present it with the enthusiasm necessary to convince Iowans that their state is all right, that they are in reality well off—contented—happy.

Once this has been planted, then will buying at the theatre ticket windows increase in totals that will recall the prosperous 1920's. That is the thought of Mr. Branton, who hit upon the happiness idea when he was seeking a special avenue to commemorate A. H. Blank's 21st year as an exhibitor.

Specifically, the campaign will get its stimulation from a series of "seven pages." The first "Rainbow Over Iowa," blazed across Iowa newspapers Easter Sunday.

The next six pages, appearing in the next six weeks, consist of the following titles and boosting the following products and ideas, though no individual enterprise is permitted to tie in:

"Let's All Sing Like the Birdies Sing." With this page will go the suggestion for Iowans to patronize their merchants, especially to buy spring clothes.

"Go Feather Your Nest." This page calls for cleaning up in and around the homes, with suggestions for carpentry and painting.

"The Family Becomes Folks About Town." Restaurants, hotels, are to be boosted.

"Let's Go Happy!" This page is the direct appeal to Iowans to give a night en masse to their local theatres.

"Over the Hills to Happiness." Transportation, with emphasis on motoring over Iowa's highways, is the theme.

"A-Sporting We Will Go." Fishermen, golfers, tennis players and all other sports fans and hobby followers are urged to indulge in their favorite pastimes.

Editorials and Facts

Each of the pages contains editorials concocted to invite optimism, but every effort is being made to avoid any Pollyannish thought or suggestion with sweet-sounding words and impossible roseate dreams.

At the bottom of each page appears the most impressive commercial and agricultural statistics about Iowa, such as its leadership in the world's corn market, its high ranking in the pork market.

Among Mr. Branton's first converts in the campaign was E. P. Chase, last year's Pulitzer Prize winning editor of Atlantic, Iowa.

Every manager of the Tri-States circuit is being called upon by Mr. Branton to contribute his share to the movement by seeing that every unfortunate is made happy during the drive with free tickets to the theatre, the newspapers to play host.

According to Mr. Branton's message to his managers, "every theatre man's job is selling happiness!"

"If I had broached my idea to civic clubs and newspapers with this happiness idea last year I wouldn't have had a chance," he said. "When I started talking about it a few weeks ago, clubs, newspaper editors and businessmen literally jumped at the idea.

"Once we get Iowa smiling and believing in the return of good times once more, all businesses, all Iowans, benefit collectively and individually. And Tri-States will sell more tickets when the campaign has concluded."

Richardson Talks to Managers

F. H. Richardson, writer on projection matters in Motion Picture Herald, addressed approximately 50 theatre managers at a luncheon at the Hotel Emerson in Baltimore last week given by William K. Saxton, Loew city manager.

Peskay Takes House

Edward Peskay is head of Perfect Theatres, Inc., which recently acquired the Pickwick, Greenwich, Conn. He is also executive buyer for George Skouras' local circuit, and has an interest in a number of other theatres in the West.

Reflector Company Formed

The Candorlux Reflector and Manufacturing Company, Louisville, has been incorporated with capital stock of $2,000, by Joe B. Hinkie, Hans E. Birkholz and Fred T. Zahn, Jr.

Fox Invites Theatre Ad Heads to Confer on Campaign

Fox has invited 16 theatre advertising experts from various parts of the country to New York this week to devise plans for the advertising of the company's film "Dante's Inferno." "We consider this plan a distinct forward step in the creation of motion picture advertising," said Sidney R. Kent, Fox president.

The conference will be held on Friday. John D.Clark, general manager of distribution, will address the group, after which the picture will be screened, and they will examine an advertising exhibit prepared by the Fox advertising department. Discussion of the exhibition will follow. Attending from the Fox home office will be Charles E. McCarthy, director of advertising and publicity; Arch Reeve, Earl Wingart, James A. Clark, Louis Shanfield, Jerry Novat, Carl Mos, Leslie Whelan, Jack Lewis, Herbert Hyman and Abe Goodman.

Finestone Honored by Industry in Kansas City

On the eve of his departure from Kansas City last week to join the editorial staff of Motion Picture Herald in New York, Al Finestone, Quigley Publications correspondent in the Midwest city for the last several years, was honored at a meeting of the Variety Club. Arthur H. Cole, Paramount exchange executive, spoke of Mr. Finestone's work as trade journal representative and extended the best wishes of the local industry.

George S. Baker, president of the Variety Club, was in charge of the meeting, and Ralph C. LiBeau, Paramount district manager at Kansas City, was chairman.

GB Has Novel Book On 16 New Features

GB has issued a novel year book on the 16 Star Spangled Specials for the new season. The book, prepared by A. P. Waxman, advertising counsel, is in the form of a brown leather folding desk pad, two and one-half feet wide by one and one-half feet deep. The company's initials and giraffe monogram are stamped in gold on the outside.

Enclosed are 16 four-color photo-offsets of the stars of the 16 features, printed on heavy stock and suitable for lobby framing. The heads are reproductions from oil paintings by the portrait painter, A. Ginsberg.

Loew Closes Deal for Mayfair on Broadway

Loew's, Inc., this week closed a deal for the Mayfair theatre on Broadway, operated by Walter Reade, and will take possession next week. The plan provides for a transfer of the double feature film policy from Loew's New York, which closes this week, and which, with the adjoining Criterion, is to be razed to make way for stores.

Cantor Writes Ad Textbook

Eddie Cantor, whose next Samuel Goldwyn-United Artists film, "Dreamland," will go into work shortly, is preparing a text book on radio advertising, to be used at colleges, advertising agencies and broadcasting companies. He recently formed Eddie Cantor, Inc., radio consultant, offering advice on radio advertising.

YOU HAVEN'T A SHOW WITHOUT FOX

THE CUTTING ROOM

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

ORCHIDS TO YOU

Fox

A smart and gay love story, brilliant settings, a good name value cast, several dramatic situations, sparkling comedy in dialogue and action are the commercial showmanship assets of this picture. They, together with a title that has an appealing sound, plus writer and director credits, give showmen much with which to work. In addition the producers plan to back the feature up with an intensive exploitation campaign.

The film glorifies the American florist, a fact that at once constitutes bases for tieup with every flower shop and nursery in every town in which it will play. It deals with a woman who, having built up a profitable business, encounters romantic and business difficulties which finally land her in the position where unless she talks she'll land in jail. As the plot works out, however, it develops novel and distinctive love interest, comedy and drama.

In the lead roles, it teams three popular players: John Boles, seen in many popular pictures, Jean Muir, in many Warner pictures, currently "Oil for the Lamps of China," and the comedian, Charles Butterworth. Additionally it features Ruthelma Stevens, Harvey Stevens, Arthur Lake, Sidney Toler, Spring Byington, now in "Werewolf of London"; Patricia Farr and John Qualen.

The story is an original by Gordon Rigby and Robert Dillon adapted by William Hurlburt with screen play by Howard Estabrook and Bartlett Cormack and added dialogue by Glenn Tryon. Direction is by William A. Seiter, maker of "Richest Girl in the World," "Roberta" and "The Daring Young Man."

OLD MAN RHYTHM

Radio

In character this production is potentially promising of being an unique showmanship comedy. It's the story of an iron-willed steel-hearted business man who, to prevent his collegiate son from making a romantic contact which the sire believes far beneath the boy's social station, becomes a college freshman to keep an eye on the young fellow and see that he minds his p's and q's. The premise is indicative of the complicated and involved fun that ensues, with all kinds of amusing incidents from comedy fraternity hazings to unexpected romantic developments, a ready idea of the kind of applicable exploitation.

The yarn is an original by Lew Gensler, Sig Herzig and Don Hartman, with screen play by Herzig and Ernest Pagano. Direction is by Edward Ludwig.

An old favorite, long absent from the screen, Charles (Buddy) Rogers, is featured in the lead. In the role of his father, George Barbier will be seen. The girls in the story are Barbara Kent, whom the father wants his boy to marry; the girl whom Rogers is violently in love with is Grace Bradley, beautiful but designing campus siren. Main action centers about this group and John Arledge, who is the old man's collegiate buddy. Other players are Betty Grable, Erik Rhodes, Eric Blore, Joy Hodges, Douglas Fowley, John Mercer, Evelyn Poe and Dave Chasen.

While there is showmanship worth in the cast names, particularly that of Rogers, there is also much that is better than ordinary exploitation value in the story's character and settings. The idea of both boy and father striving to educate each other to the ways of the modern world is something that astute showmanship should find effective in stirring up patron curiosity.

CHEERS OF THE CROWD

Monogram

The story of this picture is a lesson in showmanship. It's the yarn of an exploitation engineer, a doctor of sick shows with a vivid talent for concocting legitimate and illegitimate front page publicity. Though it attracted attention to the clients of his unique service, it developed romantic and dramatic complications when the object of his deluge of printers' ink seemed to turn out as anything but the honest John that he had been created to be. But just when things look to be tragically black for the highly imaginative exploiteer and his hero is about to have his dream castles pulled down about him, the yarn takes a surprising twist as honest John foils the dirty work and makes the press agent a real genius.

Story and screen play are by George Wagner, who has contributed several Monogram features, with direction by Vin Moore.

The cast features Russell Hopton in the role of the exploitation engineer, Irene Ware as the girl reporter with whom he is in love and the girl whom he dupes with his fantastic story of the honesty of Honest John (Harry Holman). Bradley Page is the villain, who, knowing who John really was, almost upsets the grand plan to ballyhoo the show by blackmail and attempts to steal Miss Ware from Hopton. Supporting players include Wade Boteler, Betty Blythe, John Quillan, Roberta Gale and John Dilson.

Showmanship which takes advantage merely of the elements with which the production treats seems to be the logical and most effective brand of exploitation to apply. The title has definite value in connection with this idea and for practical purposes seems to be of more worth than cast names.

ANNA KARENINA

MGM

To bring Count Leo Tolstoy's great dramatic love story to the screen in its full power and beauty, MGM has selected its most important name player for the leading role, surrounded her with a group of name players who are stars in their own right, assigned one of its ace directors, called upon outstanding literary figures to prepare the adaptation and is giving the feature spectacular and authentic production values worthy of the importance of the cast and the story's prestige.

Greta Garbo is starred in a role that should perfectly fit her established screen personality and talents. Fredric March, recently seen in another Tolstoy story, "We Live Again" (Resurrection), and Herbert Marshall, seen with Garbo in "The Painted Veil," are the two men about whom the drama and romance revolve. Principal featured players are youthful Freddie Bartholomew, Basil Rathbone and Maureen O'Sullivan, a trio who were seen in "David Copperfield," May Robson, Reginald Denny and Reginald Owen. Additionally, among others, the cast includes Constance Collier, Cora Sue Collins, Buster Phelps, Sarah Padden, Joan Marsh, Phoebe Foster and Barry Norton.

Adaptation is by Clemence Dane, author remembered for her Radio picture "Bill of Divorcement," in which Katharine Hepburn was discovered, and Salka Viertel, who did the screen plays on two previous Garbo pictures, "Queen Christina" and "The Painted Veil." Direction is by Clarence Brown who, with "Sadie McKee" and "Chained" among his MGM successes, directed Garbo's first talking picture, "Anna Christie."

Locale of the story being Russia, much research was devoted towards obtaining authenticity in settings, costumes and character types. Among the spectacular features are a colorful banquet of the Russian Army officers and an elaborate court ball.

THE RETURN OF PETER GRIMM

Radio

The subject of which this story treats—spiritualism—the attempt to communicate with the dead, or the power of the dead to influence the living from beyond the grave, has intrigued humanity from the beginning of time, giving a vivid idea of the kind of showmanship feature it should be. A fantastic and mystic feature, "The Return of Peter Grimm" as a David Belasco stage play made a profound impression when presented as a legitimate theatre offering. The story of Peter who, unable to make any contact with the world from his grave, returns to the scenes of his life to have his presence noted only at first by his old dog and his ailing child ward, to halt the tragic train of events which his death set in motion, while not entirely unique as screen material, is something that astute and convincing showmanship easily should be able to establish as differently interesting entertainment.

Lionel Barrymore will be seen in the lead role, a tyrannic but kindly old man, confident that his judgment, alive or dead, is the best for all those near to him. His friend, through whom he tries to communicate, is Edward Ellis, seen in "The Thin Man" and "President Vanishes." Helen Mack is the girl, adopted daughter of the old man, whose life he tries to influence as he seeks to have her marry his dissolute nephew, Allen Jenkins, rather than the boy she really loves, James Bush. George Breakston will be seen in the role of the boy, offspring of a clandestine affair between Vincent and a household servant. Others in the cast are Donald Meek and Ethel Griffies.

The screen play is by Francis Faragoh, who recently completed the screen play for the forthcoming "Becky Sharp," and direction is by George Nicholls, Jr., who made "Sylvester Bonnard."

for the principal supporting roles; lined up a cast chock full of important names, chose one of their ace directors, Mervyn LeRoy, to handle the picture, and called upon every resource of the studio to insure production values that the feature may be worthy entertainment.

"Page Miss Glory" is all comedy. It deals with a trio of promoters who make a composite photo of all the beautiful girls in the world for commercial advertising purposes. Christening her "Dawn Glory," they run into hectic trouble when the ad sponsors demand that "Dawn" be produced in the flesh. Through an accident, Marion Davies, a hick chambermaid, is seen in a costume designed for Dawn delivered in the hotel where the trio are quartered and she is working. A famous stunt flyer falls in love with Dawn's photo. She falls in love with him. Their romance is culminated in a flight over New York.

Miss Davies is Dawn. Pat O'Brien, Frank McHugh and Mary Astor are the promoting trio, Dick Powell is the aviator. Bizarre characters roaming in and out of the story include Patsy Kelly, Lyle Talbot, Mary Treen, Berton Churchill, Helen Lowell, Al Shean, Joe Cawthorn, Hobart Cavanaugh, Lionel Stander, Barton MacLane, Allen Jenkins, Harry Beresford, Oscar Apfel, Gavin Gordon, Jack Mulhall and Gayne Whitman.

Promising to be a fun fest, a quality which is accentuated by the screen reputations of the majority of the players, the picture also promises to be a showmanship treat with which real exploiteers may do much.

BROADWAY JOE

Replete with mirth and melody, this Joe E. Brown feature has a musical comedy background which should give him unique opportunity to display again the talents that first won him fame on the stage. Singing, dancing, doing acrobatic stunts in the backstage atmosphere of a small-time burlesque and in a pretentious Broadway spectacle, he should also come up with the kind of performance in which showmen like to have him and audiences like to see him. Accompanying Brown's antics is a light dramatic supporting story that tangles the hero's domestic affairs, causes a temporary separation from his faithful pal wife, but winds up in a happy ending triumph for both.

The story is by Lois Leeson and Bert Kalmar, Harry Ruby and Benny Rubin collaborated on the screen play. Music and lyrics are by Mort Dixon and Allie Wrubel, who did those in "Flirtation Walk." Direction is by Busby Berkeley, maker of the spectacular dance effects in many Warner pictures and also director of "Gold Diggers of 1935."

The cast supporting Brown includes Ann Dvorak as his wife; Patricia Ellis, a madcap socialite who joins the burlesque show for a thrill; William Gargan, an advance man who discovers the trio in Joe Cawthorne's troupe to take them to New York in the Joseph O'Neill production. There Joe and the sensational Patricia are starred as Ann waits in the wings imagining that the pair are in love. But when things are straightened out Brown rescues Ann from her self-exiled spot in the old show to return her to a featured spot with him in a new Broadway revue.

Dominating exploitation feature appears to be Joe E. Brown in his singing, dancing acrobatic role, first in the burlesque show atmosphere and then as a big town headliner. As the show is essentiallly comedy, with only a little of the laugh-clown-laugh contrast, it appears to be one that will click with his fans as well as general audience.

SHE

RKO Radio

The story from which this picture is being made is weird, fantastic drama. Authored by Sir Rider Haggard, it is highly imaginative and like a previous picture made by this company, "King Kong," bases much of its potential exploitation and entertainment value on amazing supplementary production effects. In gist the story details the experiences of a scientist, who, following the thread of a five-century-old family legend, ventures into an eerie land. As romance becomes a part of his adventures, he discovers She, ruler of Kor, a woman and mighty queen who has been living more than 500 years. She, believing the scientist a reincarnation of one she has killed centuries before, determines that she will not lose him again and would sacrifice in flames the girl whom he has come to love. The sensational finale is as unearthly as the story's premise.

The screen play is by Ruth Rose, with added dialogue by Dudley Nichols. Direction is by Irving Pichel, known both as an actor and director.

A new screen personality, Helen Gahagan, noted stage performer, will be seen in the title role. The role of the venturesome scientist is taken by Randolph Scott, seen in several Paramount western pictures, and featured in Radio's "Roberta." Helen Mack will be seen as the young lady whose life is menaced. Supporting players are Nigel Bruce, Gustav Von Seyffertitz, Lumsden Hare, Nobel John and Samuel Hinds.

Two of the production effects which should be productive of interest-creating showmanship are the entry into the fantastic world, where, in a glacier, the remnants of the ancient scientific party which first discovered She are found preserved in a glacier, and the highly mechanicized fire sacrifice incident in which She is consumed by the supposedly eternal life-giving flames.

TECHNOLOGICAL

I GO PROJECTIONEERING

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Responding to invitations from the Independent Managers of Philadelphia, William K. Saxton, city manager of Loew, Inc., in Baltimore, and J. J. Payette, general manager of Warner Brothers Management Corporation, Washington, D. C., to address theatre managers of those cities on projection, I faced about 40 managers in the assembly hall of Independent Theatre Managers headquarters in Philadelphia and later had a further talk with such of the men as were not compelled to rush back to their theatres.

I made a brief visit to the new, commodious and beautifully equipped headquarters of Motion Picture Projectionist Local Union 181, IATSE & MPMO, where time permitted only greetings. I hope to be able to address the local before long. I have done so several times already.

Larry Ruch, manager of the Liberty theatre in Camden, N. J., took me in tow and I once-overed the Broadway theatre in that city, shaking hands with its manager, Joseph J. Kelly, and others. Both sound and projection results were beyond just criticism. RCA Photophone is used, and as the theatre is near the RCA plant—well, it had better be good. RCA experts visit it almost every day.

At the Liberty I met Projectionist F. Schofield. The light tone and distribution on the screen here was good. The sound was also excellent. Brother Schofield was puzzled by the recent development of a faintly visible slot of light (in dark scenes only) at the center of the screen. He had recently had the mirrors resilvered. The effect was not present before this was done. I was unable to offer any helpful suggestion, not being able to see the effect—all scenes while I was present being light ones. Can any reader suggest a possible cause. It is about one foot long, said Schofield. Examination of the mirror disclosed no visible fault.

Manager Ruch then escorted me to the location, just outside the city, of the Drive-In theatre, which accommodates 430 autos on seven ramps. R. H. Smythe is manager. The screen image is 50 feet wide. The projection distance is 178 feet. The projection room is partly sunken, lens and observation port bottoms about even with ground level. The projection angle is upward, of course. Projection room is equipped with Simplex projectors, Hall and Connolly H. I. lamps and RCA sound. This theatre was opening that night for its third season. It has made more than expenses, though financially I was advised it was no world-beater.

Before returning to Philadelphia I paid a visit to the huge offices and factory of RCA and had a talk with some of its officials, Messrs. Goodman and Joyce, to name only two.

While in Philadelphia I attended a Germantown theatre, which, under the circumstances I will not name. The results at this theatre, as viewed and heard that night, were such that certainly the great circuit it is operated by should take little pride in this house. The light was far from brilliant and very poorly distributed. The sound was so poor that half the conversation was unintelligible. I called on the projectionist, an old-timer who, I believe, knows his business, and taxed him with the faults in light, only to be assured that the reflecting mirrors were all "shot to the devil" and he had been unable to obtain either new ones or refinishing. I called at headquarters later and talked with the chief engineer in charge of projection and sound for that district, only to hear, "Must keep within the budget," etc., which frankly did not impress me much. The house was only about half filled, with "Life Begins at Forty" on. No wonder!

"Saving" a few dollars in such a matter will, beyond any possible question of doubt, cost that theatre the price of a hundred such mirrors. When coupled with that terrible sound—well, I would say a thousand times that sum.

In Baltimore

In Baltimore Mr. Saxton assembled 30 managers at a really swank luncheon in the Emerson hotel. And that was a genuine achievement, for it was Decoration Day.

Business Representative Nicholas Ropka of local union No. 181 called at my room while Mr. Saxton and Mr. Goldstein were there, and a friendly, helpful discussion of various things was indulged in. Brother Ropka is a man of mature years, of understanding and good judgment.

While in Baltimore I visited two large downtown theatres, the Keith and Loew's Century. The work at the Keith was very good, except possibly for the sound, which they are trying to improve. I talked with the projectionists, who impressed me as able men doing good work under rather poor conditions. It was a very tight squeeze for me to get between the wall and the lamphouse of No. 1 projector.

At the Century projection was excellent, while the sound was as good as it often is my privilege to hear. The Baltimore Century sound might well be used as a "yard stick" by which to measure sound excellence in other theatres. However, in making that statement I must remark that I tested it from only one point about half to two-thirds of the way down and a bit to the right of center.

Down Washington way, dodging through groups of politicians, I went immediately to the Earle Theatre Building, where are the offices of the Warner Bros. Management Corporation, in charge of J. J. Payette. Frank LaFalce, director of publicity, received ye scribe and put him in touch with Nat Glasser, district manager, whom I hereby declare to be the correct man in the proper place. In fact, all the men I met in the great suite of offices impressed me as able, earnest men who "know their onions" in theatre matters.

I was particularly pleased with Mr. Glasser's views on projection matters. For example, when he is in need of a projectionist, he does not merely call up the union and demand that a man be sent. He calls Business Representative DeForest Ormes up, advises him exactly the calibre of man he wants, and, in friendly spirit, "talks the matter over." Said he:

"I always find Ormes ready, so far as is possible to meet my wishes. He cannot always quite do it but he comes as near as he can."

Brother Ormes attended the meeting at which I spoke.

I had an extended and very pleasant chat with Mr. Payette, who, following the address, suggested that inasmuch as they were to have a meeting of all managers in the district (which covers the District of Columbia and a wide outlying territory) in August, he would very much like to have me come down and address them, which I will, provided time can be taken from my other activities.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

Cifre Starts Equipment Service for Independents

Joseph S. Cifre, pioneer in the motion picture theatre equipment field, started on June 1st, at Boston, a national service to advise independent circuits and owners on equipment, accessories and theatre operations from the standpoint of the mechanics of projection, ventilation, lighting and the like, and also to counsel on purchases. Incorporated as the Joseph S. Cifre Purchasing Counselors, and with headquarters at 694 Washington Street, the company will charge an annual fee based on capacity.

Mr. Cifre's father opened and operated the first nickelodeon in Boston in 1904. He was formerly with the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company and with United Theatre Equipment Corporation, Boston, which was acquired by National Theatre Supply in 1926. Since then Mr. Cifre has managed National's Boston branch, resigning May 31st.

BLOCK CALLS ACADEMY PRODUCERS' "CREATURE"

Producer Champion of Screen Writers' Guild Says Academy Is Essentially a Company Union

Ralph Block, producer and protagonist of the Screen Writers' Guild, holding various differences with a news article from the HERALD Hollywood Bureau concerning the NRA Code, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and the perennial talent problems of Hollywood, published May 18, has addressed a letter to MOTION PICTURE HERALD as follows:

707 North Alpine Drive,
Beverly Hills, California,
May 28, 1935

"Any discussion of the motion picture code must be, since the events of yesterday in Washington, merely academic. Yet I still feel that it is of sufficient importance for people in the industry to have a clear picture of the relationship of actor and writer organizations to conditions here to correct some of the inaccuracies on page twenty-five of the HERALD issue of May 18th.

"I can only speak generally of the Screen Actors' Guild, but certainly I can speak specifically of the Screen Writers' Guild, having retired as president a little more than a month ago. The Screen Writers' Guild is an organization of eight hundred writers, half of whom are the writers who create the screen plays of Hollywood. There are fewer than fifty writers in the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. The Screen Writers' Guild has a commission of conciliation and arbitration which has adjusted differences in every studio in the business and is continuously active in this respect. To say, therefore, that the Academy 'is definitely being reestablished as the medium of adjustment of differences' is not merely an inaccuracy. Such statements, along with others, such as 'Actors' Guild fading from picture,' give rise to the suspicion that the HERALD may have been trying stupidly to play a game which has never yet resulted in benefit to any motion picture publication.

Calls Academy Company Union

"The Guilds do not depend upon the existence of the NRA. They were formed long before the NRA was even heard of and have prospered and grown to importance despite the efforts of producers to cripple them through the NRA. The part played by Mr. Sol A. Rosenblatt in this process gives color to the oft repeated assertion that the NRA was set up mainly as a false front, under cover of which employers might more securely entrench themselves in their short-sighted policies as regards labor. But this is really beside the point. The actors' and writers' branches of the Academy were wrecked, not by the NRA—and, in fact, before the NRA existed—but by the recognition on the part of these talent classes that the Academy was essentially a company union, replete with fair promises and short on fulfillment—a creature of the producers' association with the strings but faintly disguised. The Screen Writers' Guild, which has existed for more than a dozen years in Hollywood, was reorganized in its present form at the time the producers tried to railroad through a 50 per cent cut and when they were able to use the Academy to aid them in this objective. The Screen Actors' Guild was born shortly afterwards. The only definite benefit that ever came out of the NRA was the erection of the Extras' Committee, which was a direct result of activity on the part of the Actors' Guild. Both Guilds, on the other hand, had to spend considerable time and money to defeat the inhibitions and limitations on actors and writers which the producers tried to have written into the motion picture code. They were, in fact, written into the code but were eliminated by an executive order from the White House, which suspended them.

"Both Guilds, after a great deal of maneuvering, were able to force producers to appoint representatives to bargaining committees under conditions laid down in the motion picture code. These committees accomplished nothing directly, but indirectly they accomplished a great deal. The 'Standard Players' Contract,' which the HERALD hails in black-face type in its issue of May 18th, was a lesser copy of the demands of actors in the code bargaining committee. It was granted by producers through their creature, the Academy, only because the threat of the Screen Actors' Guild and its relation to Equity to force them into a position of acquiescence. The Academy, as always, became an instrument by which the producers could save their faces. A revised writer-producer code is expected to issue shortly from the Academy and again, only because the Screen Writers' Guild stands as a menace against the continuation of the old laissez faire policy of producers. In this connection it might be mentioned that the present writer-producer code of the Academy was written by those writers who were instrumental in reorganizing the Screen Writers' Guild. The producers know that this instrument is now antiquated, unequal to present conditions, but as always, prefer to make rules where they don't have to abide by them—in the Academy.

Calls Issue Confused

"Too often issues of this kind are confused, first by inaccuracy in their public presentation, and second by personal emotions which distort the principles involved. The producers are too often inclined to lump all employees together as Bolsheviks, revolutionaries, or any similar anti-social appellation which will relieve them of the responsibility of facing real issues squarely and working them out. In these respects the motion picture industry is probably the most backward and exhibits the greatest time-lag of any important quasi-public utility in the country. This does not happen to be a time in history in which proper social demands of workers can be merely blinked or evaded. Such evasion sooner or later produces its own accumulated penalties. The Screen Guilds have always considered that they offered a fair and a coherent instrumentality through which producer-writer or producer-actor problems could be satisfactorily settled. But producers still cling to old-fashioned conceptions and insist that if the apple of the industry is to be shared, they shall have the first five big bites.

"I have not indited this comment upon the article in the HERALD without being aware that the HERALD is an important medium of communication among exhibitors. It may be of interest to these who have their own problems, I have no doubt, in the business of buying film from large producing and distributing organizations, to have an accurate if small picture of the situation in certain corners of Hollywood.

Supply Dealers To Study Market At Annual Session

Well over a score of manufacturers will have exhibits at the fifth annual convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association, eighteen having already arranged for booths and others having signified their intention of doing so. The convention, which will be held at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago, opens Saturday, June 15, and closes June 18. All business sessions will be held in the Berwyn room, while the equipment exhibits will be in the East Lounge.

This year's convention was extended to four days because the three-day meeting last year did not provide sufficient time to consider the issues placed before it. One of the outstanding problems to come before the convention, according to J. E. Robin, president of the organization, refers to prices and dealer discounts. An attempt will also be made to appraise the effect of new developments in theatre apparatus on the equipment market. There also will be discussion of the resources made available for theatre reconditioning by the Federal Housing Administration.

Manufacturers who have closed for space in the equipment exhibit are:

Brenkert Light Projection Company, Detroit; Wenzel Company, Chicago; Platter Sound Products Corporation, North Vernon, Ind.; Da-Lite Screen Company, Chicago; National Carbon Company, Cleveland; Carbon Products Company, New York; Herman A. DeVry, Inc., Chicago; Baldor Electric Company, St. Louis; Strong Electric Corporation, Toledo; Chicago Cinema Products Company, Chicago; Vulcan Products Company, Newark.

Others are the Clough-Brengle Company, Chicago; Peabody Seating Company, North Manchester, Ind.; Golde Manufacturing Company, Chicago; Projector Improvement Company, New York; United Optical Corporation, New York; Continental Electric Company, St. Charles, Ill., and Neumade Products Corporation, New York.

Academy Moves Offices

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has moved from the Hotel Roosevelt, Hollywood, to the Taft Building.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

SEVEN hundred finely groomed film folk and guests frolicked at the Medinah Club on Friday of last week and made the 1935 Film Relief Dinner Dance a party to date parties from. The multi-penned publicists' association had been hard at it for weeks, snaring a special section in the Evening American and publicity in all the best places. Cuisine and music coaxed the customers into a perfect mood for a choice lot of mechanical incitements to charitable impulse, which clicked so merrily that something like $3,500 was estimated net replenishment of the relief fund, and a good time was had by all.

Everybody's worried about what becomes of the code board and Emma Abplanalp, its gracious, energetic and imperturbable secretary, except the lady herself. It seems there's a farm in Pennsylvania, a homey, restful kind of farm, without too many acres to worry about, and it's a long, long time now since she's fed the chickens in person. And the supreme court seems to be pretty sure about the status of the poultry business if nothing else.

Warners' new Beverly theatre, at 95th street and Ashland avenue, tapping the heart of Chicagoland's rich, populous old Beverly Hills, opened to the public June 4 with "Go Into Your Dance," after a private performance the night before in benefit of the community Women's Club and after publication of a special section in the Sunday Herald and Examiner arranged by Warner publicist Larry Stein. The theatre seats about 1,200 and crowds the clock for modernity. Ronald F. Perry was the architect.

Plasterers, brick masons and overalled comrades in confusion are driving the Allied States Association office staff crazy, but when they've finished their sawing and hammering Aaron Saperstein will sit at the head of a long, spacious Board Room, when addressing meetings, and floor space throughout will fit the rapidly developing requirements of the organization. The work's been going on a week and will be completed in another.

Walter Babitz, Cicero exhibitor, will leave Chicago about June 15 for an extensive business and pleasure trip through the West and taking in the Pacific Coast.

Jack Eckhardt, son of Clyde and like his father a demon drummer-up of Fox film sales, married Dorothy Schmidt, non-professional, at the bride's home in Chicago on June 1.

Irving Mack, who's been in the business long enough to know all the answers to all the questions, can't figure out why Filmack did a bigger gross in May of this year than in December of last, the holiday month being traditional top o' the trade, but he admits he loves it in May as he did in December and vice versa.

What with Si Greiver pushing the Ross-McLarnin fight films and A. Teitel pushing the Italian-American bout pictures, Chicago screens are giving the citizenry plenty of good red meat and the box offices that vital something extra to feed on. After two nights spent in three Loop theatres each, your reporter claims the shadow-boxing championship of the wide world.

Sam Schaefer, who learned to take it on the chin back in the days when the world war was a rumor, forgot to learn about taking it on the ankle. So he's hobbling around Illinois Theatre Equipment headquarters with one foot in a house slipper and putting the best one forward.

The boys along the Row, as fine a lot of unidentified horseplayers as ever died broke, are waiting for the bigwigs in City Hall to ask a favor. Reason: The politicos have taken over the race tracks, and clubhouse badges, which used to grow on trees, are harder to get than percentage bookings on Sunday. And they've closed the bookies, with their left hand, to make the pay-and-like-it policy stick. Result: Hizzoner, Winter-book favorite and easy winner in his first start, is a top-notch morning glory if you ask the boys.

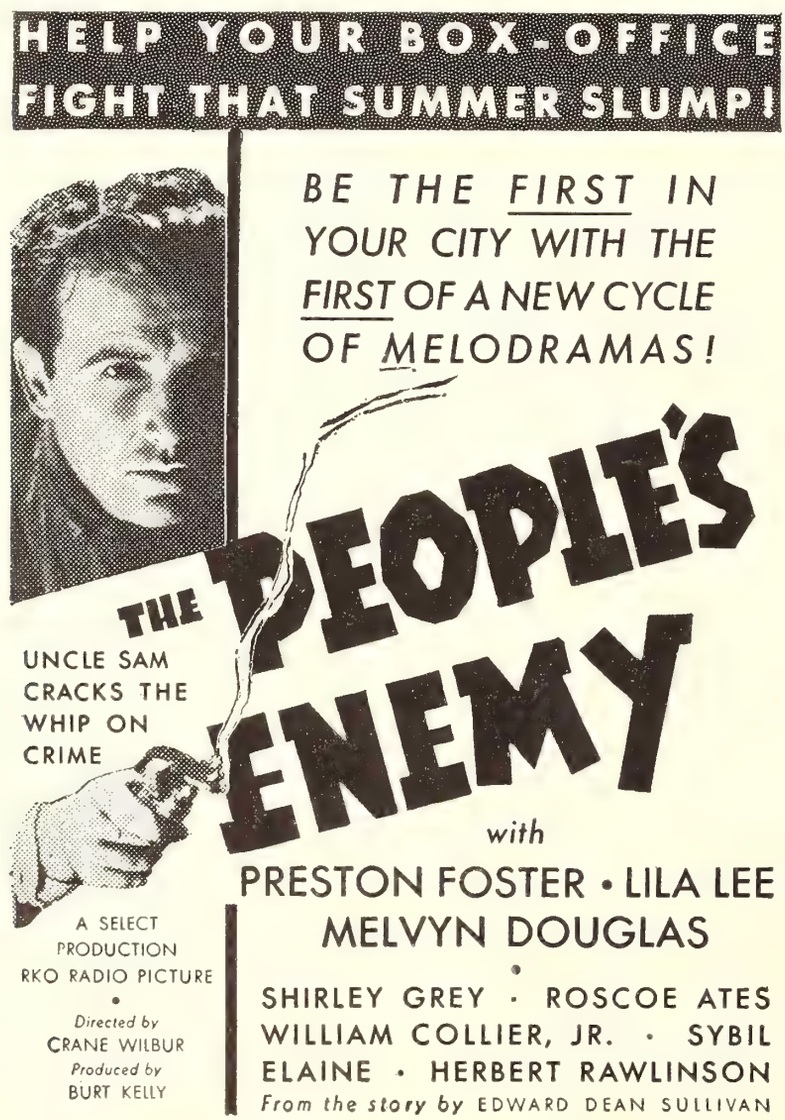
Sunday Pictures In Pennsylvania Now up to Senate

The fate of Sunday films in Pennsylvania now rests with the Senate, following adoption by the lower branch Tuesday of the Schwartz-Melchiorre-Barber bill to legalize Sabbath showings under the local option plan. The vote was 120 to 80. Legislative circles believe the measure stands a strong chance of enactment.

The bill would require each municipal subdivision in the state to vote at the next general election in November on the question of permitting shows after 2 o'clock on Sunday.



Test of the constitutionality of the recent enactment in Ohio prohibiting the designation of playdates in film contracts will be undertaken by distributors immediately after the law goes into effect on July 6. Reports from Columbus were that the test suit will be under the direction of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, with a company member as the plaintiff. The law was declared unconstitutional by Attorney General John W. Bricker, and Governor Davey refused to sign it, preferring that the measure become a law without his signature in order to hasten a court test of its legality. The law levying a $3 per reel censorship tax on newsreels may be repealed.

In California, scene of a flood of adverse legislative proposals, the state assembly began what is expected to be the closing week of a long session, with a number of bills awaiting action.

Bills to be acted on before the session ends are a one per cent gross transactions tax and income and other nuisance levies. Hollywood favors the transactions impost. It is predicted it will pass the House but fail in the Senate. A compromise income tax is also expected to prevail with rates about one-fourth of the federal scale.

In Missouri the industry escaped directly adverse legislation during the assembly session which closed late last week. An exhibitor committee is planning to confer with state officials to work out a system of collection of the one per cent sales tax on admissions. The levy becomes effective 90 days after signing by the governor and must be passed to the consumer. Bills killed included a drastic censorship measure, 10 per cent admission tax, footage tax, "standing room only" bill, prohibition of "bank night" and other forms of reduced admission, chain store tax affecting theatres and a licensing fee for billboards. The legislature imposed a tax of from $3 to $15 a year on all forms of slot and vending machines.

The Florida legislature adjourned with no direct taxation on amendments having been enacted.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

There now, what did we tell you last summer? It has been raining here for the last ten days and nights and yesterday it broke away for a while but last night it set in again and has kept it up until now (and we have just had breakfast), and it looks like it would rain all day. There has been more water fallen here in the last ten days than we have had in the last ten months and the farmers are already estimating their crop yields for this year. They claim that their crops are now assured but we have always considered it good business not to sell our potatoes until after we had them dug. A lot of things could occur between now and harvest time. You know that a lot of eggs sometimes get cold and don't hatch, especially if the roosters are hanging around too close.

An Open Letter to Wallace

We are right on the verge of writing an open letter to Wallace Beery and we have decided to do it provided Mr. Rovelstad will keep it quiet by letting it appear in this colyum.

Dear Wallace:

We saw you last night in "West Point of the Air" and we have wondered ever since whether you intended that picture as a big spectacle or a preachment for loyalty to the United States Air Corps. Wallace, you had several awfully good folks in that picture with you, for instance there was Lewis Stone, Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan and Jimmy Gleason, any of whom could make a picture all by themselves if they were given a chance.

There is no use to tell you that you are good, Wallace, for everybody knows that already, and everybody would be pleased to send you some all-day-suckers if you will stay out of those durned gangster pictures and stick to teaching the youth of the land their loyalty to Uncle Sam as you did in "West Point of the Air." Our especial delight in seeing this picture was largely due to the story and the cast, but partially due to the fact that we were at Randolph Field at San Antonio only a few weeks ago and this picture called it to mind very vividly.

A Waste of Raw Material

Lewis Stone makes a splendid Commandant and would also make an excellent general, and who knows but what he'd make good Presidential timber? We'll bet that Robert Young played quarterback on the college team, although as fullback he took the ball over for a touchdown. Anyhow he made a touchdown in this picture.

Maureen O'Sullivan suited us a whole lot better when she kissed Robert Young than when she kissed that potthound pup in "David Copperfield." Every time we see a girl kiss a scurvy pup it makes us so disgusted that we want to take our hat and go home. Kissing dogs is a waste of raw material.

Jimmy Gleason is always funny. We have to laugh at that guy every time we see him. What we hope to see some day is that they have put Jimmy and Zasu and Thelma and Patsy Kelly all in one feature comedy, and when they do that just watch us paw up the sand and beller.

If "West Point of the Air" doesn't bring them out it will be because they are not overly strong for airplane pictures, and say, Wallace, don't you ever give Jimmy Gleason those two bucks for that book you threw away, the darn thing wasn't worth it.

Crooners and Microbes

The press says that a scientist has discovered that radio sound waves will kill microbes. Personally we believe that is a lot of horseradish, for we know some love song crooners who have been at it for more than five years and who can still lisp and eat as many onions as a section hand.

"Oh gorsh," as Joe E. Brown says. If this rain keeps up for another week we are going to send out an S.O.S. for Noah to fire up his old Ark and come on. And if the Elkhorn River stays up on a rampage like it is now, we'll betcha that there will be thousands of catfish come up here from the Missouri River right at a time when we are pestigating around with the boys in southern Iowa and over in Wisconsin, and besides that those blue pelicans won't be able to find a dry enough place to build a nest in that "Shelterbelt." Oh Gorsh!

Doesn't it strike you as being a little peculiar that one court will declare bank night a lottery and unconstitutional and another court will say that it is legal and all right and tell the boys to go to it. But then you boys who have been following the ponies know that the sorrell will win one day and the roan the next, both running on the same track. It also depends upon which horse kept his mind on the race the closest.

Taking the Census Now

Harrisburg, Illinois, at one time was just a wide place in the road. It had one post office, a garage, a blacksmith shop, six sheep and two sows belonging to Bill Jones, but Steve Farrar moved in there and opened the Grand and Orpheum theatres and since then they have been taking the census of the town and we find that it is now a city that is not to be sneezed at.

Steve wrote us the other day and said he wanted the MOTION PICTURE HERALD and Motion Picture Daily and sent us a check as a guarantee that he would read 'em. He said that he had seen Joe Hewitt of Robinson and that Joe told him that we would send the magazines to him if he would write us and provided we were on good terms with the Warden. (Doggone that Joe Hewitt anyhow; he has been sore at us ever since we beat him playing golf that time.) Well, anyhow, these two guys are a couple of old timers in the business and are largely responsible for the corn belt being about the best place to live that we have found, except possibly, Mission and McAllen, Texas, but then these two places are not very far from where they catch red fish.

Well, anyhow, thanks, Steve, and if we ever get down in your part of the United States we are sure going to come and see you, and we wish you would tell Joe that hereafter not to give his HERALD renewal check to a traveling saleswoman, for sometimes they are crooked. Joe will know what you mean.

The Projection Book

Before we forget about it we want to remind you projectionists that Richardson's book on Projection soon will be ready for distribution and it will be to your advantage to secure a copy and get yourselves thoroughly informed. You can write the book department of the HERALD at 1790 Broadway, New York City.

We know of several jazz orchestras that have applied to the government for relief. That's all right, they ought to have it, but how about the public that has been forced to listen to 'em? Aren't they entitled to some consideration?

Alliance Previews Ten New Feature Films

Alliance Films, Ltd., subsidiary of British International Pictures, this week is holding a series of previews of 10 features designed for the United States market. The showings are being held from Monday through Friday, during the afternoon and evening, at the Chanin Auditorium. The previews are under the supervision of Arthur Dent, executive of British International.

The 10 features are: "Secret Agent," with Greta Nissen; "Mimi," with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Gertrude Lawrence; "Scotland Yard Mystery," with Sir Gerald du Maurier; "Dance Band," with Charles "Buddy" Rogers; "Give Her a Ring," with Zelma O'Neal; "Red Wagon," with Charles Bickford and Raquel Torres; "Girls Will Be Boys," with Dolly Haas; "Elizabeth of England," with Matheson Lang; "Old Curiosity Shop," with Elaine Benson; "Radio Parade of 1935," all star cast.

Town's Business Men Organize Theatre Firm

The Citizens' Theatre Company, composed of approximately 50 of the leading business men of the town of Henderson, Ky., has arranged to lease a theatre being constructed by Henry Kraver. The house will seat 1,000 and will be modernly equipped throughout with a stage of sufficient size to accommodate stage shows.

Officers of the company are: Mr. Kraver, president; Claud Brown, vice-president; W. E. McClure, secretary and treasurer; Lee W. Moffitt, general manager, and Leon Pickle, manager. Mr. Moffitt, operator of the Seville in Owensboro, Ky., will manage the new theatre.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

Columbia

CARNIVAL: Lee Tracy, Jimmy Durante, Sally Eilers—A good picture, but failed to draw for me. Those that came were satisfied. Played April 21-22.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

I'LL LOVE YOU ALWAYS: Nancy Carroll, George Murphy—Played on Cash Night to a satisfied audience. Nancy Carroll well received here. A little sobby in places. Played May 23.—Charles Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

IN SPITE OF DANGER: Marian Marsh, Wallace Ford—Not much of a picture. Business not so good. It seems as if Columbia gets the footage too short on many of their pictures. Running time, 57 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

REVENGE RIDER: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—Tim McCoy is no good in westerns.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

REVENGE RIDER: Tim McCoy—Tim always gets them in for me. This is one of his best westerns yet. Business good. Played May 18.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

UNWELCOME STRANGER, THE: Jack Holt—A pleasing program picture. Played April 25.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

First National

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart, Alice Brady—This will give satisfaction, but every one of these "Gold Diggers" gets worse than the last one. Patrons comment about 50-50 regarding liking it. Picture is too long.—H. G. Stettmund, H. and S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee —Average Kibbee-MacMahon with enough comedy to put it over.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Here is a swell picture, full of laughs and plenty of action. Did good business and pleased. Running time, 63 minutes. Played May 11.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—Just a fair picture that pleased fairly well, especially the young folks. Not so good as the usual feature with this team. Running time, 63 minutes. Played May 25-26.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Fox

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd, Una Merkel—A swell picture that drew well. They seemed to remember Harold Lloyd from the old silent days and all the old folks turned out and brought the young set. The picture has comedy in it for all and some Chinese tricks that make the shivers run down your back. Played May 11.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN PARIS: Warner Oland, Mary Brian—Pleased as have all the "Chan" series. Clean, interesting detective stories and with a variety of locales. Running time, 70 minutes. Played April 19-20.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN PARIS: Warner Oland—Better than "Chan in London." Played it on weekend to good business. Every one pleased. I don't think any one will regret running this one. Played May 3. —Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN: Will Rogers, Evelyn Venable—Drew well even on a cold, rainy day and evening. Better yet, it pleased old and young. Played May 19-20.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

DARING YOUNG MAN, THE: James Dunn, Mae Clarke—Average programmer.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GREAT HOTEL MURDER, THE: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—A drama of dark mystery and bold adventure in the bright lights of a big city, with furious action. You will guess and gasp and roar with laughter. Very good. Played to average business. Played May 17-18.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GREAT HOTEL MURDER: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—A good picture that was only fair at the box office. However, this was no fault of the picture, but due to the fact that detective stories do not go over here. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 13-14.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—Flying ace in war time. Did not expect business on this, but was pleasantly surprised, and the picture pleased all. Played May 10-11.—P. G. Estee, C. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—A very human picture. Life would be dry if we did not have any more communities such as we find in this picture.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—As usual, Will always gets 'em in. I think this is his best yet. Kept my audience in an uproar. Every one pleased. I think they should have had Slim Summerville with Will Rogers long ago. Played on May 12-13.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple—Rain both days, but did a good business just the same. Played May 19-20.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: Lew Ayres, "Pat" Paterson, Peggy Fears—Good little picture that drew fair.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—About one more spring and Miss Gaynor won't spend any more winters on the coast.—R. V. Fletcher Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Only a good program picture. Janet Gaynor don't mean a thing any more at the box office.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—This simple little story pleased our patronage. Personally I consider it below Gaynor's average.— J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—Fox, do not mature Shirley too fast. Come back with a picture with James Dunn and Claire Trevor. The world is all alike. They love their "first love" best. This will boost Shirley up strong and people picture the three together because that is how they first saw Shirley when they learned to love her. This picture needs a good one to come back with. Played May 26-28.—Howard F. Matthews, Roxy Theatre, Ontario, Ore. General patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Jackie Searl—A fair program picture and not much of a drawing card.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE: Janet Gaynor, Lew Ayres—This is a good picture and will please all that come. Did average business. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 14-15.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD: James Dunn, Alice Faye—Very good program picture. Liked by all. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

UNDER PRESSURE: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—A satisfactory program picture which has greater appeal for men than for women. Plenty of action.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—Comedy, pathos and drama in a big city hospital. Loretta Young gives her best performance and the entire cast is good. This one held the interest through the entire show and pleased. Running time, 83 minutes. Played May 1-2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp —The success we enjoyed with this picture again proves the value of the exhibitors' reports. Had it not been for the glowing tributes paid to this film by fellow exhibitors we would have relegated this film to our "B" house and then forgotten about it. However, after reading reports on it we made a radical departure from our almost set policy of playing everything except westerns at our A house and booked it. It took some clever selling and the elimination of Maynard's name from the billing to put it over, but we stood them up and also received many compliments on the picture. It is well made and is almost as good as the Fox and Paramount westerns. The recording is perfect and the photography is fine. —J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MGM

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett—Just an ordinary program picture classed as a special at a special price. Good picture of kind. It was boosted as the season's most lighthearted romance, but it sure proved light at the box-office, for a special at a very special price. Played to average business. Running time, seven reels. Played May 12-14.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett—This was the first time that a Gable picture did not go above average business. A very fine picture with lots of comedy and romance. Pleased all that came to see it. Running time, 73 minutes. Played May 17-19.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: All Star Cast—Played this one late, but packed them in. Above average at the B. O. Had several walkouts on this one, probably due to the length of the picture. The trailer was one of the sorriest things that I have ever had the displeasure to witness. Running time, 133 minutes. Played May 22-23.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, Lionel Barrymore, Edna May Oliver, W. C. Fields—One of the year's greatest pictures. Wonderful story, great acting. Brought out all the old folks and they are still raving about the picture. Above average business. Running time, 133 minutes. Played May 10-12.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

MARK OF THE VAMPIRE: Lionel Barrymore, Elizabeth Allan—A creepy mystery drama which my audience didn't take seriously. The women probably won't like it. The kids were scared to death.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—Remarkably fine picture. Good music, interesting plot, good ideas. Okay.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

ONE NEW YORK NIGHT: Franchot Tone, Una Merkel—Not so good as it should be with this cast. Just another picture. Running time, 71 minutes. Played May 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo—There seem to be enough Scandinavians to make a Garbo picture pay out here and all the highbrows like her very much. The picture is really a very fine one and Garbo is truly fascinating. Running time, 83 minutes. Played May 12.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

RECKLESS: William Powell, Jean Harlow—Miss Harlow evidently miscast in this one. She cannot dance, neither can she sing. The majority of people like Powell and will come to see him. This one is not a knockout, but will give about average satisfaction. Played May 19-20.—H. G. Stettmund, H. and S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker—One of the finest pictures of real animal acting I have seen in many years. It is well directed and a very good picture for any night of the week. It satisfied them all. Played to average business. Running time, seven reels. Played May 24-25.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—Very fine picture; B. O. said so.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

SHADOW OF DOUBT: Ricardo Cortez, Virginia Bruce—From the shadows of a murder mystery spring romance as two lovers solve the most baffling crimes. Funny, mysterious, and very good dramatically. Average business. Running time, eight reels. Played May 15-16.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

SOCIETY DOCTOR: Chester Morris, Virginia Bruce—Very good picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

TIMES SQUARE LADY: Virginia Bruce, Robert Taylor—Just a program picture, nothing to write home about, but pleased fairly well. Pinky Tomlin might be rather good with some songs, but "The Object of My Affections" makes "The Bear Went Over the Mountain" look like a classic. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 4-5.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VAGABOND LADY, THE: Robert Young, Evelyn Venable—Comedy romance, resulting in many amusing situations. A young business man leaves his secretary-sweetheart in the care of his irresponsible brother while he takes a business trip. Very good. Played to average business. Running time, eight reels. Played May 26-28.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

VANESSA: HER LOVE STORY: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery, May Robson—In my opinion, this is one of the best, if not the best show of the year. In spite of the fact it is a costume show, I think it pleased 95 per cent. May Robson is superb. Beautiful scenery, good acting, good story, good cast and good comments, with a satisfactory box office makes this one of my outstanding pictures. Running time, 77 minutes. Played May 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda, Ted Healy—Fair.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carillo, Louise Fazenda—Ditch this one if you can. It is awful. It might make a mildly amusing two-reel short, but why they wanted to drag it out over 70 awful minutes is more than I can see. I was ashamed to take their money. Leo Carrillo, Ted Healy and Louise Fazenda are bad enough in small parts, but as co-stars they are awful. Since running this one I am seriously considering going to Hollywood. I couldn't be worse than the socalled stars of this so tragic comedy. Pass it up. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Monogram

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh—Showed this in rainy, muddy weather, so many from the country could not get in, but still we did very well and everyone seemed to like the picture. It is a fine one to tie up with school or church. Every mother and teacher will want her children to see it. The young fellows are not so excited over it, but they will come. Running time, 86 minutes. Played May 15.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S.D. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Ray Walker, Arline Judge—Just fair. Rather crude in spots. Running time, 68 minutes. Played May 17-18.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

NUT FARM, THE: Wallace Ford—Just "nuts" is all we can say for this one. Very poor entertainment. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 10-11.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

NUT FARM, THE: Wallace Ford—The silliest comedy I ever saw. Nothing to it. Skip it if you can. Played May 2.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

WOMEN MUST DRESS: Minna Gombell—Fair program picture. Pleased some, others didn't like it. Played May 16.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Mary Ellis, Carl Brisson—Booked for return engagement; very good picture from start to finish. Played to average business. Running time, nine reels. Played May 29-30.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL: Richard Barthelmess, Joe Morrison, Helen Mack, Gertrude Michael—Another good picture from Paramount. Although some complained that the plot was too jumbled, they all seemed to like it. Average at the box office. An excellent trailer helped a lot. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 20-21.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Another one of Paramount's master productions and it pleased all of our customers. Colbert is gradually pushing her way into the heart of every movie fan. She acts excellently in this picture as she has in many before it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 21-22.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—This is a typical Mae West picture, wisecracks, but no story. Entertaining, but just a programmer.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell—This picture was exhibited on Sunday and Monday and to my knowledge is one of Paramount's masterpieces. We had a good attendance and all of our customers were more than well pleased. Cooper was always good in action pictures and always will be. Tone showed his ability to be excellent when it comes to playing a real he-man part. Cromwell also did exceptionally good acting. Running time, 89 minutes. Played April 7-8.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell—A wonderful action picture that was a box office flop. The men all came and the women stayed home. Did below average business. Running time, 100 minutes. Played April 26-28.—Harry Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Andy Clyde, Richard Cromwell, Betty Furness, Walter C. Kelly—A good picture that pleased everyone. Sort of a followup hit to the Cohens and Kellys. Betty Furness getting to be popular here. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 26.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Arthur Byron, Janet Beecher—A thrilling mystery story, supplying an enjoyable evening's entertainment for the mystery fans. Played to average business. Running time, nine reels. Played May 22-23.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joel McCrea—A distinct cinematic achievement, but I doubt if it will have the popular appeal of previous Colbert efforts. It is intelligent to a point of brilliance and has an unusual locale, that of an asylum for the mentally unbalanced. Several factors militate against this film's success in the smaller towns, I believe, and these are a lack of action, too much dialogue, morbid story, and very little comedy. Claudette Colbert turns in a finished performance as the woman doctor, but she is sure to disappoint her followers who like her best in such films as "Gilded Lily" and "It Happened One Night." Personally, I found this picture to be one of the best and I thoroughly enjoyed it.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Zasu Pitts—Harry Leon Wilson's comedy tale of "Ma" Pettingill and other characters of Red Gap was well directed and brilliantly acted. Pleased. Played May 1-2.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant, Roscoe Karns—This picture together with the excellent acting of Loy and Grant inspires and gives hope to people of today in the advancement of aviation. Our customers were exceptionally pleased and complimented us on it. Karns also added that comical touch to the picture which helped also to put it over. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 16-17.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

BY YOUR LEAVE: Frank Morgan, Genevieve Tobin, Neil Hamilton—Fair program picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

CHASING YESTERDAY: Anne Shirley, O. P. Heggie, Helen Westley—Fair program picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

DOG OF FLANDERS, A: Frankie Thomas, Helen Parrish—Good family picture. Especially good for boys and girls. Need more like it.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—A fine little picture that pleased everyone. Did not draw so well because the stars are not so well known, but we thought Eddie Quillan did a fine job of acting and would like to see him again. This picture holds the interest of young and old all through the picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 9.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—The leads do splendid work in Gene Stratton Porter's famous novel, but without Virginia Weidler it would have been dull to us. Picture drew and pleased, but give plenty of credit to "Little Sister" (Virginia). Played May 12-13.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—The cast in this means nothing, but Gene Stratton Porter's name as the author is the thing to advertise. This is one of those pictures that brings out the folks who seldom attend the show. Picture is excellent and will give 100 per cent satisfaction. Played May 16-17.—H. G. Stettmund, H. and S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—Barrie's novel well picturized with leads doing good work. Our people seemed to think it Miss Hepburn's best to date. We feared it would be too slow moving to draw, but were wrong, and comments were favorable. Played April 21-23.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn—A good picture, but didn't draw for me. Katharine Hepburn doesn't go over at all here. Played May 5-6.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason—The team of Oliver and Gleason solve another murder mystery and while doing it afford the audience genuine laughs. Good. Played May 3-4.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: James Gleason, Edna May Oliver—Here is one that will keep 'em laughing. Played on cash night and every one pleased. I haven't played a bad RKO picture yet. Played May 9.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—These clever young people win again. Drew and pleased as a very good musical, with style show thrown in. Played May 5-7.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers.—A knockout. Box office said so.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—Very good program picture that drew well at the box office.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: Ginger Rogers, William Powell—Very good. Powell, a lawyer, turns detective. Some delightful romance and clever comedy keep the tale in an entertaining groove. Ginger Rogers always good, whether in musical or drama. Played May 17-18.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

STAR OF MIDNIGHT: William Powell, Ginger Rogers—A good mystery drama; if anything, a little bit complicated. However, well liked. Running time, 92 minutes. Played May 20-21.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—Although we didn't have such a good crowd on this picture, the ones that saw it were well pleased. Also it pleased our customers because it seemed more at home to us as the Pecos River isn't very far from our town. Richard Dix in action pictures pleases our customers more, as he did in this one and in "The Vanishing American." Running time, 69 minutes. Played April 19-20.—Sherman Hart, Palace Theatre, Colorado, Texas. General patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—Very good Zane Grey that drew quite well at the box office. Better than many socalled specials. We played this on Sunday and were well pleased.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi, Sydney Blackmer—This is one of the best pictures that I have ever played. Most of the patrons agreed that it was the best they had ever seen. Groups from schools in several small towns surrounding came to see it. Running time, 112 minutes. Played May 15-16.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou, Janet Beecher, Virginia Bruce—A rain knocked off business considerably, but there was still an average crowd. A splendid picture. Wallace Beery is always good, but the midgets stole the picture. Running time, 105 minutes. Played May 17-18.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WEDDING NIGHT, THE: Gary Cooper, Anna Sten, Ralph Bellamy, Helen Vinson—A very fine picture to poor business.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

Universal

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—One of the silliest and most tiresome so-called comedies that I have ever run. Why, oh why, do they ruin a star like Margaret Sullavan and allow her to play in such a sickly direction as this turned out to be. Running time, 98 minutes. Played May 5. —Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall, Frank Morgan—One of those pictures where they talk a person almost to death.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW YORK: Heather Angel, Lyle Talbot—Good comedy of the New York taxi driver who was caught between two forces—his stenographer and friend and the movie queen (Gertrude Michael), who tried to crash into the romance. Played April 28-29.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS: Alan Mowbray—Nothing to this. We pulled this off. So silly and crazy that no one liked it.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART: Mary Astor, Roger Pryor—Baby Jane is also in this rather slow moving tale of the good-bad politician who reforms for the child. The little girl will please and the leads do excellent work. Played April 26-27.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Gene Raymond, Henry Hull—Good picture that drew only fair.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones—Pretty good; not near as good as many of his others.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis—Good entertainment and well liked. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 17-18.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

NIGHT AT THE RITZ, A: William Gargan, Patricia Ellis—This one displeased 100 per cent. Didn't take in film rental. Running time, 62 minutes. Played May 18-19.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—This picture pleased about 90 per cent. Personally thought it to be swell entertainment, but had a few complaints. Regardless, I would advise you to play it, but feature Ann Dvorak instead of Rudy Vallee and I think you will do better business, although no fault of Rudy's. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 19-20.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—Much the best Rudy Vallee picture to date. Ann Dvorak not so good in her part. Ned Sparks gives a very good performance. Think this one pleased most of the patrons. The final sequence is essentially good. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 8-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BACK TO THE SOIL: Sidney and Murray—Very funny; a good two-reel slapstick. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BIRDMAN: Krazy Kat—As a whole Krazy Kat cartoons are good. I haven't played a bad one yet.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

GOLD GETTERS: Scrappy Cartoon—Good cartoon. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HORSE COLLARS: Three Stooges—These three crazy nuts go over big here. They please big, little, old or young. I wish they would make more of them. —Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

SHIVERS: Harry Langdon—A pretty good comedy. Both kids and grown-ups liked it.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

Educational

BIG BUSINESS: Musical Comedies—Worst I ever hope to run. No excuse for having released it. Running time, too long.—Howard F. Matthews, Roxy Theatre, Ontario, Ore. General patronage.

BILLBOARD GIRL: Bing Crosby—This two-reel reissue is good enough to play anywhere. Recording good. There is plenty of comedy and Bing sings two songs.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

CHUMS: Treasure Chest Series—An interesting one-reeler from the Treasure Chest.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DEPARTMENT WORTH PRICE

"It is indeed a pleasure to join in with other exhibitors in the 'What the Picture Did for Me' department," writes CHARLES NELSON, of the Fay theatre, at Jasper, Fla. "I think this section alone is worth the small price of the HERALD."

GENTLEMEN OF THE BAR: Ernest Truex—A good comedy that pleased. Running time, two reels. —H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

GIRL FROM PARADISE, THE: Musical Comedies Series—Fairly good musical comedy. Running time, two reels.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HELLO, SAILORS: Tom Patricola, Buster West—Very good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOT SANDS: Terry-Toon—Pretty good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOUSE WHERE I WAS BORN, THE: Song Hit Stories Series—This is one of the Song Hit Stories, but it missed its mark. A producer who puts no more in a subject than this one is not deserving of much credit. Running time, 10 minutes.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

JUST A CLOWN: Terry-Toons—Just average cartoon. Did not get any remarks. Recording well done. It seems the recording is getting better on these cartoons.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

MAGIC FISH, THE: Terry-Toon—One of the best of the Terry-Toon series. Running time, one reel.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE-RUN ELMER: Star Personality Comedies—Boys, if you want a comedy that is absolutely funny, get this one. Buster is a wow as a "slugger." Running time, 19 minutes.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

PALOOKA FROM PADUCAH: Buster Keaton—Another good Buster Keaton comedy. Buster Keaton is always good and his comedies are far above the average Educational comedy. Running time, two reels. —H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SECOND HAND HUSBAND: Tom Howard—A fair comedy. I wish Tom Howard would quit talking through his nose. Running time, two reels.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SHE'S MY LILLY (I'M HER WILLIE): Will Mahoney—Good musical.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

TOM, TOM, THE PIPER'S SON: Terry-Toon—Just a fair comedy.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Fox

FILMING THE GREAT: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman Series—This wasn't as good as was generally expected. Instead of showing a bunch of thrill shots as we were expecting, this reel showed scenes of the European nobility. Running time, one reel.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

3-mile-a-minute twin-engined transports flown at comfortable altitudes.

WINE, WOMAN AND SONG: Organlogues—Below the average Organlogue. In several places the photography was flickering.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

CALICO DRAGON: Happy Harmonies Series—Another 100 per cent perfect Happy Harmony. Running time, 8 minutes.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

CRUISING IN THE SOUTH SEAS: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—We always like Metro's travelogues and this is no exception to the rule.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

FIXER-UPPERS: Laurel & Hardy—Very good.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES: No. 10—I hope this is the last one. Running time, 9 minutes.—Rudolph J. Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Town and country patronage.

GYPSY NIGHT: Musical Revues—A lot of beautiful technicolor wasted. My patrons and myself were certainly glad when this was over. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

HONKY-DONKEY: Our Gang—We all enjoyed this fine two-reel. The trained donkey in this was quite a surprise. We would sit down whenever a bell rang and run after anyone who sneezed. Quite a few comical situations arise.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

LOS ANGELES, WONDER CITY OF THE WEST: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Glimpses of interesting spots in Los Angeles. Did not appeal to my audience, I fear, although the color is very good. —John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LOST CHICK, THE: Happy Harmonies—You will not see a better all-color cartoon than this. I only wish they were all as good. Running time, nine minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAMA'S LITTLE PIRATE: Our Gang—A good Our Gang short. "Spanky" McFarland as usual is the whole show. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MIKE FRIGHT: Our Gang—Very good comedy. Everyone enjoyed the kids. Running time, 19 minutes. —Rudolph J. Covi, Covi Theatre, Herminie, Pa. Town and country patronage.

ONE MORE CHANCE: Bing Crosby—Too much Bing Crosby on the screen. Like Bing all right, but with all the features and comedies he is in, it's too much. Running time, 2 reels.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

POKER AT EIGHT: Charley Chase—A very good Charley Chase. I think it is his best in a long time. Entertaining comedy.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SING, SISTER, SING: Todd-Kelly—The usual Todd-Kelly comedy that pleased most of the patrons. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TIT FOR TAT: Laurel & Hardy—A Laurel and Hardy that was good for a lot of laughs. Running time, 2 reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TIT FOR TAT: Laurel and Hardy—Laurel and Hardy always please and this one is no exception. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TIT FOR TAT: Laurel and Hardy—This is the best these boys have made for a long time.—H. G. Stettmund, H. and S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

YOU SAID A HATFUL: Charley Chase—Got the laughs, though I can't see how Charley ever broke into the movies. However, if my patrons say he is okay it is all right with me. Running time, two reels. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

CHOOSE YOUR "WEPPINS": Popeye Cartoon—Another very good Popeye. My audience laughed plenty.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

FEMININE RHYTHM: Ina Ray Hutton and Her Melodears—One of the best music reels yet. Running time, one reel.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR NOTES: Headliners—Here is one of the best orchestra reels ever made. Running time, nine minutes.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

PLEASED TO MEET CHA: Popeye the Sailor—

Another good Popeye cartoon. Popeye cartoons are the best on the market. Running time, one reel.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SHIVER ME TIMBERS: Popeye the Sailor—All Popeyes are swell. Just as good as Disney's high-priced cartoons if not better. Running time, seven minutes.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

TAKING THE BLAME: Betty Boop Cartoon—My audience thought this the best Betty Boop cartoon to date. Running time, one reel.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO

BANDITS AND BALLADS: Ruth Etting—This is the best Ruth Etting short I have ever seen. She sings "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" and every one was pleased to hear the old favorite sung so beautifully. Running time, 20 minutes.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

CAT FISH ROMANCE, A: Aesop Fable—This is an unusually good cartoon with some marvelous music. Four turtles sing a quartet that is one of the most unforgetable combinations of male voices I have ever heard. Running time, nine minutes.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

HOW TO BREAK 90 AT CROQUET: Four Star Comedies—Terrible. Very poor. Need I say more? Running time, 15 minutes.—Phil Billiet, Coliseum Theatre, Annawan, Ill. Small town patronage.

IN-LAWS ARE OUT: Edgar Kennedy—Edgar Kennedy promises his wife he will not lose his temper. His mother-in-law and brother-in-law try every trick known to make him mad and the clock further irritates him until he finally breaks loose. A good comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

RAINBOW PARADE CARTOONS: I have played several of these color cartoons and find them fair.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

BABES IN THE WOOD: Silly Symphony—Very good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BUGS IN LOVE: Silly Symphony—One of the older Silly Symphonies and a black and white print. It was one of the best cartoons we have run in some time and the print was perfect. Running time, one reel.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

WAYWARD CANARY, THE: Mickey Mouse—If you haven't already run this old Mickey Mouse cartoon, don't lose any time in booking it. It kept the audience in a continual uproar from the title to the finish. Running time, one reel.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

WILLIAM TELL: Oswald Animated Cartoon Series—Only fair.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Vitaphone

COUNTRY BOY: Merrie Melodies—The best one of this series. Good color and some very clever acts. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GYPSY SWEETHEART: Broadway Brevities—A two-reel musical short in color that is fine. The Apache dance and the ballet are especially good. Went over good. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GYPSY SWEETHEART: Broadway Brevities—A wonderful picture with brilliant color. The gypsies put on a dance with very lovely harmonious music and we felt the short was very much worth showing and should draw extra business. Running time, 20 minutes.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

I HAVEN'T GOT A HAT: Merrie Melodies—Good colored cartoon. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MY GREEN FEDORA: Merrie Melodies—Not quite so good as some of this series. A little too scary for the kiddies. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

OFF THE BEAT: Broadway Brevities—This is good and seemed to please. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PHIL SPITALNY AND HIS MUSICAL QUEENS: Melody Masters—Excellent musical short. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SHOW KIDS: Broadway Brevities—The son of the worried theatre manager sends his father fishing and puts on a matinee with dancing school pupils during his father's absence. It fills the house to overflowing and everyone is delighted. The child numbers are splendid.—I. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

SOFT DRINKS AND SWEET MUSIC: Broadway Brevities—Excellent short, music, dancing and two old-time "meller drammer" acts that were great. This one will please them all. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

VAUDEVILLE REEL NO. 4: Pepper Pot—This series is good. Several good acts in each one. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

LAW OF THE WILD: Rex, Rin Tin Tin, Jr., Ben Turpin, Bob Custer—I have run one of this serial. Animal acts always go over. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

LOST JUNGLE, THE: Clyde Beatty—This serial seemed to please. Clyde Beatty is the whole show together with the wild animals. A better than average serial. Running time, two reels each chapter.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Universal

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy—I have played six chapters of this serial and it is holding up fine. About the best continued picture to date.—Chas. Nelson, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla. Small town and rural patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

HANDWRITING ON THE WALL

Without dipping too deeply into the structure of industry, we may say that the lineup of any organization depending for existence upon sales is divided into two main groupings—Group One, the salesmen bringing in the business, and Group Two, those whose services are confined to manufacture and physical distribution of the product sold. In other words, the first brings in the orders and the second is responsible for production and delivery.

Recognizing the unique value of the services rendered by skilled salesmen, the business world takes for granted the importance of the selling function by paying to the salesman a definite percentage of every dollar's worth of orders he creates.

But, generally speaking, as the services of Group Two are more or less automatic and dependent, of course, upon sales, these workers receive a predetermined weekly wage which may vary slightly, depending upon business conditions and other external factors.

Essentially, these economic fundamentals apply as well to the industry of the motion picture; but, unfortunately, the theatre manager is classified mistakenly by being placed in Group Two—which he isn't. The theatreman, if he is one, is a salesman, and nothing else but.

Your able showman has always been, and continues to be, the bird who sells the picture at the box office. His talents, his efforts, his ingenuity are no less valuable nor unique than any other highly held salesman; but, in the main, exhibitors feel otherwise, and suffer thereby.

On a following page are published further letters from managers on the bonus question recently discussed in the Round Table. These opinions are set down by men who have spent their lifetimes in theatre operation. What they have to say may be taken as representative of managerial thought as a whole, and wise is the exhibitor who gives ear.

Again we say the bonus drive is wasteful, uneconomical. With which there is evident concurrence from RKO, Famous Players Canadian, Consolidated Amusements of New York, among the prominent circuits that have successfully instituted the permanent percentage plan of remuneration for their managers—their salesmen.

Obviously, the best men will eventually be found on the payrolls of those theatre organizations paying off in kind. It is to be regretted that exhibitors of limited vision cannot see the handwriting on the wall.

RESPECTFULLY WE POINT

Called especially to the attention of the membership this week are the recent accomplishments of Round Tablers Bill Exton, of the Kenosha, Kenosha, Wisconsin, and Martin J. Kelly, adman in Minnesota Amusement's St. Paul sector. Detailed in this issue, the efforts of these laddies add a flock of points to the box-office credit of keen eyed exploitation.

Exton's "dare you" newspaper campaign, zealously groomed and perfectly planted, kept the good Wisconsin burghers in a commendable dither of excitement for days and days and succeeded, so Bill reports, in cracking wide open a lot of opening days' records on Universal's "Bride of Frankenstein."

St. Paul's Kelly takes a bow not only for engineering a splendid Twin City street car campaign on Paramount's "Goin' To Town," but also for selling the plan from now on.

The dictionary contains no definition of the term "showmanship," but to the wide-eyed novitiates who query its meaning, we point a respectful forefinger above to the results obtained by the gentlemen from Kenosha and St. Paul.

A LIFETIME, NO LESS

Kansas City's downtown theatremen were reported to have "received the surprise of a lifetime" when Manager Barney Joffee of the Tower recently appended to his opening day's ad a three column box plugging the shows at the downtown opposition first runs.

Consensus of opinion called it a "splendid idea and a fine gesture," with which incidentally the business can do a whole heluva lot more of. After all, fresh blood in the industry does not have to come from cutthroat competition.

VALE

Only indirectly and then only indirectly does the passing of the NRA affect the manager who from the very beginning was given less consideration by the code makers than the second cousin of a stepchild's stepchild. In our part of the grandstand, there are few tears to shed and still fewer to shed them.

Joe Promotes Governor For "Marietta" Okay

Letter of endorsement on "Naughty Marietta" was arranged by Joseph DiPesa, Loew's State, Boston, from Governor Curley, one-sheet reproduction made and used for lobby display.

Local furrier plugged featured songs on Sunday night program, as did various dance orchestras. Music heralds were distributed at five and tens and poster displays used in windows and store counters. Hairdress supply company inserted circulars in monthly statements. Liquor pads and lipstick tissues were distributed in restaurants, etc.

GREETS STUDIO. John McManus (right), Loew's Midland, and Miss Mary McElroy bid welcome to Eddie Carrier and the MGM traveling studio at Kansas City.

Canadian Legionnaires Aid Graburn Campaign

A preview of "Lest We Forget" was arranged by Larry Graburn, Metropolitan, Regina, Saskatchewan, for government officials, who broadcast views over mike hooked up in lobby, Royal mounties and military organizations also attended.

Canadian Legion sponsored a "Lest We Forget" campaign, sending announcement of playdates to all members, who were given special admission prices, and officers of the Legion placed posters in various posts. Over Mrs. Graburn's signature, letters were sent to various ladies' auxiliaries calling attention to playdates, and schools tied in on war poster contest, work displayed in lobby.

Radio station tied in with war time song memory contest, listeners were asked to guess titles of melodies and check against names of songs later mentioned in broadcast.

Bloomberg Lands Story On Bracker Posters

That Leone Bracker, artist, who created the institutional posters gotten out by MPPDA lives nearby, was reason enough for Manager Phil Bloomberg, Paramount, Salem, Mass., to tie it in locally with his papers for a two-column cut of one of the posters and story.

Human interest angle in publicity was inclusion of names of local men and women who had posed for the artist in the reproduced poster, story also stating that it would be on display in the theatre lobby.

No Cost Car Cards Plug Coming Dates

Reported as a first of its kind in that sector is a street car tieup arranged by Martin P. Kelly, Minnesota Amusement ad manager in St. Paul to plug attractions at the Paramount in that spot and the State, in Minneapolis. Transit company is placing car cards, 25 by 12, and imprinted on both sides, in the 1,200 cars servicing the Twin Cities, these plugs planted prominently in upper sections of outside windows so they can be seen by car riders and pedestrians. New pictures will be plugged similarly every two weeks, one week ahead and during local first-run engagement.

Copy of course ties in with advantages of street car transportation, the first as follows:

"Everybody's Goin' to Town . . . it's the national pastime, says Mae West. When goin' to town, ride street cars."

Card is illustrated with big head of West with further picture and theatre credits, the hookup being entirely gratis to the theatres, even to the printing of cards.

Kelly says the transportation executives approved the idea, taking the viewpoint that interest in stars and pictures would increase effectiveness of car promotion copy. Tieup to continue indefinitely is slated for additional publicity in street railway's newspaper ads in five Twin City dailies.

Black Hokus Pokuses "Frankenstein" Lobby

They do say that the folks up in New Haven were properly amazed with Harry Black's eerie lobby layout on "Bride of Frankenstein" at the Loew's Poli.

Most attention-compelling in the display was block of dry ice exuding white vapor above head of dummy (see photo), general effect heightened by the apparatus board which featured flasher bulbs and pendulum moving in heart-beat rhythm.

Buzzer, hooked up to transformer, gave off crackling noises and flasher operated behind cutout eyes of the giant head taken from the 24 sheet.

Crime Displays Used On "Let 'Em Have It"

Stressing the police angles for exploitation on "Let 'Em Have It," at the New York Rivoli, Hal Horne's United Artists' stunt-framers concentrated on a front and lobby wherein were displayed lethal weapons used by detectives in combating criminals, such as tear bombs, gas guns, automatic repeaters, and scientific equipment that included microscopes and instruments of magnification.

Postal Telegraph tied in with distribution of pamphlets, copy hooking up to the picture and what part the telegraph plays in criminal investigation.

Motorcycles used in the picture formed the basis of a tieup with Harley-Davidson whereby action stills of Bruce Cabot and Dorothy Appleby were planted in bike windows. Woman angle also was given a plug by Gimbels, store running photos of Virginia Bruce coiffure styles in windows and beauty departments.

Planck Puts On "Ruggles" Rope Guessing Contest

Novel contest was engineered in hardware window by George Planck for his "Ruggles" date at the Palace, Marion, Ohio, with cutouts of Laughton and Ruggles at one end of the window and cutout of cowboy on horse at other. A looped rope extending from cowboy's upraised arm to figures of stars was the highlight of the display with cash prizes offered to those correctly guessing the length of rope used.

Gene Curtis Not Ready To Announce New Plans

Although he reports an anticipated connection with a Canadian theatre company involving a financial interest, Gene Curtis, former Famous Players-Canadian sales promotion director, says he is not ready at this time to give out any further details, outside of the fact that he will be Managing Director. At this writing, no successor to Curtis has been announced by J. J. Fitzgibbons, General Manager.

Rivoli "Let 'Em Have It" Front

WHERE IT STARTED. George Y. Henger, of Standard Theatres, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, devised this unusual lobby flash used by the circuit's houses to sell "G Men". Display is a map of the state showing locations of actual clashes between federal operatives and various public enemies, with descriptive captions further localizing these engagements.

Warner Athletic Club Proves Prestige Builder

To offset criticism by local athletic groups on any theatre opposition to daylight saving, and to carry the interest of the Warner houses into the sport pages and before recreational organizations, Ralph Crabill, Jamestown, district manager, last year organized and successfully sponsored a Warner Theatres Athletic Club, composed of 24 of the city's best all around athletes, and which is clicking currently.

The Warnerites are thus represented by teams in the community's leading athletic leagues, and the activities of the group keep the theatres on the front page and secure additional publicity at fight clubs and other spots.

Operated as a social organization, the club maintains rooms in the Warner Palace Theatre building and through its activities is enabled to finance itself.

The club idea, reports Crabill, has done more than anything else to convince the citizenry of Jamestown and vicinity of Warners' interest in recreational doings and general interest in the younger element.

"Prepared For Summer?"

But Publicity Does

Attending a local Kiwanis meeting, Manager Frank Shaffer, Virginia, Harrisonburg, Va., heard one of the speakers emphasize that crime does not pay, and immediately got out a letter to club members, ministers, and teachers, tying in the talk to "Buried Treasure," the first of his "Crime Doesn't Pay" short series which was dated in a few days ahead.

Famous Players Canadians Win "Festival" Prizes

Prizes of $50 each for the best continuous efforts during April in Famous Players Canadian's "Spring Festival" exploitation contest have been awarded by General Manager J. J. Fitzgibbons to Lloyd Dearth, Capitol, Vancouver; Ernie Moule, Capitol, Brantford, and Charles Dilley, Port Arthur.

For the best April campaigns $25 awards went to Harold Bishop, Capitol, Winnipeg; Jack Purves, Capitol, Sudbury; Ernie Petch, Strand, Brandon, and Bill Novak, Gaiety, Winnipeg.

The Famous Players competitions were divided into two sections, with prizes also given for the best exploitation during March, results of which were run May 11.

Dixon Hosts Septuagenarian Witnessing Her First Film

Life may begin at forty for some folks, but as far as the lady in accompanying photo is concerned it started at the age of seventy-five, when D. B. Dixon, Princess, Gadsden, Ala., invited her to see Will Rogers in his current opus.

The guest was induced to view her first film because of her professed enjoyment of the Rogers newspaper articles. Stunt broke papers and photos were sent to Rogers.

Get a Temple Bob, Suggests Arthur

Even children are not immune from the influence of Hollywood coiffures in Toronto, Canada, where Jack Arthur at the Imperial, tied in with barber shops and beauty parlors on "Little Colonel." Cards showing La Temple haircut were planted in windows with copy suggesting that local youngsters be coiffed accordingly.

Queries Patrons Regarding Gaynor's Leading Men

In the form of a memory identification contest was Gene Ford's newspaper tiein on "One More Spring" at the Washington Loew-Fox, patrons being asked to identify pictures of leading men in previous Gaynor vehicles, name of feature in which they appeared, and ten-word opinion praising or criticising the casting. Daily ran different shot each day of the contest. Gene found a "Janet Gaynor" in the local phone book and broke some publicity by having gal at theatre to see the show.

Hooking title of picture to the annual Washington cherry blossom ceremonies, Ford blanketed front with sprigs of imitation fruit and landed ace window (see photo) of prominently located furniture store.

Souttar's Plan Enables Scouts to Attend Camp

Fine institutional stunt is being worked by Fred Souttar, Lincoln, Belleville, Ill. whereby any boy scout unable to pay his way to camp this summer is permitted to sell theatre tickets on percentage to earn expenses. Fred limits sales so that no individual scout can earn any more than enough to cover cost of one week at camp. Further, tickets cannot be sold during theatre hours.

On "Little Colonel" large birthday card was displayed in lobby which later was mailed to the starlet, arriving on her birthday. Accompanying photo shows Shirley with the card. This photo was displayed in Fred's lobby and used in newspaper stories.

Boucher's Amateur Contest

The first stunt put on by Frank Boucher in his new assignment at the Paramount in Lynchburg, Va., was an amateur contest consisting of 21 home talent acts. Cash prizes were awarded and contest was advertised in dailies and plugged at theatre.

On "Goin' to Town," Frank promoted co-op ad with all merchants' ads carrying tiein copy.

Fill a Flush, Says Gow

A little different twist to the press book poker hand stunt was used by J. M. Gow, Capitol, Nanaimo, Canada, on "Ruggles," for which ordinary playing cards were distributed in advance, theatre and playdates printed on back. Recipients were instructed to bring card to theatre, where, on poster in lobby, incomplete four card flush was displayed. Those holding missing card were awarded tickets to following week's show.

Dr. Tubman Prescribes "Ruggles" for All Ills

"I threw them pills away," says Lizzie Glutz . . . "try 'Ruggles of Red Gap' for what ails you."

"I hadn't smiled for over 20 years, life held nothing for me, but I got relief in 10 minutes," writes Sarah Schlitz, "by seeing 'Ruggles.'"

The above, adequately and mirthfully illustrated, in the form of prescriptions, were some of the laff ads used by Ray Tubman, Capitol, Ottawa. Bannered delivery trucks and newsboys parading to see the show were other slants used by Tubman to put this one over.

Become A Gold Digger, Says Bill Exton

Warners' "Gold Diggers" is making possible a lot of tieups between managers and jewelers soliciting old valuables of the gold content, and among the latest of these is Bill Exton's, at the Kenosha, Kenosha, Wisc., who arranged a window with copy inviting folks to start digging around their homes for gold. Lobby display included lollypops marked gold-digger suckers, jeweled cosmetic case and other accessories called the miscellaneous tools of the gold digger.

For lobby flash on "West Point of Air," Bill secured an aerial bomb converted into a lamp stand upon which were inscribed names of prominent world flyers.

"Reckless" Wreck Bally Leads Newsman Astray

For his street bally on "Reckless," Ray Jones, Loew's Vendome, Nashville, parked a wrecked car in street (see photo) with "drive carefully" copy, and reports that before he had a chance to get a banner on the car news photographer took a shot of the "wreck" and thus came in for plenty of riding.

Chain druggist used six-foot head of Harlow and plugged sundae named for star. Hat shop displayed enlargement of Powell cut-out as center-piece flanked on either side by enlargement of Harlow in dance costume.

Toups Hosts "Marietta" Director at Premiere

In town for the world premiere of "Naughty Marietta," Director Van Dyke was guest at special press lunch put on by Rodney Toups, Loew's State, where picture was shown. Each course on menu carried tie-in copy on Van Dyke and date.

Securing original drawings of production scenes from studio, Rodney contacted local jeweler who devoted space to display (see photo) and theatre copy. Entire front was covered with compoboard on which large cutouts of stars were mounted, and large sign over box office stressed the New Orleans background of picture. Moise Bloch assisted on the campaign.

Kann Hires Roving Cameraman For "Whole Town's Talking"

Roving photographer was turned loose by George Kann, Loew's Willard, Woodhaven, L. I., for "Town's Talking," with tickets awarded to those identifying their photos on lobby easel. Teaser stories on "Mr. Jones" were planted in papers, merchants came in with co-op ads and window displays.

Parade of bannered cars headed by old time model stopped at busy corners where circulars were distributed. Phone hangers, tack cards on traffic signals and inserts in laundry packages were used. Herman Addison assisted on campaign.

MORE ABOUT BONUS DRIVES

Some weeks back we published a spirited attack upon the system of bonus drives, written by a long-time member Round Tabler who cited his own case to back up his statements. As to be expected, other letters on the subject were forthcoming, and here are further expressions from two prominent Round Tablers, both firm advocates of the percentage plan of payment and which has been adopted by a number of theatre circuits.—A-MIKE.

FAVORS VARYING PERCENTAGE PLAN

DEAR MIKE:

Regarding bonuses it is just possible my experiences in connection with bonuses to employees might be of interest. Of course you know that my longest engagement, a term of fifteen years, was with F. F. Proctor of the Keith and Proctor and later, RKO organizations. Mr. Proctor engaged me for the operation of the houses, which were more or less in the red, and gave me a guaranteed salary with a guarantee of 52 weeks in the year and ten per cent of the profits.

I was sure of a good steady position and equitable salary for the work that I did, plus additional money at the end of the year in the form of ten per cent of the profits for extra efforts, ingenious ideas and schemes that increased the business from time to time that I took over the operation of the theatres. I started with one theatre in Elizabeth, New Jersey, and then another theatre in the same town was added, and, eventually, three theatres. My anxiety to increase my guaranteed salary so that I could procure ten per cent of the profits made it necessary for me to devise ways and means to make sure that there was a profit so that I could get my ten per cent. Therefore, you can readily visualize my plugging day and night because of my ten per cent interest.

My written contract permitted Mr. Proctor to have the use of my services in any of the theatres of his circuit that he might choose. And for the time and energy expended for the operation of those theatres which were not on the ten per cent basis, Mr. Proctor invariably handed me a fat bonus check at the end of each year, which was in addition to the money received from those theatres in which he had declared me for a ten per cent of the profits.

Believes Plan Gross Builder

I believe if the firms of the present day show-business, now that depression is over, would consider operating a bonus plan similar to Mr. Proctor's, that the grosses would improve immediately, and there would be more harmony, good feeling and efficient work done by managers working under such arrangement and more gratifying and profitable results for the employers.

The ten per cent should apply on the additional profits over and above the average profit that the theatre or theatres were making at the time that the bonus arrangement would go into effect. For it must be remembered that my ten per cent of the profits was given me in theatres that were operated in the red when I took hold of them. Therefor, it would be unfair to ask an employer to cut a manager in for ten per cent of the profits that were already there in his operation and that were not due to any effort on his part.

Under such conditions I would suggest that the ratio of profit sharing between employer and employee where houses are operating profitably, should be as follows: a straight three per cent of the profits, payable annually at the end of the year. Ten per cent of the profits of houses that have been constantly operating in the red.

Should a manager leave before the year expires, he should be paid, pro rata, for the time during which he worked, from the profits that accrue at the end of the year, and should his employer shift him from one location to another operated by the same firm, he should be paid pro rata according to the profits from both situations.

The three per cent profit sharing plan or bonus should apply to every operation that the manager is supervising individually. In the case of a district manager who operates more than one theatre, or supervises other managers and said managers are procuring the three per cent bonus, the district manager should get three per cent of the profit on the total number of houses he supervises.

This also applies to a division manager. A district or division manager who supervises twenty houses, his three per cent would not apply only to the profits of the profitable houses, but would only be three percent of the profits on the whole. For instance, if ten houses were in the red and ten in the black, his three per cent would only apply on the profit after the losses were deducted. This three per cent would of course be in addition to the guaranteed salary.—E. M. HART, Oxford Theatre, Plainfield, N. J.

"Prepared For Summer?"

CALLS BONUS DRIVE UNFAIR TO MANAGER

DEAR MIKE:

I agree whole-heartedly with the writer of the bonus article, having been through the same experience with a large theatre chain. I found that managers of the larger theatres are particularly penalized with high par quotas, and have very little chance to earn bonus money in any of the drives. The writer of the article is also correct in his assertion that if a manager does win a drive his par quota is immediately revised, so that he is automatically eliminated from the following drive.

During the depression period, theatre managers' salaries were continually reduced, and in very few instances have salaries been increased. Managers were told that they would be given an opportunity to earn additional money through the medium of the bonus drive, but only a very few were fortunate enough to win sizable amounts, and in most all cases these were managers of very small theatres.

It is a well known fact that most all theatre managers are under-paid in accordance with the responsibilities and the hours they work, and the only sensible plan of remuneration to theatre managers is a fair and just weekly salary with a percentage of the profits on a six months' or yearly basis. Each theatre situation is different and the amount of percentage would have to be governed by the individual case. There are some theatres that never have made profits, and probably never will, and in these cases managers should be rewarded for their efforts, if improvements are shown in decreasing the losses.

In my present situation I receive a very fair and equitable salary, and, in addition, get a bonus of five per cent of the profits of the theatre at the end of each year. It is a happy situation and a profitable one, and if the proposed RKO plan is to be of the same nature, then it certainly looks like the most constructive move made to date by any organization to take care of the men in the field, upon whom results of profits or losses depend.—ROUND TABLER.

THE ANNIVERSARY CAMPAIGN

Various Angles to Be Exploited In Celebrating Theatre Birthday Are Detailed by Harry Browning

Willis' "Roberta" Gas Station Plug

Various Accounts of "Roberta" Campaigns

Frank Willis at the Metropolitan, Winnipeg, Canada, held a special screening of "Roberta" for newspapermen and department store heads, thus insuring cooperation of merchant for series of style tieups. Frank opened date with special midnight shows.

Fashion stills were blown up and used in lobby displays with special copy describing each dress. Accompanying photo shows easels placed in gas and oil stations, music stores devoted windows to displays, using cutouts of Astaire and Rogers, and restaurant menus carried picture plugs.

Moving on to Worcester, Mass.

Where Harry B. Watts at the Poli secured cooperation of leading beauty salon which plugged a "Roberta" coiffure, using cuts of Rogers in ads. Another store featured "Roberta" shoe also showing photo of star in picture. Various stores used imprinted paper bags and theatre tabloids were distributed to offices and stores.

In Montreal

Contest was arranged by George Rotsky at the Palace with newspaper cooperating to find the perfect "Roberta" girl as per measurements of Virginia Reid, perfect model in picture. Prizes of compacts were given to four girls coming closest to size of model. Winners' pictures were published in paper with stories.

Winding Up in Watertown, S. D.

With Mike Guttmann at the Colonial, who promoted giveaway of photos of Rogers and Astaire with theatre copy and store's credit line. Attractive tire covers with pictures of stars were used, as were gaily colored standees in shop windows.

MONSTER IN BOSTON. Jack Goldstein's idea for sock lobby display on "Bride of Frankenstein" at Keith's Memorial, Boston. Cyl Champlin, artist, is credited.

Included among those events which have become a "must" in the schedule of smart showmen, is a proper celebration of a theatre anniversary. Put on effectively, such an occasion provides for additional grosses while adding immeasurably to theatre good will and prestige.

Harry Browning, M. and P. New England theatres ad head, has gathered a lot of excellent anniversary material used in the field and found profitable. These various angles have been put together in manual form and below, with an acknowledgment to Browning, is briefly set down the highlights of the numerous exploitations.

Planning the Campaign

The various angles to work on include newspapers, radio, merchant tieups, stage presentations, lobbies, special programs, mailing lists, special nights, marquee and front.

Drive should be started from two to four weeks ahead so as to plant it solidly in the minds of patrons. It is suggested that the event be referred to in all advertising as a "week," thus giving the theatre a seven-day period to expedite tieups and general merchandising.

Newspapers

Frequently successful has been a contest plugged by the local press to secure a slogan title to replace the conventional "anniversary week." One such campaign broke a lot of space for two weeks ahead and the winner awarded with a term pass for describing the theatre's third anniversary as "A Triennial Triumph,"

In addition to the contest, newspapers will of course be depended upon to run other stories of the theatre's history, editorials, interviews with theatre heads, photos. Special section with co-op ads from participating merchants is also to be considered.

Special Program, Mailing List

Souvenir programs gotten up especially would make a nice gift. This should be as elaborate as possible, and much of the cost if not all, can be laid off with merchants' ads. Photos, and stories of anniversary week's show plus information on outstanding coming attractions is suggested for material to be included.

The mailing list offers a good opportunity for the personal touch and it is suggested that wherever possible letter be addressed to the feminine head of the home. Mention should be made of extra attractions, gifts, or special features, and if letter is mimeographed names and addresses should be typed individually to make it more of personal message. Letters of course should include program of week's attractions.

Lobby Front and Marquee

Lobby of course will carry anniversary announcement well ahead as well as your screen. If slogan contest is put on, lobby easel will carry same copy as on trailer. Wired congratulations from stars, local civic officials, and possibly governor are to be included in lobby flash. Copies of wires from stars can be distributed house to house or placed in all outgoing messages. Photos of wires can also be included in advance trailer.

Exploitation tieups are also in order for lobby display, including the all important birthday cake, florist tiein, etc., detailed below.

Marquee and front can be tricked up to help along the event at little expense. Discreet use of paint to touch up bad spots, cleaning of frames, new backgrounds for frames, and if possible, new compo front are in order.

If you have the facilities, construct a huge compoboard birthday cake on marquee with the proper amount of compo candles lighted by ordinary bulbs. If the cake gag is "out" then try and use candles along the marquee front with cutout "anniversary" lettering. Flags, banners and burgees will also help.

Presentations, Special Nights

A recent anniversary presentation ran as follows week ahead: Special set of colored slides with stenciled song choruses of hits of former years was run. Then as slide with copy "this brings us to 1935," is flashed, traveler opens revealing large compo birthday cake in three layers with candles, with singer on top in spot doing special birthday numbers.

Advance presentation served as good current entertainment and also sold the coming week's shows in a forceful manner.

Special nights for various clubs, fraternal and racial groups, etc., are also to be considered during the anniversary week. Theatre can add entertainment to the program and perhaps talented members of these various groups may want to participate. Presentation by pupils of local dancing school is also suggested.

Tieups and Stunts

Special gifts for one or more nights can be promoted from cooperating merchants in exchange for lobby, ad and trailer credits, says Browning. The more valuable gift awards might be tied in to a weight-guessing contest on a huge birthday cake displayed in the lobby and obtained from baker, who can also make up special anniversary cakes named after theatre and featured at food stores week ahead. Guest tickets might be enclosed in a number of these cake packages. For cake weight-guessing contest, coupons should be given with admissions.

Golden wedding theatre party is another publicity builder, with paper tied in to publicize stunt. All local couples married 50 years are invited to theatre to participate in some special ceremony and receive gifts.

Banks have also been tied in to open savings accounts for all babies born during anniversary week and children with birthdays during week can be guests. These two slants rate newspaper cooperation, as both have been put on with one of the local dailies. Paper runs coupons during week for one or both stunts, which are to be filled out properly and presented at newspaper for the savings account credits, or the theatre guest tickets.

On this page are presented graphically and in detail, reproductions of the seven two-column newspaper ads that tell entirely the story of Bill Exton's "dare you" stunt on "Bride of Frankenstein" at the Kenosha, Kenosha, Wisc. Ads were planted, one a day as designated, a full week ahead and built up so much interest and suspense that the opening day's records were cracked wide open. Box shown in lower right hand corner was used at top of regular opening day ad. Incidentally, these seven ads are cheerfully recommended for duplication of a similar stunt on the same or any other horror picture.

Some Added Pointers From Walter Davis

Now doing a snappy job at the Capitol, Regina, Canada, Walter Davis has put many years of effort into building up theatres. In addition to the ideas he contributed to the recent Birthday Number, Walter sends along some others he has found helpful, as follows:

Lighting and Ventilation

Watch your lighting. Eliminate any lighting glare between the patron's eye and the screen. Would you hold a candle between your eye and the paper you are reading? Of course not, says Walter, but in effect that is what they try to do in many theatres, says Walter.

To keep temperature under control, lash thermometers to chairs in every section of the house and check with printed form for hourly readings.

Good Will Builders

Encourage mothers to bring the children to matinees and when the youngsters get restless, send an usher down with a lollypop which Davis buys in gross lots and finds effective in keeping the kids quiet. Each month birthday greeting cards are issued to children between eight and twelve years of age, giving child the privilege of bringing father and mother to see particular picture listed on card. This listing acts as a cutoff for the life of the invitation.

Davis has cards printed with envelopes to match for patrons who may wish to buy theatre tickets as gifts, and says that the special service sells a great many additional admissions.

Joiner Puts On Man Hunt For "Ruggles of Red Gap"

An advance teaser newspaper campaign was put over by Maynard Joiner, Orpheum, Vancouver, on "Ruggles of Red Gap." Maynard put his "Ruggles" out on street, offering cash prize, shared by paper, for his capture. Hunt was plugged daily in papers, all newsstands were placarded with "Read about the Ruggles hunt." Cards and newsboys plugged it. Radio news on daily results of hunt were broadcast, thus insuring additional coverage. Stunt was reported by papers to be one of the biggest put over there.

Street ballys consisted of man on bannered horse and chap sitting in front of box-office waited for show to open. Passes were awarded to those guessing names of stars in picture whose voices were heard over lobby mike.

Pollock Distributes Rings For "Wedding Night" Date

Les Pollock, Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., distributed small cards with wedding bands attached with injunctions to place ring on finger as a reminder to attend showing.

On "West Point of the Air" Junior Birdmen column devoted several plugs to plane contest for which promoted loving cup was awarded. The arrival of film by plane broke dailies and throwaways were dropped from cruising plane over city and suburbs.

TO VACATIONING ROUND TABLERS

What with the summer upon us and vacation time around the corner, your Round Table again extends a hearty invitation to visiting Round Tablers and other New York bound managers to make full use of this office as a mailing address, for hotel reservations and other similar services.

Write, wire, or just drop in. The door is on the latch, and we'll be pleased to see you.—A-MIKE.

Hartnett's Style Show

Fashion show staged at the Embassy, Waltham, Mass., on tieup with leading department store was feature of campaign put on by Manager Bill Hartnett for "One More Spring." Store went heavy for windows on the hookup, featuring cutout drawings of Gaynor in costumes from the picture. Idea was plugged further in counter cards scattered about store and also given a break in newspaper ads and stories.

"Prepared For Summer?"

Warners Go Chain-Letter

It was only a question of time until the press book lads got hold of the current chain letter craze, the first reported being the Warnerites, who are using it as exploitation on "Stranded." Theatre playing the picture starts the chain, offering autographed photo of Kay Francis to all bringing copy of letter to box office during run.

Goldstein Finishes First In Quaker Oats Contest

Manager Harry Goldstein, Shawmut, Roxbury, Mass., takes down the first prize of $500, in the "Devil Dogs-Quaker Oats" exploitation contest, according to Terry Turner, of Lord and Thomas, agency handling the cereal account.

Second money, $250, goes to Ken Grimes, Warner, Morgantown, West Va., and third prize, $150, to Al Sindlinger, Appleton, Appleton, Wisc. Al copped two firsts in previous Warner-Quaker Oats contests.

Fourth, $100, Ed Hart, Plainfield, N. J.; Fifth, $90, Gerald F. Baker, Kennedy, Kirksville, Mo., and sixth, $75, to Hadden Mathews, 69th Street Theatre, Upper Darby, Pa. Seventh and eighth money, $50 and $35, went to Guy P. Collier, Orpheum, Mitchell, Ind., and Nevin McCord, Orpheum, Twin Falls, Idaho, respectively. Fifty prizes of $25 were also awarded to other winning managers.

Webster Arranges Benefit With PTA on "Old Girl"

With the PTA expressing a desire for benefit on some picture which would enable them to sell tickets to pay for shrubbery around new school building, J. H. Webster, Carolina Theatre, Elizabeth City, N. C., made the deal on his "Grand Old Girl" date. School paid for printing of benefit tickets, PTA receiving 25 per cent of their sales.

From Columbia's studios, May Robson wired good wishes and this with congratulations from Governor was presented on stage to guest of honor as was inscribed cup that Webster promoted.

MANAGERS GIFT COPELAN. On the anniversary of his second year as head of the Atlantic City Warner Theatres zone, Herbert Copelan (right) was presented with an onyx desk set by the folks in his sector. That's ad chief Sid Blumenstock (left) doing the honors, and in the group are Edythe Flink, secretary, and Managers Howard Baker, Iz Perlin, Irv Finn, Floyd Wesp and Harry Gottlieb.

FURTHER OVERSEAS ACTIVITIES

Lawson's Window on "Brewster's Millions"

(Right) AL DEANE, of Paramount International, reports this front from the Royal Apollo Theatre, Budapest, as one of the most colorful used overseas on "Bengal Lancer." Opening was very hollywood with Governor Horthy and staff on hand.

American 24-Sheet in Paris

(Right) ROBERT TRILLO, RKO manager in Spain, takes the bows for this well executed street bally on "Flying Down to Rio" at the Coliseum, Barcelona. Masked couple in foreground are dancers who demonstrated the "Carioca" on float to accompaniment of carioca records.

Show How They Do It in Spain

Wire Walker Stunts in Valencia

(Right) Illuminated front of the King's Theatre, Hongkong, China, for the opening there of "House of Rothschild." United Artists' manager, P. MORGENSTERN, in that spot, put it on fancy for a gala premiere by inviting His Excellency the Governor and other celebrities.

Electrical Front from Shanghai

Atmospheric Front From Barcelona

(Right) In addition to posting across face of lobby, F. REYRENNS, Fox manager in Switzerland arranged comprehensive display of captioned stills on "Charlie Chan's Greatest Case" at the Cinema Odeon, in Basle. Frames also carried the regular three sheets in English.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

"SOMETHING FOR NOTHING"

WE are all familiar with that typical stereotyped story of the bookkeeper, poorly paid, hard driven by demands of home and family, the sick wife, the brood of small children to be kept in school, who sought a swift way out of his woes. He started by tapping the till to play a long shot at the races, or a rosy tip on the market. He expected to win, pay back to the cash drawer, and buy new shoes for the baby. He didn't and life blew up in his face.

The wild-fire craze of chain letter fortune hunters, the wide spread of sweepstakes gambling, the recrudesence of "free" deals in general merchandising, the bank nights and all such manner of exploitations are aimed at the all too human hope of "something for nothing."

All this is the fruit of the ordeal years—stark madness, obviously, but no more mad than fiat money, programs for spending ourselves back to prosperity, bootstrap economics.

These are common manifestations of the wish of hungry, yearning people—all as worthy in their purpose toward better living as the bookkeeper of our little allegory, but sharing with him the same quality of misjudgment, if not the same quality of guilt.

Serving these wishing millions is the motion picture's job. The screen can not promise or deliver "something for nothing," but it can reiterate and support the contention of being the best buy in town.

WHY MR. COOKE!

THE British cinema is given an amazing going over in Intercine, the League of Nations' screen monthly, by Mr. Alistair Cooke, who appears to find faults and follies and failings that are, he would have one believe, painfully near congenital and incurable.

"A visitor to these shores," observes Mr. Cooke, "today might well assume, from the general ecstatic whispers and pealings of bells about him that British films were now in the hands of profound and sophisticated men."

That, however, Mr. Cooke does not exactly admit. He says there is now seemingly for the first time, "a positive attitude toward the cinema . . . the English, while giving the superb social appearance of decision and firm judgment, are actually not in the habit of defining their attitude, even to themselves." And, speaking of attitude, he comes to a quotation from Mr. George Jean Nathan who said once: "I still can't make up my mind whether actors act and talk like Englishmen or whether Englishmen act and talk like actors."

So discovering the new attitude, be it acting or not, Mr. Cooke finds: "Characteristically, then, the cinema in England has suddenly become a very well-bred institution. It has gone social to a degree far beyond anything that a foreigner might imagine. A first night audience is often drawn almost exclusively, one would think, from the peerage, apart from such necessary make-weights as critics and the producers' friends . . . the cinema is fast becoming in England socially distinguished and therefore—artistically negligible."

Continuing the indictment, Mr. Cooke observes: "To gain national attention for any artistic product, it is necessary in this country . . . to do one of two things: either to write a book and get it banned by the censor; or to write on a lavish scale on some episode of English history. . . . D. H. Lawrence and Joyce are popularly known because they wrote two books that were banned. Noel Coward is popularly known, not by "The Vortex," but by "Cavalcade." The very reverential movie which Hollywood made from the Coward opus gave the cue for a new age in British films. It gave the cue for the dawn of the Pageant film. . . . British producers had at last found the thing that movie magnates pursue more thirstily than originality, or wit or invention—a formula for the successful film. The formula is already shopworn. . . .

". . . I do not think that anyone can seriously, in the next five years, expect that a British studio of any reputation will put out a film that is—except incidentally—important for the excellence of its cinematic qualities. . . .

". . . and it is daily more obvious that we are fundamentally more easy going, fundamentally less resourceful than the Americans . . . our film directors can, with patrician applause ringing in their ears, be pretty sure that they are capable of being more inept, more vulgar and more ostentatious than the most exuberant Hollywood producer. . . ."

That, sir, is an Englishman's view of it.

REFLECTION on the flow of the news brings the conviction that the motion picture seems to have made more business for lawyers, or that possibly lawyers have made more business out of the motion picture, than any other big industry. Maybe this merely betokens an era of adjustments between the young art and old society.

THIS WEEK---

HITS "WASTAGE"

Wastage in production was scored last week by Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, new president of the Motion Picture Research Council and president of Stanford University, speaking at a conference of the council in San Francisco. Advocating "intelligent planning," he said, "Elimination and cutting after the scenes have all been taken is hardly satisfactory. These things should be worked out in advance." . . .

FILMS LAUDED

Two resolutions, adopted at the recent general assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in Cincinnati, stressed the improvement in motion pictures. The resolutions were submitted by the committee on social welfare, of which Dr. George Emerson Barnes is chairman. One resolution was in the "commendation" group, the other among "recommendations." . . .

COAST PUBLICISTS

Publicity executives, meeting at the MPPDA office on the Coast, took an initial step in cutting down the number of film press correspondents. It was agreed that no publication will be recognized unless it is six months old and its circulation at least 25,000. The group agreed to ask publishers to eliminate stories exposing film technical tricks. . . .

"DODSWORTH" BOUGHT

Samuel Goldwyn has added another to his list of planned productions for United Artists release, having purchased the film rights to the play "Dodsworth," by Sidney Howard, developed from Sinclair Lewis's novel of the same title. The reported purchase price was approximately $175,000. . . .

MAMOULIAN HONORED

The American Institute of Cinematography has awarded the honor diploma to Rouben Mamoulian, director, for his direction of "Becky Sharp," Pioneer-RKO feature in Technicolor. Mr. Mamoulian spoke over WJZ last weekend on color in films, and specifically on "Becky Sharp." . . .

COMPETITION

Reports received in the motion picture section of the Department of Commerce indicate that American films are meeting increased competition in certain European markets. Germany and France have been hitting American domination in Spain. The percentage of American films in Portugal also has shown a decline. . . .

SUIT DISMISSED

Quietly entered in the Los Angeles federal court records last week was a dismissal, stipulated by attorneys for both sides, of the suit of Leon F. Douglass, color photography inventor, against Fox Film charging infringement of color patents. What settlement, if any, was effected was kept secret. The plaintiff may reopen the case later, according to the terms of the dismissal. . . .

EUROPE'S NEED

Technical experts, Hollywood trained, are more vital to European motion picture improvement than Hollywood stars, in the opinion of William Goetz, vice-president of 20th Century Pictures, on his return from abroad last week. The recent exchange of players is merely the forerunner of a closer alliance of producing companies, he said. . . .

ITALIAN SUBSIDY

A bill recently presented to the Italian legislature provides for the granting of advances to motion picture studios by the government. The amount in no case would exceed one-third of the total production cost. An annual sum of 10,000,00 lire will be provided in the budget over a period of five years. . . .

PHILIP KLEIN

Philip Klein, film writer and producer, stricken suddenly with pneumonia, died on the Coast last week at the age of 46. He was a pioneer screen writer, going to the Coast in 1924. Perhaps the best known of his screen plays was "Four Sons," which won an Academy award. He wrote Shirley Temple's first starring vehicle, "Baby, Take a Bow," and just before his death finished the screen play for Fox's "Dante's Inferno," with Robert M. Yost. . . .

AMATEUR FILM CLUB

Organized in Cincinnati, the Cine Club will produce amateur films with the hope that at least one each year will rate inclusion in the annual amateur contest in Hollywood. Dr. J. M. Steen is president of the club. A feature length film also may be produced. . . .

DEGREE TO CONNOLLY

Walter Connolly, veteran player of the stage and screen, following the Broadway run of the play "The Bishop Misbehaves," and en route to the Coast, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from Xavier University, Cincinnati, from which he graduated 28 years ago. . . .

GRACE MOORE HAILED

Grace Moore, operatic, and lately motion picture star was enthusiastically received by a brilliant Covent Garden audience last week in her British operatic debut as Mimi in "La Boheme." The reception accorded her was compared with that for Melba. Fifteen curtain calls were indicative of her success. She will return to Hollywood in August. . . .

NO FREE SHOWS

The entertainment groups sponsored by the federal government to provide work for unemployed theatrical people in the future will charge nominal admissions to performances instead of giving free shows, according to plans being developed. Auditoriums, halls and other available places will be used for showings. . . .

NAZI ORDERS

The German propaganda ministry has ordered that distribution of all German films abroad is to be centralized, effective September 1, in a single office under the control of the ministry. The purpose is to eliminate Jewish film distributors. The ministry also forbade theatres to exhibit films produced in the pre-Nazi days, and in which Jewish players appear. . . .

MPTOA ASKS CONTRACT STABILIZE ADMISSIONS, CONTROL PRACTICES

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Existence of strong evidence of a threatened disruption of normal distribution and exhibition procedure through unrestrained indulgence in socalled unfair trade practices and admission slashing caused the national officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, representing between 4,500 and 5,000 theatres, to come forward this week with the first tangible suggestion of a solution in control, by exhibition contract, of some of the competitive perils seen now facing the industry as a result of the nullification of the NRA and the motion picture code by the United States Supreme Court.

The apparent inability of the Administration at Washington to legislate enforceable codes, together with the indicated extreme unlikelihood of the motion picture industry effecting a "voluntary" code, gives strength, in the opinion of its sponsors, to the MPTOA's proposal to regulate, by a rider to the regular license agreement between exhibitor and distributor, such competitive practices as premiums, gifts, prizes, chances, reduced script books, coupons, throw-away tickets, two-for-one admissions, or other forms of cut-rates. And, although not heretofore affected by the NRA code, the double feature program would be controlled.

Promising that "MPTOA members will do everything possible to maintain the standards of NRA on minimum wages and maximum hours of employment, and of business conduct, regardless of what rival exhibitors do," national headquarters "urge the distributors of motion pictures to voluntarily adhere to the code provisions affecting exhibition, to continue the use of the standard contract, to respect the standards of clearance that have been established by the local zoning boards (under the NRA), and to uphold the fair trade practices set forth in the code."

Distributors, like exhibitors, are no longer bound to adhere to any of the defunct code clauses, except those which are definitely a part of the exhibition contract binding the distributor. The sentiment has been, as expressed unofficially in distributor ranks, for continuing the standard contract, including the 10 per cent cancellation privilege accorded exhibitors on block purchases. On the other hand many believe that clearance will again be a matter of bargaining in the open market between an exhibitor and distributor, to be bought for a price. The fate of other distribution practices which the code was intended to control still is the subject for much speculation, and it will probably be weeks or months, because of the intricacies involved, before the definite policies become apparent.

In exhibition, however, where, too, code provisions actually written into contracts remain valid and enforceable, the MPTOA believes "there will probably be a gradual return to unrestrained 'cut-throat' competition, unscrupulous practices, 'chiseling,' lawsuits and trade reprisals."

Propose Rider in Contract

And, in order to "reduce the back-swing towards jungle law in this business" and "to prevent the cheapening and demoralizing of the business in competitive areas, as has happened in the past time and again," the MPTOA suggests to the trade the use of a provision in the license agreement in the form of a rider, attached to and made a part of the application, controlling those practices deemed unfair. The rider would bear even date of the application and would automatically become a part of the license agreement when the instrument is approved by the distributor.

The socalled "deluxe operations" and "Class A" theatres in competitive areas are the hub around which the plan revolves. The country town exhibitor, with no direct competition, has far less to worry about in the present crisis than the exhibitors in highly competitive situations.

Sees Cut-Rate Competition

"The theatre owner with a big investment in a key city has a real worry," the MPTOA points out, "and he is now faced with possible cut-rate competition from either rival subsequent runs, or, if a first run, with theatres playing following runs, who have little or no investment to protect, who pay peanuts for their film service, have a few low-wage employees and are unscrupulous and irresponsible."

This type of exhibitor, the MPTOA declares, "is in a position to drastically undersell the responsible exhibitor on admission, selling the same identical show below actual cost to the same patronage, using premiums, rebates, double feature programs and all sorts of bargain nights, come-ons and giveaways, until they drag down all of the theatre operations in the city to a common level or bankrupt the finer theatres."

Comes at Buying Time

The plan was struck at a psychological moment. All exhibitors, at least all of the first-run and important subsequents, are now negotiating new product arrangements. The first or prior run exhibitor, seriously concerned with maintaining a single feature policy, relatively higher admissions and who has to pay a film rental many times larger than a subsequent run, can, on his own initiative, negotiate such an agreement separately with each distributor that supplies pictures for his theatre.

While virtually all the trade associations in the industry are shouldered with additional responsibilities as the only agencies that can restrain unfair practices and effect the machinery for their control, the MPTOA's plan is one of voluntary self-regulation, negotiation and unanimous consent on the part of the individual exhibitor to meet an individual competitive situation.

The simplest manner of effecting the rider arrangement is for the responsible "de luxe," "Class A" or prior run owner, when approached—any day now—by the distributor's sales representative, to offer two deals governing the purchase of the product: One at a price to include the rider, the second at a lower price without the rider. The sponsors believe that the distributor, naturally, will take the best price, and may even be compelled to in view of the dominant position locally of the "de luxe," "Class A" or prior run theatre demanding the rider.

The higher price offered depends, of course, on the value at the box office of the protecting rider to the exhibitor whose theatre is directly affected by, or threatened with, the trade practices which the rider would control in his area.

How the Plan Works

The rider is signed by the "de luxe," "Class A" and/or prior run, and, after approval by the distributor, the distributor agrees to require in a contract with any subsequent-run situated in the "run" and "clearance period area defined in the contract, "that for any of the feature pictures specified in the contract with the "de luxe," the subsequent run."

1. Will charge a minimum admission, at specified hours, as set down by individual

INDUSTRY USING ARBITRATION NOW

Voluntary arbitration, which was not resorted to extensively during the life of the motion picture code, has returned in full force in New York. Three cases were on the calendar of the New York Film Board of Trade on Tuesday of this week, and one was heard. While the possibility of a voluntary code under the new NRA provisions is engaging the attention of the industry, it is likely that arbitration will grow in favor.

RIDER WOULD CONTROL ADMISSIONS

negotiation between the "de luxe" theatre and each separate distributor.

2. Will not lower the prices publicly announced or advertised for admission to such subsequent run by giving rebates in the form of premiums, gifts, prizes, chances or anything of value, or by means of reduced script books, coupons, throw-away tickets or two-for-one admissions or any other things of value, or by any other method or device of a similar nature which directly or indirectly lowers or tends to lower such publicly announced admission prices; and will not conduct or operate any lottery, drawing, gamble or any other form of hazard at such subsequent run theatre; or

3. Will not exhibit any of the specified pictures with another feature length picture for the same admission charge. (Any motion picture originally made and released in more than 3,000 linear feet of film shall be deemed a feature motion picture.)

The restrictions would apply only to the pictures specified in the contract with the prior run into which agreement the rider is incorporated. Pictures of all other distributors and other pictures of the same distributor not specified in the rider-contract can be sold any way they choose to any theatres.

Furthermore the restrictions do not restrain other theatres from double featuring, giving premiums and the like, or charging unreasonably low admissions, merely preventing the use of the same pictures specified in the rider-contract in unfair competition directly with the prior run.

Limited to Competing Theatres

The specific provisions of such a rider can be cut to fit the local situation in any competitive area by eliminations or additions to the suggested provisions. Again, the provisions are limited to only those theatres directly competing with the prior run theatre.

If the prior run violates any of the three parts of the rider, by failing to maintain the admissions specified in said rider; by using any of the trade practices prohibited in the rider (giveaways, cut-rates, and the like); or by failing to maintain a single feature policy, then the rider shall become null and void and of no effect and the distributor shall be relieved of any further obligation to comply with the provisions of the rider, and in addition the distributor shall have the right to waive or to eliminate from any contract made with any subsequent run in the competitive area the provisions to control by contract with such subsequent runs those trade practices against which the prior run was originally to be protected by the rider.

The immediate effect of a violation of the rider by a prior run would be to again return such prior run to the "unfair" competitive onslaughts of the subsequents on those pictures for which he sought protection.

Restriction on Distributors

On the other hand, if the distributor, after effecting a rider-contract with a prior run, violates the rider by licensing the specified pictures for subsequent run showings in the defined competitive area without requiring the subsequent to contractually abide by the trade practice stipulations, then the distributor would be compelled to reduce, by some percentage agreed to, the rental for each of the pictures so exhibited by the subsequent, and if the rental had been paid by the prior run the distributor would repay to or credit the account of the prior run with the amount of such reduction.

If the subsequent-run secures such a limited license on condition that he will charge a minimum admission and refrain from the stipulated trade practices, and then violates his agreement in this respect, the MPTOA believes that the prior run exhibitor would have the right to bring suit against the subsequent run for damages and/or an injunction because the agreement was made with the subsequent for the benefit of the prior run, even though the prior run is not actually a party to the contract between the distributor and the subsequent.

The rider is in effect reciprocal, in that the prior run using the rider must agree to maintain admissions and refrain from the specified practices at his own theatre, and loses the protection if he fails to do so.

The minimum admission for evening and matinee performances; the time indicating when such performances begin and end respectively; and the percentage by which rentals shall be reduced, are matters for individual negotiation by the prior run with each separate distributor.

The rights of the distributor under all other provisions of the contract shall remain unimpaired in the event of a violation of the rider by prior run, distributor or subsequent.

Cites Lack of Court Precedent

The prior run exhibitor involved in the rider should be prepared, the MPTOA advises, " to defend the agreement in court, if necessary. There is every indication that the premium dealers, promoters of 'advertising' schemes and double feature producers will threaten law suits or get some small exhibitor to file one."

"As far as we can ascertain," the MPTOA continued, "these questions have never been decided by a superior court. There is an inferior court decision on a double feature clause, which is generally expected to be reversed on appeal anyhow, but this is on the grounds of a conspiracy between two or more distributors (to refuse to sell any of their pictures to any theatre for use on double bill programs). In many situations the cost of such a court determination would be insignificant compared to the value of such protection against the 'chiseling' of unfair and unscrupulous competitors."

What the court decided, in the foregoing reference to the double featuring decision, was that the distributors had conspired among themselves to abolish all double bills. Under the new plan dualling would be prohibited only on those specified pictures mentioned in the contract to which is attached the rider.

Regardless of whether the legality of the plan stands at this time undetermined, the MPTOA is said to be willing to proceed with its adoption and to let the attacks come when they may, for subsequent determination in the courts, if necessary.

See Opposition Ahead

Broadway freely predicted that the plan would draw the fire of some distributors, especially from those who are reluctant to have their hands tied in selling by any process which sets down the how and where they can sell.

Too, some of the distributors' legal chieftains are expected to voice opposition, because of their constant fear of possible triple-damage suits under the anti-trust laws.

But, MPTOA leaders believe, any exhibitor controlling his situation can force the distributor to grant the concession—or else,

Sees Two Kinds of Theatres

"Isn't it just possible," asks the MPTOA, "that an enterprising exhibitor with sufficient courage to shelve inferior pictures, run his theatre with a better average show on single feature programs at a reasonably high admission scale with no 'rackets' going on could develop an ample clientele that prefers that kind of a show shop? Isn't there a chance that we exhibitors are too much like sheep, each trying to do exactly what the other fellow does?

"Maybe the breakdown of NRA will bring about two kinds of theatres in some places, those with a class patronage and the bargain counter type. Restaurants, cafes, hotels and shops and stores have long ago established themselves in this way."

PRODUCTION CODE BRANCH IN EAST

Will H. Hays on Wednesday, following the regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, announced that there would be established immediately at headquarters in New York an eastern office of the Production Code Administration.

The MPPDA acted thereby on the request made last month by the Film Producers Group of the Federation of British Industries for the creation of code machinery in New York in order to facilitate the handling of British scripts and pictures intended for American consumption. Heretofore such material was required to be sent to Hollywood, which caused delays, the British pointed out.

The service thus provided will be available for the use of any other producers, foreign or domestic, who find it more accessible to their needs than the west coast office.

Nullification by the Supreme Court of the NRA and its consequent voiding of the motion picture code was studied in a general manner by the MPPDA directors. They are continuing a study of the situation.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

$100,000,000 SOUND SUIT TESTIMONY IS IN

Industry Leaders Testify at Last Days of Schlesinger-Duovac Action Against Erpi

One of the greatest litigations involving the sound motion picture industry, and reputedly involving more than $100,000,000, which held the attention of the producing and exhibiting divisions for seven weeks in the United States District Court at Wilmington, Del., where two companies, General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation said they were "fighting for freedom" from an alleged trust in the anti-trust action against Electrical Research Products, Inc., Western Electric Company and American Telephone and Telegraph Company, has reached the end of the taking of testimony before Judge John P. Nields. Argument in the case set for November 6.

Eighty-five witnesses, 54 for the defendants and 31 for the plaintiffs, testified in the trial which lasted 27 court days over a period of nearly two months, during which time over 5,000 pages, including more than 1,250,000 words were recorded.

Mills Explains Music Licenses

While Nathan Goldman, president of Duovac, was the last witness in the trial, Edwin C. Mills, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP) was the surprise witness in rebuttal for the plaintiffs. Mr. Mills, who left an important directors meeting in New York on Wednesday, testified regarding the Erpi licensing agreements with ASCAP, a group of publishers of copyrighted music, composers and song writers.

Mr. Mills submitted himself to a merciless grilling by George F. Hurd, of New York, chief counsel for the electrics, and testified that he did not insist on the clause which called for the granting of a license under copyright music rights whereby the film on which the music was recorded or released could be exhibited only on Erpi equipment. He said that he had several conferences with Erpi, represented by John E. Otterson, president, and Arthur Weil, counsel for Erpi, and at various times with Whitford Drake and Donald S. Pratt, Erpi vice-presidents, regarding the agreement and that he finally agreed at the insistance of Mr. Otterson and Mr. Weil.

Mr. Mills said he was unwilling on behalf of the music copyright owners to grant exclusive licenses to Erpi. "There was an insistence that I should limit the products manufactured under the license, which I granted at the insistence of Mr. Otterson and Mr. Weil," he said. "I flatly declined to an exclusive license and finally, because it made no difference to us, agreed that the products manufactured under the license, if they could control the situation, might be used only on their own Erpi apparatus," he continued.

"Subsequently, after the contract had been executed, I became somewhat worried on that point and I thought that perhaps I had gone too far and became a party to an arrangement that just might not be the right thing or the wise thing, and I served notice upon them that I had no intention of invoking any rights I might have under that clause: that there should be complete freedom of movement in the use of the product manufactured under our license, played on any sort of apparatus, regardless of by whom manufactured."

Negotiated Agreement with RCA

Mr. Mills testified the agreement gave him the right under a clause to negotiate further for another licensing agreement, so he forthwith contacted RCA Photophone and negotiated for a similar license. He then notified both companies that he had no intention of invoking the rights under the clause of the original agreement with Erpi, he said.

Chief Counsel Hurd asked Mr. Mills about claims he had made against Warner Brothers, for the showing of "Don Juan" in New York without the Warners first obtaining a license. He was reminded by Mr. Hurd of his attendance at the premiere with friends to check on the film. Mr. Mills could not recall making the claims against the Warners but presumed that he did as a matter of course, contending that the showing was illegal without the license.

Meyer Leventhal, general sales manager of the Phillip G. Scheck Theatre Enterprises, of Baltimore, rebuttal witness, testified that his company had to pull out Western Electric equipment because it was unsatisfactory and that a number of times his theatres had to refund money to the customers because of the poor equipment. It was replaced by DeForest Phonofilm, he said.

In the cross examination, Mr. Hurd brought out that Scheck Theatre Enterprises had been sued by Erpi and had settled out of court, to which Mr. Leventhal contended that the litigation was not because of payments in arrears but because of protested sound reproducer service charges. Mr. Leventhal had quite a heated discussion with Mr. Hurd and went on to say that Erpi engineers came to his theatres, disconnected amplifiers and sealed the machines.

Cites Quality of Reproducers

Robert F. Naylor, projectionist of Atlantic City theatres, testified he had experience with Photofilm, RCA Photophone, Western Electric and DeForest and said that the DeForest was "a trifle better." He said Erpi's compulsory servicing was not necessary.

Mr. Goldman, president of Duovac, refuted the previous testimony of Chauncey H. Durkee, former Duovac mechanical engineer, a witness for the defense. Mr. Goldman denied that Duovac tubes were copied physically and literally from Western Electric and RCA. He also denied that the first shipment of Duovac tubes to Paramount were returned or replaced as Mr. Durkee had testified earlier. Mr. Goldman presented Mr. Durkee's notebook used when the latter was in the employ of Duovac, and it was entered as evidence.

Chester Tappan, of New York, chief engineer for General Talking Pictures, refuted the testimony of Erpi witnesses from the south that there was a dearth of service for DeForest equipment in the south. Mr. Tappan testified that there were DeForest service stations every 200 to 250 miles and that there were four engineers in Charlotte, N. C.

Fred W. Bynum, of Rockingham, N. C., attorney who represented General in action against Erpi and Sampson Theatres; Sam Norris, of New York, in charge of government and theatre sales for Duovac; Alexander Senauke, of the Bronx, consultant for Duovac and Harry Lindquist, of Lynbrook, Long Island, employed by the Federal Telegraph Company, were rebuttal witnesses for the plaintiffs.

Depositions Come from Leaders

Thomas Raymond Griffith, Western Electric employee of Dover, N. J.; Dr. Edgar G. Wagner, former Duovac employee, and Mervin J. Kelly, tube engineer, were sur-rebuttal witnesses for the defendants on the last day. William D. Kelly, of New York, connected with the M-G-M film department, also testified for the defense.

The defendants produced the following depositions: Nicholas M. Schenck, M-G-M president; David Bernstein, treasurer M-G-M; George W. Parr, Lancaster, S. C., exhibitor; Joseph L. Caudell, Charlotte, N. C.; George H. Miller, former Erpi engineer; Thomas C. Lambden and Kenneth W. Keene, of New York.

In his deposition, Mr. Schenck denied refusing pictures to exhibitors with non-Erpi equipment in a conversation with Max A. Schlesinger, president of General. Mr. Parr's deposition stated that the Imperial theatre, at Lancaster, first used Photophone but it was discarded and application made for DeForest.

Witnesses for the plaintiffs during the course of the trial were: Max A. Schlesinger, president of General; David R. Hochreich, former president of Vocafilm; Max Weiss, former president of Art Class Pictures; Nathan Goldman, president of Duovac; Edwin C. Mills, general manager ASCAP; Abel Cary Thomas, Warner Bros., (deposition); Joseph Stark, William Jessop, Sam Leibow, David G. Berger, Sam Stein, Jacob Levin, Sam Norris, Chester Tappan, all of New York; Henry D. Behr, Wilmer Vincent Circuit; John Miller, Brunswick Radio; E. M. Lowe, Boston; Edward Levy, New Haven; Charles W. Picquet, North Carolina; Harry Pearlman, Philadelphia; G. E. Quigley, Vitaphone, (deposition); Reynolds B. Wilbanks, Charlotte, N. 52,000 FEET OF FRANK BUCK FILM REACH NEW YORK

"Bring 'Em Back Alive" Man Sends Movies of Jungle Thrills Never Before Filmed.

New York (RP)— From the blistering heart of the Malay Jungle, Frank Buck, the man whose name has become synonymous with wild animal thrills, has sent back to the offices of the Van Beuren Corporation 52,000 feet of movie film picturing thrills destined to make the hair of America's sensation-loving millions stand on end! From this mass of film will be edited the new Frank Buck picture, not yet titled, which is undoubtedly the strangest, most amazing drama of adventure ever photographed.

FRANK BUCK

Buck himself will soon be home from the nameless wilds of the land of Fangs and Sudden Death, where he was successful in getting pictures of happenings no white man ever had seen before.

One of the adventures described by cable by Buck, and which is to be seen in the film, is the capture of a giant tiger who had earned the native name of "Nari Pambunoh" (Terrible Killer). Buck's account of the capture of the gigantic animal makes one glad that Buck, and not one's self, was the leading spirit in a stalk that threatened death—or worse—at every turn.

Even after the ten-foot-long cat was captured the thrills just began. The beast was too big to be transported in a cage across the almost impassable mountain trails. Snarling, fighting, struggling every inch, the ton of Hell was lashed to carrying poles and carried on the shoulders of the natives. At one point in the 30-mile trek it was necessary to lower the tiger by ropes down the forbidding face of a cliff 1,000 feet high!

This tiger hunt is but one incident in a picture packed with the dynamite of dangers in the wilds!

Paramount to Ask Trustee Dismissal

What is regarded as the final step in Paramount's emergence from bankruptcy is expected on Monday when application will be made to the United States district court, New York, for an order dismissing the trustees and turning over the assets to the reorganized company. At that time Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board, John E. Otterson, president and George J. Schaefer, vice-president, will assume active command of the company, now named Paramount Pictures, Inc.

Counsel for the trustees and the various committees associated with the reorganization are preparing applications for their share of the $2,500,000 set aside in the reorganization plan for administrative and other expenses.

Ernst Lubitsch, executive producer, and Henry Herzbrun, studio business administrator, conferred with Mr. Otterson in New York and are expected to be retained. Decision is being left to Mr. Otterson and approval by the board on June 27. Reports had it Watterson Rothacker will join Paramount in an executive capacity at the studio.

Paramount trustees are preparing one-year partnership deal renewals on theatres. Contracts which expire June 27 will be extended to late September, meanwhile, to cover the period until the reorganized company is functioning smoothly. The directorate will then consider renewals. The Olympia Theatres reorganization plan has been prepared by counsel for the trustees.

William Yoost, bondholder, was denied leave to appeal last week from Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe's order approving the settlement of Erpi's claim against Paramount under a decision handed down by the United States circuit court of appeals. The agreement in settlement of the claim of Allied Owners Corporation against Paramount was approved last week when no objections to the proposal were presented.

Federal Judge Coxe signed an order last week allowing the $6,375 salary claim of A. John Michael, former Paramount auditor, in the amount of $3,548. A claim of the Continental Illinois National Bank of Chicago for $145,961 has been expunged, and a second claim of the bank for $312 is allowed. The order on the Continental claims states that the ruling is without prejudice to the claim of the bank based on notes totaling $1,443,244 issued by Film Production Corporation and guaranteed by Paramount.

Settlement of Mr. Schaefer's claim for $50,000 was brought a step nearer when special master John E. Joyce took the matter under announcement after a hearing at which no objections were voiced.

Russians to Coast

B. Z. Shumiatsky, head of the Russian film industry and leader of the Russian group here studying American methods, left New York last weekend for Coast conferences. He was accompanied by F. Ermler, Russian director, and Vladimir Verlinsky, president of Amkino, American distributing arm of the Russian industry.

Viewpoints

BY MARTIN QUIGLEY « « « « « «

Mr. Jeffrey Bernerd of Gaumont-British, London, arriving in the United States a few months ago on an errand having to do with the sale of British pictures in the American market, greeted these shores with the announcement that "the product from Hollywood is tripe and the British public is sick of it." Obviously, whether on account of a bad crossing or for some other reason Mr. Bernerd had gotten his set speeches mixed. We must assume he intended to say something which was not quite so senseless, understanding that his mission was to sell film to the American market, so we must imagine that the speech about the "tripe from Hollywood," although interminably indulged in for home consumption, was not just what he wanted to say on his arrival here.

Mr. Bernerd's behavior, representing an effort in international salesmanship, while startling, had a certain intriguing element of novelty about it. Now, however, comes Mr. John Maxwell of British International Pictures, engaged similarly upon the task of convincing the American market of an undreamed of need of British pictures. Mr. Maxwell, too, comes to tell us something about Hollywood pictures—this time they are filthy films. Mr. Maxwell is also somewhat provoked that anyone here should have the temerity to imagine that any film produced in England by anyone could possibly be considered to contain anything objectionable, or at least objectionable to Americans.

Mr. Maxwell has perhaps been so busy announcing for the benefit of American distributors renting pictures in England the additional number of theatres controlled by his firm that he has not had time to note the very plain fact that certain very filthy and objectionable things have been contained in British pictures sent to this market, objectionable even to Americans. He probably does not know—and he would do very well to find out—that for the benefit of these unenlightened shores various of his producer colleagues have sent versions of pictures containing material which was not only not shown in England but was not even submitted to the censorship authorities. We are exempting Mr. Maxwell's firm from inclusion in the body of British producers who have raised a terrific howl when these trick American versions were criticized, not because we are at all sure that it should not be included but simply because we have not taken the trouble to find out.

Mr. Maxwell also tells us that, contrary to the thought apparently suggested in the recent request of the British producers' association to the Hays office that facilities be provided in New York for the examination of British scripts, that "British producers will not submit scripts." In the first place, the question arises as to just how and where Mr. Maxwell became authorized to bind, off-handedly, all of the British producers, and secondly, it is to be wondered whether Mr. Maxwell imagines that this statement of policy will be greeted with gnashing of teeth and pulling of hair throughout the industry. We know of no invitation ever extended to the British producers to have scripts examined in the United States and we know no informed person inside or outside the industry who in an extreme moment could not somehow courageously bring himself to accept the sacrifice involved in Mr. Maxwell's statement of policy, especially if much of the product to come bears even faint resemblance to much that has passed.

Mr. Maxwell is in New York assisting his chief salesman, Mr. Arthur Dent, who has brought several pictures to gladden the hearts of exhibitors. Mr. Dent explains to Motion Picture Daily that he would like to have each of the six leading distributors take one of these pictures and engage in a merry competitive race to see just which contender would be successful in bringing home the pennant to good old British International. A good idea is this except that it partakes generously of a quality which generally is characteristic of a bad idea; namely, it won't work.

Fox Wins Arbitration In Springer-Cocalis Case

Fox Film Corporation last week was awarded $3589 in arbitration proceedings conducted in New York with Springer and Cocalis, New York circuit, in a dispute involving film service. The circuit contended the sum was not due under a cancellation clause in its contract, which Fox denied. The arbitration was taken under a proviso in the contract. Louis Nizer represented the distributor and will seek to have the decision confirmed in judgment form by the state supreme court.

Would Have Musicians Exhibit Stage Shows

G. Pipitone, New Orleans delegate to the convention of the American Federation of Musicians at Asbury Park, N. J., will present to the convention a resolution authorizing the organization to operate "outlets" for stage presentations and orchestras where exhibitors have eliminated such shows and orchestras.

New England theatres are said to be feeling the competition of some 20 free vaudeville shows being presented in the territory by the Emergency Relief Administration.

BLOOM NAMED HEAD OF ELECTRICAL RESEARCH

Western Electric's President in Dual Post as U. S. Bars Interlocking Directorates

Interlocking executive connections between the large communications corporations and their affiliates in the fields of radio, telephone and telegraph, some extending into the amusement business, were the subject this week of two conflicting developments:

1. The Federal Communications Commission at Washington acted to end interlocking directorates of communications systems after August 9th, and promptly dispatched orders to 11 of the nation's outstanding figures in the field of radio, telephone and telegraph to withdraw from all but one directorate and/or executive post before that date. Specifically mentioned in the order were David Sarnoff and Walter S. Gifford, presidents and directors, respectively, of the RCA and American Telephone companies, both groups having considerable interests in the amusement field. None of these, however, would be affected except NBC, as they are not communications divisions, and thus W.E. and Erpi would not be involved.

2. Edgar S. Bloom, president and a director of Western Electric Company, and a director of Electrical Research Products, both A. T. and T. affiliates, was elected president of Erpi to succeed John Edward Otterson, who resigned last week to accept the presidency of Paramount Pictures.

The Federal Communications Commission's drastic strike at interlocking directorates and interlocking executive connections came unexpectedly, within a few hours before a meeting of the Erpi board was called, at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning, to elect Mr. Otterson's successor.

Authoritative sources had indicated last week that Mr. Bloom was being mentioned for the Erpi presidency, but in some quarters his installation as Erpi chieftain, the while continuing to serve as Western Electric president, was viewed with special interest in view of the policy of the Telephone Company and allied corporations in not favoring interlocking executive arrangements.

Mr. Bloom on his election thus resumes the position which he held from the organization of Electrical Research Products, at the inception of sound, until Mr. Otterson's election in 1928. Mr. Bloom also has been a director of Erpi, and of Western, since Erpi's organization, and in addition to his new duties as its president he will continue in the same capacity for Western Electric.

Mr. Otterson's resignation takes effect on Monday morning, when he will assume the duties of Paramount's president, signaling the beginning of the new company under the reorganization.

Edgar Sheldon Bloom was born in Bloomsbury, N. J., on December 17, 1874. Following his graduation from the University of Pennsylvania with the degrees of B. S. and M. E., he became a construction engineer with the New York Telephone Company, serving from 1896 to 1906, when he was appointed plant superintendent of the old New York and New Jersey Telephone Company.

EDGAR S. BLOOM

He served as receiver for the Central Union Telephone Company from 1914 to 1919, and during 1920 and 1921 was president of the Central Union, Ohio, and Indiana Bell Telephone companies, and vice-president of Illinois Bell.

Mr. Bloom continued his rise in the Telephone system with his election in 1926 to the vice-presidency of the parent A. T. and T., and was elected president of Western Electric the same year.

He is a director of Alpine Western Electric, Bell Telephone Laboratories, Electrical Research Products, Graybar Electric, Northern Electric, Ltd. (Canada), Teletype, and of the Western Electric companies of Argentina, Canada, Near East, Asia, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, Mexico, Roumania and the Orient, and also of the Interborough Rapid Transit, Manufacturers' Junction Railway, Manufacturers' Trust Company of New York, Nassau Smelting and Refining and National Surety.

Clubs: Delta Upsilon, Republican, Industrial, Lotos, Recess, Metropolitan, of New York, and the University clubs of Chicago, New York and Pennsylvania.

Electrical Research Products, Inc., is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Western Electric. It is the sales and servicing division for the motion picture sound reproducing and recording systems manufactured by Western Electric for theatres and studios.

Taking its first definite step to abolish interlocking directorates in the radio, telephone and telegraph fields, the Federal Communications Commission denied the applications of Mr. Sarnoff, Mr. Gifford and nine other prominent figures in industry to serve as an officer of more than one company or on more than one directorate.

The order applied also to Newcomb Carlton, head of Western Union; Sosthenes Behn, president of International Telephone and Telegraph; Frank L. Polk, of Commercial Cables and Mackay Radio; E. Y. Gallaher, vice-president of Western Union; Edward F. Carter, vice-president of American Telephone; Edwin F. Chinlund, vice-president of All-America Cable; Joseph J. Halpin, assistant treasurer of All-America Cables, and Lewis M'Connach, secretary of Radio Corporation of America.

The directorates of which Mr. Gifford is a member, numbering some 21, embrace the principal Bell Telephone companies in various states, but, so far as is known, do not involve any Telephone affiliates directly affecting motion pictures or sound equipment. Mr. Sarnoff, however, is not only a member of the RCA subsidiaries but also of all of its radio, theatre and motion picture divisions. It was not known whether the ban on "interlocking directorates" would involve those of the amusement subsidiaries, although unofficial Washington mentioned National Broadcasting and RCA Victor in this connection. The Victor subsidiary, among other products, manufactures sound equipment for studios and theatres.

Meanwhile out of discussion stirred by the Commission order came these possibilities:

(1) The Commission's power to prevent a "communications' " executive from serving more than one company would be challenged in the courts.

(2) Some affected companies might change the status of their subsidiaries and operate them hereafter merely as departments of the parent organizations.

(3) Election of new officers and directors to some of the posts now held by leaders in the communications industry.

Evidently affected by the decision, along with Mr. Sarnoff, is Merlin Hall Aylesworth. Both of them are members of interlocking RCA companies and of the amusement subsidiaries, too, each holding membership on the following directorates:

M. H. Aylesworth: B. K. Keith Corporation, Eighty-first Street Theatre Corporation, Greater New York Vaudeville Theatres (chairman), Keith-Albee-Orpheum (chairman), National Broadcasting Company (president and director), Pathe News, Inc. (chairman), RCA Victor, RKO Radio Pictures (chairman), RKO Studios, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation (president and director). In addition, Mr. Aylesworth holds a director's post on the boards of Cities Service Company, Irving Trust Company, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America (Hays organization), none of which could be involved.

David Sarnoff: Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, National Broadcasting Company (chairman), Pathe News, RCA Communications (president and director), RKO Radio Pictures, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation (chairman of the board), and Radiomarine Corporation (president). Mr. Sarnoff's director's posts outside of the RCA system include those with Electrical and Musical Industries, Metropolitan Opera Association, Metropolitan Opera Company, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Mt. Sinai Hospital.

"ANY ATTEMPT TO PUMP VITALITY INTO CODE IS BOUND TO FAIL"

Frazer Arnold, Theatre Attorney, Says Conjectures Upon How NRA Can Be Revamped Are "Vain" Because Act Is Void

NRA Was "Lethal Rapier Thrust at Heart of Liberty," Adds Lawyer Who Fought Huffman Circuit 'Giveaway' Code Test

by FRAZER ARNOLD

But for the whims of chance it might have been a motion picture case instead of a poultry case that brought the Supreme Court down in destruction of the NRA codes. And probably the most exciting of the motion picture cases pending was that brought by Harry E. Huffman, president and general manager of General Theatres, Inc., of Denver, operating six houses and insisting on his right to use "automobile giveaways" and kindred devices to stimulate the box office.

Competitors filed a complaint under the motion picture code's lottery clause and the local grievance board issued a "cease and desist order," which on appeal was sustained by the Code Authority. Mr. Huffman refused to desist and the code enforcers ordered his film service discontinued. Mr. Huffman then went into the federal courts, was refused an injunction and appealed. The appeal was pending when the Blue Eagle fell in the chicken case before the Supreme Court in Washington.

In his battle Mr. Huffman was represented by Frazer Arnold, counsel for General Theatres, who has written the accompanying article discussing the future of the Code, for which he says there is no future.
—T. R.

Dispatches from Washington are now full of conjectures by various persons upon how the codes and the NRA Act can be revamped "to meet the objections of the Supreme Court" and still survive. In my opinion, all such conjectures are vain and useless.

The Act and the codes are impossible. They are incapable of cure. No mere technicalities are available; no devices floating in the air for a "smart" luminary to discover, in order to "satisfy" a court. Whatever the fond hopes or noble motives may have been that inspired the Act and codes, they were a lethal rapier-thrust at the heart of our constitutional liberty and government.

All that a despotism or a dictatorship is, is a form of government where the three elements are so fused, or confused, in one person or department that the executive is also in effect the legislature, with a judiciary that does not function as a check upon the despot's actions. Where that condition develops, there is, regardless of names, an end of liberty both in business and personal affairs, an end of constitutional government, with its indispensable checks and balances.

The doom of the codes was in reality spelled by the Supreme Court, not in the poultry case, but in the oil decision of last January. It was not necessary to wait for the Belcher lumber code case from Alabama, or for this poultry case from Brooklyn, which the government imagined was "stronger," in order to foresee the fate of the entire NRA plan.

President Had Dictatorial Powers

In the oil case, Congress undertook (by Section 9-c) to leave it to the President to say whether it should be legal or illegal for private interests to transport oil in interstate commerce above certain quotas, that is, undertook to delegate to the Executive the right to legislate on that subject. And the Supreme Court knocked that out, as an illegal abrogation by Congress of its function and duty. Applying this principle to the codes, what did one find? No code was ever enacted by Congress.

Each code was framed by volunteers in the particular trade or industry who had formed a "group," and was then submitted by this group, not to Congress, but to the Executive. The Executive then decided whether or not he would approve, i. e., enact it. If he approved it, then the bill had passed the President, and was supposed to have all the effect of a federal statute that had successfully run the gamut first of approval by a committee of Congress and then of adoption on the floor by both houses of that legislative body. Under the Act, the President also was supposed to have power to adopt codes sua sponte if he thought particular industries needed them. All this was executive legislation with a vengeance, whole industries and lines of business put under the most minute and rigid hamstringing and regulation, in an infinite variety of details, by Presidential ukase. The codes were simply statutes, prescribing a multitude of rules large and small; and they were enacted by the President. Congress had nothing to do with them, except to say to the President that he might proceed and pass those statutes himself, or not, as he saw fit.

Court Had No Alternative

Having decided the oil case as it had, what possible chance was there for the Supreme Court to uphold the codes? Obviously none. The codes were the reductio ad absurdum of the whole vogue and practice of allowing executive officials to legislate under some general grant of power. That the codes presented a more obvious case than the oil statute is shown by the fact that one justice dissented in the oil case, but even he turned thumbs down against the codes. No court decision was really necessary.

The codes and the act clearly flouted the very first section of the first article of our written constitution. Time has been wasted in many courts over the question whether a given activity was interstate or intrastate or whether it affected interstate commerce, upon the tacit though erroneous assumption that Congress can play as it likes with the rights and interests of any business embarked in interstate activity—whereas the basic question was whether there existed the ineradicable vice of a delegation of legislative authority. If so, it was immaterial whether the commerce was interstate, as in the oil case, or intrastate as in the poultry decision.

Now, the essence of the entire NRA conception is this illegal delegation of power. An NRA without it, would be emptier than Hamlet with the Immortal Dane left out. Assuming that the particulars of a code would be valid as legislation, it could only be adopted by Congress itself, and Congress could labor from now until doomsday without agreeing upon a small fraction of the 600 codes that were adopted under the late scheme. Congress will never attempt it, and if it did, its committee hearings alone would be endless.

But this, in my opinion, is the smallest part of the objection to any more or further codes.

"Voluntary" Codes Can Not Work

No doubt one may eliminate from a legal discussion any proposed system of "voluntary codes." In a country like ours, on the grand scale, they would never work, and would perhaps make endless difficulties in the way of monopoly. There remains only the suggestion that codes affecting interstate commerce, duly enacted by Congress itself, not by the President, and limited to a few large industries, would be valid and practicable. The answer to that suggestion is that the staple ingredient of the late codes has been a mass of regulation, e. g., of wages, hours, trade practices, policies and details, with which Congress has no more right to meddle, under the guise or pretended authority of the commerce clause, than a state legislature has authority to meddle with such prerogatives of the citizen under the guise or masquerade of the police power.

By way of summary, it seems that any attempt to pump vitality into the code concept is bound to fail, because that concept is impossible of existence under a constitutional system of the division of powers. The code concept was an exotic, an imported article. It might do in a "corporative state" like the present-day Italy, or in any other despotism, where one person or group absorbs all executive and legislative power, with the judiciary existing only to relieve the dictator of the troublesome details of administering justice. It can never do in a country like ours, where we understand something of how to insure a reasonable freedom of action, and where we still have a constitution, with plenty of vitality, as shown by the unanimous decision of yesterday.

RADIO BROADCASTERS START "PURGE FROM WITHIN" TO RAISE STANDARDS

Self-Reformation Will Preclude Need to Consider Control by 'Outside' Forces, Namely the Government, Leaders Believe

Station Officials, Advertisers and Radio Editors React Favorably to 15-Point Program to Better All Broadcasting

Radio broadcasting, currently in the throes of a "purge from within," which recalls the situation in the motion picture industry attending the inauguration of the Production Code of Ethics, now finds itself almost unanimously on the side of policy changes designed to improve programs and elevate standards.

That the housecleaning is widely favored by radio and advertising leaders is revealed in an analysis of reactions evoked by the offering of a 15-point program for the betterment of radio advertising, advanced by Roy S. Durstine, vice-president and general manager of the advertising firm of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn, which, incidentally, numbers among its accounts many motion picture clients.

Another tangible indication of the urge to regulate from within is the announcement of policy made by the Columbia Broadcasting System.

While leaders in the radio field believe the self-reformation will preclude the need to consider control by outside forces, namely the Government, the Federal Communications Commission has instructed its network of agents to check all programs against 10 new "rules of ethics" with the obvious view of eliminating undesirable material.

Phonograph Sales Rising

A sidelight is the announcement that phonograph record sales, which started to decline with the inauguration of broadcasting and experienced a further drop with the introduction of talking pictures, are definitely on the comeback.

The recommendations advanced by Mr. Durstine, important executive of one of the leading advertising agencies in America, have found approval among radio station officials, radio advertisers, program directors and radio editors. The thesis of Mr. Durstine's program was that any regulation of radio and its advertising should stem from within—from the broadcasting companies, the radio advertisers and their agencies—rather than from any external force. There have been numerous demands that radio improve both its programs and advertising standards.

Drastic Policy Formulated

"It would be a misfortune," said Mr. Durstine, "if, merely for the restriction of those who refuse to restrain themselves, a set of definite regulations were to be imposed upon those who want broadcasting to be effective. Better far would be the elimination of some of the things which are not in the interests of the listener and cannot ultimately profit the sponsor of radio itself."

That Mr. Durstine correctly interpreted broadcasting sentiment was reflected in the drastic regulations and policy changes since announced by both the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System. These changes incorporate or touch upon some of the modifications urged by him.

Criticism has been for some time leveled at air advertising from those who have found some of its material boring or offensive, pointed out Arthur Pryor, Jr., vice-president in charge of radio for Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn.

"Some advertisers, using high-pressure announcing and objectionable tactics, have found their programs crowned with commercial success," said Mr. Pryor. "With plenty of people willing to be cajoled into buying loudly ballyhooed and tastelessly trumpeted products, the advertiser might wonder why he should bother about the opinions of polite society or of a few scattered critics. Meanwhile the bugaboo of strict governmental regulation has been a matter of frequent conjecture."

Two Corrective Factors

Two corrective influences have become lately apparent. First is the discovery that those who object to offensive elements in radio advertising are not limited to a few ineffectuals, nor to an upper-crust minority. Secondly, as revealed in the response to Mr. Durstine's suggestions, a large number of those most vitally concerned in the production of commercial programs have indicated that they are both willing and anxious to rid radio advertising of questionable elements. Realizing those facts, the undesirable possibility of imposed governmental or bureaucratic control of radio programs becomes much more remote, believes Mr. Pryor.

"The objectors to radio's commercial faults, regarded not long ago as an inarticulate minority, have snowballed in growth to a large, organized force," he added. "The first annual awards of the Women's National Radio Committee are highly significant as the first expression of opinion by such an organized force, regarding the merit of radio programs. The Committee, representing 29 women's organizations and more than 10,000,000 women throughout the country, is a far cry from the few housewives and mothers whose ineffective complaints were scorned by those whose practices alarmed them. Ten million women have a lot to say about what programs a large part of the American public will listen to. They play as large a part in deciding what products a large part of America will buy and consume. It is important to note that, in judging sponsored programs, the committee eliminated many that were of high entertainment or cultural value because their advertising material was considered too long, too persistent or not in good taste."

CBS Orders Changes

In support of his contention that the broadcasters and advertisers themselves want to improve radio advertising, Mr. Pryor cited, first, the elimination of objectionable elements by the Columbia Broadcasting System, effective June 30. According to its announcement, CBS will drastically limit the time to be devoted to advertising on each program; refuse to accept the advertising of laxatives, depilatories, deodorants or other products which by their nature present questions of good taste; and limit children's programs in accordance with new standards. "This move," comments Mr. Pryor, "should prove extremely important in helping to bring about the improvements many of us have been working for."

Columbia has already indicated its intention to favor superior programs in time allotments.

The other element came as the outgrowth of an article by Mr. Durstine, executive of the advertising agency with which Mr. Pryor is connected, in The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences which embodied Mr. Durstine's program of 15 points for the raising of broadcasting standards. The proposals aroused great interest in the radio industry and among advertisers, and subsequent comments disclosed a willingness to adopt a code based on Mr. Durstine's suggestions.

Cites Wide Approval

"The high percentage of approval from people of importance in the production of commercial programs is indeed heartening," continued Mr. Pryor. "A cumulative percentage average of the reactions reveals over 89 per cent of those answering in total agreement, seven per cent in partial agreement, and less than four per cent disagreeing. Among the 15 proposals were three issues subsequently incorporated in the new CBS policies."

Opinions indorsing and criticizing the program received from radio stations, radio advertisers and radio editors have been tabulated, suggestion by suggestion, furnishing a cross-index of the attitude of those prominently active in broadcasting. The results, given in percentages, cover a sufficient number of stations and advertisers to merit consideration as a guide to the thinking of these groups as a whole. Moreover, in their replies the radio stations frankly went on record with criticisms of weaknesses in the radio setup, urging more outspoken discussion instead of generalities.

Following is a summary of the replies to each of the suggestions advanced by Mr. Durstine, not necessarily in the order of the importance in which they are viewed by the radio field:

1. Remove from the air all the horror programs which send children to bed frightened.

Agree	90 per cent
Partially	6 per cent
Disagree	4 per cent

A red lantern here, one that parents and educators have unceasingly waved before broadcasters and sponsors, one which is of more than passing interest to the film industry as well. Some station opinion turns to printed advertising again and argues that what is given to little Johnny to hear before bedtime is no worse than the lurid and blood curdling realism which he reads in the comic supplements.

But definite action has been taken by the networks. Their regulations have been clearly and forcibly recorded and, when put into operation, will eliminate this bone of contention.

One dissenter to the suggestion concerning children's programs said that "the menace to our children of the so-called blood-curdling and hair-raising dramas on the air is grossly exaggerated, and much of the criticism springs from an evangelistic desire to reshape the public's taste."

2. Put big names on the air only when and as long as they can do big things with good materials.
Agree ..... 100 per cent

Program directors and sponsors both were handed a few jolts on the score that an obsession for big names harms all concerned, radio listeners and themselves. The trend toward guest stars, particularly those from Hollywood, was cited. Because they have a name they are invited to sing on the air whereas they would never get the chance were they to be judged on the merit of their voice alone, according to some of the comment. Newspaper men came in for a scourging, too, in the remarks of a radio editor that a goodly number have crashed radio solely because of their by-lines. The general opinion was that only those who can do a good radio job should go before the microphone. Use of a "big name" merely for publicity purposes is deplored.

3. Encourage the best writers and composers to realize that radio is a new medium which they must study as earnestly as they had to study sound pictures. Each has a technique which is different from the legitimate stage.
Agree ..... 98 per cent
Partially ..... 2 per cent

The solution recommended to this problem is encouragement of local writers and production men. A thorough job in this respect, it was indicated, will result in their naturally assuming an obligation to produce better programs.

4. Let broadcasting companies use their sustaining periods for constructive experimenting instead of filling so much time with the same old orchestras and soloists—always making the same sounds under different names and song titles.
Agree ..... 96 per cent
Partially ..... 4 per cent

This suggestion, in the opinion of a station, would be better directed at its objective if it read: "Favor the broadcasting companies who use their sustaining periods for constructive experimenting."

5. Import more British dramatic directors and give them time and money for long rehearsals. Give American directors the same chance. Network profit would easily permit both.
Agree ..... 45 per cent
Partially ..... 33 per cent
Disagree ..... 20 per cent
No opinion ..... 2 per cent

This point drew the most opposition. Remarking that much talent hidden in the smaller stations should be developed instead, one station official commented that "radio is an American institution and should be kept American." Another suggested instead that more directors from the stage and screen be lured to radio by higher salaries, and a third advanced the opinion that American broadcasters were far more advanced than British.

Much of the opposition to importing British talent based itself on an admitted failure to understand why it may be inferred that Britishers are needed here. If an individual has demonstrated superiority, says an advertiser, hire his services regardless of nationality. The only yardstick is, "Will he do a good job for radio?" Any lack of director personnel, another contends, is due to failure to cultivate talent hidden in the so-called smaller stations.

6. Let the broadcasting companies employ more and better judges for auditions to give new talent a better chance.
Agree ..... 98 per cent
Disagree ..... 2 per cent

The experience of one station was that at no time should only one or two persons in any organization be allowed to judge talent in audition. It has found that it takes at least eight people to judge the ability of new material which, when encouraged, has developed into first-class talent.

7. Keep popular songs from committing suicide, by restricting them from being played every night in the week on every station, if not on every program.
Agree ..... 94 per cent
Partially ..... 6 per cent

The question is raised in the contribution of a radio station as to whether much can be done to add to a song's life. The destiny of popular songs has always been suicide in one form or another. But they may live longer, it is conceded, and listeners may be made happier if networks would check other programs.

8. Encourage announcers who have a simple, direct and sincere manner of speaking. Their salaries are too low.
Agree ..... 96 per cent
Partially ..... 4 per cent

One station man observed that announcers were the most important artisis on the air, as spokesmen for the advertisers, and that unfortunately too many were poorly trained. A second commented: "Announcers should be eliminated entirely, particularly from commercial programs. The spokesman should be the ambassador of the advertiser and should be heard on no other programs"; while a third thought those whose announcing is simple and direct should be encouraged by bringing their personalities into many programs.

9. Eliminate fake testimonials.
Agree ..... 100 per cent

Winning hands down, this suggestion created a minimum of comment.

10. Give preference in desirable time to those who keep their commercials brief, interesting and non-repetitive. (A little more spine in the networks and agencies would accomplish this.)
Agree ..... 86 per cent
Partially ..... 8 per cent
Disagree ..... 6 per cent

Mr. Durstine's parenthetical comment won a popular indorsement. But, as one advertiser inquired, who is capable of judging brevity? A radio station commented: "Generally, by bearing with advertisers or agencies the first few weeks we can, with a little tact, get them to improve their copy. A great many accounts which are now excellent radio advertisers would never have gone on the air if our regulations were too stringent."

11. Let famous conductors realize that they are best developing a taste for good music by arranging their programs to interest a groping public, rather than to impress other conductors or to satisfy themselves.
Agree ..... 100 per cent

Some of the comment cautions the directors of both popular and classical orchestras to plan their programs with more of the public in mind.

12. Let those who like good programs write in about it, and those who do not like bad programs do so too.
Agree ..... 98 per cent
Partially ..... 2 per cent

The response to this was that "people whose opinions we most desire are the least inclined to write." Said a radio station: "If this suggestion can be accomplished, the major portion of the others will follow as a result. The problem of how to overcome the apathy of the average listener is a difficult one to solve. Mail is no barometer. One explanation of the evident lack of complaint concerning programs which are distinctively repulsive to the average person of good taste is the fact they are tuned out immediately. There is no more effective complaint than a turn of that little knob below the dial. So long as they can do this, why should they bother to write letters?"

13. Let the newspapers stop fighting and virtually ignoring radio (as they do except in the time tables which their readers demand), and start training intelligent critics who can give full and adult account of programs, with constructive suggestions (as few do now privately) instead of smart remarks and trivial gossip.
Agree ..... 94 per cent
Partially ..... 2 per cent
Disagree ..... 4 per cent

Newspapers, which have not kept their feelings secret, have decided views on this subject and of course their opinions are not reflected in the answers, except for the contributions of some radio editors. One promptly joins the issue. In some instances, he admits, the press might still be fighting radio but this does not account for the lack of more intelligent criticism. The reason for this lack, and the editor cites

17,551,000 FAMILIES LISTEN TO NBC, CLAIM

The number of radio families in NBC's national "Blue Network" is increased by 5,000,000 over a previously announced estimate as the result of a check-back of the network's potential circulation, according to the company. The original analysis estimated the Blue Network's service reached 12,360,000 out of 13,966,000 radio families. As revised, the new figures claim a potential circulation of 17,551,000 out of a total of 18,718,000 homes owning at least one radio set. With the addition of WIRE (formerly WKBF), Indianapolis, the potential coverage is claimed as 17,612,000 radio families.

By means of its "Airea" system of calculation, NBC says it now is able to estimate the total number of radio families reachable through each network or group and to give a single total figure of potential circulation.

INDEPENDENT SUPPLY DEALERS TO DISCUSS PRICES AT CONVENTION

Record Attendance Expected at Fifth Annual Meeting Set for Chicago; 31 Companies Plan Exhibits of Equipment

With a record attendance indicated, representing every section of the country, and equipment exhibit space taken by 31 manufacturers, the fifth annual convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association was scheduled to get under way on Saturday at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago. Representatives of practically all of the 36 dealer concerns in the membership had indicated their intention to be present during the four-day meeting, which closes June 18.

Standardization, prices and dealer discounts are prominent issues to come up for discussion, while time has been allotted to special conferences between dealers and manufacturers. Association policies scheduled for important attention include those pertaining to organization financing and to advertising. Effort is also to be made to appraise the effect of new equipment developments on market conditions.

Election of officers and directors for the following year will take place on Monday. The annual banquet, for which a wealth of entertainment has been arranged, will be held Monday night in the ballroom of the hotel.

Among special speakers scheduled are Capt. John Gorby, E. A. Williford, E. S. Clifford and J. J. Finn. All will make their addresses before regular business sessions. There will be no speeches at the banquet.

The business sessions are to be held in the Berwyn Room of the hotel, with J. E. Robin, head of the organization, presiding. The East Lounge is the location of the equipment exhibit. Both rooms will have bulletin boards for announcements during the convention.

The Program

Facilities for the registration of members and manufacturers' representatives will be available in the East Lounge at 9 o'clock Saturday morning. The official opening takes place at 11 o'clock, with roll call and officials' reports. At this opening session the membership will observe one minute of silence in memory of Max Ruben, deceased member.

Beginning with the afternoon session on Saturday the program for the four days is as follows:

2:00—Address, "The Service Projectionists and Dealers Render Each Other," by J. J. Finn.
2:15—Reports of special committees and reception of new members.
4:00—Adjournment of business session for inspection of exhibits and conferences with manufacturers.
7:30—Joint meeting with manufacturers' representatives in Berwyn Room for discussion of problems of mutual interest.
9:30—Adjournment for the day.

Sunday

11:00—Opening meeting.
11:30—Address, "How to Sell Goods to Maintain the Exhibitor's Good Will," by Capt. John Gorby.
12:00—Address, by E. A. Williford of National Carbon Company.
1:30—Address, "Merchandising at a Profit Through the Printed Word," By E. S. Clifford.
2:00—Business session.
4:30—Reports of committees.
7:30—Conference with manufacturers, report of committees.
9:30—Adjournment for day.

Monday

10:00—Business session, report of committees, new business.
1:30—Nomination and election of officers and directors. Report of committees.
7:30—Annual banquet and entertainment in ballroom.

Tuesday

11:00—Business session until 1 o'clock.
2:00—Afternoon session for unfinished business. Vote on 1936 convention city. Adjournment of convention.

Standardization and Discounts of Dealers Will be Topics; Organization Financing and Advertising to be Taken Up

To Discuss Trade Ethics

At least one of the business sessions, and perhaps also a conference with manufacturers' representatives, will be importantly devoted to a discussion of ethics in the equipment trade. In referring to this phase of convention business, Mr. Robin said that in his opinion some trade practices in effect for many years need correction.

"This should be in the interest of theatre operators," he declared just before leaving the offices of the association in New York for the scene of the convention. "There is an overproduction, as one may term it, in the number of manufacturers and distributing outlets of equipment and supplies, but a lack of proper balance in equipment and supplies of high quality, built in accordance with recommended practices and backed by an equitable sales policy which is fair to the distributors, to exhibitors and to manufacturers alike.

"On the other side, there is an excess of distribution outlets of questionable economic value, which may be considered a menace to the recognized distributors who qualify by their equipment facilities and investment plus experience.

"At times, especially during the past few years, it has been the prevailing custom to buy discounts and to disregard entirely the matter of standardization and real quality at a price that is consistent, and which feature is usually defined as good buying judgment."

The association, Mr. Robin said, might, as a result of action taken at this convention, establish an engineering bureau through which all equipment and supplies sold by members would be required to meet certain standards.

Equipment Exhibits

Manufacturers and their exhibits, with representatives in charge, are:

NEW ORDER LIFTS BANS ON EQUIPMENT BUYING UNDER FHA

Sweeping Decision Rules That Anything Necessary for the Equipping of a Theatre May Be Bought by Housing Loans

Starting its campaign to encourage motion picture theatre owners to take advantage of the new extension of loan guarantees from the previous limitation of $2,000 to a $50,000 maximum, the Federal Housing Administration at Washington this week made a sweeping decision by ruling that practically everything entering into the equipment of a theatre, except draperies and carpets, may now be installed with money secured under the Act. At the same time the FHA disclosed the nature of the new regulation governing the granting and payment of the loans.

Last week the Administration began to give effect to a changed attitude toward the type of equipment purchases that may be made with FHA loans, reversing its former decision that prohibited purchases of any moveable equipment, by agreeing to permit the expenditure of any part or all of the loan on air conditioning, electric signs, seats, organs, flooring, fire prevention equipment and such. All forms of remodeling, of course, are eligible for loans.

Now, in its new determination of what may be installed in theatres with the use of insured loans, the FHA has taken the attitude that anything necessary for the equipment of a theatre or the conduct of business, except those few items which cannot by any stretch of the regulations be considered as immovable, will be legitimate.

Thus sound equipment, air-cooling equipment, projectors, stage curtains, painting and decorating and all forms of remodeling now come within the permitted list. On the other hand, such patently easily-removable items like lobby drapes and carpets are not permitted, although linoleum or other floor covering which is cemented to the surface, will be allowed.

Carpets, Drapes May Be Included

As to carpets, the FHA has not yet reached a final decision and may eventually permit them if they are so installed as to be considered as permanent fixtures. Thus if the whole floor were carpeted and the seats installed over the carpet and bolted through it, the Administration might take a different attitude than where carpet was merely to be laid down the aisles.

With the increase of the maximum insured loan to $50,000, officials of the Federal Housing Administration not only greatly broadened the purposes to which such money may be put, but revised the regulations governing the securing of loans under the Act.

The following regulations, numbered 1 to 22, inclusive, cover all loans up to $2,000 offered for insurance under Title 1 of the National Housing Act, as amended by Act of Congress approved May 28, 1935. The regulations numbered 1 to 27, except regulations numbered 2, 7 and 11, are applicable to all loans in excess of $2,000, but not in excess of $50,000 for the purpose of financing repairs, alterations, and improvements.

1. Promissory notes must be in form generally considered to be valid and enforceable in the state in which they are issued.

2. Notes, to be eligible for insurance, must not involve a principal amount in excess of $2,000 exclusive of financing charges unless made for the purposes set forth in regulation Number 24.

3. The financial institution may collect as interest and/or discount and/or fee of any kind, a total charge not in excess of an amount equivalent to $5 discount per $100 original face amount of a one-year note to be paid in equal monthly installments. This charge is a permitted maximum and not a mandatory rate and a loan at any lower rate is eligible for insurance and such charge correctly based on tables or calculations issued by the Administrator is deemed to comply with this regulation.

4. Notes may provide for the payment by the maker of a "late charge" not to exceed five cents for each dollar for each payment more than 15 days in arrears, but not to exceed $5 in respect of any one such late payment. In lieu of, but not in addition to, the "late charge," the note may provide for interest on overdue payments from the due date of the payment at a rate not to exceed the maximum legal rate permitted in the state where the loan is made.

5. Notes may not have a final maturity in excess of five years, except in the case of savings, building and loan associations, cooperative banks, and similar institutions, where the advances of credit of such institutions do not exceed $2,000.

6. Notes must be payable in equal monthly installments, except the final installment, which may be slightly more or less, subject to such exceptions as may be made by the Administrator. Monthly installment notes may not provide for a first payment less than six nor more than 60 days after the date of the note. However, if the income of the maker is received in the form of proceeds from the sale of agricultural crops or livestock, a note may be made payable in installments corresponding to income dates shown on the credit statement. Even in such cases at least one payment must be made yearly, however, and the proportion of total principal to be paid in later years must not exceed the proportion of total principal payable in earlier years.

7. A note evidencing an advance of credit not in excess of $2,000 will be eligible for insurance if it was executed to cover repairs, alterations, or improvements upon any real property, the cost of architectural and engineering services and the purchase and installation of eligible equipment and machinery which is an improvement to the real property. In the case of a note evidencing an advance of credit for the purpose of repairing, altering or improving real property already improved by or to be converted into houses or commercial buildings, or manufacturing or industrial plants, such loan, advance of credit or purchase of a note may cover the purchase and installation of such equipment and machinery with or without any structural changes in the building as are peculiarly adapted to the business conducted therein or necessary to the operation thereof.

8. Where a conditional sales contract, chattel mortgage, or other similar security device is used to secure the payment of loans for eligible equipment and machinery, the lending institution may not both proceed against the equipment and also make claim under the contract of insurance, but must elect which method it desires to pursue. If claim is made under the contract of insurance, the conditional sales contract, chattel mortgage, or other similar security device must be assigned to the Administrator along with the note or other evidence of indebtedness.

9. Taxes, assessments, and payments on principal and/or interest on mortgages on the property to be improved need only be in such standing as is acceptable to the financial institution. The status of such items, whether delinquent or not, shall not affect the eligibility of a note for insurance if the financial institution is willing to extend the credit.

10. The question of the financial condition of the borrower is left to the reasonable judgment of the financial institution as a credit matter. The borrower must furnish the lending institution a financial statement approved as to form by the Administrator which in the judgment of the financial institution shows the borrower to be solvent, with reasonable ability to pay the obligation and in other respects a reasonable credit risk in view of the insurance provided by the National Housing Act.

Loan May Cover Many Parcels

11. Any number of separate notes may be made in connection with any number of pieces of property, but not more than $2,000 of such credit may be expended on any single piece of property.

12. If a note on its face complies with the requirements, and if the credit statement reveals the other facts necessary to make the loan eligible, these may be accepted as final and conclusive proof of eligibility and no further evidence will be required by the Administrator.

13. Eligible notes must be reported on the proper form to the Federal Housing Administrator, Washington, D. C., within 30 days from the date of the note, or the date upon which it was purchased, in order to be covered by the insurance. All notes, paid in full, sold without recourse, or sold with recourse under an agreement as authorized by regulation Number 18, must likewise be reported within 30 days, on the proper form. In any case, the Administrator may, in his discretion, accept a late report.

14. Subject to regulation Number 18, claim may include:

(1) Net unpaid amount of advance actually made or the actual purchase price of the note;

(2) Uncollected earned interest (after default interest is not to be claimed at a rate to exceed 6 per cent per annum and will be calculated to the date the claim is certified for payment); (See regulation Number 4.)

(3) Uncollected "late charges"; (See regulation Number 4.)

(4) Uncollected court costs, including fees paid for issuing, serving and filing summons;

(5) Attorney's fees not exceeding 15 per cent of the amount collected on the defaulted note;

(6) Handling fee of $5 for each note, if judgment is secured, plus 5 per cent of amount collected subsequent to return of unsatisfied property execution.

15. Claim for reimbursement for loss on a qualified note may be made to the Administrator at any time after payment of such note has been in default for a period of 60 days. The Administrator in his discretion may at any time or from time to time call for a report from any insured institution on the delinquency status of the obligations held by such institution and reported by him for insurance.

If within the first year after default the borrower has not made payments on his obligation aggregating at least 10 per cent of the balance due on the date of default, claim must be made within 30 days thereafter. If in any subsequent six-month period the borrower has not made payments aggregating at least 5 per cent of the unpaid balance as of the beginning of such period, claim must be made within 30 days thereafter.

16. Claim may be made only for loss sustained by the financial institution itself.

17. Claims must be made on the proper form, which must be filled out completely and executed in duplicate by a duly qualified officer of the insured institution. If the regulations have been complied with, payment of the loss incurred will be made upon audit of the claim and upon proper endorsement to the Administrator of the note upon which the loss occurred. If judgment has been taken, assignment of the judgment must be made.

18. Subject to the limitation that his total liability shall not exceed $200,000,000 to all insured institutions, the Administrator will reimburse in accordance with regulations Number 14 and Number 26 any insured institution for losses sustained by it up to a total aggregate amount equal to 20 per cent of the total amount advanced on all qualified notes taken or purchased by it during the time its contract of insurance is in force, and held by it or on which it remains liable. . . .

19. New obligations taken to liquidate an original loan will be covered by insurance if they meet the requirements of regulations Numbers 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 24. They must be reported on the proper form within 30 days from date of execution, except that the Administrator may, in his discretion, accept a late report.

20. New obligations not covered by insurance under regulation Number 19 may be covered by insurance with the approval of the Administrator upon submission to him of the facts of the case.

21. Any note, acquired before receipt of actual notice of any change in the regulations or explanatory material, which complies with the regulations or explanatory material in force at the time of such acquisition, whether reported prior to or subsequent to the date or dates of such changes, will be eligible for insurance. The statement of the financial institution of the receipt or non-receipt of any such amendment or change will be accepted as final.

22. Any amendment to these regulations issued by the Administrator and any explanatory material issued and declared to be a part of the regulations by the Administrator, shall become effective as of the date of issuance, unless otherwise declared, provided that no such amendment or explanatory material shall cause a note, previously acquired by a financial institution, to become ineligible for insurance.

(The following Regulations apply only to loans in excess of $2,000 but not in excess of $50,000):

23. An advance of credit in excess of $2,000 but not in excess of $50,000 will be eligible for insurance if it complies with regulations Numbers 1 to 22 inclusive, except regulations Numbers 2, 7 and 11, and if it also complies with the following regulations, which shall apply only to advances of credit in excess of $2,000.

24. An advance of credit in excess of $2,000 but not in excess of $50,000 must have been made for the purpose of (1) repair, alteration, or improvement of real property already improved by, or to be converted into houses, commercial buildings, or manufacturing or industrial plants, or (2) the purchase and installation, in connection with the foregoing types of property, of such equipment and machinery, with or without any structural changes in the buildings, as are peculiarly adapted to the business conducted therein or necessary to the operation thereof.

25. Where an advance of credit is for any of the purposes set forth in regulation Number 24, any number of notes may be executed in connection with any number of pieces of property, but not more than $50,000 may be expended on any one piece of property.

26. The insurance reserve calculated on notes evidencing advances of credit from $2,000 to $50,000, for the purposes set forth in regulation Number 24, will be calculated separately from the insurance reserve calculated on notes evidencing advances of credit not in excess of $2,000, and claims on either class of notes will be paid only out of the respective insurance reserves.

27. Any security taken by an insured institution must be assigned to the Administrator in event of claim under the contract of insurance. If the security taken is non-assignable, all rights in such security must be exhausted by the insured institution or the claim against the Administrator reduced by the full face amount of the security taken before claim will be paid by the Administrator.

Networks Seeking Higher Standards

from experience, is due to the advertising agencies' and advertisers' attitude toward such criticism.

"I do not recall a single time," he says, "when I criticized a commercial program that my editor did not receive a complaint from either the sponsor or the agency. It seems that they do not want criticism."

"Heckling Newspaper Stooge"

One advertiser observed that "a radio columnist should be a radio man rather than a heckling newspaper stooge," and another that "there is a sort of Alice in Wonderland flavor about the whole matter of radio criticism. It is so ridiculously disproportionate, not only to the public's interest, but the actual interests of the publications themselves."

Comparisons are made between radio and sports in the amount of space and money spent on feature writers. Baseball is held up as an example which gets a full play and yet which contributes nothing in the way of revenue.

14. Exclude all programs advertising products such as laxatives, cures for skin diseases, and other bodily disorders unsuited for dinner-table conversation.

Agree	61 per cent
Partially agree	31 per cent
Disagree	8 per cent

Under new policies announced by NBC and CBS, leadership has been taken in setting an an example which, if followed by all stations, will eventually eliminate such programs.

Controversial Question

This was one of the most controversial of the suggestions. The majority consensus was that "any broadcast, regardless of product, should be kept off the air if the subject matter is distasteful to listeners or offensive in any way." Many of the opinions, however, were that elimination of such product advertising places limitations on radio which are not imposed on other mediums.

15. Continue to keep hard liquor off the air.

Agree	80 per cent
Partially	6 per cent
Disagree	14 per cent

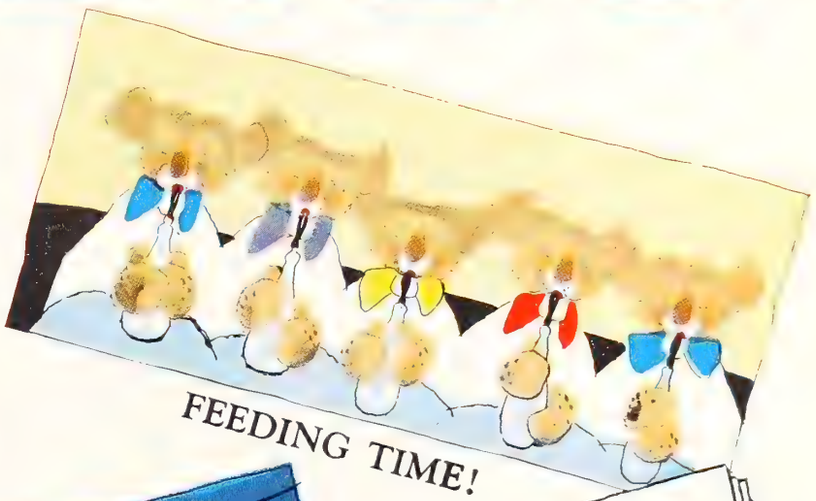
Dissenters point to printed advertising and ask, if hard liquor is excluded from radio, why the same yardstick should not apply to newspaper and magazine advertising. Others contend it is unfair to deny use of the medium to a legitimate industry.

"Mr. Durstine's 15 points are not, to us, new or radical," concluded Mr. Pryor. "Always we try to produce programs beyond reproach."

The dramatic announcement by CBS regarding policy changes caused speculation as to the effect this will have on local stations. In informed radio circles in the East it was generally believed that many of these advertisers will go into spot broadcasting in view of the fact the regulations of some local stations are not quite so stringent.

Drastic Regulation

The action of both networks in curtailing indelicate advertising with a view to its complete elimination when present contracts expire was a drastic one considering the fact that these companies may be classed as among the largest network clients.



The phonograph record business has taken a definite spurt in recent months, according to Frederick J. Schneider of the Victor record department of the RCA Manufacturing Company. Sales of records began marking up progressive gains almost two years ago, slowly at first, until now they have gained considerable momentum, especially in the field of better music. For the entire year 1934 the Victor Red Seal record business increased 51 per cent over 1933.

The most important causes he summarized as: First, radio broadcasting, due to its frequent use of outstanding musical organizations and soloists, has definitely elevated musical tastes so that now there is a greater desire for really good music, and records, being economical and convenient, supply the need; second, the "higher fidelity" process has brought realism in disc recording and reproduction to a remarkably advanced state; third, improved economic conditions have provided more people with the means for indulging their musical tastes and purchasing more records; fourth, engineers have developed an inexpensive record-player device, making large investments for reproducers unnecessary; fifth, the company has crystallized the latent desire for good music, which is growing constantly, by advertising.

THE campaign to wrest from _____ his monopoly on inspired cinematic cartoons in color is beginning to assume threatening proportions. Two partners, Harman and Ising, of the M. G. M. studios, are apparently the chief conspirators, and their latest volley is being fired at the Capitol, where "When the Cat's Away" evokes both laughter and applause. This is a little gem of a tinted cartoon. In the "front" show at the Capitol there is also a contribution by James Fitzpatrick, a Travel Talk called "Rainbow Canyons," the loveliest piece of color work since Fitzpatrick adopted that medium. But the main feature of this week's "front" show is the warning finger which is being pointed at the whimsical Mr. _____. Watch out. _____

GOVERNMENT SUIT TO SMASH ASCAP'S GRIP GETS UNDER WAY IN NEW YORK

United States Anti-Trust Suit Against Composers' Society Expected to Develop Into a Protracted Battle in Court

Dissolution of the ASCAP Would Follow if Guilty of Illegal Price Fixing; Film Houses Would Save Millions

What is expected to develop into a protracted court battle to smash the grip maintained for years on the reproduction of popular music by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers got under way Tuesday in the U. S. District Court in New York before Judge Henry W. F. Goddard. The trial is on the government's suit charging violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

Outcome of the hearing is of vital interest to every exhibitor and others who employ the music copyrighted by the Society and allied organizations. As the trial started, Special U. S. Assistant Attorney General Andrew Bennett, in charge of the government's legal forces, asserted the only question involved was whether the Society is guilty of illegal price-fixing. If the court upholds this contention, dissolution of the Society will follow and millions of dollars in fees will be saved exhibitors and others in the future.

At the outset the prosecution made the flat assertion that the government is not seeking dissolution of ASCAP but was merely asking for a permanent injunction restraining the Society from practicing certain alleged abuses in fee fixing.

The hearing went forward Tuesday on specific orders of Attorney General Homer S. Cummings who vetoed ASCAP's proposal to postpone the litigation to October. The suggestion was advanced by Nathan Burkan, ASCAP counsel, who contended Judge Goddard's assignment to other cases on July 1 would delay the trial until fall, since it would consume at least three months. This phase arose Monday, when the hearing originally was scheduled to begin, and an adjournment was taken to Tuesday.

In requesting a postponement, Mr. Burkan said trial of the suit was not urgent because the Society had agreed to extend all broadcasters' licenses until Jan. 1, 1936, and that some contracts had been signed by broadcasters for a five-year period. Among these, Mr. Burkan said, are the National and Columbia broadcasting systems.

While the government successfully upheld its contention that the trial could be concluded in three weeks if begun immediately, it is probable that a forced adjournment may be taken on July 1.

Special Assistant Bennett would have consented to the postponement on condition that ASCAP agree during the summer to certain stipulations on evidence which would have shortened the trial in the fall. When Mr. Burkan agreed to Mr. Bennett's condition an effort was unsuccessfully made to obtain the Attorney General's sanction of the procedure. It is understood that ASCAP's current contracts, some of which expire in the fall, would be extended to the end of the year if the trial were delayed until October.

The government has subpoenaed about 50 prominent industry figures to appear as witnesses, among them Leopold Friedman, general counsel for Loew's; Maj. L. E. Thompson, director of RKO theatres; Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA; Walter Vincent, of the Wilmer & Vincent circuit; Milton Weisman, counsel for the New York ITOA, Sidney Justin and W. T. Powers. Numerous representative exhibitors are expected to testify for the government. Mr. Vincent was chairman of the National Exhibitors' Emergency Committee, representing 8,000 exhibitors, which last fall effected a compromise on the fees to be paid by theatres for use of the ASCAP copyrights.

Specifically named as defendants in the suit are: American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, Eugene Howard Buck, president; Music Publishers' Protective Association (said to control 75 per cent of the nation's copyrighted popular music); and some 130 publishers and publishing companies belonging to the defendant organizations.

The case against the Music Dealers Service Corporation was dismissed, that organization having been dissolved.

Mr. Burkan, chief counsel for the defendant societies, is assisted by former Solicitor General Thomas D. Thacher as special also represented by counsel. The government's successful effort to have the case given preference on the calendar led to preliminary plans on the part of the defense to petition for a writ of prohibition to halt the trial for the present, but that thought was abandoned and Mr. Burkan later announced ASCAP was ready.

Gene Buck, president of ASCAP, on the eve of the trial named national radio broadcasting companies as the real figures behind the government's action, which has been generally understood. Bennett admitted that his principal quarrel with the Society was over requiring each station to pay a flat royalty of five per cent on annual gross.

"ASCAP is glad that the whole thing is being brought out into the open," he said. "The monopolies which have millions of receiving sets and tubes have scrapped practically every phonograph in America and closed the lid on every piano. The composer wants a fair deal and an end to the legalized piracy of his work."

The stake in the court battle is the legality of ASCAP'S licensing and fee fixing policies for the reproduction of music in theatres and its recording in studios, radio broadcasting and other public performance of music. The radio chains claim the ASCAP, controlling practically every copyright in force today, has forced them to sign a blanket contract governing permission to use all compositions of the ASCAP members at the Society's own terms.

The government's charges, denied categorically by ASCAP, are also the principal allegations in an anti-trust suit filed by broadcasters against the Society and set for trial in New York in October. The Exhibitors' Emergency Committee, organized to fight the increase in music charges effective Oct. 1, planned to incorporate the same basic allegations in a similar anti-trust suit, but action has been delayed pending the outcome of the dissolution trial now under way.

The government's suit, filed last September, came at the height of the controversy between the Society and exhibitors over increased music taxes and appeared to lend moral support to the exhibitors' cause. After weeks of negotiating with ASCAP, the Exhibitors' Emergency Committee obtained acceptance of a modified schedule of rates, a feature of which is that theatres seating less than 800 persons and operating three or less days a week pay only 5 cents a year for each seat. The agreement was made retroactive to last October 1.

Until such time as the courts decide conclusively that ASCAP is an illegal monopoly, exhibitors, broadcasters and others will continue to pay the royalties exacted. Because of involved and long-drawn-out processes of litigation, that time is some 18 months to two years away.

The government, in the present action, seeks to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from violating the anti-trust laws, the setting aside of all agreements between the Society and its music publishing, composing and writing members, between the Society and John G. Paine, as its agent and trustee; and between the Society and music users.

While the music tax situation in the field has been peaceful recently as a result of the government's pending suit, an isolated instance of independent action appeared in New Orleans where a move attempted by exhibitors ended abortively. There, a state law taxing royalty collectors $5,000 in each parish was to be invoked against the ASCAP by six exhibitors, but two, Thomasie Bros. of Gretna and P. M. Gordon of Westwego, have abandoned the fight.

Several months ago the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association initiated a move to petition the U. S. District Court to impound the fees collected by ASCAP under the new assessment of rates effective last fall. The Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City approved the plan and was to help finance the litigation. But filing of the government's anti-trust suit led to an indefinite postponement of the plans.

WARNER IS RELEASING 60 IN NEW SEASON; PARAMOUNT TO HAVE 65

Companies Completing Programs on Product; Liberty and Mascot in Republic Fold; RKO Meet in Chicago

The pre-season sales period was climaxed this week by numerous developments of far-reaching importance, among them changes in the personnel structures of several companies, and bringing the industry close to a complete rounding out of 1935-36 programs. The principal events of the week having a very definite bearing on the number and quality of product that may be expected by the exhibitor next season follow:

Warner Brothers Pictures, in convention at Burbank, California, announced on Monday 60 features and 136 short subjects, raising to 352 the total of features promised to date by eight companies.

Paramount Pictures, on the eve of the beginning of the new corporation that is evolving from the receivership, announced on Thursday at its convention a program of 65 features and 107 short subjects.

Republic Pictures, which earlier had disclosed 46 features, concluded its first regional convention, held two others and when the management returned to New York from these meetings announced that Liberty Pictures (M. H. Hoffman, president) and Mascot (Nat Levine, president) had been taken into its fold. Republic's executive personnel was strengthened thereby with the additions of Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Levine, Budd Rogers and Manny Goldstein.

Radio's salesmen and home office and studio executives were proceeding to Chicago to attend an "international" sales convention starting at the Drake Hotel.

United Artists, with Al Lichtman as the new president succeeding Joseph M. Schenck, resigned, selected Hollywood and July 8 to 11 as the place and date of its annual convention.

Universal's salesmen returned to the field from the company's convention at Chicago with details of the 42 features and 79 short subjects to be sold next season.

Several other producers and distributors, large and small, were in the midst of seasonal policy and product preparation, as follows:

British International-Alliance

The John Maxwell British motion picture interests were proceeding along two fronts to effect invasion of this market. Mr. Maxwell, in New York from London, promised 12 of British International's 26 English-made features for 1935-36 release here, while Arthur Dent, distribution manager, who has been in New York for two weeks, was talking with distributors about distribution for the 12 Alliance features trade shown last week.

Mr. Maxwell, chairman of the board of BIP, if no arrangements are made for release through an American distributor, will set up the machinery to distribute on the company's own. Alliance is a BIP subsidiary and the product which it is sponsoring here is in addition to that coming from the parent company. Mr. Maxwell returns to London Friday, while Mr. Dent will remain for another week. Sherman S. Krellberg sold his "Lost City" to BIP for England.

Bowes-Auer

John H. Auer will produce and direct Major Edward Bowes in a series of 26 short subjects based on the Major's amateur radio broadcasts, production starting this week at New York's Biograph studio, and with actual scenes being shot at the broadcasts. Mr. Bowes, who broadcasts Sunday nights over NBC, will thus make his first motion picture appearance. The company will operate as Biograph Pictures Corporation, headquarters in the building housing Herbert Yates' Consolidated Film, at 1776 Broadway, New York.

Commodore

William Steiner's Commodore Pictures will release in 1935-36 six Jack Perrin western features, being produced by Reliable, and six starring Lon Chaney, Jr., the first to be "Shadow of Silk Lennox," production starting this week in Hollywood.

Conquest

Pierre Arnaud returns to production with a novelty series, "Tales of the Tribe," one reelers, and a feature, "The Desert Strikes," for 1935-36 release. Both are completed. The shorts, stories of the northern Indians, were photographed by Marcel Le Picard and dialogued by Richard Carver. "Desert Strikes" was filmed in Morocco, directed by Captain W. H. Waters.

Edco

American rights to "Pope Pius XI Blesses the World" were purchased for release in 1935-36 by Edco Overseas Corporation.

Fox

Salesmen of Fox Film, who attended their sales convention two weeks ago at Chicago, where 54 features and 110 short subjects were announced, went to the field this week to negotiate new contracts, carrying with them a definite schedule of releases for the first 1935-36 quarter, as follows:

August: Will Rogers in "Old Kentucky"; Francis Lederer's "Gay Deception"; "Welcome Home," a B. G. DeSylva production starring James Dunn, and Jesse Lasky's "Redheads on Parade," with John Boles and Dixie Lee.

September: "The Dressmaker," with Tutta Rolf and Clive Brook; Warner Baxter in "A Lady Regrets"; Zane Grey's "Thunder Mountain," a Sol Lesser production starring George O'Brien; and Janet Gaynor and Henry Fonda in "The Farmer Takes a Wife."

October: "Here's To Romance," a Jesse Lasky production, with Nino Martini and Genevieve Tobin; "Charlie Chan at the Race Track," starring Warner Oland; "Dante's Inferno," with Spencer Tracy; and Shirley Temple in "The Little Skipper."

Darryl Zanuck, who, with Joseph M. Schenck, formed with Fox the Fox-20th Century Company, said in Hollywood that the two divisions will be a unified company, with Mr. Schenck chairman of the board, Sidney R. Kent president and Winfield Sheehan and Mr. Zanuck vice presidents, with the management of all production under "the united control" of Mr. Schenck, Mr. Sheehan and himself.

Mr. Zanuck pointed out that the merger was not a case of absorption of either one company by the other, but rather a consolidation of assets and talents of both.

Fox was rushing housing facilities for 20th Century, which will probably headquarter at the Westwood studios, moving from United Artists August 1.

Mr. Zanuck will travel to New York soon to meet Mr. Schenck on his return from Europe, and together they will sign the final consolidation papers with Mr. Kent. The trio will then return to Hollywood to complete production plans, calling for at least 12 next season from 20th Century.

Fox in Hollywood elevated Patterson McNutt, novelist and scenarist, to the post of producer, starting with "Fly By Night." John Krimsky, formerly in production partnership with Gifford Cochrane, and now assisting John Butcher at Fox, is understood to be in line for the post of producer.

United Artists, with Lichtman as President, to Convene in Hollywood on July 8-11; Universal Ends Its Sessions

Interworld Films

E. R. Gourdeau, head of Interworld Films Studios, arrived in New York from London to market the company's product, including a feature starring Buster Keaton and made last year in England. Mr. Gourdeau will also purchase 1935-36 releases for abroad.

Levene

Behn Levene informed the trade this week from the Hotel Imperial in New York that he is about to start animation on a new cartoon comedy series.

Mascot

Nat Levine, president, and Gordon Levoy, counsel of Mascot Pictures, were continuing in New York their discussions with Herbert J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film Industries, concerning Mascot's financial structure for 1935-36 production, and future releasing. Out of the conferences came an amalgamation with Republic Pictures (see Republic).

Medalion

Victor and Edward Halperin, who will produce next season for their own Medalion Pictures Corporation, new company, set eight features and were working on distribution arrangements.

MGM

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer said that a new 1935-36 highlight will be "Romeo and Juliet," starring Norma Shearer, to be produced by Irving Thalberg and adapted by John Masefield, poet laureate of Great Britain, who will be brought to Hollywood.

Constance Collier will return to motion pictures under a long term contract with MGM, which, at the same time announced a new series of six one-reelers with Robert Benchley, to be produced by Jack Chertok. This series is an addition to the 72 short subjects and 50 features announced at the sales convention May 6.

Paramount

Some 140 delegates from the United States, Canada and abroad assembled in the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York Thursday for the first meeting of the four-day session of the national sales convention of the new Paramount Pictures Corporation, at which Neil F. Agnew, sales manager, assisted by Division Managers J. J. Unger and Charles M. Reagan, presided.

George J. Schaefer, vice-president, told the delegates the story of the company's reorganization, and announced winners in the recent national sales contest and 100 Per Cent Club awards. Thursday afternoon John W. Hicks was to review activity in the foreign field, and Lou Diamond, short subject sales director, will discuss his division and the newsreel.

On Friday the company's product for 1935-36 is to be announced by Mr. Schaefer, and sales policies for the new year disclosed. In the afternoon advertising and ad sales plans will be told by Robert M. Gillham, director of advertising and publicity; William Pine, in charge of advertising and publicity at the Hollywood studios, and by Don Velde, ad sales manager.

On Saturday Schaefer, Agnew, Unger and Reagan will meet privately with the district managers to talk about individual sales policy matters. Louis Phillips, of the legal department, will also talk to the delegates on Saturday. In the afternoon Cecil B. DeMille, who arrived this week from Hollywood with a print of his "Crusaders," will address the meeting, and Loretta Young, Joe Penner and Sylvia Sidney will great the delegates.

Individual district and branch managers' meetings on Sunday will conclude the convention, which will be followed by district meetings in the field for bookers and salesmen, at New York, June 17-18; Chicago, June 21-22; Memphis, June 22-23; Excelsior Springs, Mo., June 24-25; San Francisco, June 28-29.

Russell C. Holman and Henry S. Salsbury will attend from the home office production staff, and Louis Phillips, I. Cohen, H. Luber and A. Israel will represent the legal department.

Paramount, in announcing 65 features for 1935-36, claims that it is the first company to make known at the same time the release dates for the first quarter. The product lineup follows:

some 107 subjects and the newsreel, Lou Diamond, head of the shorts department, announced a special two-reel presentation in color by Max Fleischer of "Sinbad the Sailor," with the character Popeye. In three colors, it will use the Fleischer three-dimensional effect. A newcomer will be the Popular Science series, six full color subjects. Further Max Fleischer contributions to the shorts program include 12 Popeye the Sailor cartoons, six Fleischer Color Classics and 12 Betty Boop cartoons. Grantland Rice, on the 15th anniversary of his Sportlights, will have 13 subjects. There will also be 20 Paramount "Varieties"; 18 Paramount "Headliners"; 13 Paramount "Pictorials"; six Screen Song cartoons. There will be 104 issues of the Paramount Newsreel.

Radio

One of the largest conventions ever held by Radio Pictures will get under way Monday morning at the Drake Hotel in Chicago, continuing through Wednesday, and at which 50 features and an unknown number of short subjects will be announced.

Jules Levy, vice-president and sales manager, will preside over the branch managers, division and sales managers, office managers, bookers and salesmen.

Leon J. Bamberger, sales promotion manager, who has charge of the new-product displays, is already in Chicago, accompanied by H. R. Follette, construction chief of the American Display Company.

Luis Lezama, RKO's Mexican manager, and Fred S. Gulbransen, manager of the Panama branch, were in New York for pre-convention conferences.

J. R. McDonough, B. B. Kahane, Howard S. Benedict and Robert Sisk will lead the studio delegation to Chicago. All but Mr. Sisk will continue on to New York after Wednesday.

One of the highlight announcements to the delegates will be that of the acquisition by Radio of worldwide distribution rights to the "March of Time," monthly two-reel magazine newsreel produced by Time Magazine. Explaining the reasons for withdrawing completely from First Division, Roy E. Larsen, president of March of Time, Inc., made the following announcement:

"The need for widespread national and international distribution has been becoming increasingly apparent. . . . While in some territories it was possible to capitalize on this interest (of the public), we realized that it was only through an aggressive worldwide sales organization . . . that complete coverage could be obtained. . ."

The fourth edition now showing is the last that will be handled by First Division in the east and by the various state-right exchanges elsewhere.

Republic

Further expansion of Republic Pictures, which puts virtually all of the leading independent producers into one large national organization, was announced in New York Wednesday by W. Ray Johnston, president of Republic, who disclosed that Nat Levine, president of Mascot Pictures, has joined forces with the Johnston organization as an equal partner.

This ended ten days of negotiations in which Mr. Levine has been holding conferences with Mr. Johnston and with Trem Carr, Republic's production head.

Under the new setup, Mr. Levine joins Republic as a vice-president and director of the two Republic corporations—distribution and production. The Levine units will continue to function from the Levine studios in Hollywood, while the Trem Carr division will produce at Republic.

Thus are brought together under the Republic banner, Mr. Johnston's own company, the Levine-Mascot unit, and, as negotiated earlier in the week, M. H. Hoffman's Liberty Pictures and Herman Gluckman of Majestic Pictures.

WARNER EXECUTIVES ARRIVING FOR COAST CONVENTION

Mr. Johnston's Republic Pictures started its first season, growing out of Monogram, late last week at the first of a series of regional conventions, held at Cincinnati's Netherlands-Plaza Hotel, where Mr. Johnston, as president, and Edward A. Golden, sales manager; Edward Finney, advertising director, and Norton V. Ritchey, head of Republic International, represented the home office, and Oscar Hanson, distribution chieftain in Canada was on hand from Canada. Trem Carr led the production forces.

Mr. Hanson told the delegates the company under the new setup will be making more percentage agreements to insure "just rental returns."

M. H. Hoffman was announced as a new producer, to make eight of the 46 features (titles were announced some weeks ago).

Manny Goldstein and Budd Rogers are additional executive appointments. Mr. Goldstein, former general manager of Majestic, will be on the home office staff, and Mr. Rogers, sales manager of Liberty Pictures, will probably concentrate on sales. Liberty will produce hereafter for release through Republic, M. H. Hoffman's eight representing that company's contribution. Herbert Yates' Consolidated Film is interested in the financing of both Republic and Liberty.

Mr. Carr announced a change in the company's recording system from the present process of RCA to that company's "High Fidelity" system.

Mayor Wilson, of Cincinnati, gave the welcoming address, and Mr. Golden then explained sales policies and outlined the product lineup. Finances for 1935-36 production deliveries are set completely, he said.

Mr. Johnston promised pictures "of such a nature that any member of the family can see them and be entertained without being offended by indecency and grossness."

Mr. Golden pointed out that the company has been paying dividends of six per cent for the past two years, and declared it has no intentions of entering exhibition. He added that the company is not aiming to make pictures for double bills.

Twenty-six of Republic's 39 exchanges were represented at Cincinnati by franchise owners, and Mr. Golden then traveled westward to meet with the others, June 15, at the New Washington Hotel, Seattle, and on June 20, at the Roosevelt Hotel in Los Angeles.

Attending the California meeting, besides exhibitors and franchise owners, will be a production delegation headed by Mr. Carr, Robert E. Welsh, executive producer; Herman Schlom, production manager; Paul Malvern, associate producer in charge of westerns, and Dorothy Reid, story editor.

Republic's 1935-36 features, titles of which appeared in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, May 18, will include: five "Gold Medal Specials," eight "Showmanship" features, five "Blue Ribbons," eight in the "Entertainment Group," eight John Wayne westerns, eight "Fast Action Westerns" and four serials.

United Artists

Other than corporate affairs, which are detailed elsewhere in this issue, the outstanding development of the week in the United Artists situation was the announcement from Hollywood by Al Lichtman, the new president, that the company already has set for 1935-36 release more pictures than were released this season, despite the withdrawal of 20th Century by the Schenck-Zanuck interests. A. C. Blumenthal and Jesse Lasky were reported interested as new United Artists producers.

United Artists in London, sails June 15, probably with Joseph M. Schenck, for the sales convention in Hollywood July 8 to 11.

Universal

Carl Laemmle's Universal salesmen returned to the field this week with the details of the 42 features and 79 short subjects that were outlined last week at the sales convention in Chicago, and which appeared in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on June 8.

At the last sessions of the convention, Mr. Laemmle eulogized Fred Meyer's studio management, and, basing expressions of confidence in a prosperous season squarely on product, told the sales force that for the first time in years there had been no criticism and he accepted full responsibility for the past season's record. Later in New York, Mr. Laemmle said that Universal will not use color in pictures next season regardless of what other producers do in this connection.

"I am more hopeful over next season than I have been in the past ten years," he added. Mr. Laemmle returns to the California studios on Saturday, foregoing his usual summer trip to Europe to watch production.

Production is being geared with direct attention to overseas markets, he concluded, and explained that seven features will be in work by the end of June, and another seven will be started in July. In August "Spinster Dinner" will be launched.

At the convention the company made public its intention of retaining the exhibition contracts, rules, provisions and specifications inaugurated under the NRA's code, the only alterations being to eliminate in the contract specific mention of the code itself. Willard S. McKay, chief counsel, divulged the new policy.

R. H. Cochrane, senior vice-president, told the 80 or more delegates that "Universal still owns itself—body, soul and breeches." Mr. Cochrane then proceeded at length with a heart-to-heart talk of an extraordinarily optimistic nature.

The convention discussed requests from exhibitors that "Universal Weekly," company house organ, be made available to patrons, mailed directly.

Two hundred telegrams of good wishes were received from exhibitors the while policy and product explanations were made by James R. Grainger, general sales manager; Mr. Cochrane, Andrew Sharick, accessories; Charles Leonard, advertising; Paul Gulick, publicity; Herman Stern, non theatrical; Charles Ford, newsreel; and William Kramer, E. F. Cox and Oscar Binder.

At a luncheon on Friday 100 Chicago exhibitors were guests of Universal at a luncheon.

Mr. Grainger, returning to New York on Monday, announced the following transfers in sales personnel: E. T. Gomersall, western sales manager, will make his headquarters in Chicago until the new selling season is under way and will supervise Chicago, Milwaukee, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, and Detroit. He will not be replaced in New York.

Harry Graham, Kansas City district manager, gives up St. Louis, Omaha, Kansas City and Des Moines to Mr. Gomersall, but takes over Charlotte, Atlanta, Memphis, New Orleans, Dallas and Oklahoma City, at the same time transferring his headquarters to Atlanta.

John Ezell, temporary southern district manager, returns to management of the Atlanta exchange. T. J. Jordon, temporary Atlanta manager, returns to his former salesman's post.

W. J. Heineman, in charge of the Pacific Coast, in the future will report directly to Mr. Grainger instead of to Mr. Gomersall. He came east with Grainger for a two weeks visit.

Warner Brothers

Calling to order Warner Brothers' first international convention in five years, Harry M. Warner, president, announced Monday morning at convention headquarters in Los Angeles the promotion of Andrew W. Smith, Jr., eastern and Canadian sales manager; Gradwell Sears, southern and western sales manager, and S. Charles Einfeld, executive in charge of advertising and publicity, to vice-presidencies of Vitagraph Corporation, Warners' distribution subsidiary. The three rose from the ranks.

"The motion picture business has not passed through the depression, but is nearing the top of the hill after a tremendous struggle and next year may go completely over the top," was the keynote sounded by Mr. Warner in his opening address. He said that "Warner Brothers have had a terrific struggle during the past five years," but, rather than follow the "simplest way," by throwing the corporation into bankruptcy, the brothers "would not surrender without a struggle, and today business is practically double what it was at the lowest period during the depression."

Mr. Smith and Mr. Sears are presiding over the meeting, which will last until June 23, and at the speakers' table with them are the three brothers—Harry, Albert and Jack, and a group of sales executives.

Tribute was paid by Major Albert Warner to Sam E. Morris, in charge of foreign sales; and Mr. Warner called on Robert Schless, head of the Paris office; Joseph Bernhard, theatre chief; Harold Bareford, Robert Mochrie, Carl Lesserman, A. W. Schwalberg, Norman Moray, Sam Sax and Leon Schlesinger.

The delegates were guests Monday noon at a studio luncheon, which all of the company's stars and production executives attended.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Sears outlined sales policy and Mr. Einfeld outlined the new product. A "100 Per Cent Salesmen's Club," similar to Paramount's, was launched to promote top-rank salesmen in the field to posts of branch managers. Other speakers were Norman Moray, who described short subjects on schedule. There will be 52 two-reelers and 78 single reel subjects—the same number as this season, as follows:

32 Broadway Brevities:
7 two-reel Technicolor subjects, to be produced at Burbank by Jack Warner.
12 Broadway Headliners.
6 Varsity Frolics, new series, each to feature a different personality.
7 Presentation Revues.

20 Vitaphone Comedies:
4 Yacht Club Boys.
3 with Bob Hope.
3 co-starring Shemp Howard and Roscoe Ates.
10 starring different personalities, these to be made at Burbank, while the others will be produced at the Vitaphone studio in Brooklyn.

13 "Our United States":
One-reelers to follow the "See America First" series, to be made by E. M. Newman, lecturer. 13 radio commentators will narrate.

13 Pepper Pot Novelties:
This series is being reduced from 26.

26 Cartoons:
13 in Technicolor, "Merrie Melodies."
13 "Looney Tunes."

13 Melody Master Band Numbers:
Radio, night club and stage bands will be featured.

13 Big Time Vaudeville Act:
New and complete series to feature headlines.

Describing the nature of the 60 features for 1935-36, the Warner executives pointed out the inclusion therein of 10 Broadway plays, 23 published books, and 27 original stories, to serve as vehicles for the 21 stars, 75 featured players, seven associate producers, 22 directors and 38 writers. The lineup follows:

TRIAL OF DR. BEAMISH, Liberty Magazine serial.

In addition there will be six westerns.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Every executive, every star, every employee on the Warner Brothers' lot at Burbank who could beg, buy or steal his way in gathered to watch the great pie-tossing scene in "Keystone Hotel," a two-reel Vitaphone glorification of The Grand Army of Keystone Comedians, starring some of the gallant survivors whose ranks have been decimated by death, and who are bravely marching on, heads high and gags waving wildly.

With awe the onlookers eyed the 300 pies, 300 cream puffs, 300 gooey gobs of cakes, the 300 ripe tomatoes collected as ammunition for the big battle. With wonder they looked at the oldtimers lined up for the fray: Ben Turpin, Chester Conklin, Ford Sterling, Vivian Oakland, Hank Mann and a score of others who won fame and fortune hurling Mack Sennett pies two decades ago.

But it was with wonder and some wistfulness, mingled with a certain disgust, that Chester Conklin looked at the solitary newcomer in the cast: Dewey Robinson.

Robinson was preparing to hurl the key pie that would start the fracas. While willing, he lacked something in the subtly, the ease, the insouciant follow-through of the champion goo-slinger of the Sennett days.

"Can you imagine," Conklin mourned but without bitterness, "with nine expert pie-tossers on the set, they have to get an amateur from the outside!"

"Elusive" Greta Garbo's sailing got more space and pictures in the newspapers than the Normandie's maiden arrival. If the Normandie only had feet.

A New York photographer, by the way, met Mme. Albert Lebrun, wife of the President of the French Republic, aboard the Normandie when she docked, and persuaded her to pose for a picture, for which she graciously consented.

"All right, Madame, look this way or we'll take the ship for the war debt," the cameraman directed in English, never dreaming that the lady understood.

She did, however, and destroyed him with a glance. But he stood tenaciously by his camera and got the picture.

"THE CRUSADERS" may be an "epic" to Cecil Blount DeMille, but to Otto Meyer it's just an "ox picture." There are only two kinds of movies to Otto—"ox pictures" and the others. And because "The Crusaders" is an "ox picture" it is that much more important to Otto—in fact, it's everything.

Otto Meyer is one of Mr. DeMille's deputies, also an actor, though not a professional. In the scenes in the production on the Marseilles docks wherein oxen are driven up, loaded with feed for the Crusader's horses, it is Otto who does the driving.

A long, lean Texan, Meyer let his schoolmates of the Panhandle section become cowboys. For himself he preferred draft oxen that uprooted stumps with a chain. Now he owns four of the clumsy beasties and is lord of a farm at Lankersheim, in California.

In motion pictures Otto has appeared with his oxen in Colonial, Biblical and French farm-yarn scenes. He likes least the French locales for his oxian art. The microphone then makes him say "Allez" instead of "gee-up," and his oxen, he explains, are not up on their French. They are never quite sure what "Allez" means.

When his not-too-petite pets are not acting, Otto uses them for plowing, wood-hauling and other rough business on his farm. In his estimation they are twice as strong as the horse and much less dangerous than the mule. They also require less care.

But an ox—to become a movie hero—cannot rely simply upon his heritage of ox blood and his general breed. If he does not have big pointed horns, his hopes for cinema fame are doomed to dashing. Movie oxen must have long horns to be appropriately picturesque. Whether to knob the horn-points is a problem. Meyer has a fine collection of gilded knobs. They are ornamental, and enhance safety, too, in a scene crowded with extras. Otto thought the ox-horns should be knobbed in the dock scenes in the DeMille opus because of the swarms of extras, even though the Marseilles scene had no festive or religious significance to require knobs for authenticity. But Cecil B. overruled him.

"If anybody gets hurt," said DeMille, "it will be the oxen. The Crusaders all wear armor!"

PAT CASEY ACTION VS. PATHE IMPENDS

Motion for Appointment of a Receiver for Pathe Exchange Is Being Heard This Week

For two weeks process servers have been waylaying officers and directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc., for service in an action in the supreme court of New York entitled "Pat Casey vs. Pathe Exchange, Inc."

Motion for the appointment of a temporary receiver pending a trial on the issues was scheduled to be heard at 10 o'clock Thursday morning before Judge Dore of the state supreme court in New York City.

Casey Associate of Derr

Mr. Casey is a friend and associate of E. B. Derr, one-time major executive in the motion picture affairs of Joseph P. Kennedy in FBO, Pathe Exchange, Inc., and a brief sojourn in First National. Mr. Derr some few weeks past has been quoted as saying that he would be glad to acquire control of Pathe. At that time, when Mr. Frank Kolbe, a partner in Young, Kolbe & Company, New York investment brokers, controlling the voting trust which supported Stuart Webb's rise to control in sequel to the Kennedy administration, displaced Mr. Webb and became president, it was indicated that overtures from Mr. Derr were less than visible.

There remained Wednesday night the trading possibility that the action might not come to a hearing or see the official light of the court, the law being that way.

Mr. Casey brought suit in behalf of himself and for "other stockholders who may care to join in the action." Wednesday it was reported no other stockholders had so far become co-plaintiffs. The action was started by Martin King as attorney for Mr. Casey, who is now on the coast.

Officers of Pathe Exchange, Inc., are Frank F. Kolbe, president; Robert W. Atkins, of Proctor & Paine, investment brokers, executive vice-president; Arthur A. Poole, vice-president and treasurer, and Ellen U. Keough, secretary.

Pathe Exchange stock has experienced a rise in recent weeks.

Essaness Drops Court Action Against Loew's

Essaness Theatres in Chicago has dropped its effort to obtain a federal court injunction against Loew's to prevent that circuit from building theatres locally. The case was dismissed last week before Judge Barnes upon motion of Essaness. The abandonment of the code was given as the reason. Attorneys for Essaness indicated a new approach to the problem would be devised next week.

MGM's difficulties with Allied States Association relative to distribution and the consequent plan of Loew's to build in Chicago, appeared likely to be settled shortly, following conferences late last week in Chicago between Felix F. Feist, general sales manager of MGM, and Sidney Samuelson, president of Allied. Mr. Feist is due in New York early this week. Loew's will proceed with its plan to build at Oak Park.

RKO LOSS CUT TO $310,575 IN 1934, FROM $4,384,064; CASH, $4,659,000

Lehman Brothers and Atlas-Odlum Mentioned in Wall Street Interest in Reports of Reorganization Moves

Evidence of the extent of the progress being made by the management of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation in the proceedings for reorganization from the two-and-a-half-year-old receivership was submitted last week to the United States district court at New York by Irving Trust Company, trustee, in a report of financial operations for 1934, the highlights of which compared as follows:

NET LOSS:
1932		$10,695,000
1933		4,384,064
1934		310,575
CASH:
1932	(a)	$ 2,780,798
1933	(b)	2,500,000
1934	(c)	4,659,505
CURRENT ASSETS:
1932	(a)	$17,590,000

1934	(c)	12,588,383
CURRENT LIABILITIES:
1932	(a)	$ 8,722.554
1933	(b)	7,093,892
1934	(c)	8,346,338
TOTAL ASSETS:
1932	(a)	$105,833,728
1933	(b)	69,799,219
1934	(c)	92,412,876

(a) Year ending September 30, 1932.
(b) Year ending August 31, 1933.
(c) Year ending January 1, 1934.

Disclosure of the RKO statement of financial operations for 1934 brought out into the public prints conversation in Wall Street concerning the interest being evidenced in the company's reorganization, with the names of Lehman Brothers, interested for years in RKO financing, and of Floyd B. Odlum's Atlas investment trust, most prominently mentioned in the reports.

The Hearst newspapers said they had "learned exclusively" that "two independent studies" of RKO, looking toward a reorganization, are being made, by the two banking houses mentioned.

While neither has worked out a definite plan for the corporation, it was said that the fact that the Atlas-Odlum interests have entered into even a preliminary study of the corporation "is considered highly significant in Wall Street."

Atlas-Odlum, which participated in Paramount's reorganization, previously had been said, both in Wall Street and Broadway, to have an interest in proceedings for RKO's reorganization.

Last week, Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of RKO, declared as unfounded published reports that Radio-Keith-Orpheum and Paramount were holding discussions with a view to a merger.

That the RKO management was making headway in operations was further evidenced by the new Irving Trust report to the court, which disclosed that although the $41,695,207 combined film rental and circuit admission gross was $2,271,430 under the $43,933,637 gross of 1933, expenses in 1934, totaling $37,840,486, were $4,848,146 less than the $42,688,632 expenditures of 1933.

Operating profit in 1934 was $3,854,721, compared with $1,278,005 in 1933, and, with other income, totaled $4,692,542 in 1934 and $2,352,159 in 1933. The consolidated profit and loss statement, which appears above, gives effect to the charges for interest, depreciation, taxes, write-offs and other charges which reduced the 1934 income to a net loss of $310,575, and that of 1933 to a loss of $4,384,064.

The balance deficit reported on the consolidated statement for the year ended Dec. 31, 1934, was $16,078,501, and the capital deficit was $10,822,955.

Inventories of completed pictures, not released, released pictures, productions in progress, and the like, at cost, totaled $6,778,282 as of January 1, 1934.

The company has $11,600,000 of ten-year 6 per cent gold debentures, dated December 1, 1931, declared due by virtue of defaults under indenture. Other mortgage bonds and mortgages (less $84,100 bonds in treasury) due within one year amounted to $24,076,763 on December 31, last (exclusive of amounts which may be due by default and amounts which are to be amortized in accordance with terms of certain agreements, $4,037,083). Guaranteed funded debt of subsidiaries not consolidated totaled $3,850,000.

Capital stock consists of $2,593,991 issued no-par shares, including shares reserved for exchange of Class A stock.

Interest accrued on unsecured indebtedness of the parent company and on guaranteed indebtedness of subsidiary companies not consolidated, has been taken up to Jan. 27, 1933, but, in accordance with an opinion of counsel, interest accrued since that date on such indebtedness has not been taken up on the books. Interest accrued on all other interest-bearing indebtedness of the companies has been taken up at the regular rates to December 31, 1934, with the exception of $500,000 principal amount of 10-year six per cent gold debentures of the parent company in respect of which the interest liability was modified by agreement.

During 1934, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., a subsidiary company, changed its method of accounting for film earnings from a cash collection basis to a billing basis and the net adjustment applicable to the beginning of the year has been credited directly to operating deficit.

At December 31, 1934, there remained in the reserve for revaluation a balance of $10,325,594, which represented the unused balance of a reserve of $24,474,941 set up by Radio-Keith-Orpheum as at January 1, 1932, out of capital surplus to provide for revaluation of the capital.

Gross Income Was Off $2,000,000, But Expenses Were Cut $5,000,000

Irving Trust Company, acting as trustee in proceedings for reorganization, reported to the United States District Court in New York, last week, the following statement of profit and loss of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, and subsidiary companies, for the year ending December 31, 1934, to which a comparison with operations in 1933 was added:

NRA FILM CODE SETUP TERMINATES AS 31 BOARDS CLOSE SATURDAY

Minimum Wage and Maximum Hour Provisions of NRA Expected to be Continued in Film Business Voluntarily

The NRA's motion picture code setup passes into history Saturday when all 31 board offices will be closed. Film circles awaited definite word on to what extent the new "skeletonized" structure sought by President Roosevelt would permit relaxation of the antitrust laws and the effect that scrapping of the NRA "big stick" would have on trade practices. Leading developments were these:

Warning by President Roosevelt that there will be no immunity from the anti-trust laws was considered significant in the light of reported moves toward film mergers of large proportions.

Fair certainty that NRA minimum wage and maximum hour provisions will be voluntarily retained.

Strong possibility exists that Film Boards of Trade will be restored to their pre-code functions.

Industry leaders estimated that nearly $10,000,000 had been saved in lawsuits under code operation.

Opposition forces in the Senate delayed a vote on the new voluntary NRA legislation passed by the House late last week to extend the skeletonized recovery structure from June 16 to April 1 next. Paving the way for the adoption of voluntary codes, the Senate Finance Committee earlier agreed on amendments to the House resolution.

The industry as a whole seems disposed to continue the NRA wage and hour conditions on a voluntary basis, for the time being at least, executive offices in New York indicated. Spokesmen of most film companies said there was no immediate necessity for revision of these provisions. Circuit theatre heads said no revisions of existing working conditions were contemplated, though the possibility of variations from code schedules being made by individual theatres, particularly during the summer, was suggested.

Allied States Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have urged members to adhere to prevailing wage and hour levels. All motion picture laboratories employing union members are continuing code standards.

The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana listed these results of the code as of material benefit to "the average independent exhibitor":

1. The code presented a way in which clearance and zoning could be set up definitely and all phases brought into the open.
2. Small towns were enabled to end "senseless" protection which larger towns were obtaining over them. "At several points in Indiana," said the Association's June bulletin, "small town exhibitors were compelled to overbuy in order to keep open by reason of such protection, and we did help eliminate this by proper action before the Indianapolis and Chicago boards."
3. Much overbuying by prior-run competitors was ended. The only recourse now is a lengthy law suit.
4. To some extent there was curtailment of the practice of forcing sales of short subjects with feature films.
5. "There was a complicated and badly drawn 10 per cent cancellation privilege in the code," continued the bulletin, "but it did help that much."
6. The code stopped service to churches and other types of nontheatrical competition.
7. The code offered possibilities of ending the free street shows which for years have plagued Indiana exhibitors.
8. The code was instrumental in curbing lotteries, two-for-ones and other forms of reduced admission. The organization suggests, as an alternative, that if a prior run is practicing two-for-ones, a prompt and vigorous complaint be made to the exchanges.

Collapse of the NRA has encouraged premium interests and exhibitors favoring giveaways. U. S. district courts have dismissed two more suits arising from grievance board bans of "bank night." One involved Robb & Rowley as the plaintiffs at Dallas, against the local grievance board and distributors. Action in the other case was brought by Northern States Amusement Company at Minneapolis.

In Cleveland a petition for an injunction to stop "bank night" at the Haltnorth theatre was filed with common pleas judge McMahon by Meyer Fischer, operating the competitive Fountain. The court refused to issue a temporary writ pending a hearing.

While exhibitor members of Allied States in Chicago were indulging in a spree of giveaways, the organization went on record as maintaining and reinforcing its stand against premiums.

Giveaways in New Orleans are reported extending to a number of theatres, including Schulmann Bros'. Plaza and the Coliseum.

Exhibitor interests in Philadelphia as represented in the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania and the IEPA have failed to agree on a proposal to limit premiums to two days weekly.

All orders cutting off film service entered by local grievance boards as a result of respondents' failure to comply with its decisions have been canceled on instructions from Tyree Dillard, Jr., counsel for Code Authority.

John C. Flinn, executive secretary of the Code Authority, joined the organization on leave of absence from Paramount and officially still has that status.

Sol A. Rosenblatt returns to private law practice the last of this week, and his successor at the NRA has not been determined. It is believed, however, that Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth, in charge of the film code, will retain the post. Mr. Rosenblatt denied reports he would continue as an advisor to the new NRA.

From Washington it was learned that Senator Gerald Nye of North Dakota was planning to push a bill authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to cooperate with industries in drafting agreements for the abandoning or prevention of unfair methods of competition and establishment of business practices which will prevent unlawful restraints of trade and monopolistic practices. Such agreements would be exempt from the antitrust statutes.

Reward for Ransom Notes

Awards of $500 will be given by 50 Loew theatres throughout the country and the Capitol in New York to each person turning in at the theatre one of the $200,000 in ransom notes which figured in the Weyerhaeuser kidnaping in Washington.

Playdate Law Tilt Delayed by Crash

An automobile accident in which Judges Robert R. Nevin and Benson W. Hough of U. S. district court were hurt at Columbus, Ohio, prevented action this week on an injunction motion by attorneys for RKO to restrain the state from enforcing the new law prohibiting designation of playdates, on a plea of unconstitutionality. The case may now go over until fall. Allied States' Ohio Independent Theatre Owners had much to do with enactment of the law.

Legislative activity at the national capital in the week included introduction by Senator Neely of West Virginia of a companion bill to the Pettengill measure in the House to eliminate block booking, hearing on which is expected in the new Congress in January. The House immigration committee agreed last weekend to report the Dickstein bill to make alien actors subject to the contract labor provisions of the immigration law. The Senate foreign affairs committee is considering a number of changes proposed by a subcommittee for the copyright bill.

In the states a variety of actions and near-actions interested motion picture folk.

In California the governor signed a bill barring walkathons, but the Assembly refused passage of a measure to bar paupers at the state border, as requested by the studios and other large interests. The Senate passed a 3 per cent sales tax.

In Illinois Jack Miller, leader of the Chicago Exhibitors Association, was directing theatre opposition to a six-day week bill, and the Senate had before it the measure to prevent distributors from building or acquiring theatres for coercive purposes, following passage in the House of the socalled anti-Loew bill.

Mayor Walmsley at New Orleans has introduced an amendment to an ordinance to permit peaceful picketing.

Massachusetts' Governor Curley lost in House committee his move to tax automatic weighing and vending machines $5 a year. The state Senate passed a measure to license theatrical booking agents. The person responsible for a Sunday show must sign the application and programs accompanying licenses, nor must the program be changed, amended provisions require.

Governor Park of Missouri vetoed a bill to legalize horse and dog racing. The executive signed the one per cent sales tax bill, effective August 27th.

New taxation in Ohio appeared unlikely, though restoration of the 10 per cent admission assessment and a state income tax are expected to be considered in the fall.

At Harrisburg, Pa., Governor Earle signed a bill granting the same privileges in theatres to all persons regardless of creed or color. The committee on state government of the Senate reported favorably a bill to permit Sunday shows.

In Ontario the new amusement taxes went into effect Saturday, with the theatremen unitedly passing the tax to the public.

O'SHAUGHNESSEY'S BOY

MGM

When Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper are teamed and the story is of similar human quality in down-to-earth drama concentrating on emotional heart tugs that make for laughter and tears as that of their first co-starring vehicle, "The Champ," the showmanship exploitation is evident. "O'Shaughnessey's Boy" is that kind of story told against a circus background with all its vivid trappings and color from sawdust arena to trooper's quarters. It tells of Beery, a famous animal trainer, and his great love for his boy, Jackie. It is full of dramatic action and spectacle. Beery, when his boy is spirited away from him, loses his nerve, and falling before the frantic rush of maddened tigers and elephants, is severely crippled. A wandering tramp, he finds his boy again to discover that instead of being an idol he is an object of hatred. There follows an understanding and awakening of the old love, with the nerve-shattered Beery back in the caged arena again, being inspired by his worshipful son to again become the great trainer, the hero of every kid in the land.

A circus story that should be circused to the limit of its atmospheric color and appeal, plus that of Beery and Cooper, the film, an original by Malcolm Boyland, who collaborated on "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," and Harvey Gates, also associated with that picture, is being directed by Richard Boleslawski, recently credited with "The Painted Veil" and "Les Miserables."

Beery and Cooper being the natural name values, another juvenile performer, "Spanky" McFarland, seen in many "Our Gang" shorts, is featured and the supporting cast includes Sara Haden, Clarence Muse, Leona Maricle, Willard Robertson and Ben Henderson.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY

Warner

Exploitation value being contained in the title and story, this production again teams the comedy stars of "Convention City," "Havana Widows," "Kansas City Princess" and "Traveling Saleslady," Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell. This time they are a pair of process servers in the service of an absent-minded attorney specializing in breach of promise suits. Like the Northwest Mounted Police, they always get their victim whether it be one with whom one of the girls has fallen in love, love promise evaders or wrestlers.

The story is an original by George R. Bilson, with screen play by F. Hugh Herbert and Brown Holmes, adapted by Erwin Gelsey. Direction is by Ray Enright, maker of "Traveling Saleslady," "Dames" and a couple of Joe E. Brown pictures, "Circus Clown" and "Alibi Ike."

Supporting the Blondell-Farrell combination, Hugh Herbert will be seen as the absent-minded lawyer for whom they work, Ross Alexander, with whom, when he is palming himself off as a chauffeur, Miss Blondell falls in love; Hobart Cavanaugh, Joseph Crehan, Phil Regan, Henry O'Neill, Anita Kerry, Joseph King, Mayo Methot and two widely publicized wrestlers, Man Mountain Dean, who was seen in "Reckless," and Chief Little Wolf.

The locale of the story is New York and as it is related it travels through many exciting situations culminated by a water taxi chase through the harbor and along Long Island Sound.

The title being one that lends itself readily to commercial adaptation in many ways, the subpoena serving gags which motivate it also make possible many tricky and effective interest-stimulating stunts.

LITTLE BIG SHOT

Warner

This is a comedy drama of the Great White Way and its colorful and menacing habitues on the fringe of the law. As it is told it is full of powerfully dramatic situations, touching pathos and hilarious comedy into which a delightful romantic love affair is woven.

While all the players are well known, a potential new child star, five year old Sybil Jason, whose singing, dancing, acting show talent, will make her screen debut. The story is an original by Harrison Jacobs, adapted by Robert Andrews, Herry Wald and Julius Epstein. Direction is by Michael Curtiz, whose most recent picture is "Black Fury."

The story concerns a couple of tinhorn chislers, who, forced to adopt a child when an old pal of the same ilk is a gangster victim, use the child, after she has surprised them with demonstrations of her ability as a come-on for the catch-penny enterprises. Eventually getting themselves on the spot where the danger of being arrested for murder is only surpassed by the danger of being machine-gunned themselves, the child is kidnapped. In rescuing her, the pair lead the cops to the instigators of the killings of which they are suspected and also eliminate the menace to their safety. The climax is the consummation of romance that takes the racketeers from the excitement of New York to the peace and tranquility of a wayside hotdog stand gas station.

Robert Armstrong, last in "G-Men," and Edward Everett Horton are teamed as the gangsters. Glenda Farrell is the hat check girl sweetheart of Armstrong. Jack LaRue, Arthur Vinton, Edgar Kennedy, Joseph Sauers, Marc Lawrence, Murray Alper and Ward Bond constitute the gangster menaces.

LUCKY IN LOVE (Tentative)

Universal

While this production is an unique comedy romance in which the girl in the cast plays a dual role, its most attractive exploitation feature probably is the initial screen appearance of Dorothy Page. Known to legions of radio listeners in connection with Paul Whiteman and other national broadcasts, she not only is possessed of a charming voice, but seems to have the talent and personality that should make her as popular a picture personality as she is on the radio. Another newcomer, Henry Mollison, a noted British stage actor who has been widely publicized, will make his screen debut.

In the story, Ricardo Cortez, a product of the gas house district who has become quite a wealthy night life figure, but who has not been able to make the desired social contacts, trades a bouncing check of Mollison's for introductions to the best folks. Going mad about the opera singer, Miss Page, that temperamental lady is her own double who takes care of just such exigencies as Cortez' infatuation. Complicated because Regis Toomey is in love with the double, the action rolls on to a point where there has to be a showdown and Miss Page, who has been doubling for her double, finally falls in love with Cortez.

Situations and action being potentially promising of much spontaneous comedy entertainment, that quality is accentuated by Luis Alberni, currently in "Love Me Forever," as the press agent who tries to keep both Miss Page and her double in line and another popular comedian, Henry Armetta, the headwaiter of Cortez' night club.

The story is an original by Robert Harris, Helen Thompson and Frank Daugherty, with screen play by Aben Kandel and Robert Presnell and adaptation by Harris and Harvey Gates. Direction is by Stuart Walker, maker of "Romance in the Rain," "Great Expectations" and "Werewolf of London."

BONNIE SCOTLAND

MGM-Roach

For primary showmanship purposes this is a Laurel and Hardy feature length production. Story character, differing materially in type from their recent appearances in full length shows, is somewhat reminiscent of "Beau Hunks." It tells of the two going to Scotland to share an inheritance, getting little, and then by mistake enlisting in a Scotch regiment and being sent to India.

The story and screen play are by Frank Butler and Jeff Moffitt, who in addition to collaborating on many Laurel and Hardy short subject stories also authored the recent "Vagabond Lady." The director, James W. Horne, a comedy specialist, has made many short subjects and will be remembered as the director of "Beau Hunks."

While the typical Laurel and Hardy gag and situation comedy dominates, the picture brings back to the screen one of its funny stars of the silent days in the person of James Finlayson, who is the sergeant major of the company to which the leads are assigned. Romantic angles of the production are carried by William Janney and June Lang, who has been seen in minor roles in several Fox pictures. Others in the cast are Anne Grey, Vernon Steele, David Torrence, Monte Blue, Daphne Pollard, Mary Gordon and Lionel Belmore.

In the India sequences, the theme of which is a literal burlesque on the "Lives of the Bengal Lancer" idea, Colonel W. E. Winn, who was technical advisor on that picture, is functioning similarly on this.

Production values as well as personalities should assure opportunity for unique exploitation. Two sequences, the one in which they enlist by mistake and their antics as kilted doughboys, should in themselves be productive of plenty of showmanship ideas.

Otho Lovering, film cutter at Paramount studios for more than 10 years, has been assigned to the direction of the next Zane Grey western, "Wanderer of the Wasteland."

GREENTHAL LOW NET IN FILM DAILY GOLF

Twenty-third Film Daily Meet Brings Fun and Competition to 150 Links Enthusiasts

Warner "G-Men" Suit Dismissed in Chicago

The suit brought in Chicago federal court by Warner against Publix-Great States Circuit, alleging unfair competition in the use of its title "G Men," in the circuit's advertising of another picture, was dismissed last week for lack of jurisdiction.

Federal Judge Sullivan accepted the argument of the circuit's attorneys that the defendant was of New Castle County, Del., and that consequently the federal district court had no jurisdiction in the case. Warner sought an injunction to prevent the circuit from using the phrase G Men in advertising the United Artists film "Let 'Em Have It."

THE UNITED STATES REFUTES THE "TIMES"

The New York Times on Tuesday morning, in a special dispatch from Washington, quoted the Federal Emergency Relief Administration as saying that the government will make available funds for a national theatre program, under which companies of unemployed actors and actresses will carry the drama to towns and cities all over the country.

The story was a surprise to Broadway inasmuch as the stage gave up hope weeks ago of a federal subsidized theatre after funds failed to materialize.

And on Wednesday afternoon the FERA, answering a direct inquiry, continued to insist they have no plan for providing show troupes to the nation. In denying reports to the contrary they explained that funds are allocated to the states for general relief purposes and it is up to each state relief administration to determine the use of the funds.

Loew-Momand Hearing June 19

A new hearing for the $10,000,000 claims of E. M. Loew of Boston and A. B. Momand of Oklahoma against Paramount while under reorganization will be given on June 19th by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe in New York, when a motion asking leave to liquidate will be heard, as well as exceptions to the report of John E. Joyce, special master, that while actual damages from alleged antitrust law violations might be provable against a bankrupt, the triple damage provisions do not apply.

In St. Louis Federal Judge George Moore set June 18th to hear arguments on defense motions in a Government antitrust action against Paramount, Warner, RKO and their officers. At an earlier hearing Assistant Attorney General Russell had accused the defendants of "bleeding to death" the lessees of the Grand Central, Missouri and Ambassador theatres, whose charges of inability to get product had brought on the action.

David Milgrim, of the Garden theatre in West Chester, Pa., filed suit against Fox Film Corporation in eastern district court, charging that the distributor had assured him he would continue to get Fox product as he had for two years, but that now Fox has sold away to Warner theatres.

Two motions involving 34 requests either to strike out portions of the complaint or to make its allegations more specific were filed at Lincoln, Neb., by the defendants in the $444,000 State Theatres' suit against Lincoln Theatre Corporation, a number of distributors, Robert Livingston and Joe Cooper.

With Fox now serving the Park Lane, Palisades Park, N. J., in conformance with contracted clearance provisions, Adam and Peter Adams this week withdrew their injunction suit against the exchange.

2,655 WOMEN'S CLUB CHAIRMEN ARE NOW PUBLICLY AIDING FILMS

Millions Reached in Friendly Drive to Further Worthwhile Product, Delegates to Federation Convention Are Told

The cause of worthwhile motion pictures was tangibly advanced at the box office in 1934-35 through one of the most extensive and energetic campaigns ever conducted by "outside" interests to make the public conscious of good pictures and to cultivate photoplay appreciation among the millions of school-going youngsters, as executed by the powerful General Federation of Women's Clubs, now 45 years old and having a membership of 2,000,000. The work will continue in 1935-36.

Reaping box office returns that cannot be estimated, some 2,655 chairmen of motion picture committees of local groups affiliated with the General Federation, working in only 25 states, contacted more than 4,900 women's clubs, civic and educational groups to encourage interest in the work, mailing out several hundred thousand pieces of literature on the motion picture, together with lists of selected programs. They further advanced the cause by enlisting the support of more than 200 newspapers and at least 65 radio stations—reaching millions of citizens the country over.

Activities were marked in others of the 13 states, but the reports of state chairmen could not be reduced to bare facts, as contained in a summary just made public.

Nor was the campaign,—growing in intensity down through the years—confined to the radio, the press and the contacting of social groups. It reached far beyond that, to a nationwide encouragement, and in many places actual establishment of visual educational and photoplay appreciation courses in hundreds of elementary and high schools and colleges.

Too, the motion picture chairmen and their committee members spoke on the subject of worthwhile motion pictures to millions attending functions of church, school and public.

Miles of articles on the cause were written for daily, weekly and monthly periodicals; "Selected Programs" were broadcast everywhere; speakers' bureaus were organized, and tieups made with libraries; "Family Nights" and "Juvenile Matinees" were arranged by the hundreds, for and with the cooperation of the local theatre owner.

The aid of some 255 Better Films Councils was used extensively in the movement, these Councils representing millions of club women whose tastes filmwise are expressed through their members appointed to speak for them in the Councils.

Dozens of instances were brought to light where actual campaigns on outstanding motion pictures were conducted for the enlightment of the public and the benefit of the box office. Ticket-selling was conducted by the group in several places. Special "Holiday Matinees" were staged and previews arranged, all resulting in considerable word-of-mouth advertising and exploitation by publication, both increasing receipts.

Summarizing the foregoing results of the Federation's local and state motion picture committees in the field, Mrs. Richard M. McClure, national chairman of the committee on motion pictures, last week told 5,000 delegates assembled at Detroit for the annual convention of the General Federation, that, "If each one of you might view a motion picture based upon the work of the committees on motion pictures, you would see a film throbbing with interest, new and thrilling experiences and achievements."

Mrs. McClure cited the new market of 25,000,000 persons that was opened to the industry by the production of pictures with an appeal both to the masses and to the "discriminating and cultured."

"Producers Kept Their Promise"

"Quick to sense the new trends in thought and living conditions, and ever alert to analyze the increase or decrease at the box office, the producers noted the time had come when they must change their product and merchandising methods if they would survive," declared Mrs. McClure in explanation of last year's action of producers in raising production standards. "They were aware," she continued, "of the possibilities of reaching out and interesting this more critical, though smaller, class of potential theatre patrons. The producers announced that the production schedules of 1934-35 would include more family pictures, more clean wholesome entertainment. We wish to record that the producers have kept that promise."

The convention spread on the records a comparative rating of feature films for three years, reporting for the 12 months each of 1932-33 and 1933-34, and the nine months of July to March in 1934-35, as follows:

	FAMILY	ADULTS AND YOUNG ADULTS	ADULTS ONLY
1932-33	73 (25%)	112 (40%)	105 (35%)
1933-34	64 (28%)	91 (40%)	75 (32%)
1934-35*	75 (36%)	80 (37%)	57 (27%)

(*) Nine months only.

"The decrease in the adult sophisticated type and the remarkable increase in films suitable for young people" is a "fine demonstration of the sincerity of the producers, and their willingness to give the public what it asked for," Mrs. McClure told the 5,000 delegates from all states. For this the producers "receive the commendation of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, which was a pioneer organization in the work for better motion pictures."

Submitted to the convention were the reports of both the East Coast and West Coast Previewing Groups, to which belong many of the leading organizations of women's and other clubs of the country. Reporting for the year from May 1, 1934, to May 1, 1935, the East Coast Group rated 344 feature motion pictures as follows:

CLASS	NUMBER	PERCENTAGE
For Family	106	31%
Adults and Young Persons	161	47
Adults Only	50	14
Not Rated	27	8
TOTALS	344	100%

The West Coast Previewing Group, reporting for the same period, rated 333 feature productions as follows:

CLASS	NUMBER	PERCENTAGE
For Family	116	35%
Adults and Young Persons	99	29
Adults Only	54	16
Junior Matinees	26	7
Unworthy	17	5
Not Rated	38	8
TOTALS	333	100%

As a result of the "better entertainment" that has emanated from the studios in the past year, Mrs. McClure told the convention, there has been a gradual increase at the box office and the weekly attendance is now 70,000,000, some 10,000,000 more than when the combined effects of the depression and the "clean film" movement were being felt.

Attack Doubles, Laud Studios For "Keeping Promises," and Compare Film Ratings; Claim 10,000,000 Attendance Rise

New Trend Encouraging Reading

"Since many of the new films are adaptations of the classics it is interesting to note that the trend of transferring literary classics to the screen is stimulating interest in both reading and drama," Mrs. McClure said, basing her information on a report by the Publishers' Weekly and the comments of librarians. "The National Council of English Teachers may be given much of this credit, for they have developed a most valuable set of film study guides which send children to libraries for reference books which relate to historical and literary sources for film."

Mrs. McClure pointed out the extent to which exhibitors and book merchants are working to mutual advantage the tieups suggested on film books. She added: "The dignified advertising initiated by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the better magazines has been a far step forward toward reaching out to a more critical audience."

Of interest to producers who study the trends in book reading for its possible value

TWO NEW CIRCUITS STARTED AS NEW YORK MERGER IS ABANDONED

Barkley Theatres to Comprise 50 Houses in Eastern Area; Pix Theatres Plans Novelty in Construction and Design

The inception of two new theatre circuits in the East, one, Barkley Theatres Company, to comprise 50 or more houses, and the other, Pix Theatres, Inc., incorporating novel ideas in construction and design, to be incorporated in an undetermined number of properties, was announced this week.

Another development in the theatre field was the definite indication that plans to merge some 150 non-affiliated houses in the New York area and approximately 75 in New Jersey into two compact corporations have been shelved. While the sponsors insist the idea has been abandoned, Milton C. Weisman, attorney for the Independent Theatre Owners Association, who had been detailed to draw up the plans, denied that assertion vigorously and said he was "working on the plans."

Ascribed as the reason for abandonment of the idea is the difficulty of convincing some of the exhibitors that it would be to their advantage to pool their interests in a corporation in return for stock ownership, although management would be retained by the owner.

Barkley Theatres Company, headed by Eddie A. Barkley of Hollywood, announced plans to lease at least 50 houses in eastern states for the showing of vaudeville and pictures, with double features where the policy is warranted.

Leases are announced as already closed for the Warburton in Yonkers, scheduled to open this Friday, and the Capitol, Albany, to be opened in about three weeks. The Warburton will have first run features with a stage show at a weekday top of 30 cents. Remodeling is in progress at the Albany house.

Pix in Upstate New York

Barkley Theatres Company has opened temporary offices at 286 Fifth Avenue, New York. The Stanley Wolfe office is supplying the stage talent.

The first of a group of theatres projected by Pix Theatres, Inc., is shortly to be constructed at a location in upstate New York. The venture will be experimental commercially as well as technically, and subsequent construction is contingent on the success of the initial house. The company has laid plans for small subsequent run and neighborhood houses of approximately 300 seats capacity. John S. Clarke, Jr., is president and E. S. C. Coppock general manager.

Mr. Clarke said the first house will be opened about Labor Day under the name of the Pix theatre. It will be a radical departure from the usual design of small film houses and will incorporate many new ideas resulting from two years of research and development by the company. Construction features will be identical at all Pix theatres.

Departure from Standard

While sharply departing from prevailing standards, design and interior furnishings will be modern in a simple manner. Seats will be easy chairs, or when stationary there will be a maximum of room between rows to allow patrons to walk through the aisles without disturbing those seated. Facilities will be provided for the hard of hearing.

Cost of the initial house, including two years of experimental development, will be about $35,000. A showman will operate each house, but some prominent local individual may have a financial interest in each theatre. Admission prices will be on a par with or higher than other neighborhood theatres in the town. No theatre in any locality will be intended to compete with the first run house.

The Pix Theatres organization is composed of a small group of individuals who have taken up all the stock in the corporation, and no outside corporate financing is involved. Mr. Clarke, the president, originally a Pennsylvanian, has been engaged in film production on a small scale and in motor car manufacturing. Mr. Coppock, who was with Paramount Theatres for many years, is known in the industry for his unusual ideas in theatre operation. His last assignment with Paramount was at Stapleton, Staten Island, New York. More recently he was general manager of the Bermuda Moving Picture Company.

James Maxwell Fassett is counsel and secretary-treasurer of the firm. Bianculli and Ghiani are the architects. Pix Theatres' office is at 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York.

Apathy Kills Independent Plan

Reported to have been delayed by the completion by attorney Milton C. Weisman of a setup plan, the proposal to consolidate independent houses in New York and New Jersey in two circuits now appears to have gone glimmering because of apathy which has developed among many of the sponsors. When the plan was revived about two weeks ago, a group of 25 New Jersey independents openly approved the idea at a meeting in Newark. Later, 86 New York theatre owners endorsed the program at a meeting at the Motion Picture Club. But performance failed to measure up to the promises made en masse.

There remain some exhibitors who are hopeful that the idea may be revived at some future time, but no further meetings on the subject are scheduled either in New York or New Jersey. Certain members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York and of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce were active in promoting the proposal, though it had no direct relation to either organization.

Womens' Group Aiding Pictures

in gauging public tastes was Mrs. McClure's report, obtained from the American Library Association, as to the most popular books of the day. "The librarians report a lessened interest in books of the morbid sophisticated and lurid type," she explained. "Historical romances and adventure tales with non-fiction head the list. Children's tastes have changed and they no more devour glamorous fairy tale books but turn to stories of the modern age. Social science series, tales of modern achievements and biographies are the greatest favorites. Perhaps this explains why the producer looks with such disfavor upon producing the childhood classics that parents think would make good films."

The Federation vigorously denounced double bills at theatres on the grounds that "no balanced film program can be shown where two full length pictures are booked on the same program." Local and state chairmen have been instructed "to work against this trade practice."

Mrs. McClure later explained in further detail the mutual advantages to both producers and book publishers accruing from book films, explaining that in many places books were put into local circulation long before the showing of the pictures. Specifically mentioned were "Disraeli," "Les Miserables," "Cardinal Richelieu," "David Copperfield," "Barretts of Wimpole Street," "Clive of India," among others.

The Federation urged its motion picture committee chairmen to further the interest in this development.

Quigley Survey Mentioned

Mrs. McClure referred the 5,000 Federation delegates to a study of the tastes of the reading public as learned in a survey made by Motion Picture Almanac. Sixty-five books, all having sold over 500,000 copies, were selected as favorites, 48 of these having been made into motion pictures.

"When one realizes that so many of the films are taken from books and plays, one may feel assured that more wholesome reading habits will soon make a change in the film theme," advised Mrs. McClure, who, continuing to quote from the Motion Picture Almanac, pointed out that of the 73 motion pictures that have made $1,000,000 or more, 29 were adapted from novels and plays and 13 came from classics.

The Federation was urged to continue its intensive study to determine the advisability of including educational motion pictures as a recognized part of the school curriculum, on the claim that "the United States is wasting $250,000,000 annually because it does not utilize the talking motion picture in its educational activities."

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 269 (one of a special group on sound).—(A) Should the projectionist wait for an exciter lamp to burn out before replacing it? Just at what point should it be replaced? (B) Explain why it is of importance that the vertical exciter lamp filament be exactly correct with respect to the optical system light slot. (C) How often should the glass bulb of the exciter lamp be cleaned?

Answer to Question No. 263

Bluebook School Question No. 263 was: (A) What should the projectionist do in case of loss of sound during a show? (B) A badly worn or eccentric intermittent sprocket will usually cause film damage and the picture to jump or weave. What is the usual effect of a similar condition with respect to the sound sprocket? (C) Why is it highly undesirable that sound from the projection room monitor reach the auditorium, and what should be done to prevent it doing so? (D) What new burdens has sound put on projectionists, insofar as relates to care and operation of equipments?

The engineers who prepared this question say:

(A) If possible cut off all stage speakers. Check for sound in each projector by cutting the scanning beam or thumping the first tube in the head amplifier. This determines whether or not the trouble is in one machine only, or in the main amplifier, etc. Observe all meters for normal reading. See that the exciter lamp and all vacuum tubes are burning. See that all switches, keys and the fader are in proper position and operating normally. Check for blown fuses. Call service engineer and explain nature of the trouble and its symptoms, being sure you state them all. Then continue seeking seat of the trouble until engineer arrives.

(B) "Flutter or gurgle" in the reproduced sound and damage to the film.

(C) When the monitor is audible in the auditorium the audience gets the effect of two sources of sound slightly out of time with each other. To those near the projection room the weaker sound from the monitor precedes the sound from the screen by a fraction of a second. To those down front the monitor horn sound, if audible, will follow the screen sound and may have somewhat the effect of an echo. These effects are of course more pronounced as monitor horn volume is increased; also they are more pronounced in the larger auditoriums. To guard against this very undesirable condition the monitor horn should be operated at as low a volume as is consistent with necessity.

A surprisingly large number of projectionists made excellent replies to Section A. Earl Boyer says:

"Acquire ability to think and think fast. To be able to locate sound trouble quickly one must learn to use his reasoning powers (a most valuable asset in modern projection work), especially when trouble bobs up. Never do anything without a good reason for doing that particular thing. Doing things in haphazard fashion when attempting to locate and remedy trouble very often results in adding to, rather than reemdying, the fault. Never start fixing anything until first it has been definitely determined which particular apparatus and which item in that apparatus is at fault. The best rule to follow—the one that has definitely proven itself to be most practical and at the same time most rapid in operation—is to proceed through a process of elimination, starting at the beginning and testing through until the guilty spot is found, then fix it if you can."

I have printed that not because it exactly answers the question, but for the reason that broadly, in my opinion, nothing could possibly be more correct in the way of common sense advice.

J. Gordon Paulsen, Ventura, Cal., says, "Most emphatically the first thing to do in case of loss of sound is to return fader setting to zero. On several occasions I have been in theatre projection rooms—wham, back on at 90 when the projectionist failed to observe this rule. Exact procedure as to regaining sound is difficult to describe by reason of the inherent mechanical and electrical differences in various types of equipments.

"My personal routine, however, is much as follows: First set fader back. Next a quick glance at all meters to determine whether trouble is due to tube or fuse failure. If the equipment is properly cared for this should constitute about the only cause for loss of sound. Any failure due to dirty fader contacts, dirty film-disc switches, etc., is merely prima facie evidence of gross negligence on the part of the projectionist.

"If the failure is due to any particular amplifier section going out, temporary connections should be made around the defective part. [How about switching over to another amplifier, if any?—F. H. R.] Replacing a defective tube or exciter lamp should not consume more than 30 seconds of time, during which time I favor letting silence reign supreme. If it takes longer, I favor shutting down entirely, rather than spoiling the continuity of the sound story."

I regret space will not permit several other answers to Section A, each of which has very distinct merit.

(B) P. and L. Felt says, "Perfect reproduction of pitch is essential to perfection in reproduced sound and that may only be had when the film passes the pickup light beam at an unvarying speed of exactly 90 feet per minute. It is very evident that if the sound sprocket be eccentric it will not pass the film at an unvarying speed, hence there will not be perfect pitch. There will be flutters and wows. If the sound sprocket be badly worn, its teeth may not injure the film by reason of its constant speed and not much retarding (braking) pressure. However, it is very possible that such wear may work injury to sound, though unless the wear be quite serious I hardly think so."

What do the rest of you chaps think about that?

(C) E. Boyer, Victory theatre, Poteau, Okla., says, "Assume an auditorium 35 feet wide by 125 feet long. No balcony. We know sound travels through air at 1,100 feet per second. Assume a customer to be seated at the rear of this auditorium, say 25 feet from the monitor horn. Naturally if the sound from it reaches his ears he will hear it appreciably sooner than he will that from the loudspeakers about 100 feet away. The two sounds will therefore be out of phase and thus injury will be done."

(D) I believe G. E. Doe made much the

BRITISH EXHIBITOR CONFERENCE PLANS TO DISCUSS RENTAL TERMS

CEA Annual Summer Meeting Also to Consider Quota and Possible Revision of Films Act; To See Television Test

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

The Summer conference of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, to be held this year at the Park Hotel, Cardiff, is the great occasion for the airing of trade grievances and, occasionally, for the formulation of policies that actually work. All indications are that the 1935 gathering will provide more than the average head of steam; what the accumulated energy will achieve in regard to the key problems of the industry remains to be seen.

Costs and Rentals Major Problem

There is no doubt what these problems are. On Thursday, June 27, when Thomas Ormiston, M.P., speaks on "Kinema Costs and Film Hire" in the morning he will certainly be discussing the biggest problem before exhibitors. Back in 1933, at just such another conference, the C. E. A. declared itself in support of the principle that 40 per cent should be an absolutely maximum price for films. On the eve of Cardiff the London and Home Counties C. E. A. branch has reaffirmed this principle and formally approached the General Council with a suggestion that it be adopted as a national policy.

As part of its recommendation, it suggests that members found infringing the condition shall "be reported to the General Council with a view to appropriate action." Mr. Ormiston will be doing a service to his fellow-exhibitors if he can define "appropriate" — and effective — action to make an exhibitor respect a C.E.A. resolution. Distributors thrive on the notorious tendency of theatre men to let personal interest override public pledges.

Next in importance to prices is the subject to be tackled by Simon Rowson under the title "The Future of the Films Act." From the viewpoint of the American distributor it is even more important, and one can expect them to listen very carefully to any forecast regarding the revision of the quota which the speaker may put forward. It is of some significance that Mr. Rowson contributed a good proportion of the brains behind the Films Act, that he has been a member of the official advisory committee and that, whether or not he knows what the government intends in this instance, he has an undeniable instinct about the probable working of the official mind. The paper therefore promises a lowdown on the subject in which America is as interested as the United Kingdom.

On the morning of the same day, June 26, Captain A. D. G. West will read a paper on "Television and the Cinema," with the interesting additional feature of transmission demonstrations illustrating the most recent advances in that field. The president of the British Board of Film Censors, the Rt. Hon. E. E. Shortt, K.C., is talking on "Problems of Censorship" on Thursday, covering the American system of regulation. "Little Man, What Now: A Plea for the Small Exhibitor," from H. Victor Davis, of South Wales, concludes the planned talks.

Schenck Discusses Product

Joseph M. Schenck, in London last week, told the press, gathered at the Savoy, that his theatre deal with County Cinemas and Odeon Theatres was on account of United Artists and that he had no intention of switching the deal to Fox. He differentiated between United Artists distributors and United Artists Theatres and insisted that, though he had resigned his chairmanship of the company, he "remained and intended to remain" the largest single shareholder.

He expressed surprise that there should be any suggestion that Alexander Korda or Herbert Wilcox were leaving United Artists. He indicated that he, for Fox, proposed to make deals with independent British producers for 12 films a year, made with the American market in view. Asked what the pictures would cost, Mr. Schenck said the value of a picture did not depend on cost but he had the idea that £80,000 was the minimum figure at which one could reasonably expect to get a good picture.

Asked if Gaumont would make any of the Fox British films, Mr. Schenck said, "We would be very glad to take films from them if they would give up distribution and distribute through Fox. We can't take films from them when they want to distribute them themselves."

Mr. Schenck emphasized his continued friendly interest in United Artists and his desire for its continued prosperity. No Fox executives were present, and Mr. Schenck was surrounded by United Artists executives who showed no consciousness of the sadness of parting.

best answer to this one. He says, "there is little or no comparison possible. The silent picture projectionist had relatively little, comparatively simple equipments to take care of and operate. In my judgment there is at the very least ten times the responsibility involved, in part for the reason that audiences have become gradually increasingly critical. Moreover, fault in sound is more seriously objectionable than fault in the screen image.

"The knowlegde required is in every way far greater, the projector and its necessary equipments far more intricate. There are many, many more electrical adjustments to make, as well as many more of a mechanical nature. Moreover, then the projectionist was in direct touch with what he was creating, whereas he now is almost wholly detached from half of his production.

"Specifically, in addition to what he did in silent days, he now must adjust and take care of a complicated sound head, adjust and care for an exciter lamp and its rather difficult optical train, care for either a big storage battery or a sound motor-generator set, look after one or more amplifiers, adjust them and often make repairs upon them. He not only must thread the film through the projector mechanism, but also, at each showing, through the sound head, all of which not only means much more labor, but far, far more knowledge. On the whole I would say the labor has been at least doubled by the advent of sound, whereas at least four times the accurate knowledge is essential to good visual-sound results than was necessary for good visual results alone."

Lawrence Film Planned

The death of Lawrence of Arabia has released a publishing ban on many of his works, the trustees of his estate, acting for the charities interested, having sold rights very quickly. Among others who benefit, London Film Productions will be able to go ahead with the version of "Lawrence of Arabia" announced a year ago, but held up, it is understood, by the aversion of the chief figure to personal publicity.

Winston Churchill, who was to have written the "King George" film for London, has turned his energies to "The Conquest of the Air," which begins production next week, and will supervise many of the scenes reconstructing historic moments in aviation. London is using practically every star on its list in this film.

To Rebuild BIP Studio

The BIP studio at Elstree is due for extensive reconstruction, the plans including a 250-foot floor which can be used for mammoth sets or divided into three or four completely self-contained floors. J. D. Williams planned Elstree on such an ambitious scale that it is still capable of staging the largest scenes ever likely to be required, and a detailed modernization such as was recently applied at BIP's Welwyn plant will put it on a level with any plant in London.

Cody on Road Tour

Bill Cody, Spectrum western star, and his son, Bill Cody, Jr., are leading a troupe of daredevil riders with the Downie Brothers Circus, now on tour. The youngster is being groomed to take Cody's place as a western star under the Spectrum banner. Cody has completed "The Vanishing Riders" for the company.

Subsequent run theatres in Portland, Ore., have set a minimum admission price of 25 cents. First runs are expected to follow the lead.

George Grossmith, British Actor, Dies

George Grossmith, English actor and playwright, and an executive of London Films since 1932, died last week in London at the age of 61.

Born of a theatrical family of the first order, Mr. Grossmith was most versatile. Not only did he play a wide variety of roles, but he was successful as well on the screen and as the operator of several of the leading theatres in London. His best known part was that of a "dude," in which he made his first appearance 42 years ago, in "Morocco Bound," at the Shaftesbury theatre in London. His development of that type of character was largely responsible for its inclusion as a regular feature in most musical comedies.

Mr. Grossmith was born in London and educated at University College School there, and in Paris. He made his professional debut in 1892 at the Criterion in "Haste to the Wedding," an operetta by his father and W. S. Gilbert. His father saw to it that the young actor worked "on his own." Despite that, or because of it, Mr. Grossmith became a favorite in London, Paris and New York. In 1895 he made the first of several visits to New York, where the audiences took to him at once, and never tired of seeing him on later tours.

He entered films in 1930, appearing in several pictures, including "Women Everywhere" and "Wedding Rehearsal." In 1932 he became chairman of London Films.

Exhibitors Meet In Roanoke Sunday

A "wide field for industrial cooperation under federal supervision within the limits of the Constitution" remains despite NRA's interment in the U. S. supreme court tomes, said Allied States Exhibitors in its bulletin this week. In that connection, Broadway echoed reports that Sol A. Rosenblatt, compliance director under the Code, will be retained as counsel for the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York, when his retirement from NRA begins Sunday.

Eastern regional directors of Allied States meet in Boston June 24th with Walter Littlefield presiding, and Allied of New England goes into session in Boston the next day.

The first annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia is the cause of widespread preparations, with the sessions opening Sunday at the Patrick Henry hotel in Roanoke. Hunter Perry of Charlottesville is arrangements chairman. Following Sunday's informal get-togethers, business ssssions Monday will be called to order by Morton G. Thalhimer, of Richmond, the president. Tax Commissioner C. H. Morrissette will be a principal speaker. Col. Robert T. Barton, attorney for the MPTO, will discuss legal problems of exhibitors. There will be round table consideration of block booking, the code and the part it played and what is to follow, and of non-theatrical competition. A dinner dance and entertainment will close the convention Monday night.

LICHTMAN IS ELECTED PRESIDENT OF U. A.

Silverstone Will Be Named as Chairman of British Branch at Formal Election on June 25

Alexander Lichtman is the new president of United Artists, succeeding Joseph M. Schenck, who, two weeks ago, withdrew from the corporation with Darryl Zanuck when the two transferred their 20th Century Pictures from United Artists to Fox Films.

Announcement of Mr. Lichtman's elevation to the presidency came Wednesday afternoon in a statement signed by Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and Samuel Goldwyn, representing four-sixths of the ownership.

Formal Election June 25

The formal election will not take place until the directors meet in New York on June 25. At the same time Maurice Silverstone, now en route with Mr. Schenck from London, will be elected chairman of the British division, a position also held by Mr. Schenck.

Mr. Lichtman, for the past ten years, has been the executive of distribution and general manager. Mr. Silverstone has been managing director of the British United Artists' organization for 12 years.

The corporation selected Hollywood and July 8 as the place and date for its annual sales convention, at which an announcement will be made of the consummation of deals now pending to make up for the loss of the 20th Century product.

Born in Hungary on April 9, 1888, Al Lichtman came to this country as a youth and got a position as an usher in Tony Pastor's theatre in 14th street. He later became a vaudeville actor and managed a company of his own. He became associated with Exhibitors Advertising Corporation and was eventually the New York manager for the concern.

Was Zukor's Sales Manager

His first affiliation as general sales manager for a film company was with Monopol, which handled features then considered of first magnitude. He was the first sales manager for Adolph Zukor's Famous Players Company and was first general manager of distribution for Artcraft, selling the pictures of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Elsie Ferguson and William S. Hart. The merger which resulted in Famous Players-Lasky Corporation made him general manager for distribution for the combined organization. He also occupied the same position for Universal.

In 1926 Mr. Lichtman was appointed special field representative of United Artists and until his ascendency to the presidency was vice-president and a member of the executive committee of the company.

Trustees in dissolution of the Art Cinema Corporation seek permission to sell 1,000 shares of common stock in United Artists Corporation, controlled by Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Joseph M. Schenck and Samuel Goldwyn, in a petition filed in chancery court at Wilmington, Dell., this week.

AL LICHTMAN

The petition says the trustees have received an offer of $650,000 for the stock on behalf of United Artists from Nathan Burkan, New York attorney representing Miss Pickford, Mr. Chaplin and Mr. Goldwyn.

The court is asked to approve the proposed sale. It is provided, however, that the Elton Corporation, controlled by Mr. Fairbanks, will have the right to purchase the stock at the same price, if it so desires.

Hearing June 26th

The court directed that all stockholders of Art Cinema be notified of the petition and directed to appear in court June 26, at which time the petition will be heard. It is believed at Wilmington that the proposed sale of 1,000 shares, which represents one-sixth of United Artists' outstanding stock, was the reason Mr. Fairbanks cut short his recent cruise. He may appear at the hearing.

In the event the Elton Corporation purchases the stock, Mr. Fairbanks then would gain possession of two-sixths of the ownership in United Artists, which now is divided equally among six members.

According to the petition, the stock was appraised at $613,254 on October 26, last, and on December 24, last, a dividend amounting to $83,330 was paid. The trustees believe the sale would be to the best advantage of the Art Cinema stockholders. They add they have been assured by Joseph M. Schenck he will vote for the purchase by United Artists.

An affiliate of United Artists, Art Cinema is a dissolved corporation. The chancery court last October appointed William Jasie, Denis F. O'Brien, United Artists general counsel, and William Phillips, treasurer, as trustees in dissolution.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Our Little Girl

(Fox)

Drama

As far as the exhibitor and the selling of this picture is concerned, the chief factor is its diminutive (in size only) star, Shirley Temple, who has long since demonstrated her strength as a box office attraction in all theatres everywhere. How and how much little Miss Shirley is to be sold, the exhibitor well knows, as indicated by past experience with her and her pictures.

In this case she is supported well by Joel McCrea, Rosemary Ames and Lyle Talbot, with the familiar J. Farrell MacDonald effective in a minor role and one sequence. The title in itself is indicative of the picture's star and should make an apt selling line in itself, and when tied in with the character of the story's theme.

There is comparatively little that is unusual or different in the story, it being on the time-honored theme of the marital difficulties of Shirley's father and mother which are clarified for the final reconciliation through the efforts and by reason of the very presence of the small daughter. The film is lifted out of the routine classification, usual with a story of this character, by the appearance of Shirley. It may be considered that the dialogue prepared for the little star, although highly effective, imparts, in certain spots, a trifle too much precociousness to the child, although by and large, audiences should find the dialogue of the child what is generally termed "cute."

The selling should be of Shirley and the title and the manner in which she effects a reconciliation of father and mother. Her name itself should be in the nature of a guarantee of draw at the box office. The child continues to be highly capable.

McCrea is a small town doctor who is completely wrapped up in scientific experimentation and his general practice, which gives him but little time for his wife, Miss Ames, and their daughter, Shirley. His nurse, Erin O'Brien-Moore, is secretly in love with him. Miss Ames tries to indicate to her husband that she is becoming bored with lack of attention from him, but he cannot see it. The focal point of their lives is Shirley, who is wisely kept well in the forefront of all the picture's action, and is never permitted to be out of the scene for any length of time.

Talbot, wealthy friend, comes to live in the town, and begins to take Miss Ames riding. McCrea is finally aroused to jealousy, and after a quarrel or two, Miss Ames agrees to leave with Talbot, thinking later to return for Shirley. The child senses something wrong, cannot quite understand it, and is chiefly broken-hearted by the impending failure to have her semi-annual picnic with her parents. Her father takes her to the circus instead, is called away and Shirley goes home. She overhears Talbot tell her mother that the child is in the way, and determines to run away. She runs across MacDonald, a tramp, tells him her story, and that she will first visit their picnic place. A wild search ends when McCrea finds her and Miss Ames follows for the reconciliation.

It is a picture which the entire family may see, the presence of Shirley making it adaptable for children.—AARONSON, New York.

The Keeper of the Bees

(Republic)

Dramatic Romance

This picture is down-to-earth and homespun dramatic romance. Skillfully modernized in adaptation and treatment, it faithfully preserves the moving human interest spirit of Gene Stratton-Porter's novel. As the story is told, an atmosphere of intelligently applied sincerity predominating, there is a refreshing absence of theatrical heroics. Pitched to a rather serious key in which, however, there is no lack of comedy contrast, it is that kind of entertainment for which the theatre-going public has demonstrated its appreciation. The theme, natural and human, treating conflicting human emotions under unusual conditions, is directed and acted in a manner that fully capitalizes the value of these two entertainment qualities.

Set in the charming rustic locales made familiar to audiences by previous adaptations of Porter stories, "The Keeper of the Bees" tells of the experiences of Jamie, a World War veteran who believes he is living on borrowed time. Following a hitch-hike ride with blue-eyed Molly, an incident that makes him forget that his last six months on earth were to be one grand fling, he comes to Peaceful Bay, domain of the Bee Master. Aiding that kindly soul who has suffered a heart attack, he promises to tend the bees, insects of which he knows nothing and greatly fears, after the Bee Master promises him that he will have the aid of Little Scout during his absence. His meeting with Little Scout and his experiences in bee lore give him a new outlook on life.

Still dreaming of the blue-eyed Molly, whose identity he doesn't know, he walks by the moonlit sea where the girl comes and astounds him by asking him to marry her. Doing so, his bride deserts him immediately, and returning to Peaceful Bay to try to understand this strange happening he continues his partnership with Little Scout. The Bee Master dying, his property is willed to Jamie and Little Scout. A telegram informs him that his wife is expecting a baby. Going to the hospital he finds the child mother, who pleads with him to care for the child. He discovers she is not the woman he married. Bringing the baby back to Peaceful Bay, the infant is tenderly mothered by Aunt Margaret, the baby's grandmother, and Little Scout, who in the meantime has been revealed as a girl. Then the blue-eyed Molly returns, reveals that she had married Jamie just to get a marriage certificate to save her cousin (the child's mother) from dishonor and when the sacrifice of both is understood by all, the way is opened for a happy future for all.

The showmanship factor of this picture is the quality of the story. An all family attraction, with plenty in it to pique the interest of all, it is one that may be depended upon to receive the support and cooperation of those influences whose opinions carry weight. The character of the story is honest and straightforward, as in the work of the players. The outstanding exploitation angle is the Gene Stratton-Porter name and the quality of entertainment which her stories represent.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Raven

Melodrama

The entertainment of this picture is that which is expected of a shudder feature, full of fiendish and diabolical doings. It is not a picturization of the Edgar Allen Poe poem whose title it bears. An original wierd, nerve-tingling melodramatic story is related. In its telling, for the necessary production values it brings into use several of the torture devices described in other Poe works to accentuate its grim and grisly realism and illusion. Unless the quality is contained in anticipating how the arch villian is to become the victim of the cruelties he seeks to bring upon others, it is not a mystery picture.

Vollin is a demented surgeon genius. Saving Jean Thatcher's life, he becomes infatuated with the girl, who is strangely attracted to him, visioning her as "the lost Lenore" of "The Raven," in relation to himself. His ambitions are thwarted by the girl's father and her sweetheart, Jerry. To eliminate them and to win the girl, Vollin horribly disfigures Bateman, an escaped convict, promising him that if he will become his aide, his features will be restored.

Built up with crashing thunder storm backgrounds to get audiences into the proper mood, Vollin has Bateman put Thatcher under the knife edged pendulum as described in "The Pit and the Pendulum." He himself imprisons Jean in another torture chamber. Bateman, driven mad by the realization of what will happen to the judge, tries to free him from the horror of the pendulum. Jerry, finding a secret panel, is trapped in the chamber with Jean as the walls slowly close about them. A terrific fight follows between Vollin and Bateman, with the latter releasing the lovers from the danger and then

The Clairvoyant

(GB Pictures)

Drama

Strong dramatic material, with an unusual quota of action for a theme of this type, this adaptation of a story of the same title contains the entertainment elements of romantic complication, considerable suspense coincident with the action and a novel thematic idea, which should afford an opportunity for attention-attracting exploitation, that of clairvoyancy, or an ability to look into the future and foretell what is about to happen.

The English origin of the production should have no bearing whatever on the exhibition of the film in this country, since there is little in the way of English "accent" in the rendition of dialogue. Of the players the two stars are known and popular here. Claude Rains has appeared in numerous American-produced films and has previously demonstrated his ability, especially in this type of film. Fay Wray, in the feminine lead, is of course, familiar to all American audiences. The others will probably be unknown but are satisfactory.

Throughout, the film has been well mounted, and capably produced, the action sequences being especially effective. Much should be made by the exhibitor of the title and its significance, as well as the thematic point, the dilemma of the clairvoyant, whether he should give up the practice of his gift through love of his wife or continue as a duty to mankind. It is a question which, if properly presented in selling, may well attract attention.

Rains and Miss Wray, his wife, have a fake mind reading vaudeville act. At one performance, when Miss Wray loses her way going to the theatre's balcony, Rains suddenly, in something like a trance, discovers that he is able to divulge the contents of a letter held by a patron to bait him. Later on the train, when he sees a girl, Jane Baxter, who had been in a box at the theatre, he foresees an accident, leaves the train with his wife, mother and assistant, and Miss Baxter. The train crashes, and Rains is suddenly a nationwide headliner He demands and gets a high figure at one of London's best theatres.

The act falls down, and it is understood that Rains is only able to foretell the future when in the presence of Miss Baxter, who has fallen in love with him. Miss Wray becomes more and more miserable, but Rains feels his will not strong enough to break away from Miss Baxter and the duty he believes is his. He is about to be fired, when he foretells the winner of the Derby, a long shot. Miss Baxter's father, a newspaper publisher, employs him as a seer for the paper. When he goes to a stag affair in his honor, Miss Wray decides to leave him when she discovers that Miss Baxter is at the scene of the affair.

Rains's mother, whom he visualizes while at the telephone, dies in trying to stop Miss Wray from leaving. He makes up his mind to drop his gift, but in the newspaper office, about to resign, there comes to him a vision of disaster in a huge tunnel project under construction. The paper refuses to believe, he goes with Miss Baxter to plead with the men not to go on the night shift, is unsuccessful, and the disaster occurs. Many are killed, others unaccounted for. Rains is tried as causing the disaster because of the nervousness he inspired in the men. Miss Baxter, at Miss Wray's plea, agrees never to see him again. Rains is saved from jail as he is able to tell, in court, that certain of the men are safe. Miss Baxter leaves, and Rains and Miss Wray are once more happpy. —Aaronson, New York.

Dance Band

(Associated British)

Musical

Buddy Rogers, band leader, is the selling value in this British musical. He puts up a good performance in that capacity and as a piano duettist with June Clyde. In straight scenes neither of the leads is particularly convincing or sympathetic, and the best of the entertainment is provided by the burlesque of Fred Duprez, a very amusing acrobatic inebriate by Richard Hearne, and a clever dance number by Jack Holland and June Hart. For those who like El Brendel, there is Steve Geray purveying a similar sort of humor and Magda Kun, who might have been given more to do, puts over "Gipsy Love" very well.

The story is that Buddy Milton, dance band leader, is on the way to London with his boys to enter a contest in which the prize is a big recording contract. On the train he encounters Steve Geray, a penniless Hungarian with a song to sell and adds him to the party. In London Buddy falls for the girl leader of an all-woman band which has also entered the competition. Without disclosing his identity, he deputizes for an absent pianist and helps her to a triumph in a variety engagement, incidentally putting over Steve's new song as a piano duet with the girl.

At a reception preceding the band competition Buddy's real identity is revealed to the girl and her manager. The latter, believing Buddy's scheme is to leave the girl without a pianist hires a gang to steal the instruments belonging to Buddy's boys, but by accident they steal those of the girl musicians instead. Buddy and his boys, their own turn over, rush the gang and recover the instruments.

The selling angles, apart from Rogers, are the very fair story values and the individual performances mentioned. Spectacular values are not a strong point and speedier direction would have made a great deal more of the material.—Allan, London.

Men on Wings

Drama

The motion picture of Soviet Russia takes to the air in this latest importation from the state-owned cinema, and is chiefly concerned with indicating, carefully, how well trained, and how rigidly disciplined, in the interests of the progress of Soviet aviation, are the students of flying of the country.

The Soviet producers have apparently come to the conclusion that weighty tragedy and the straightforward exposition, in pictures, of Soviet achievements do not in themselves make for motion pictures which contain the elements of entertainment. Thus, in this film has been interjected a bit of lightness, a touch of action and something of romance.

However, in so far as general exhibition in this country is concerned, the picture offers little of sufficiently different, or novel, or unusual material to bring it into the classification of the exceptional among importations of foreign pictures. It is of course couched in the native Russian, and the superimposed subtitle translations of portions of dialogue might well have been increased for readier understanding of details of the plot development.

Beliayev is commander of a Russian flying school, and in love with one of the students, a girl, Galya. The commander is a reckless daredevil, but an expert flyer. When he cracks up, because of stunting, in a new ship he is testing, the head of the school, Rogachev, suspends him from service after his recovery. Against a background of parades of students, comedy moments and the indicated routine of the school, the story finds Beliayev despondent despite the effort of Galya to cheer him. Rogachev, although an older man, is early indicated as himself in love with Galya, but trying to keep the fact from her. Rogachev goes into the hospital for an operation, after also suspending Galya from the air when she herself executed some air tricks dangerous to herself, her plane and the ground crews. As Rogachev is operated on he restores her to active service, and she takes up for test a new plane of Rogachev's invention. It is a pronounced success, the flight watched by Rogachev and other patients from the roof of the hospital. Recovered, he and Galya are assigned to two different sections, far apart, but with the understanding that the parting is anything but permanent, as she realizes she loves him rather than Beliayev.—Aaronson, New York.

Fairly Amusing

There is a fair amount of entertainment and amusement in this comedy, featuring the diminutive Ernest Truex. When Ernest loses everything at poker, including the piano and his savings, while wife and mother-in-law are away, he is in a real spot. They return, assume he has bought the nearby new house she wanted with the money, and proceeds to move in with mother-in-law. With the aid of his pals, Ernest decides to scare them out of the house with a ghost stunt, and the boys go to work with sheets. From that point the comedy waxes extremely noisy, until it all comes out in the end as Ernest's trick works.—Running time, 20 minutes.

WAR DEPARTMENT HALTING SPREAD OF ILLEGAL SHOWING AT CCC CAMPS

Authorization by Contract Must Be Given by Itinerant Showmen Before Exhibitions Will Be Permitted at the Camps

Illegal exhibition of motion pictures by itinerant exhibitors at federal Civilian Conservation Corps camps has been nipped in the bud by prompt action of distributors, resulting in a blanket order by the Adjutant General of the War Department designed to check the practice.

While unauthorized showings have been rendered difficult in that direction, the "Jack Rabbit" circuit operator continues to ply his trade in an illegitimate manner, according to complaints reaching the distributors, who are aware that this type of operation is more prevalent in the summer when conditions are favorable for outdoor exhibitions. Too, established exhibitors have always considered the "Jack Rabbit" an undesirable competitor from the standpoint of general practice of the industry.

Numerous reports reaching the distributors' Copyright Protection Bureau from established exhibitors affected by the unfair competition that traveling circuits showing at government CCC camps were infringing on their license contracts and otherwise violating exhibition practices sent the distributors into action. Investigators conducted a thorough check of such showings, following up each complaint, and determined that a large number of violations existed in the nature of "bicycling" and "switching."

Derelictions Difficult to Trace

Because of the numerous subterfuges practiced by itinerant showmen, the distributor obviously cannot maintain a close check of the conditions under which film is exhibited. Also, tracing the derelictions of this type of exhibitor to their source entails a vast amount of sleuthing. Hence distributors appealed to the War Department. Effective cooperation was promptly forthcoming, the Adjutant General issuing an order to the commanding generals of the nine corps areas with the following definite instructions:

"It is desired that the attention of all concerned be invited to the necessity of requiring prospective exhibitors to establish their authority to display films in CCC camps by the production of a written license from the rightful distributor thereof."

The effect of this order is that itinerant exhibitors, regardless of how they conduct their shows, must produce a legitimate exhibition contract for a specific showing, with the specific camp designated by its number. Heretofore, such showmen had obtained films for showing at such nebulous locations as "CCC camp" or merely "a camp."

While the order has only just been effected, and its results will not be known for possibly several months, it is believed the vigilance imposed on the army camp officials will save the industry many thousands of dollars in distributors' rentals and in box-office revenue of exhibitors established near the camps who had been compelled to operate against the illegitimate competition.

Since all parties participating in an infringement of copyright are responsible, under the law, for damages sustained by the plaintiff, it is interesting that while the burden is placed on the exhibitor to prove that he is legally licensed, the responsibility is also made that of the government by its own action.

"Jack Rabbits" Expand Territory

What makes the "Jack Rabbit" methods of operation difficult to check is that while he may obtain his film from a legitimate source and in an entirely regular way, he does not always limit his exhibitions to the locality for which he is licensed.

The tricks of his trade are devious. There have been cases where film has vanished in transit or from loading docks and reappeared at laboratories where copies were made. The dishonest itinerant exhibitor may find an ally in a not-too-honest exchange shipping clerk or truck driver, according to the Bureau. Tracing prints as they are diverted from one theatre to another, from city to city and from state to state keeps the distributors' investigators constantly busy.

Exhibitors themselves furnish most of the leads relating to copyright violations. These result from the suspicion that an unfair practice on the part of a competitor is due to an unauthorized exhibition. Typical is the showing by a traveling circuit of product bought by the established exhibitor in advance of the latter's exhibition date. In a case of this sort, it might well be suspected that the showing was unauthorized in the town.

The "Jack Rabbit" is claimed both by distributors and exhibitors to be a reckless individual and violates federal, state and city regulations with equal abandon. Not long ago one of the tribe was found to have rented a barn-like structure for a showing, projecting the film onto the screen from a truck which had been backed up to the entrance. Taxes were not paid and there were no safeguards against fire and the only exit from the building was blocked during the performance. The distributors called in the local fire marshal and the show was condemned as a hazard.

While the "Jack Rabbit" type of operation is reported to be expanding this summer, merchants' sponsored shows also are on the increase. The reasons are twofold: first, the traveling circuit has popularized the sponsored free show among merchants; second, small town business men are fighting to keep trade from going to the larger cities nearby.

Industry Losing Thousands in Rentals and Admissions as a Result of Growing Practice of Illegal "Jack Rabbit" Shows

This summer has spawned a crop of "Jack Rabbit" circuits which are taking a leaf from the year-round exhibitor. As if the attraction of free entertainment is not enough, crowds are being drawn this year by the extra inducement of premiums and various devices in effect at theatres, such as "bank night." One operator of a portable traveling outfit in Kansas explained that his remuneration from merchants is based on the crowds he attracts to a town on show days, and the size of attendance also is a guarantee of future contracts. He said that a giveaway costing about 10 cents could be distributed to all women attending or a major cash prize given away, and he could still show a profit on the season's business.

Competition to Theatres Growing

The modus operandi of this type of "Jack Rabbit" circuit is this: The agent makes a canvass of the merchants in the town and signs them up for a service of usually three months, starting early in June. The amount of money he will obtain from the merchants depends on the nature of the establishment and the advertising value of the attraction to the individual merchant. A barber may contribute 50 cents a week; a department store $10. There is no definite quota, but whether the town is included in the circuit depends on whether the arrangement will show a profit to the showman exhibitor. A circuit usually comprises four to six towns, with the portable equipment making one-night stands in each once weekly. There are instances, of course, where local individuals operate free shows for the merchants of only one town, and these frequently are sponsored by the business club or chamber of commerce.

Standard Equipment Now Used

The traveling equipment is only a skeleton of what a well-equipped theatre must have; the total investment and overhead only a minute fraction of the established exhibitor's. While the "Jack Rabbit" operator has experienced difficulty in the past in obtaining standard makes of projection equipment and has had to resort to so-called "bootleg" brands, this year, however, there are standard equipments in evidence. When he cannot obtain this equipment through the regular procedure, he gets it through some legitimate exhibitor.

As to why distributors sell film to the "parasites" and "pirates," as they term them, in the first instance, the distributors point to the ingenious devices of the "bicycle" expert and protest that it is difficult to keep up with him.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

PRODUCERS WATCH COLOR FEATURE CLOSELY

Hollywood Correspondent

WILL color in films, plus third dimension, stave off the competitive threat of television? More than any other question, including the merger query, Hollywood is engrossed in exploring fields that these new technical advances are opening up.

Since "The Jazz Singer" and "Wings," pioneer talking-sound pictures, no motion picture experiment has aroused such Hollywood speculation as centers around "Becky Sharp," forthcoming feature in Technicolor. Producers familiar with all objections to color in feature length productions, principally the dominant exhibitor objection that color when so applied may prove detrimental in that it may detract from other essential values, are eagerly awaiting the public's reaction.

Producers Preparing

As sound, in completely revolutionizing screen entertainment, struck hard at the legitimate stage in all but the metropolitan centers, producers vision color application, providing it is commercially successful in "Becky Sharp," as not only another screen revolution but as a definite asset with which to meet future menaces to the industry.

Realizing that practical television, far from being a mere dream, is awaiting only the proper adjustment of financial and economic conditions to make possible its general public presentation, producers are preparing to meet the competition which this amazing scientific development is certain to precipitate. Likewise they are aware that color in feature pictures, instead of being instantly perfect, will still be in the experimental stage. Similarly they are convinced that television, no matter how far advanced in the laboratories, will be experimental at first.

However, technical and scientific branches of the industry are looking far ahead, and this time with much less doubt than in the case of sound. Color having demonstrated its value in the short subject field, producers are not considering it merely from the standpoint of the further embellishment of picture-making technique. At this stage, the production end foresees color as attaining its true worth and real objective when combined with "third dimension," another revolutionary development in which, without excessive ballyhoo, progress has been made.

The history of motion pictures having been the successful completion of a series of mechanical and scientific experiments, the next step looms as the long sought third dimensional perspective. That, plus color, may be filmdom's counter-punch to the introduction of television.

Producing in 14 Languages

Hollywood executives may feel their tasks lighter as they learn here for the first time that producing films in 14 different languages, in a studio where international rivalries permeated even actor ranks, was the job performed by Howard I. Young when as general manager of Paramount Productions, under Bob Kane in France, he produced 150 and 75 features in one year, by direct shooting. Mr. Young is now in Hollywood, teamed on special writing assignments with Jesse Lasky, Jr.

Seven stages were used twenty-four hours a day, and the first talking motion pictures ever made in Hungarian, Polish, Rumanian, Servian, Dutch and Czech languages were released.

Later, when the nationalistic fever spread, these countries started producing themselves, but Paramount pointed the way.

Mr. Young, under Mr. Kane's direction, divided the output into three groups, according to the financial return expected. In the first group were French, Spanish, Italian and German films. In the second group were Swedish, Polish, Portuguese and Hungarian. In the third group, Rumanian, Czech, Serbian, Dutch, Danish and Norwegian.

Nationalists from rival states were in constant hot water with each other. In order to maintain peace and harmony on the lot, a special police force was installed, and a completely new shooting schedule arranged to bring the most harmonious elements together, and keep the hot bloods apart. In one year, Mr. Young made 70 round trips between Paris and London, via the air. He helped launch Paramount production in England.

A One-Man Studio

In this day of picture companies with multitudinous stockholders, executive boards bristling with bankers, home offices jammed with officials and studios bulging with personnel, it is interesting to look at A. L. Rule, here to arrange for the release of his second picture. Mr. Rule is a one-man studio.

He made the successful "The Big Drive," released in 1933, entirely alone. His second, "The Death Parade," also is a compilation of official film from many nations. It shows rather more prominently than did "The Big Drive," the part women played in the World War, and features action of "The Battalion of Death," as well as many scenes of American women at the front.

Mr. Rule has been in the picture business since it was a sideshow. In 1906 he was elected first president of what he believes was the first organization of exhibitors. He was operating two theatres, one in Bellevue and one in Fostoria, Ohio. At that time, programs were one reel long, and exhibitors bought film outright for $100. A Mr. Neff conceived the idea of organizing a hundred exhibitors, assessing each a hundred dollars, buying a hundred films, and circulating their jointly owned product, thus reducing the cost of programs from $100 to $1. Mr. Rule became president because he owned two theatres and had to put in $200. The honor was not to be his for long, however, for it was discovered that he was too young to sign legal papers.

He conceived the idea of "The Big Drive" when he was a buck private in the 79th division. He set about buying film. Today he owns 1,000,000 feet of film bought from 100 different sources. This includes many reels smuggled out of Russia. While here, he is having the monologue of "The Big Drive" put into Spanish, and for that he had to have a translator.

"You see," he explains regretfully, "I can't write Spanish."

Director-Writer Cooperation

Director Edward Sutherland and Scenarist Preston Sturges developed a new twist to director-writer cooperation during filming of Universal's "Diamond Jim." Studio executives are of the opinion that it warrants further application.

Director and scenarist arranged to meet at the close of each day's shooting, analyze the rushes, and elaborate upon, polish up or eliminate sequences planned for the next day's work. Frequently both discovered that bits of action occurring during the day's shooting suggested and justified important alterations. Not only did the idea prove a time and money saver, but players in the picture realizing how it made their work easier entered into the spirit and contributed suggestions and named the plan the "Morning and Evening Edition of Script."

45 Features in Work

The first week of June saw Hollywood's active production program zoom to a new high peak of approximately 45 pictures in work as 10 started and one finished. Of the new work Fox is credited with three; MGM and Paramount a pair, and Radio, Warner and Maury Conn Productions one each. MGM contributed the completed pictures.

First of the Fox trio is "The Gay Deception," Lasky production which William Wyler is directing. It will feature Francis Lederer, Frances Dee, Charles Sellon. Shirley Temple is the star of "Curley Top" with John Boles, Rochelle Hudson and Jane Darwell. Irving Cummings directs. Third starter, "Way Down East," will team Janet Gaynor and Henry Fonda in the leads. Henry King is directing.

Paramount started "So Red the Rose," in which Margaret Sullavan, Pauline Lord, Randolph Scott will be seen. King Vidor is directing. Also in the work is "Smart Girl," a Wanger production which has for its principals Kent Taylor, Ida Lupino, Gail Patrick and Joseph Cawthorne.

At MGM shooting started on "A Tale of Two Cities," with Jack Conway directing Ronald Colman, Donald Woods, Elizabeth Allen, Mitchell Lewis, Blanche Yurka. Second new feature, "Glitter" (temporary title) will present Joan Crawford with Brian Aherne, Jean Hersholt, Frank Morgan, Arthur Treacher and Fred Keating. W. S. Van Dyke is directing.

On location at the United States Naval Academy, Warner started "Classmates." Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler have the leads. Frank Borzage is directing.

Radio began work on "Leander Clicks." The cast includes James Gleason, Edna Mae Oliver, Zasu Pitts and Olive Cooper. Ray McCarey and Gleason are co-directing.

The Maury Conn feature is "Born to Fight" in which Frankie Darro, Roy Mason, Barbara Worth and Edwin Maxwell will be seen. Allen James is directing.

"Hands of Orlac," MGM's completed feature, will present Peter Lorre, Frances Drake, Ian Wolfe, Isabel Jewell and Sara Haden. Karl Freund directed.

. . . CONTACT
back of the news

A great newspaper is more than news and print and white paper.

Back of it—the quality that gives it leadership in its field—is the human element, the editor and his staff and the multiple contacts, daily and hourly, with the industry leaders whose continuous activities condition the line of growth of the industry.

The extension of such contacts into the international field (Motion Picture Daily has correspondents in every important capital of the world) is another mark of its leadership among the wide reader group which it serves.

Add to this the genuine service which Motion Picture Daily renders, swiftly and accurately, in the interest of production, distribution and exhibition and it is easy to understand why it is awaited each day in thousands of places throughout the motion picture industry.

1790 Broadway $6.00 per Year

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

Shine Mason, down at McAllen, Texas, has just sent us the weekly program of his Palace theatre and we note some very excellent pictures, such as "Our Daily Bread," "Les Miserables," "Goin' to Town," "Our Little Girl" and "Laddie." Shine says for us to come down and see them. That would be an awfully good suggestion if we didn't have to drive something like sixteen hunded miles to do so.

We want to thank Shine for this courtesy and also for the many courtesies shown us while we were in the Valley, and they were many, and we can only hope to repay him some time in some way but we don't know how at this time. There are several boys down in Texas that we still remember, some of whom have horns that are no longer than some Nebraskans we know.

No Eggs in Sight

Arthur "Bugs" Baer says that the NRA has turned out to be the biggest omelet ever made from the eggs of a blue eagle. Art must have been full of prunes when he said that, for the blue pelicans have been on the nests now for over a year and there isn't a darned egg in sight yet.

Film and Other Progress

We hear people say now and then that pictures are getting no better. Whenever we hear a man say that it brands him, in our estimation, as being awfully misinformed. We used to hang onto the handles of a single one-horse cultivator, and if we worked hard we could cultivate a whole acre of corn and go to bed at 7:30. Today we see the boys riding a double cultivator and they will cultivate six or seven acres and go to a dance and get home at five in the morning.

Uncle Josh and Aunt Lucy used to go to town behind old Fan and Jerry and ride on a board across the top of the wagon box. If they started early they might get to town by noon if the mud wasn't too deep. Today Uncle Josh says to Aunt Lucy, "Jump in, Ma," and Ma jumps in and Pa steps on the gas and away they go on a cement road and within 45 minutes they are in town.

We heard a man say that the girls were better looking back when he was fourteen or fifteen years old than they are today, but that's probably because he looks 'em over more carefully now.

The time was when they would spend fifty thousand dollars in making a picture, which made good press agent material and good copy for three sheets. Today fifty thousand dollars would hardly fit up a dressing-room and buy rouge, lipsticks and a collar for little Fifi for some of the stars. We used to play pictures back before the picture industry stopped chewing gum and put on long pants, back in the days of John Bunny and Alkali Ike. Today pictures are being made for the entertainment of the American public and not altogether to entertain gum-chewing Lizzie and wise-cracking Charlie. Yes, sir, pictures are 500 per cent better than they used to be, thanks to the Legion of Decency.

Redwoods and "Sequoia"

Permit us to pause right here for just a moment to call the attention of you boys in the projection booths to the fact that the HERALD has printed, and now has on sale, Richardson's Hand Book on Projection, which will enable you boys to brush up on projection. You can get it of the HERALD, 1790 Broadway, New York.

A lot of people can detect the difference between a love-song crooner and a cross-eyed man trying to sing in Bohemish. Some can't.

Tonight the Moon theatre is playing "Sequoia," a picture which was produced in the Sequoia forest, and starring Jean Parker.

The word Sequoia is the botanical name (or is it botanical) given to the redwoods of California. We have never seen the sequoia forest on the eastern shore of California but we have seen the redwood forest on the western shore and if you have never seen a redwood forest your knowledge of timber must have been confined to underbrush. We drove April Shower inside of a standing hollow redwood tree once and the photographer failed to open the shutter and the picture was a blank piece of paper. Dog-gone such carelessness, anyhow.

We saw a redwood tree out there that was 17 feet in diameter and an old timber cruiser told use that it would cut 500,000 feet of lumber. Maybe this one ought to go to Ripley, we don't know, and maybe he went on the theory that "big figures don't mean a thing to me," but more likely he took us to be a cornbelt sucker, and he had us guessed right. Well, anyhow, we'll betcha that "Sequoia" will be a big picture, and we'll betcha we see it too.

Beer and Prosperity

"BEER BIG BOON TO CALIFORNIA!" Headline in today's paper from Sacramento. We used to see this slogan on spare tire covers on automobiles. "VOTE FOR BEER AND PROSPERITY." Oh, yeah, when they try to drink themselves into prosperity a lot of 'em die before they get there. Fool arguments have been the cause of a lot of sour stomachs.

The other night we saw Jackie Cooper in "Dinky" and the picture was a good one and pleased us very much. Jackie started out in a military school and was captain of the football team but shifted over to the house of correction for boys after he learned that his mother had been sent to jail. The two institutions of learning locked horns in a football game and Jackie was singled out to carry the ball over the line and win the game for the incorrigibles, which he did. The heroes always win 'em out in Hollywood. That's probably the only place in the world where they never lose a football game but then who'd want the hero to make a fumble instead of a touchdown anyhow? We saw our hero make a fumble once which lost game for the home team, but not so with Jackie. Better go see this one, it will be worth while.

There Goes the Pension

Kids are sometimes quite interesting and sometimes quite funny. The other night we were watching a picture of a jazz orchestra on the screen. The cornet player gave a couple of squeaks, the drummer hit the bass drum and cymbals a couple of whams and the trombonist got up and put his hat in the bell of the horn and gave three or four squawks, and little Willie, who sat in a seat just in front of us, nudged his Dad and said: "Say, Paw, what's that feller shaking that stick at 'em for, is he mad at 'em?" and Pa said to him: "No, he ain't mad at 'em, he is the director; he is leadin' 'em." And Willie said: "Where's he leadin' 'em to, Paw?" And Ma leaned over to him and said: "He's leadin' 'em back to the garage; now will you shut up and keep still."

We had it all planned out for a good, long fishing vacation with the theatre boys up in Minnesota just as soon as we got that Old Age Pension, but now congress has pulled a bonehead and turned a cold and clammy shoulder on it, and now we will try and get us a job keeping the rabbits off of that shelterbelt. Uncle 'Leazer Biggs says we should never fry our fish until after we catch 'em.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Walter Connolly—A dandy. Has everything the public likes. A little long for double billing. Everyone satisfied, including the box office. Running time, 100 minutes. Played June 2-4.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown middle class patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Walter Connolly—A very good picture which pleased. Did not do the business expected as there was plenty of sickness due to scarlet fever epidemic. Running time, 105 minutes. Played April 20-21.—Harriette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Fay Wray, Victor Jory—Very good. Personally think this is the best Robson to date. Played it on double bill with Tim McCoy in "The Westerner" and did better business than on most of the socalled specials. Played May 4-5.—Harriette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PRESCOTT KID: Tim McCoy, Sheila Manners—This Western pleased very much. Good acting and story up to par. Running time, six reels. Played May 18.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

First National

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Adolphe Menjou, Gloria Stuart, Glenda Farrell—A swell picture. Many laughs, good singing, an all right story; but somehow it did not draw.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—The Warner formula for musicals has lost its appeal for our patrons, and since this is just another of that type, it failed to pull or give satisfaction. Some nice musical numbers scored as all Warner musicals have done and some spectacular scenes, the best of which was the "Lullaby of Broadway" number. Powell did nice work, but even he could not save the whole thing from being mediocre. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 19-21.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown, Alice White—Good picture, but not as good as "Circus Clown." Joe is certainly popular with the younger element. Business only fair. Too warm. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 2-3-4.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Middle class downtown patronage

WHILE THE PATIENT SLEPT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee, Patricia Ellis—Satisfactory. Not a big picture, but these two comedians pull. But I think that the title hurt the picture. It has suspense and drama with some comedy. Not average business for this pair.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Fox

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—We turned several away the first night and did a good business each night. The story fit the star like a glove and pleased 100 per cent Played April 11-12-13.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN PARIS: Warner Oland—My folks like 'em and this was no exception. Light business on account of slump in our mills. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 21-22.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Very good action picture. The action fans and kids went for this in a big way. Running time. 65 minutes. Played May 26.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—A Zane Grey western that will please. Not a shooting, wild-riding story but it has all the action necessary. Business better than average. Played May 10-11.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: Played this on double bill to best midweek business in months. A marvelous picture from an historical standpoint. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 22.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore, Bill Robinson—As a draw this little star is tops right now. All of the action and story is fed to her and the question is how long is she going to last. My guess is that Fox is forcing her too fast with four pictures in one season. Of course they have to make hay while the shun shines on this little girl. But I for one don't think they are using good judgment to force the issue this way. Her pictures are much the same, a little wise-cracking and a little dancing. But more power to her if she can keep it up. But I don't think she can from some of the audience reaction, which has been highly favorable so far, but some of them say when you have seen her in one, you know just about what is coming. Bill Robinson should have had more of a dancing part. They would have liked to see him do more of his stuff.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Fox feeds Warner Baxter the weakest stories that they have. Apparently they don't seem to know how to cast this popular star. In spite of Gaynor, who as a draw is slipping, the picture had too weak a story to go over. It was a lot of character sketches mostly. I wish they would cast Baxter in something that he could get his teeth into once more. When I think of his superlative work in "In Old Arizona" and then see him in this namby-pamby stuff, he has my sincere sympathy.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Warner Baxter, Janet Gaynor—I read a report that one man's audience got so hungry that many went out in search of a restaurant. I took heed of the report, boosted the pop-corn before the show, and they took it heroically. In fact, we all think that it was a darned good show. Don't know when I have heard so many favorable comments. Show it. Runing time, 70 minutes. Played May 24-25. —Sam A. Kimbell, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

OUR LITTLE GIRL: Shirley Temple—A very pleasing production and Shirley surely draws them in and entertains them in grand style. Two days extra good business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 29-30.—Dennis J. Mooney, Princess Theatre, Ordway, Col. Small town patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper—We read several adverse comments on this picture but it is all to the good both at the box office and as entertainment. It made money for us. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 26-27.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

SPRING TONIC: Lew Ayres, Claire Trevor—Title good; actors favorites in our town. Plot interesting and airy, never complicated, though full of suspense. It's short and peppy. Mitchell and Durant plus stray tiger furnish most of the laughs. Children said one of the best pictures we've played; grown folks smiled and said it was a nice, amusing picture. Drew above average. Running time, only 58 minutes, so can stand lots of shorts. Played May 7-8.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton—Poor entertainment; a trite story and a waste of film. Did not raise a ripple in the audience that sat bored throughout the picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—Average George O'Brien, which means to us a good move away from the red side every time he comes to our theatre. Running time, 66 minutes. Played May 30. —Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—Good western. O'Brien goes over pretty good here. Played May 8.—Hariette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—Here is a picture you can go out and boost. It wasn't sold to us a special but we have played lots of so called specials nowhere near as good as this. In my opinion it deserves four stars. Played March 29-30.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MGM

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Constance Bennett, Clark Gable—Another hit from MGM that went over in great style to our general Saturday crowds. "Stu" Erwin is well liked here and Miss Bennett is also a favorite. Thanks, Metro, for a good time at my theatre. Running time, 73 minutes. Played May 11.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sulliven, Madge Evans, Edna May Oliver, Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew—An adaptation of Dickens' famous novel that is pleasing to those familiar with the story. Characters brought to life on the screen in a very captivating manner. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 26-27.—Dennis J. Mooney, Princess Theatre, Ordway, Col. Small town patronage.

GIRL FROM MISSOURI, THE: Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone—We had an idea Miss Harlow got by on her looks but we now know she is a real actress. The supporting cast with Franchot Tone and Patsy Kelly is one to be desired. Played May 26-27.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye—We ran this picture on Saturday night and it was well received by the general patronage. The song "When I Grow Too Old to Dream" makes a hit with everyone. Better than some of the specials for pleasing the patrons. Running time, 82 minutes. Played April 20.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre. Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—A swell picture that pleased everyone. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 18.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

SOCIETY DOCTOR: Virginia Bruce, Robert Taylor —A hospital locale; just an extra good programmer. Played on double bill to fair business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played May 28-29.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SOCIETY DOCTOR: Chester Morris, Virginia Bruce—Should do business in any theatre. Good cast, good story and everything to make a swell picture. Running time, 68 minutes. Played April 25.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda—Was agreeably surprised in this picture. Several exhibitors have been panning Carrillo very much but I can't uphold them in this as I think he puts the picture over in great style. Pleased 100 per cent here and that's what I'm after. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 4.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

Monogram

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Charlotte Henry, Norman Foster—Good, clean entertainment but not in the same class as a grosser with "Girl of the Limberlost." Played to only average weekend business. Played May 23-25.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MYSTERY MAN: Robert Armstrong—We used this on a surprise preview showing and the surprise was on us for it proved to be a lively piece of entertainment that gave real satisfaction to the patrons. A nice blending of melodrama, comedy, romance and touched up with a bit of mystery, it provided a program picture of real interest. Running time, 62 minutes. Played May 18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

TOMORROW'S YOUTH: Dickie Moore, Martha Sleeper, John Miljan, Gloria Shea—Very mediocre story and production, chief interest of which is some splendid work by the young star. Otherwise a waste of time, even for preview showing, which is where we spotted it. Running time, 62 minutes. Played May 25.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—We lost money on this picture and it did not please those who saw it. Played April 14-15.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert—A wonderful production that made us some money but pleased only about 50 per cent of the cash customers. Running time, 101 minutes. Played May 26-27.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

CLEOPATRA: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Henry Wilcoxon—Magnificent production, but a flop at the B. O. Have yet to see a costume feature in the hit column. They just don't take with the crowd. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 8-9.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown middle class patronage.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL: Richard Barthelmess, Joe Morrison, Helen Mack, Gertrude Michael—Depressing, too gruesome, and the dialogue between Barthelmess and the warden was grossly overdone in the depicting of the men he killed. It died the second day. The house cat and I made up most of the audience for the second day's showing.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft, Jean Parker—Just a program picture. If they like Raft, it will get by. We have neither praise nor knocks. Running time, 66 minutes. Played May 17-18.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES: George Raft, Jean Parker, Anna May Wong, Kent Taylor—Good entertainment that held up for three days. Double billed it with Columbia's "That's Gratitude" and it made a fine combination. Patrons pleased, which is the desired result. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 5-7.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown middle class patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell—A credit to the producers and a winner at box office. Authentic shots of India and a great story make an appealing attraction. Running time, 110 minutes. Played May 19-20.—Dennis J. Mooney, Princess Theatre, Ordway, Col. Small town patronage.

LOVE IN BLOOM: George Burns, Gracie Allen, Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee—While Burns and Allen are the draw stars, due credit for youth appeal and entertainment must be given to Dixie Lee and Joe Morrison. Story okay.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

LOVE IN BLOOM: Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee—Just an average program picture. No kicks and no praise. Fair business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 27.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Walter C. Kelly, Andy Clyde, Richard Cromwell, Betty Furness—Has the stuff the common folks like, good homey laughs and situations.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: W. C. Fields, Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—A very good production that has everything to please. The little colored kids' choir led by the little fellow with a head like a "Rocky Ford Melon," as Fields says, are unusually good. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 31.—Dennis J. Mooney, Princess Theatre, Ordway, Col. Small town patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Joan Bennett, Queenie Smith—There is a lot of Fields in this picture and I would say too much a southern story of the steamboat days. Comedy romance. Just average business and I am of the opinion that Crosby is losing out in popularity. He is no stand-out as a draw any more; he is a typed star, so many songs, etc. The same goes for all his pictures. However, there is no question who stole the picture from Crosby.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, City, Ind. General patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord—Here is a real special that pleased all classes 100 per cent. It did not draw as well as we expected although the business was satisfactory. Running time, 73 minutes. Played May 12-13.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard, Shirley Temple—Drew fairly well but not the kind of a story Shirley should be cast in. Fox is putting this clever little star in much better stories.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES: Arthur Byron, Janet

Beecher—We thought this a good picture, but it failed to draw. No outstanding stars, but the cast is good Running time, 83 minutes. Played May 24-25.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N D Small town patronage.

ONE HOUR LATE: Joe Morrison, Helen Twelvetrees, Conrad Nagel—Nice little picture; pleased 80 per cent. Miss Twelvetrees well liked here. Good for any day of week. Running time, 75 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Middle class downtown patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Charles "Chic" Sale—Just the kind of picture we want for the weekend showing and we had a satisfactory box office and it is satisfactory entertainment.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Charles "Chic" Sale—Too many murders to please the kids. Some walked out while some cried. Pleased the adults. For those that like this kind of entertainment.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Zasu Pitts, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Laughton turns in the surprise role of the season with as fine a piece of characterization as is apt to come out of Hollywood. A cast of comedians make the most of every situation and line, with the result that patrons are limp from laughing when they leave the theatre. Business not too good, but no fault of the picture. Audience satisfaction decidedly favorable. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 26-28.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland, Zasu Pitts—Two days to extra business and everyone pleased. This fellow Laughton is a real character actor; recently played here in "Barretts of Wimpole Street," and the two parts are entirely different characterizations and he was perfect in both. "Ruggles of Red Gap" was a widely read novel and the picture drew and satisfied. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 17-18.—Dennis J. Mooney, Princess Theatre, Ordway, Col. Small town patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard, Margo—The show is okay. Some liked it, some didn't. But Raft is a bad draw in this house in anything he appears in. We can't get any play on any picture in which he heads the cast. For all that, Paramount thought they had another Valentino in him. He carries no weight at the box office and that will tell the story of "Rumba."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SCARLET EMPRESS, THE: Marlene Dietrich, John Lodge—Heavy drama; so heavy it almost sank us. A fine production for the little art theatres, but not for the tired business man or his family. No box office. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 15-16.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Middle class downtown patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott—Another Zane Grey that drew much better than average business and pleased. Running time, 60 minutes. Played April 7-8.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—If you ask me, would say this is one of the greatest air pictures to date; it goes over with a bang from the entertainment standpoint and what a box office "wow." Everyone connected with the making of this picture deserves special mention.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—The critics have found plenty of faults with this but it proved the kind of fare our patrons like. Pulled very good business in spite of local conditions and pleased the great majority. Running time, 75 minutes. Played May 24-25.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO

BEYOND THE ROCKIES: Tom Keene—Tom Keene Westerns always please my patrons as there is plenty of action, good singing in most every one and that pleases 100 per cent every time. Running time, six reels. Played April 27.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—This picture did not draw for me, while it is not a bad picture. Katharine Hepburn is not popular here. Photography was very dark due to so many night scenes. Played April 27-28.—Harriette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N Y. Small town patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Irene Dunne—There may have been many pictures made better than this one, but I cannot think just what they are right now. Again Irene Dunne carries away the show. Astaire is great but he is using good judgment in making way for others in the picture. Astaire's dances are the best thing of their kind on the screen today, but Fred, I urge you not to try it without this marvelous Rogers. She steps right long with you and you need her to make it real good. Business better than average in spite of the fact this is a late date for this territory.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Irene Dunne—A good picture. However, these musicals with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers are all more or less the same and if you have seen one you have seen 'em all. Running time, 105 minutes. Played May 18.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Ginger Rogers, Francis Lederer—Good program picture that got some good comments and did fair business. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 22.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—If you want to please your patrons with snap bangup entertainment "Silver Streak" will do it and not disappoint you in the least. Edgar Kennedy in the comedy role of pilot engineer is a scream. I never saw more realistic acting. Running time, 78 minutes. Played May 16.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

United Artists

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—Fine production, well received. However, with the exception of the Eddie Cantor pictures, this U. A. program has been a disappointment. Pictures not made available until antique and forgotten. Signed contract in 1933 and still waiting for "Roman Scandals." Never again. Running time, 120 minutes. Played May 26-28.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Middle class downtown patronage.

Universal

BRIDE OF FRANKENSTEIN: Boris Karloff, Colin Clive—Photography, sound, settings, cast, all the tops. Those who seek shocking entertainment will find this to their liking, even though it is not the shocker they expect to see. For some reason, the monster has lost his ability to bring on the goose pimples and spine tingling, and while this pulled a nice business, it did not prove too satisfactory to our patrons. Running time, 77 minutes. Played May 14-15.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Thetare, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

FOUR NEW CONTRIBUTORS

Four more showmen, their theatres located in the East and the South, have joined the host of contributors to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department of the HERALD. They and their theatres are:

CHARLES NELSON, Fay Theatre, Jasper, Fla.

D. M. REARDON, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass.

HAROLDE T. YOUNG, Palace Theatre, Farmville, La.

HARRIETTE LERICHEUX, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y.

UNITED AIR LINES

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert [illegible] I would put it in the top 10. But it cost so much that I don't make expenses. They just won't come in to Universal's big ones. They have been too full of sob stuff, and loving somebody they shouldn't, etc. I couldn't make 'em believe this one was different. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 28-29.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall, Frank Morgan—Sat in audience at a neighbor's house and saw this one. My opinion is that Universal should give a pretty girl like Margaret Sullavan a decent picture; she sure does well with the part she has. Some of the best comedy ever conceived in this one; some of the cleverest shots, etc., but, brother, it's so long and drawn out that it depresses one to sit and follow the plot. Miss Sullavan should take up where Janet Gaynor left off back there a year or so ago and not every try heavy stuff; we need someone as talented as she properly cast to justify admission charges to our theatres.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

MISTER DYNAMITE: Edmund Lowe, Jean Dixon, Esther Ralston—Don't promise your patrons another "Thin Man," even though the story is by that same author. While this lacks the class of that hit, "Dynamite" can stand on its own merits and prove good entertainment. A comedy-mystery with the comedy element predominating in a big way. Chock full of wisecracks that keep the patrons laughing. And a new comer, Jean Dixon, just about steals all honors. Hope she's cast in many more pictures. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 22-23.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE MORE RIVER: Diana Wynyard, Frank Lawton, Colin Clive—Terrible, and the exaggerated English accent made it worse. Just a waste of time and celluloid. One of those that send the manager into hiding until the agony is over. Running time, 89 minutes. Played May 31-June 1.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Downtown middle class patronage.

Warner

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—One sweet musical comedy that clicked in a big way with the payees. Many told us it was the best of that type they had ever seen, which may be putting it a bit strong, but this should click anywhere. And Vallee proved himself entirely adequate as screen material, but Dvorak's dancing was too amateurish to be convincing of any ability along that line. Nice business and gave splendid satisfaction. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 17-18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Short Features

Educational

BIG BUSINESS: Musical Comedies Series—When Jack Greene, Geneseo, Ill., said, "What a pain in the nick this was," he expressed my opinion exactly, as this short was about as poor as I ever ran. I recall one exception, "Then Came the Yawn," which was worse, if possible. Running time, 2 reels.—Harriette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BLACK SHEEP, THE: Terry-Toon—Good as the average. Running time, 8 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

BOUNDING MAIN, THE: Song Hit Story series—One of the best shorts we have ever played; sound perfect and photography wonderful. Running time, 1 reel.—Harolde T. Young, Palace Theatre, Farmerville, La. Small town and rural patronage.

FLYING OIL: Terry-Toons—One of the best Terry-Toons. Running time, eight minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

HOW AM I DOING?: Chick York, Rose King—Not much to praise; nuff said. Running time, 2 reels.—Harriette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BIG TOP, THE: Frolics of Youth—One of the best ever made. Running time, 20 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

BACKS TO NATURE: Todd-Kelly—Got plenty of laughs and pleased the majority. Running time, 2 reels.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

BALLAD OF PADUCAH JAIL: Irvin S. Cobb—Just about as good a two-reeler as you can get. Cobb has been pleasing my crowd very much. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

HEARST METROTONE NEWS: Edwin C. Hill, announcer—Satisfactory in every way.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

HOLLAND IN TULIP TIME: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—If any of the exhibitors haven't played this yet, do so as soon as you can get it booked. The most beautiful short I have ever seen. Done in technicolor. Running time, 1 reel.—Harriette Ie Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

STRIKES AND SPARES: Oddities Series—A very good short which brought me extra business due to special advertising in connection with a new bowling alley which had opened up but a short time before I played this.—Harriette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SWITZERLAND, THE BEAUTIFUL: Fitzpatrick Travel Talk—A very interesting travel talk of Switzerland with some pretty scenes. Running time, 1 reel.—Harriette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WHEN THE CAT'S AWAY: Happy Harmonies—Another clever Happy Harmony subject. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Paramount

KEEP IN STYLE: Betty Boop Cartoon—Betty Boop cartoons are always good and this is no exception. Running time, 7 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

SADDLE CHAMPS: Grantland Rice Sportlight Series—Interesting and fast moving filler with a western flavor. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SHORTY ON THE FARM: Paramount Varieties—Good novelty short that clicked nicely. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO

CUBBY'S STRATOSPHERE FLIGHT: Cubby the Bear Cartoons—A good cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

DANCING MILLIONAIRE: Blonde and Red Head Series—My idea of nothing. It has a few laughs but it is no help to hold up a weak feature. Running time, 19 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

DAY WITH THE DIONNE QUINTUPLETS, A: Special—If you haven't played this one, do so and advertise it. It will bring people into your theatre whom you have never seen before. Try it and report. Running time, 1 reel.—Harriette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

DUMBBELL LETTERS: Short and silly. Didn't go over. Have replaced them with RKO Color Cartoons. Running time, 5 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Middle class downtown patronage.

LA CUCARACHA: Steffi Duna, Don Alvarado—A stunning all-color short that is a credit to Pioneer Pictures and RKO. It has music, dancing and beautiful colorings. A high class short subject. Running time, 2 reels.—Harriette Le Richeux, Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PARROTVILLE OLD FOLKS: Rainbow Parade Cartoon—Color will not save such offerings as this one is. Does not deserve a place on any program; just no entertainment in it.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

PATHE NEWS: Odd Issue—Think this is the best newsreel made and they certainly scooped the rest of the bunch on the "Dionne Babies." Running time, 10 minutes.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Middle class downtown patronage.

SOUTH SEASICKNESS: Edgar Kennedy Comedy—A house-emptier; just put this on and see them file out. This sort of so called comedy is out in my house; it will not do.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

United Artists

PECULIAR PENGUINS: Silly Symphonies—Splendid color cartoon of the Silly Symphony series. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

DEMI-TASSE: Doane Musical No. 1—One of the best and most varied of the screen vaudeville type of presentation we have ever used. Well liked here. Running time, 18 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HENRY'S SOCIAL SPLASH: Henry Armetta—Good slapstick comedy with the ever popular Armetta doing his usual laugh-provoking stuff. Running time, 19 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SKY LARKS: Oswald Cartoons—Fairly good cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

STRANGER THAN FICTION: No. 2—Always interesting and favorites with our patrons. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Vitaphone

BLUE AND THE GRAY: See America First, E. M. Newman Travel Talks—Played this on Memorial Day; it was excellent and particularly appropriate on this occasion.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville Wash. General patronage.

FREDDY MARTIN and HIS ORCHESTRA: A very good novelty musical. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

VAUDEVILLE REEL NO. 3: Pepper Pot—These subjects are very popular; this one no exception; excellent. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

PIRATE TREASURE: Richard Talmadge, Lucille Lund—We picked this up late, but it is fine for the children. Dick sems to have retained all the pep he had in the old silent days. This serial packs a good punch. Running time, 20 minutes each.—D. M. Reardon, Globe Theatre, Holyoke, Mass. Middle class downtown patronage.

RUSTLERS OF RED DOG: John Mack Brown—Frankly was glad when I read "The End." Might fit in some places but too much Indians, too much yip-yapping. Universal did not fail in its part to build a wild and wooly western and had some good shots. Simply did not click and failed as a business getter.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy, Noah Beery, Jr.—Sorry to write that his one has gone flat and all but the kids are wishing that it was over. Beery Jr. is my idea of nothing. All he can say is "Oh Gee!" and "It's the unwritten law." It started big but is all flat now, and I think I'll put it on the end of the show. Running time, 20 minutes each chapter. —Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

New 16mm. Equipment Out

Bell & Howell, Chicago equipment manufacturer, has announced a new 1,000-watt 16mm. sound-on-film talking motion picture projector for use especially in large auditoriums seating 2,000 or more. Because of the size of auditoriums intended to use the equipment, according to the company, a separate-unit high-fidelity amplifier of exceptionally high-power output is employed.

Seeks Show's Advance Agent

R. N. Hurt, of the Alger Amusement Corporation, operating 10 theatres in Illinois with headquarters in Peru, asks MOTION PICTURE HERALD to assist him in getting in touch with A. C. Gibson, advance agent for a traveling show known as "Mel Roy's Spook Party." Mr. Hurt says that four Alger theatres remain unplayed by the show on a circuit booking.

Dismiss Theatre Suit

The suit of Gwynn Amusement Company, Baltimore, against Forest Park Theatre Company and Perry Amusement Company, has been dismissed. The action sought to restrain the defendants from building a theatre, and sought to have the ordinance permitting construction declared invalid.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

ENDS JUSTIFY MEANS?

The flood to our door of graveyard and monster exploitations on the recently released so-called horror pictures, brings this question to mind:

"In following an undoubtedly definite audience trend to sensational picture fare, do managers who hi-power these dates obtain by means of it sufficient extra business to compensate for box office losses, expected or otherwise, from patrons repelled by this strength of bally?"

We say "strength of bally" and not type of picture, for not infrequently there have been overenthusiastic exploitations indicating more cold-blood-running than the attraction, though entertaining, was able to deliver.

Although there are sizeable numbers of theatre fans who take their screen horror without a chaser, producers realize that the percentage of those who like their chills a bit diluted is far greater, and temper their product accordingly. This middle-of-the-road treatment though aimed at the largest box office target possible, may not fit the demands of every situation. Thus theatremen in publicising these attractions are tempted to add large dashes of their own ballyhoo paprika to season.

Which of course may be well and good where a manager correctly interprets the tempo of his patronage in this respect. If the folks want shock, let 'em have it, sez he. And if the picture does not furnish enough raw meat, then perhaps the theatreman feels obligated to do so in terms of bally.

Assuming that most managers handle this sort of dynamite with respect and judgment, nevertheless there are others not well enough equipped by experience to do likewise and thus may be treading on extremely thin ice in endeavoring to whet normal appetites for thrills with overdoses of horror exploitation.

Whether or not the ends justify the means is a moot question.

SUMMER THEATRES

Again this year managers in resort spots are, it is hoped, girding themselves against the coming of the summer theatre now preparing to debut in approximately 100 communities. Although hardly strong enough to constitute a general menace to the box office, the movement for this form of seasonal entertainment is undoubtedly spreading and will continue to do so.

How much, if at all, the summer theatre will cut into picture grosses depends only upon the efforts put forth by managers concerned with holding their own.

THE PRESS BOOK ADVANCES

Resounding and reassuring is the answer of Fox Films to the demands of Round Tablers who have expressed themselves forcefully in these pages on the subject of press book weaknesses. For what must be considered one of the most progressive steps yet taken by any producer to bridge the deep chasm between the advertising wants of the man in the field and the home office advertising department is the one-day convention held in New York last week by Fox on "Dante's Inferno," and which, we are informed, is to be repeated from time to time on other coming releases.

Circuit heads from sectors near and far and their advertising chieftains were brought together to screen the picture, and then to discuss at length the best ways and means of selling it in every situation.

For this purpose, Charles E. McCarthy, Fox advertising and publicity director, had prepared a wealth of rough layouts, poster and lobby suggestions, all embodying various selling angles and attacks. These were analyzed, criticized, amended, approved in turn by the visiting showmen, and the results will be found in the press book—more power to it.

We take no pains to hide our pride in announcing that among those who took a leading part in the proceedings were such representative Round Tablers as Harry Browning, Ollie Brooks, Howard Jameyson, Bill Hollander, Morris Kinzler, Gus Lampe, George Tyson, Charley Winchell and Ed Whitaker.

"SO YOU WON'T TALK, EH"

It seems that Morris Blendess, operating the Tivoli Theatre, in the borough of Brooklyn, was fingered by the law for issuing throwaway on "Whole Town's Talking," with Police Department Pass printed on it in bold type. Blendess stated he got the idea from a Columbia press book.

Columbia Broadcasting has recently issued a new set of regulations, aimed to restrict the general conduct of programs within the confines of good taste. Now, if they can work out some plan to curb the radio in the apartment upstairs—

THE MONSTER IS LOOSE. Harry Black split his trailer on "Bride" at Loew's Poli, New Haven, with added material to the effect that Frankenstein was on the loose, had trailer stop at that point and spot thrown upon box where "monster" was prepared to go into action. Then Harry's gang rushed out of the wings, shot down Mr. Frankenstein, after which the trailer continued.

Brient Scores Beat On NRA Decision

Reading the announcement of the Supreme Court NRA decision in the Richmond morning paper, Elmer Brient, of Neighborhood Theatres in the Virginia capital, immediately consulted Messrs. Thalhimer and Bendheim, circuit heads, who pledged support of the NRA principles at their five theatres.

Elmer then contacted the evening paper, obtained an extension of the deadline long enough to rush into print a three column splash, reproduced below, which was the first ad of its kind and according to Brient, beat the town to the punch.

Posters containing the same information, radio announcements, and further ads in the morning paper were topped with a page one story of the theatre heads' action, all of which proved to be institutional stuff.

Historical Lamp Display For Strand's "Oil" Date

Featured among the many excellent windows secured by publicist Irv Windisch on "Oil for the Lamps of China" at the New York Strand was a tiein with General Electric for window in one of the prominent Times Square drug stores. The flash showed examples of lamps as used from 600 B.C. until the present (see photo), each labeled according to date of the period. Back of window was a showing of copies of the book.

Picture also came in for mention in local daily's dress designing contest wherein Windisch offered guest ticket to winning entrants, theatre getting a 15-day break on this. Jean Muir hair style was planted for co-op ad by department store beauty salon.

Other exploitation included letter to schools on educational value of the picture and invitations were extended to explorers, scientists and authorities on China. Pipe poster of Pat O'Brien was spotted in all local United-Whelan metropolitan stores and the Fifth Avenue Southern Pacific office devoted full window to a giant set piece on the date.

"Prepared For Summer?"

Are You There, Mr. Culbertson?

Assistant Sam Bader at the Skouras, Crescent, L. I., suggests utilizing back page of house programs for bridge problems and offering tickets for correct solutions. Sam, an expert at the game, further offers his assistance to other Skouras managers in preparing problems and says local stationery or novelty shops can be contacted to defray program printing expense in exchange for copy credits.

Police Cooperate On Circuit Drive

Unique and forceful was the plan suggested by Minnesota Amusement head man John J. Friedl, and worked out by circuit ad head Charlie Winchell, for the distribution to the individual managers of the details of George Irwin's high-powered campaign on "G Men" at the Lyceum, Duluth, Minn. Irwin played the first circuit date on the picture and to impress the possibilities of his campaign upon those playing behind him, the following stunt was put over:

Sales manuals on the picture gotten up by Winchell which included the Duluth drive were turned over to the district managers, who delivered them personally to the police chief in each town. Chief then called the manager to his office, bawled him out for a lot of things and climaxed the lecture by handing to the theatreman the sales campaign manual in a sealed envelope marked "Police Department—Important." Cooper said that envelope contained a set of instructions which manager was supposed to follow through to the letter of the law. Blowoff came of course when the showman opened the envelope and found the manual with a strong lead pep letter from Friedl.

"Becky Sharp" Press Book Features Color Angles

Selling the all-color "Becky Sharp," RKO's ad head S. Barret McCormick and his crew have turned out a smart press book featuring a triple-fold, die-cut rainbow effect cover with the rest of the layout designed to make the theatremen further color conscious. This idea is followed through in displaying accessories which all have extra color printing.

Eight page tieup section headlines a "Becky Sharp" color week, with all promotions in keeping. Publicity includes series of romantic episodes involving the heroine, stories on various phases of Technicolor, and features covering London at time of picture, illustrated with full map of the Mayfair section.

Sees First Talkie At "Hero" Premiere

It seems that the St. Louis police chief had never seen a talking motion picture and to fill that aching void, Chick Evens had the head copper attend a special screening of "Public Hero No. 1," which debuted at Loew's State, in company with Chester Morris, who came to town for the opening. In return for which, the chief let the boys have for lobby display a lot of guns and other weapons used by former St. Louis gangsters now out of circulation.

The appearance of Morris meant a lot of newspaper publicity including plenty of co-op ads as a result of a shopping tour made by the star, who also distributed his autographed photos in the lobby. And not the least of the other breaks was a batch of publicity hung up by Billy Ferguson in town for the opening, Billy landing a lot of interviews in print and on the radio.

Honest-to-Henry accident insurance policies to all patrons was another stunt dished up with all the trimmings, the insurance outfit going for a lot of display ads tying in with the gag, the president of the company coming to town to supervise the handling.

Telegraph hookups were made with both companies for stickers on messages and jumbo window wires. The switchboard stunt was put on in a downtown window with cooperation of the phone company, two gals operating the board and calling many local numbers.

And in New York

Newspaper campaign for the "Public Hero" date at the New York Capitol featured two column type ad reproduced below offering reward to first person bringing to the theatre any of the ransom bills involved in the recent Weyerhaeuser kidnapping. Serial numbers of ransom bills were posted in the lobby.

Wisconsin Round Tabler Takes Down Quigley Silver; Bronze Won by Baltimore Showman

Finishing first in the judging, but not too far out in front, Al Sindlinger, manager, Warner's Appleton, Appleton, Wis., snaps across the tape to win the Quigley May Silver, going to town on Paramount's "Goin' to Town" to win the jackpot.

Second by a nose, and a short one at that, is Herb Morgan, Loew Baltimore publicist, who whanged over a he-man campaign to catch the judges' eyes for the Quigley Bronze, on United Artists' "Les Miserables."

Three entries land May First Mentions. Angie Ratto and Lou Brown, at Loew's Palace, Washington, came down the stretch neck-and-neck with the Baltimore winner, finishing one short vote behind on Par's "Goin' to Town." And next over the line crowding the field were Sam Gilman, of Loew's Harrisburg, Pa., on MGM's "Mark of the Vampire," and Dwight Van Meter, of Warner's Astor, Reading, Pa., on Universal's "Bride of Frankenstein."

Their May efforts netted both winners Quigley plaques for the first time in the history of the Competitions, and hot have they been after the honors, too. As have the "Firsts," all three having been consistent entrants for many months, and listed not infrequently in the winning columns during the past months.

The Honorable Mentions in May run about up to expectations, with names of previous winners dividing the honors with theatremen who have clicked for the first time. These latter include independents as well as affiliates, and come from as far separated spots as Nova Scotia and West Virginia.

A last moment switch in the May judges' committee made possible the inclusion of John E. Kennebeck, managing director for Paramount in Australia, New Zealand and the Far East. Mr. Kennebeck, in town for the Paramount convention, consented to serve before his return to "down-under." A. P. Waxman, ad director of Gaumont British, originally scheduled to act in May, will do so in June.—A-MIKE.

HOTEL PREVIEW. State officials, criminologists and educators attended Joe DiPesa's Boston Loew's State preview of "Les Miserables" at the Hotel Statler.

Chorus Girls Plug "Bill" for Siegal

To plug his "Broadway Bill" date at the Pittsburgh Warner Ritz, Ed Siegal had chorus girls in cafe show circulate at tables distributing cigarettes attached to card with picture copy (see photo) girls carrying imprinted shopping bags containing the ciggies.

While attending the fights, Ed noticed from time to time that patrons were paged from the ring so he had a message delivered to announcer who informed all that Ed Siegal's booker was calling to inform him that his booking of "Broadway Bill" was okay.

Animate Trans-Lux Front On "March of Time"

For the third issue of "March of Time" at the Broadway, New York, Trans-Lux, an interesting animation was used for the front (see photo), described as follows:

Panel consists of three shadow boxes, each of which contains a blowup of eight by ten action stills from the various episodes of Zaharoff, munitions maker, Huey Long and a Mexican hanging. Each of these was blown up to give ten-inch figures, and a three-phase flasher lighted each shadow box as it rotated, making sufficient movement to catch the attention of the passing throngs. The changing lights helped to heighten the effect of a motion picture screen.

Newsreel was also sold out front with different shots for each door panel upon which were spotted heads, such as "Sports," "Headlines," "Feminine News," etc., the shots being segregated under each head.

Deering Uses Galley Ship For "Miserables" Bally

A replica of an old-time galley ship was constructed on truck for bally by Francis Deering, Loew's State in Houston, Texas, on "Les Miserables." Sixteen men in costume with huge negro beating Chinese gong were part of the attractive float, which paraded about streets.

Special screenings were held for clergy, educational heads and critics at which "opinion cards" were distributed and later used as thumbnail interviews in local newspapers.

Fishkin Builds Animated Lobby for "Lost City"

An animated lobby display was constructed by Louis Fishkin, Alba Theatre, Brooklyn, on "Lost City" in the form of a modern scientific laboratory with ultra violet ray machine and heating apparatus (see photo) promoted from local hospital. Buzzers going full blast with green spot thrown on display heightened eerie effect.

On "Little Colonel" an attractive window display was secured from five and ten consisting of miniature replica of southern homestead with flowers, grassy lawns, etc. Stills of Shirley with copies of "Little Colonel" books were also prominently displayed. Harry Kriegsman, assistant, aided Louie in putting over the campaign.

"I TALKED WITH MELNIKER"

Contacts and Goodwill Buildups Most Vital to Newly Assigned Manager, Lionel H. Keene Told

by E. J. MELNIKER

Manager, Loew's Grand, Atlanta, Ga.

So many times the question has been propounded, what must a man know or be able to do to come under the heading "A Good Theatre Manager"?

In thinking out loud I have jotted down some notes that are, in my opinion, some of the essentials often necessary and go a long way toward getting into the above mentioned classification.

Let's analyze the problem from the very start. I say this because in nine out of ten cases the men who are managing theatres today are doing so in localities that are foreign to them. Most managers are sent to various cities by theatre operating companies as total strangers. I don't mean by this total strangers to the business, but strangers to the particular city to which they are assigned. They may have been great managers in "Paducah," which case was probably the cause of the transfer, and as a rule this transfer is a promotion.

Requirement number one is to know your staff, entire personnel, and gain their confidence. There are several factors inside the theatre that can very often make or break a manager. The most important is the projection room, the life blood of your operation. Good projection means a good performance and a good performance means satisfied customers.

Newspaper Goodwill

Now more or less in the order of their importance, let's take the newspapers. The good will of your newspapers means a great deal. They can do you many good turns and their friendship is invaluable. It is just as important to have a friend in the copy boy or runner as it is to have a casual acquaintance with the publisher. Know your display advertising department, they are important in your operation. The man in the composing room can make you feel good, too, because if he is on your side . . . well you like preferred position . . .and don't we all.

The society and woman's page editors are an important factor because your appeal is largely to women and these particular pages are devoted to getting their attention. The sports editor is a great movie fan and likes to inject movie news in his page and if he is your friend you'll get the break often.

Naturally I have left to the last circulation, amusement and news departments. You can take advantage of the circulation manager's friendship because he always is looking for stunts and theatre stunts appeal to him. Pride is the dictator as far as the amusement and news departments go. I say pride because a manager always prides himself in getting an extra break in art and a little extra in the news columns occasionally. Make a pal of the critic and you'll be repaid many fold. We all anxiously wait to see that great big lay-out on Sunday and swell up with pride when we see our particular operation spread out like a tent over the opposition. This has been done and can still be accomplished by that personal touch.

There are times when a little extra break in news columns may sell a few more tickets. Don't pass up the city editor. One always likes to break through the forbidden places. I mean the columnists. Most papers have these specialists today. You never can tell when a thought might click with them.

Stresses Knowledge of City

Know your city. It is important because in knowing your city you get to know the business interests. You have many things in common with the business interests. They can help you sell your merchandise. The manager of a theatre is just as much a merchandiser as the mechandise man of a large department store. I would even go so far as to say that the theatre man leads the way because is it not true that mercantile establishments are today adapting more and more the showman's methods to his enterprise?

Modern and progressive business men value the showman's angle and appreciate your ideas and contacts when they are on the level. True in approaching any business to get their assistance in putting over your show is selfish in a way but the wide awake business man will see the value and thank you for it. It is only natural with many modern showmen to get the other fellow to bear the burden of expense. Anyone can spend money but there is a differentiation between managers that advertise and those that exploit.

In recent years air-conditioning has become a very important factor so far as it pertains to the good operation of a theatre and this has some reflection on the manager. The manager is not expected to be an engineer but he should have some understanding of this technical development. Just because you have a cooling plant don't think that all you have to do is turn it on when the weather is hot and turn it off when it gets too cool on the outside of the theatre. It is a study. In the final analysis it is just using common sense and good judgment. If you will condition your theatre in accordance with the outside temperature you will very nearly solve your problem.

Now here is a very important department of the theatre that every good manager should pay a great deal of attention to. I refer to the art department. If you are fortunate enough to have in your employ an artist always remember that he is the one to construct your ideas. He is the man that applies his specialized training to your creative mind. Harmony with this department is essential because what this department turns out for the public to gaze upon reflects in a great measure the knowledge you have of your merchandise. Your merchandise may be sold in many ways. It is up to you to convey to your artist whether the particular production should be sold from the standpoint of the star value, the title if co-related to a book, the director value and many times a combination of all.

Wilkinson Tells 'Em About Wide Range

Publicize Wide Range With Four-Page Tab

As there is no newspaper in Wallingford, Ct., George Wilkinson aided by Walter Eberhardt of Electrical Research, put out a four page theatre tab to announce the installation of Wide Range at the Wilkinson Theatre. Headline that caught most eyes was: "International Accord Reached: Wilkinson Theatre Unites With World Leaders and Installs Most Modern Western Electric Wide Range."

To spread the word further, loud speaker truck (see photo) toured the town and surrounding areas. Front and marquee were decorated and bannered.

"Ruggles" Trio at the White House

Ruggles Week Proclaimed For Shuttee's Date

Ingenious indeed were the exploitations of the prize winners in Paramount's recent "Ruggles" contest, especially so of the first-money campaign submitted by W. B. Shuttee, Main, Pueblo, Col., some of the highlights of which are herewith set down.

Because of the fact that the story concerned the old west of which Colorado is proud, Shuttee promoted the city council to declare a "Ruggles" week just ahead of his date, and whooped it up right with a street parade that included cowboy band, fire truck, cowhands on horses, old time carriage with Ruggles, 1907 Ford with driver in costume and a flock of old time cyclists.

Also effective was a ten-minute locally-made short showing old time street scenes, picnics, gatherings, etc., the photos being borrowed from old residents and newspapers. Then shots of five modern establishments were taken and tied into the picture, with the cooperating merchants paying for the whole thing. Special p.a. hookup was made for the announcements to explain the various shots, old and new.

Another highlight was an "old sweethearts' party," sponsored by daily, with special show given for the 25 oldest married couples, who were furnished transportation, lunch, etc., paper running a flock of stories.

"Prepared For Summer?"

Contests Feature La Falce Drive

Walter Winchell no less was the judge in one of Frank La Falce's newspaper contests on his prize winning "Ruggles" at the Earle, Washington, D. C., in which cash and tickets were given for the best "thumbnail" descriptions of the various stars in the picture. Paper ran story and cut of different star each day. Entries were sent to Winchell, who picked the winners.

Inspired by Ruggles being the stake in the poker game, was another newspaper contest put over by La Falce on unusual bets, cash and prizes given for those submitting the funniest bets ever won, lost, or heard of. Special preview for locally resident members of the Washington State Society also hit the papers, and effective, too, was a street bally of three characters in the Ruggles costumes who distributed heralds round town. Accompanying photo shows the trio doing their stuff at the White House.

Yet another newspaper contest was effected through the "faceless photo" stunt. Shots of pedestrians were taken in various parts of the city and run in the daily with faces routed out. Those identifying themselves were "ducated" at the Earle.

GIVE YOUR SHORTS A BREAK

Proper Publicizing of All Units On Program Ofttimes Influences Preferences of Show - Shoppers

by DICK WRIGHT

District Manager, Warner Ohio Theatres

The theatre-going public is shopping today more carefully than ever before. Perhaps you've noticed prospective patrons look over your front displays and have heard them compare your attractions to those offered by opposition houses. After comparing values by treking from one theatre front to the other they finally decide to which theatre they will give their patronage. On numerous occasions I have observed such exhibitions of show-shopping and analyzed, to a certain degree, how a decision was reached when the opposition houses were showing feature attractions of equality insofar as star and story value were concerned. The theatre given the preference, in these instances, was the one which billed its entire program . . . making every effort to impress the shopper that here was value. . . . a show bigger and a little better than the one around the corner.

"If It's Worth Playing"

Today, most managers no longer look upon the short subjects as program fillers but are aware of the fact that they are of utmost importance on the bill and have definitely established themselves as box-office factors. Sometimes, unfortunately, a theatre manager may become a little neglectful and fail to emphasize their full value to the public . . . taking for granted that it is sufficient to merely call attention to the added attractions and refer to them as . . . "A cartoon-comedy-travelogue" and not further qualify them. However, it is always well to bear in mind that good old slogan . . . "If It's Worth Playing—It's Worth Advertising."

Inasmuch as short subjects do have a definite place in the program they should be capitalized upon and given the proper selling. Exploit them as you would your feature attraction . . . in your newspaper ads . . . heralds and programs . . . on your front and in your lobby . . . if space permits, in your marquee . . . and whenever a logical tieup presents itself go after it! Today some of the exchanges are making up accessories on shorts, stills, one sheets, cut-outs, etc., all helpful aids for the manager to make every possible appeal to the shoppers.

Within recent months there have been any number of outstanding short features released and many managers have taken special interest in selling them effectively. No doubt their extra effort had its profitable effect at the box-office and the results obtained amply repaid them for their extra activity. Conclusive proof that shorts do have exploitation possibilities is offered in the following specific examples. When our managers played the "A & P Gypsies" they realized that their playing of this short would cause more than ordinary interest due to their radio popularity. Window and counter displays, streamers, imprinted paper bags, and tap display ads in the newspapers, all served effectively in calling attention to the engagement of these famous musical emissaries. "Show Kids," a two-reeler technicolor short, recently released, offered a good opportunity to tie in with the local dancing schools and their instructors. Direct appeal was made by bulletin board announcements, follow-up letters and invitations to a group of dancing teachers. Shoe store windows displaying toe, ballet and tap slippers tied in to complete the exploitation.

Keeping pace with the general excellence of the feature attractions for the next few months, the short reels which are scheduled for release offer opportunities to build an effective program around the main attraction. A number of the single and double reel band shorts will give opportunities of planting stories in the radio columns calling attention to the screen appearance of these popular radio bands and personalities. In advertising them it is well to bear in mind that many of these shorts, in addition to other releases, contain some real names and they should be sold in proper relation to the drawing value of the feature.

No doubt you have played shows several times when your short subjects have saved the program—so why not stress them in all of your campaigns, sell them for all they are worth and give them the importance which they are entitled to?

comes from down in South Boston, Va., where he manages the Princess Theatre for the South Boston Amusement Company and don't forget, "L. D.," your obligation to the club doesn't cease with filling out an application blank; we expect to hear from you as to what you are doing to put over your pictures, so get out the old typewriter and let's have it.

is another member from the Southern contingent to join. Jim manages the Akrama Theatre in Elizabeth City, N. C. A great town that it's been our privilege to visit, so we have more than a passing interest in receiving exploitations from your city, Jim; it brings back recollections and we await with interest your contributions.

manages the Plaza and State Theatres in Bellefonte, Pa., working from usher, advertising man, doorman, stage manager and then manager. Fred's first job in theatre business was to help build the house he now manages, and though a comparative youngster at the game, we expect things from him.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

FUN ON THE AIR

THE motion picture industry can now enjoy a ringside seat in the national arena wherein the young medium, medium we say, not art, of radio is beginning to discover problems and excitements of controversy of the sort the screen began to encounter many a year ago.

For instance, the radio and the newspaper press are getting ready for a first class war. The peace patched up in the Biltmore conferences a year or so back, resulting in the establishment of the Press Radio Bureau, to sit on the lid and dole out news to the air stations, is now at an end. The Bureau is to continue, but also the lid is off allowing wire associations to sell news to the air. This means the United Press, of Scripps-Howard affiliation, and the International News Service, the Hearst wire service. Meanwhile, the cooperative Associated Press sits on a sideline, with problems. Further, the newspapers are now to be discovered owning a total of about 115 radio stations. Then there is the Transradio Press, serving some 190 stations with news bulletins. The situation is intriguing.

Meanwhile, that great army of the unemployed, the club women, represented by the Women's National Radio Committee, has discovered the radio industry and wants to do things about it, affecting the tone and content of programs. The word censorship has not yet been uttered, but the idea is there.

IN THE LONG RUN

CURRENTLY there is an applicability to the motion picture industry in all of its branches in the basic principles enunciated in an advertisement which The New Yorker, smart and successful metropolitan weekly, first published in 1932 and now repeats in Printers' Ink. The display line of the advertisement is "The High Cost of the Sour Note." The New Yorker says:

"Did you ever stop to think, those of you who read and like 'The New Yorker,' and who think that its advertising pages are so interesting, that one reason they are interesting is what is NOT there?

" . . . But in the course of a year we have cause to decline a great deal of perfectly good advertising, or to advise our gripping solicitors to make wide circles around certain advertisers.

"Why? Snootiness? A thousand times no.

"Nothing we like better than cash.

"Nothing we hate worse than a censor.

"Nothing but one thing: The Sour Note.

"When there's a nice party going on in your penthouse or our back-parlor, there's nothing that jars quite so much as a serious genteel lecture on, for instance, feminine hygiene. The subject is unmistakably important, the moral pertinent, the social service worthy, the rhetoric okay—but not at this time and place. A lot of other subjects fall into the same category.

"You see, when we get out a paper, we feel for the moment like your host. . . ."

"And we're going to invite to our party only the kind of people you want to see and hear—whether they're writers and artists who make our text and pictures, or writers and artists who make our advertisements. Such Sour Notes as we can reasonably avoid we must, do, shall—so that your after-taste will be jake.

"Doesn't this cost us money we'll never get? Yes—our treasurer and statistician were just telling us how much more cash we would have taken in 'if only.' Stunning figures. Sure, it costs us money—at the moment. But in the long run (and seven years isn't so long) our self-denial has tilted into our till the second-greatest volume of advertising in any magazine. . . ."

Meanwhile bear in mind that The New Yorker is no children's magazine and does not really try to please "the old lady from Dubuque." It merely finds intelligent decency and consideration of the better tastes of its readers profitable.

MR. LICHTMAN'S HAT

THE election of Mr. Al Lichtman to the presidency of United Artists Corporation reminds us pleasantly of the whimsical fact that he got into the motion picture business because his hat blew off in Chicago. That was way back yonder. Young Mr. Lichtman was a dapper soldier in the recruiting service of Uncle Sam's army, in Omaha. He went to Chicago on furlough to get a job and buy a discharge. He had just been turned down after an ardent try at selling himself to a poster service, and was on his way to the train that would take him back to Omaha and the army, when a wind sweeping Michigan Avenue blew his natty straw sailor into the lake. It made him so angry that he faced about and went back to the poster office with a new head of steam and got the job. The job as poster salesman initiated his long career of showmanship.

IT looks like the golden bantam will be "knee high by the Fourth of July." . . . Shade grown mint is just right for juleping now. . . . The wild mallards have their first broods off the nest in Connecticut. . . . The black wasp is the surest for trout this season. We're busy.

This Week

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

COLOR

The new three-color Technicolor process drama produced by Jock Whitney's Pioneer Pictures for RKO distribution has made its world debut with the week ending Thursday at the Radio City Music Hall in New York with a box office gross of about $100,000. This is to be compared with a typical week with a good picture and good weather doing about $85,000. More recent weeks have taken between $65,000 and $70,000.

Incidentally, and only incidentally, the title of the production is "Becky Sharp" and Miriam Hopkins heads a pretentious cast. As was inevitable the production's color component overwhelmed the drama in the minds alike of the picture makers, the critics and the public. Opinions were generally favorable and often enthusiastic.

This picture, the first of a group of three by Pioneer, is to be taken quite as much as a promotion of the new Technicolor process as an amusement project. Its successful presentation makes it the most, and perhaps only, important technological development of the motion picture since the advent of sound-on-film. It is the next and more aspiring effort after the tentative and highly successful two reel "La Cucaracha," first release to demonstrate the new process.

At the end of "Becky Sharp's" first week it appeared that it was to be taken as a step in evolution rather than revolution, that no such disturbance of the art would immediately ensue as in the invasion of sound. See news report and pictures on pages 12 and 13.

PATHE FUSS

Quaintly as in fable from Aesop, the war of the smart foxes over the rooster, the Pathe rooster, continues, with this week additions to the array of documents in court in the issues officially between Pat Casey (forty shares preferred) and the new administration dominated by Robert Young, investment broker (2,000 shares preferred, 25,000 common).

The action which has been started, with Mr. Casey at the bat, in the Supreme Court of New York before Justice Edward Dore, changed complexion from a receivership action to a suit for accounting, when it was discovered that a receivership would automatically mature an amazing stack of outstanding obligations. The battle is after all for the custody of the rooster, not to chop off his head. Meanwhile answers are being filed to answers, with the litigants both making copy of literary, if not legal, merit.

Pathe is the oldest surviving motion picture corporation, beginning its American career in 1905. For something more than a decade the most of the news about Pathe has been made in the offices of bankers and brokers. For what Mr. Casey says about Mr. Young and what Mr. Young says about Mr. Casey and what Mr. Casey says back to Mr. Young and so on turn to page 15.

BRITAIN'S DENT

No results have yet come to the surface out of Arthur Dent's current invasion of the American market in behalf of British International Pictures. Twelve pictures are included in Mr. Dent's portfolio, ten of which were shown in rapid succession afternoons and evenings during one week to miscellaneous groups in which important film buyers were by no means conspicuous.

Mr. Dent brought across the Atlantic this week echoes of the internecine strife prevalent in the British production industry with declarations against the Hays Office service on British scripts and pictures which was requested by the British producers' association. Mr. Dent pronounced against the submission of British scripts to the Production Code Administration—good news for the overworked code administrators.

KENNEDY STUDIES

On the pretext of studies to formulate advice to Congress on new reorganization laws, the Securities and Exchange Commission has begun formal investigation of the financial history of Paramount. "Formal" is the qualifying word because the commission is without authority to do anything about what it may find out. Meanwhile observers of the scene observed coincidentally that Joseph P. Kennedy who is chairman of President Roosevelt's Securities and Exchange Commission, might himself become a highly informative witness if the commission is to sincerely engage in academic "studies" of the motion picture industry—since the histories of Mr. Kennedy's FBO and his operations along with banking friends in Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Gloria Productions might provide as much interesting clinical material as even the great Paramount. For the story of Mr. Kennedy's investigation see page 39.

PENNSYLVANIA'S SUNDAYS

A big nine per cent territory, the state of Pennsylvania, was due to be opened for Sunday showings of the motion picture this week if, when and as Governor Earle should affix his signature to a measure giving communities local option on Sunday pictures, passed by both the houses of the state legislature on Tuesday last. For a hundred and forty years Pennsylvania Sundays have been under Quaker "blue law" bans, and the motion picture is the only important amusement to lift the lid. And it was in Pittsburgh that the nickelodeon, the cradle of the art, was born with the opening of John P. Harris' little theatre at the corner of Pittsfield street and Diamond Alley on Thanksgiving Day in 1905. Story on page 10.

DOUBLE BILLS

Every studio in Hollywood is making a portion of its productions with a conscious eye on the growing double bill policy of exhibition, according to an analysis presented by Douglas Churchill, special correspondent for MOTION PICTURE HERALD in a contribution which takes the situation apart, studio by studio. Mr. Churchill observes Loew's State and Grauman's Chinese theatre, premier theatres of the production zone, going abruptly to double bills, and he wonders the while if the public is not declaring for what is really "a vaudeville of motion pictures." Meawhile it chances that Archer Whitford, managing editor of Everyone's, published in Sydney, traveling to London by way of New York, came to call at the HERALD office and remarked that "of the whole 1,400 theatres in Australia just exactly two are not running double bills." Mr. Churchill's article appears on page 11.

CODE SEQUELS

Debating the consequences arising from the Supreme Court's death blow dealt the Blue Eagle, exhibitors this week continued to express themselves for and against voluntary codes and voluntary arbitration, with majority sentiment appearing to favor the latter. Hugh Bruen of Seattle, president of Allied Amusements of the Northwest, disclosed a movement on foot to draft a voluntary pact for that territory, retaining the "good features" of the compulsory NRA agreement. Charles Picquet of Charlotte, N. C., and Morris A. Mechanic of Baltimore were among a number of others hoping for a continuance of the code idea. Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, and Barney Balaban of Chicago, are skeptical that voluntary codes will be feasible in view of the impotence of the compulsory pacts which had governmental backing. While voluntary arbitration again is in effect in New York, Fred Wehrenberg in St. Louis is finding exhibitor support for his arbitration tribunal

DETROIT CANCELS MOVIE CHATTER COLUMN TO SAVE FAN APPEAL

As a result of protests against its effect on the screen public, made by Willard C. Patterson, vice-president and general manager of United Detroit Theatres, Sidney Skolsky's column of Hollywood chatter has been stricken from the pages of the Detroit Free Press.

Early in the week, Mr. Patterson cancelled all display advertising in the Free Press. He explained that inasmuch as Skolsky's column was a destructive exposé of how illusions are created in pictures, it offered unfair competition that could not be overcome by advertising. As he put it, exhibitors have only two things to sell—personalities and illusion, and when Skolsky, or anyone else, destroys illusion by revealing how it is created, he is tearing down one of the big incentives for attending the movies.

Mr. Patterson and George W. Trendle, president of United Detroit Theatres, in cancelling the Free Press advertising, stated that while the paper was entirely within its rights in publishing whatever it chose, the fact remained that it was a waste of money to advertise in a paper carrying editorial matter detrimental to the personalities, and destructive to the illusions which the exhibitor's advertising endeavored to sell.

Executives of the Free Press, in announcing the elimination of Skolsky's column, stated that until they had heard Mr. Patterson's explanation of possible reader reaction, they had never fully understood or appreciated that exposé material like Skolsky's could be damaging at the box office.

Statements Deleted

Patterson's first protest against Skolsky's copy was made late in February when, during the showing of Warner Brothers' "Devil Dogs of the Air," Skolsky spread the news that James Cagney, a daring flying Marine in the picture, was actually afraid to look off a high building.

Following Mr. Patterson's protest, and his explanation of how much material might prove harmful to the exhibitor, it was agreed by the Free Press to eliminate from Skolsky's column anything that might prove harmful. According to the editors, a number of Skolsky's statements which they thought would be detrimental to the exhibitors' interests were deleted—but in spite of their watchful eye, repeated exposés of producer-tricks used in picture making continued to find their way into the paper.

When MGM's "Sequioa" was showing in Detroit, Skolsky removed considerable audience thrill by explaining that in a scene where a Chinese baby is threatened with death from the fangs of a rattle snake the baby was really in no danger because a piece of plate glass protected him from the snake.

The same week that MGM's "Reckless" was playing at United Detroit's United Artists Theatre, Skolsky's column carried the enlightening news that Jean Harlow neither danced nor sang in the picture, being doubled in each case by professionals.

Writing of 20th Century's "Les Miserables," Skolsky said that one of the picture's most dramatic scenes, featuring Charles Laughton and Fredric March, was shot in two parts—with a month elapsing between the first and second. Also, he stated that "Les Miserables" was shot in "only" 34 days.

Mr. Patterson contends that the use of the word "only" can be interpreted by the average movie patron to mean nothing else but that instead of being a carefully made picture, as it was, "Les Miserables" was merely an inferior, hastily-taken "quickie," which it decidedly was not.

Other material in Skolsky's column, that finally led to the cancellation of United Detroit display advertising in the Free Press, included the statement that when George Raft discovered the body of a murdered man on a deserted street at midnight, in "The Glass Key," it was not midnight at all—but noon on the Paramount lot, and that the door knob seen prominently at the left, leads to Marlene Dietrich's dressing room . . . that the exterior "atmospheric" shots for "Oil for the Lamps of China" were made on the site of Warner Brothers recent fire . . . that Paramount was having considerable trouble in arranging proper adaptations of Dashiell Hammett's stories . . . that "Public Hero No. 1" was produced hurriedly and at small cost, in order to cash in on the popularity of the Federal Agent type of picture . . . and so on.

Called Destroyer of Illusion

All in all, it is the contention of protest that Skolsky's column had the effect of destroying that all-important movie factor, illusion, by exposing producer methods, revealing production schedules and locations for settings, and by commenting upon the difficulty of getting satisfactory adaptations of stories by a famous author.

Whether or not Skolsky's statements are accurate is of little consequence, Mr. Patterson is quoted as saying. In any case, the fact remains that much of Skolsky's copy tended to inhibit audience thrill and to give the impression that pictures were hastily made and not worth seeing. Following this explanation by Mr. Patterson, and after it had been brought home forcefully to them by the cancellation of advertising, executives of the Free Press agreed that Skolsky's column was not constructive editorial matter for the paper's movie page, and decided to eliminate it. United Detroit's advertising schedule in the paper has, of course, been resumed.

Mr. Skolsky's column is primarily written for the Daily News of New York, the paper which, incidentally, invented the star system of picture ratings. It is syndicated to non-competitive papers by the Daily News. He is among the best known and most widely read of the newspaper correspondents specializing on the motion picture.

NEW YORK ALLOWS SUNDAY SHOWINGS

Theatrical stage shows on Sunday were legalized for New York City by unanimous action of the Board of Aldermen in adopting an amendment to the code of ordinances introduced on Tuesday by Alderman Murray W. Stand. The ordinance provides that performances may not start before 2 P. M. on Sunday and that all employers are to give employes at least 24 consecutive hours of rest each week. The state law permitting Sunday presentations, recently enacted, requires that each municipality pass its own enabling legislation.

Broadway film theatres are speculating what effect the new law will have on their Sunday operations, since the ordinance covers only legitimate shows, defined as dramatic and musical productions, and does not extend to motion pictures, vaudeville and incidental stage presentations.

If signed by Mayor LaGuardia, the ordinance will go into effect next month. Sunday performances in legitimate theatres will be opposed by Actors Equity Association, however, which is on record against them, and action has been indicated which would bar Equity members from participating in them. If Equity and the stagehands should agree, they are expected to demand double pay for Sunday.

The Equity Association shortly will mail out ballots on its national referendum to determine the sentiment of members relative to Sunday night performances in the legitimate theatre. The polls will close August 1, and the vote announced August 6.

PENNSYLVANIA PERMITS SUNDAY FILMS, KILLING ANCIENT RULING

Measure, Providing for Local Option, Expected to Receive Governor's Approval; Breaks Law in Force Since 1794

This week, after more than thirty years of battle, the motion picture appeared victor in the struggle for the right to show on Sunday in Pennsylvania. Tuesday the State Senate by 29 to 20 passed a measure giving communities local option on the application of the blue laws as applied to Sunday exhibition of motion pictures. That night the House of Representative concurred and the measure went to Governor Earle for a signature that was expected to be forthcoming without delay. Stage shows will continue under ban.

This breaks the Quaker rule, in so far as the screen is concerned, which has been in effect since 1794, and which has been given but little easement with the changes of time and modes.

When with the governor's signature the measure become a law each city, borough or township will have opportunity to free itself of the "blue law" shackles of 140 years.

The prospect promises profit alike to exhibitors and distributors. Pennsylvania represents nine per cent in the national gross, on the basis of a market open only six days a week.

The victory was the industry's greatest legislative accomplishment this year since state and congressional legislators began on January 1 to single out the motion picture for attack. Even in its final form the bill was in danger of being lost again in the shuttling back and forth between the two Pennsylvania houses. It took the only form, after several amendments, in which it could possibly be adopted in the present session which will adjourn sine die before the end of the week.

The original draft made it mandatory on every municipality and township to vote at the November general election on whether to permit Sunday pictures to be shown after two o'clock in the afternoon. The amended bill eliminates the compulsory election clause, but provides that any of the municipal subdivisions may vote on the question on petition of five per cent of the voters of the predominant political party in each particular district, or, upon the petition of a city or a borough council or a township board.

"Sinful" for Century and a Half

For nearly a century and a half the Pennsylvania blue law has, theoretically, at least, curbed Sunday activities regarded by the forefathers as "sinful." Strictly interpreted, this old law makes it illegal to sell anything on the Sabbath except the barest necessities to "keep body and soul together," and even these only at prescribed times of the day. Theatricals of all types always have been under the ban. Furthermore the law construes it as ungodly to engage in the barbering business, to sell newspapers, candy or tobacco.

While local sentiment has caused lax enforcement of many of the provisions, the letter of the law has been strictly invoked against motion pictures and similar amusements, both by church and kindred agencies which saw fit to make such diversions the target for unrelenting attack.

At every session of the Pennsylvania legislature for the past 20 to 30 years efforts have been made to repeal the blue law as affecting amusements, but always without success, until one year ago when the Sunday baseball ban was lifted. This was accomplished largely through the leadership of Assemblyman Louis Schwartz, of Philadelphia, who is one of the co-authors and one of the great champions of the bill permitting motion pictures which the Senate passed Tuesday. The Senate's action was accepted in political circles as being in the nature of a personal triumph for Assemblyman Schwartz and it was said that it may go a long way in advancing his ambition to rise to the mayoralty in his home city of Philadelphia in the fall election.

Associated with Mr. Schwartz in sponsoring the bill were Assemblymen Charles Melchiorre, of Philadelphia, and Thomas E. Barber, of Erie. Each of these legislators at the start of the present session fathered a Sunday opening bill for motion picture theatres. All three measures were similar in character, and, finally, the three sponsors agreed to consolidate their ideas in the Schwartz-Melchiorre-Barber bill which was the basis of the measure the Senate just approved.

As might be supposed, a most determined fight was necessary to save the bill from defeat in its hectic progress through Pennsylvania's legislative halls.

In these verbal conflicts even the members of the industry were not all arrayed on the side of a liberal Sunday. A minority group of independent theatre owners, through able spokesmen, joined with church folk and fought the bill stubbornly, charging it was in the interest of the big nationwide theatre circuits and that these big interests had sent paid employees to the capital at Harrisburg to stage demonstrations.

Some Churchmen Favored Bill

On the other hand, there were numerous ministers of the gospel who upheld the liberal Sunday idea of the bill. At one of the hearings eight ministers spoke for open Sunday shows, whereas only five preachers spoke against them.

At the last Senate hearing, at which circuits were charged with forcing their employees to travel to Harrisburg, "on a free ticket," to aid the liberal cause, independent exhibitors in opposition were led by Miss Jeannette Wilinsky, of Pittsburgh. A short spell of hissing directed at the opponents of the measure caused Senator George L. Reed, chairman of the committee, to threaten to have those responsible ejected. Other speakers against the bill were the Reverend Dr. W. B. Forney, of the Lord's Day Alliance and Reverend Dr. W. L. Mudge, secretary of the Pennsylvania Council of Churches. Both had been campaigning for some time against repeal.

John A. Phillips, president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, and Walter Vincent, leading exhibitor and head of the Wilmer and Vincent Theatres, were prominent among those who spoke for passage.

Before the Senate voted finally on the measure Senator Joseph C. Trainer, of Philadelphia, tried to introduce a second amendment which would have made counties, instead of the more localized city, borough and township divisions the units that would exercise the local option privilege. His motion went down with a thud.

Compromise Finally Necessary to Get Bill Through Senate Before Adjournment; Seen as Triumph for Louis Schwartz

As finally approved by the Senate, the bill provides that "it shall be unlawful under any circumstances to conduct motion picture exhibitions before two o'clock on Sunday afternoons, or after that hour unless the voters of the municipality have first voted in favor of motion picture exhibitions and sound picture exhibitions on Sunday as hereinafter provided, and in no case shall a person be employed as a projectionist or operator of motion pictures on Sunday unless he or she shall have had 24 consecutive hours of rest during the preceding six days."

Violation of these provisions shall subject the offender to a fine of not more than $50, or imprisonment for not more than ten days.

The bill sets forth that at the fall municipal elections in 1935, there shall be submitted "upon petition to the county commissioners of the city or borough council, or of the township supervisors, or supervisors, or upon petition of electors equal to five per centum of the highest vote cast for any office in the municipality at the last preceding general election, a question to determine the will of the electors of each municipality in this Commonwealth with respect to motion picture exhibitions, and such question shall be in the following form:

"Do you favor the conducting, staging, operating and exhibiting of motion pictures regardless of whether an admission charge is made incidental thereto, or whether labor or business is necessary to conduct, stage, operate or exhibit the same, after two o'clock post meridian on Sunday?"

Friends of the open Sunday liberality pointed out after the Senate acted Tuesday the obviousness of the necessity of exhibitors in each community campaigning in behalf of the issue.

Reference to Law of 1794

The bill further sets forth that "it is the intent of this Act to provide method whereby the will of the electors of each municipality with respect to motion picture exhibitions together with orchestral or other instrumental musical or mechanical musical accompaniment prelude playing or selection in connection with or incidental thereto, after two o'clock post meridian on Sunday be ascertained."

A fine of not more than $100 is provided for persons introducing any other form of entertainment than those specified above in connection with Sunday motion pictures.

Specific reference to the ancient blue law of 1794 is contained in a concluding section of the bill, which says:

"Section one of the act approved the 22nd day of April, 1794 (three Smith laws 177) entitled 'An act for the prevention of vice and immorality and of unlawful gaming and to restrain disorderly sports and dissipation' be and the same is hereby repealed insofar as it prohibits motion picture exhibitions and any orchestral or other instrumental musical or mechanical musical accompaniment prelude playing or selection in connection with or incidental thereto. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith be and the same are hereby repealed."

USE OF DOUBLE FEATURES SEEN AFFECTING PRODUCTION PLANS

Churchill Sees Policy Change to Duals by Chinese, Loew's State, Indicating to Majors Battle for Quality Is Lost

by DOUGLAS W. CHURCHILL
Hollywood Correspondent

Is the cinema headed back toward the nickelodeon?

With the conversion of two of Los Angeles' first run theatres—Loew's State and Grauman's Chinese—to the double bill, have the studios realized the hopelessness of trying to raise canned drama to the borders of art?

In brief, should Hollywood bother its pretty little head over making good pictures?

Apparently the industry is giving the matter serious thought. A check of the major lots this week revealed that during the 1935-36 season an alarming preponderance of product is being aimed definitely at the second spot on double bills. One studio admits that three out of five pictures are for No. 2 position. One concern that has always boasted of the quality of its films—every picture an epic—is grinding out C product and saying within its gates, "If that's what they want, they can have it." One lot has assigned less than one-third of its schedule to A and B classification. Another is deliberately making its better films of such length that the time element will force single billing — and at the same time is turning out quickies.

Hollywood is confronted with a problem and is attempting to solve it to its financial satisfaction. Of course, the town has known of the double bill for some time, but has done nothing about it. It was an exhibition matter. If pictures were good, they got the top spot and earned the money; if they were bad, they took the throw-in position without question. At least the studios strove to make first place. They aren't doing it any more.

Large Houses' Policies Indicative

The incident that convinced the majors that the battle for quality was lost occurred within the industry's own yard. Grauman's Chinese: from the showplace of the cinema to grind and, finally, to double bill. Loew's State: one of the more substantial money-getters of the West has gone from stage shows to grind and now to dual features.

Have the studios been wrong all these years? Is quality out of place on the screen? Instead of attempting to make films a medium of intelligent entertainment with a proper balancing of the more fundamental forms of drama, should Hollywood have concerned itself only with creating celluloid vaudeville? Apparently the answer to all is yes.

That there are indications in other sections of the land that the problem can be solved seems not to influence the studios. The fact that the two houses about which Hollywood knows most have gone double bill overshadows the rest.

The situation today is not brilliant. In presenting it in detail, studio names will be omitted as I have neither the time nor the energy to answer letters from irate sales managers. Every one here is familiar with the conditions; those outside with a reasonable knowledge of the business and with a meager imagination can vaguely identify the lots. For the purpose of dealing with the films, they will be rated A for specials, B for standard entertainment and C for the quickies leveled at the second spots in the theatres.

No. 1: Its good pictures are very good, both in quality and earning capacity, and its others are, for the most part, unpretentious, with some aimed strictly at the action market. In the past the two classes have been fairly evenly divided. This year, one executive states, three out of five will be C product, with the other two striving to be A class but some, of which will naturally, fall to B. The budget on the C's will run from $125,000 to $150,000.

No. 2: Of the approximately 50 films to be made this season, 20 will be assigned to C classification costing from $125,000 to $225,000.

No. 3: Out of 44 scheduled, 12 will be A's and the rest C's and nothing in between. The C's will run upward from $80,000.

No. 4: Fifteen of this concern's 50 are admittedly of C class with six A's and the rest B's. This lot has always striven for the spectacular and while it has whittled its C films down to budgets ranging from $125,000 to $225,000, it is not geared for the cheaper product, and the third string films give an appearance on the screen of being slapped together although they contain ample production value, but are carelessly written.

No. 5: One of the largest production schedules in town allows this lot to place 12 on the A list, probably 20 on the B roster, and while executives deny that second spot pictures are made deliberately, basing a prediction on past performances about 30 films will fall into the C class. This lot spends money on this latter class, the lowest cost film made last year showing $180,000 against it.

No. 6: This lot is fighting the double feature custom by increasing the length of its A and B films, it being hoped that lengthy and good entertainment will discourage the second spot programers. However, it is also making a liberal supply of C pictures for the producers know they can't win in one year, if they ever do.

Outlook Not Pleasant

It is not a pleasant outlook. Everyone knows that there were enough bad pictures when all studios were attempting to make only A and B class with films automatically falling into the second spot in the theatres when they lacked merit. Now with every studio aiming a substantial portion of its schedule at the fill-in position and with a high mortality rate inevitable among the better films, the progress that the screen has made is definitely threatened.

Says Every Studio Now Aiming Large Part of Schedule at Second Spot on Dual Bills; Analyzes Six Studios' Films

It may not be the good old law of retribution that is now kicking the producers and distributors in the trousers and turning the industry back toward the nickelodeon era and ending the advance of celluloid. According to local historians, the double bill was first conceived by a small exhibitor to whom the major distributors had denied product. So he went out and bought two bad pictures and, to compete, his neighbors with major contracts began showing two good films. Thus the practice began and from this point it spread until it enveloped the whole industry.

There are those within the studios that admit the soundness of the logic of those favoring double bills. One film does not necessarily make up a program any more than one story constitutes a magazine; the double bill has saved the lives of hundreds of theatres; the screen is a canned vaudeville show necessitating many acts; there is more than one public and by dualing features, more tastes can be satisfied. There is merit, says Hollywood, to all of these statements.

Parallels Drawn

For one, like every bachelor who knows just how children should be reared, I have views on the double bill matter and just how the industry should be operated. Will Hays once said that every one has two businesses, his own and the motion picture. Who am I to be an exception? So, with no theatres to operate or pictures to make and with no money invested in the business, but with a keen interest in an intelligent screen which is a vital element in the world's life, I would like to draw a parallel or two.

One of the basic laws of nature is that man always want more of anything of which he has not had quite enough. Satiation has always dulled interest. Too hearty a lunch makes dinner less attractive; too many rides on a merry-go-round dim the pleasure of the event and lengthen the period during which no rides are indulged in. Too much of anything is uninteresting.

Bad as most of it is, the radio is popular largely because of one thing — short programs. Nearly everyone would like to hear more of Burns and Allen, Jack Benny, Amos 'n' Andy and many others. The advertisers are financially able to give longer broadcasts; but they cut them short to insure listeners for the following night. It is conceivable that the best entertainers on the air would wear out their welcome if their programs were doubled.

During the lush twenties when the Saturday Evening Post was printing in excess of

NEW YORK GOES EN MASSE TO SEE "BECKY SHARP," COLOR EXPERIMENT

Opening of Film at Music Hall, With Whitney Playing Host, Attracts Wide Attention of Waiting Press and Public

Filled with a carefully devised anticipation, inspired by a lengthy pre-selling campaign, New York, beginning last Thursday, headed toward 50th street and Sixth avenue, there to take a first view of the latest, and perhaps the most significant, experiment of the motion picture since sound crackled across the screen horizon and wrought a great change.

New York went to see "Becky Sharp," produced by John Hay (Jock) Whitney's comparatively new Pioneer Pictures, distributed by RKO Radio, directed by Rouben Mamoulian, color-designed by the noted stage designer, Robert Edmond Jones, and presented at the Radio City Music Hall. ["Becky Sharp" is reviewed in the Showmen's Reviews department in this issue.]

RKO Radio has contracted with Pioneer Pictures for two more all-Technicolor "specials," and is seeking exhibitor reaction after the playing of "Becky Sharp."

The picture, at the conclusion of its first week, was estimated to have grossed $100,000, which compares with a typical week, including a good picture and favorable weather, bringing a gross of approximately $85,000. Recent weeks, with the beginning of the summer warm weather taken into account, have brought grosses of $65,000 to $70,000. The picture is being held a second week at the theatre.

Although Thursday morning's regular weekly program opening found a crowd estimated at several thousand jammed about the theatre's entrances waiting for the initial viewing of "Becky Sharp," the important phase of the opening occurred that night, when "generous Jock Whitney," as one newspaper put it, entertained numerous members of New York society at a midnight special showing of the film. But first the host took his guests over to Long Island City, to see James Braddock of the prize ring take a heavyweight championship from one Max Baer, also and occasionally of the motion picture. After the showing there was more entertainment for Mr. Whitney's friends, at the River Club, where the approximate 200 danced.

Brokers Attend Showings

Among the crowd which pushed its way into the Music Hall for the first showings on Thursday, were, it is reported, a number of Wall Street brokers, interested in Technicolor, Inc., stock, which is at the moment enjoying a certain amount of activity on the New York Curb Exchange.

Likely enough largely by reason of the novelty presented in this latest effort to endow the feature motion picture with natural color, and partly by reason of the skillfully developed advance campaign which "Becky Sharp" received, the theatre was well filled on the days following Thursday, after the daily newspapers had published their critical reviews of the picture and its color, excerpts from which appear in the columns above.

Effect on Stage

Robert Garland, ace dramatic critic of the New York World-Telegram, devoted a column to a discussion of the possible effects of the new Technicolor in features on the legitimate stage, which, he said, was a chief topic of conversation where such matters are discussed. From the Crystal Club, exclusive, to the Mariners' Rest, where Chuck, the bartender, was interested, people wanted to know, said Mr. Garland.

"Frankly," he reported, "I couldn't answer," except to say "Let's wait and see." In essence, however, Mr. Garland seems to point out that even in his "short" career the stage has died "a thousand deaths," and he is rather inclined to believe the Technicolor feature will leave it much as it was before "Becky Sharp."

An editorial writer for the New York Times said in part: "Most of those who have seen . . . 'Becky Sharp' have the sense of having been present at the birth of another revolution on the screen, comparable in importance to that which came with the first crude talking pictures. For this is . . . by far the clearest and most successful (of color features). And now that we have seen it, the ordinary black and white pictures are likely to seem to us hereafter anemic, old-fashioned and unreal. . . ."

Newspapers devoted millions of printers' ems to "Becky Sharp" and her colorful arrival on Broadway. Remembering sound and its beginnings, this showing became at once first rate news, of importance and significance, and was treated as such.

The imposing list of guests of Mr. Whitney at the theatre party and dance ran somewhat as follows, including top ranking members of New York's society and artistic worlds:

Mrs. Payne Whitney, mother of the host; Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, his aunt; Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Peter A. B. Widener, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson A. Rockefeller, Mr. and Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, Postmaster General and Mrs. James A. Farley, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Bayard Swope, Mr. and Mrs. Harold S. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, Mr. and Mrs. Rodman Wanamaker, Mr. and Mrs. Wilton Lloyd Smith, Dr. and Mrs. Carnes Weeks and William Rhinelander Stewart.

Also Mr. and Mrs. John Horton, Mr. and Mrs. James J. (Gene) Tunney, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur J. White, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick S.

Critics Evaluate the Picture

New York's leading daily newspaper motion picture critics evaluated "Becky Sharp" with unanimously careful attention to the significance of the film as a new experiment in color features. Their opinions follow:

Andre Sennwald, of "The Times":

Science and art, the handmaidens of the cinema, have joined hands to endow the screen with a miraculous new element. . . . It was both incredibly disappointing and incredibly thrilling. Although its faults are too numerous to earn it distinction as a screen drama, it produces in the spectator all the excitement of standing upon a peak in Darien and glimpsing a strange, beautiful and unexpected new world. As an experiment, it is a momentous event.

Howard Barnes, in the "Herald Tribune":

The most important cinematic experiment since moving shadows first became articulate. . . . As a dramatic entertainment it has its faults, and some of these stem from the experiment itself, but as the first serious step in an uncharted field it is a considerable triumph. In addition to being a novel optical experience, it raises a multitude of intriguing questions about the screen's future.

Eileen Creelman, in "The Sun":

. . . In spite of all the ballyhoo, color photography still has its faults, and serious ones. Even the charm and quaintness of the Robert Edmond Jones settings could not conceal the metallic quality of the sound production, the difficulty in matching up skin tones in close-ups and near-shots, the tendency of the light to fade and suddenly brighten.

William Boehnel, in the "World-Telegram":

. . . Frankly, so much has been generally expected of the new process that any report which does not speak of it in glowing and rapturous terms will probably be considered jaundiced. So be it. Under such circumstances these columns will have to sound jaundiced. Eager to admit that much of the new color photography is beautiful, impressive and effective, they must also report that there is a great deal that isn't. . . .

Murray Boltinoff, in the "American":

. . . In its final analysis, it is either a definite step in the progress of the history of motion pictures or a failure, . . . but this department enthusiastically contributes its vote to the assured success of "Becky Sharp." Further, it predicts that it will be henceforth as important to the cinema as "The Jazz Singer." . . .

Thornton Delehanty, in the "Post":

Frequent predictions that the black-and-white picture was doomed to join the silent film as a relic in the evolution of the cinema seem now to rest on solid fact. Not that the black-and-white film is to vanish overnight, but it is in the death throes, and the knell was sounded with the arrival in glorious raiment of "Becky Sharp."

proposal. Code Authority is winding up its affairs, and Sol A. Rosenblatt, late of the NRA, arrived in New York this week seeking legal clients. See page 73.

NON-THEATRICALS THREATEN

New low cost portable reproducing facilities made available by Western Electric, DeVry, RCA and Bell and Howell, among others, give rise to strong fears among industry leaders that the next several months will witness the erection of a structure of formidable competition to theatres from non-theatrical and quasi-theatrical sources. The demand of years standing for inexpensive reproduction is being gratified by the placing on the market of portable and mobile equipment. Code prohibitions having been lifted, the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, and other exhibitor organizations are enlisting distributors as allies in the fight on church performances and free shows. Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, has been active in circumventing competition from free exhibitions in his home state of Mississippi. The industry is seeking a permanent remedy, but the "what" and the "how" of the plan of attack so far remain elusive. See page 17.

SCHENCK–LONDON

Special international significances and far flung influences are foreseen in London in the operations there of Joseph M. Schenck, until this week conferring at the Savoy, in sequel to his recent movement, with his Twentieth Century and Darryl Zanuck into the American Fox company, with a consequent new twisting of the strands of connection across the sea. It would appear that what has taken place in the recent re-alignments may prove to be but the preliminaries, the curtain raiser for a development on a considerably larger stage. Mr. Schenck is now seen by Bruce Allan, HERALD correspondent for Britain, becoming a dominant figure in the English picture, and there are all manner of ramifications running through production, distribution and exhibition with a new great British circuit of an ultimate thousand houses in sight. Mr. Allan's dispatch is to be found on page 76.

Meanwhile, and significantly, it is announced that David O. Selznick, currently MGM producer, and son-in-law of Louis B. Mayer, will leave that concern in September to produce for United Artists.

PARAMOUNT EMERGES

Hardly a flurry of excitement marked the end on Monday of the complex and troublesome state of bankruptcy from which the Paramount corporation has been struggling to emerge for these 29 months, surrounded in the courts by many and conflicting groups of lawyers, creditors and bankers. Adolph Zukor, founder, and chairman of the board, and John Edward Otterson, recently of Western Electric's Erpi affiliate, and new president, took hold of the reins when the pen of Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe was affixed to an order on the first morning of the week, freeing the company from court supervision and restoring the responsibility of its conduct to the management. (Page 39.)

SKOURAS

The rise of Spyros and Charles Skouras in the field of theatre operation, which had modest beginnings in St. Louis some two decades ago, reached new heights last Friday when National Theatres Corporation signed them to 10-year contracts. Tested during the trying period of reorganization following bankruptcies, the operations of the Skouras Brothers have been given the stamp of approval by the Chase financial interests behind the destinies of the new corporation, holding companies for some 400 houses comprising the circuit. Thus the colorful Brothers Skouras maintain their dominance. The news story is on page 56.

SEASON'S PRODUCT

The season of distributors' sales conventions which each spring sends the selling forces on their way in competitive races to the exhibitor's doorstep with new product lines is virtually at an end, and from it 11 of the largest companies have emerged with commitments for 406 feature motion pictures, 474 short subjects, five newsreels, each of 104 issues, and 12 chapter plays. The new product compares favorably from a numerical standpoint with previous years, and promises as much in quality as some of the best of the seasons that have gone before. To be added are the promises of dozens of new and old independents, doing business on the states right market, and who may be expected to contribute in 1935-36 any number up to 200 features, which, with anticipated importations from Europe, will round out the usual annual average of from 650 to 750 releases. See pages 63, 64, 65, 68.

ALLIED CONFERS

Charges made at Allied States Association's recent national convention in Atlanta that the affiliated circuits are overbuying product with intent to deprive their unaffiliated competitors were the subject of a conference between members of the organization's executive committee and Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA. Later, a committee discussed with Felix F. Feist, general sales manager for MGM, the Chicago situation involving Loew's theatre expansions in opposition to independents. No announcements were made following either meeting. Officially in New York for a two-day administrative session, attending were Sidney Samuelson, president of Allied; Abram Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel, and Al Steffes, H. M. Richey, Fred Herrington, Newman Waters, Nathan Yamins, Edward Ansin and Bennie Berger. The story is on page 51.

Duals Affecting Studios' Policies

200 pages a week, a reader content remained what it had always been and this was in the face of threatened competition from ambitious Liberty. But Post editors knew that if they gave too much for a nickel, sales would gradually drop off.

Available figures in Los Angeles indicate that the double bill at Loew's and the Chinese failed in its purpose.

The studios are ignoring those communities in which the double bill policy has been abandoned because they see new adherents to the practice in other places and they give evidence of believing the fight is lost. It must be admitted that the producers are not interested in uplifting the screen; they want only to provide the type of entertainment that makes money. It is safe to say that the executives who take pride in an intelligent screen are in the minority. But there is a definite menace to the prosperity of the entire industry if quality is lowered.

PATHE RECEIVERSHIP OUT, NOW CASEY WANTS AN ACCOUNTING

New Course Follows Reading of "Revelations" in Answer Made by Robert Young to Original Complaint

Pat Casey's independent minority stockholders' fight against the Young and Kolbe interests in Pathe Exchange, Inc., which Mr. Casey last week hoped would culminate in the appointment of a receiver for the corporation, took a sudden turn in the courts on Monday when Martin King, attorney for the plaintiff, withdrew the receivership application and substituted demands for an early trial of a suit for accounting.

Justice Edward Dore had already taken the Casey receivership application under advisement when he was asked in New York state supreme court to rule instead on a motion to give the accounting action preferred position on the calendar. Mr. Casey decided on the new course, foregoing the demand for receivers, after reading "revelations" of Pathe's financial condition set forth in an answer made by defendant Robert Young to the original Casey complaint. Judge Dore will rule on the motion within a few days.

Probably the most important reason given by Mr. King for Mr. Casey's withdrawal of the application for a receivership is attributable to a clause in the note given by Pathe to Bankers Trust on a loan of $2,000,000 which provides that on the appointment of a receivership the notes would become immediately due and payable and Pathe's inability to meet the demand payment would probably cause the loss of the 49 per cent interest in DuPont Film which Pathe pledged as collateral.

Mr. Casey was accused in the Young answer of acting for E. B. Derr, a friend and associate of Mr. Casey and one-time major executive in the motion picture affairs of Joseph P. Kennedy in FBO, Pathe Exchange and for a brief time in First National.

Mr. Derr, said the Young affidavit, is "a former employee of the company who is hostile to the company . . . and who, furthermore, has anything but the best interests of the corporation at heart." Moreover, added Mr. Young, "Mr. Derr had the audacity to ask that the management of the company be turned over to him."

Charged Improper Management

Mr. Derr some few weeks ago had been quoted as saying that he would be glad to acquire control of Pathe. At that time, when Frank Kolbe, a partner with Mr. Young in a New York investment house, controlling the Pathe voting trust, displaced Stuart Webb as president, it was indicated that overtures from Mr. Derr were uninteresting.

Charges hurled in the Casey complaint, principally against Young and Kolbe, and which were denied or explained later in the week by Mr. Young, alleged that the Pathe management acted improperly by disposing of its RKO notes for 20 cents on the dollar; by making "improvident" loans of $230,000; by an "orgy of squandering"; by "jeopardizing" Pathe's $4,000,000 stock interest in DuPont Film Manufacturing Company; by concealing from the stockholders "the true and alarming condition" of the corporation, and by acting otherwise "in further promotion of the scheme, plan or conspiracy to wreck and ruin the financial structure of the corporation."

The interests of Mr. Young and Mr. Kolbe in their stock brokerage business will be paramount and the interest of Pathe used as a 'football' in serving those brokerage interests, charged Mr. Casey. Mr. Young denied such was the case.

Patrick J. Casey, who serves the large producers as contact with studio labor, named in his original complaint the following defendants: Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Frank R. Kolbe, president, and Mr. Young's brokerage partner; Robert R. Young, largest stockholder, who "filled an unnamed official position in the management," by which he is charged with dominating and controlling the officers; Stuart W. Webb, former Pathe president; Robert W. Atkins, of Proctor and Paine, investment brokers, and executive vice-president; Arthur A. Poole, vice-president and treasurer, and Paul Fuller, Jr., Henry Guild Montgomery, Arthur Sewall, 2nd, Charles A. Stone, Theodore C. Streitbert and Charles B. Wiggins.

Suing through his attorney, Martin King, as the holder of 40 shares of eight per cent preferred stock, and inviting all other stockholders to come in on the action with him, by paying a proportionate share of the expenses, Mr. Casey said he seeks to recover the loss and damage allegedly sustained by Pathe by reason of what he charges were "the wrongful, improvident, improper, negligent and fraudulent acts" of the individual defendants.

The complaint sketchily traces the operations of the corporation from the day it was organized, in 1914, until the sale of assets to RKO, in 1931, "which," it was charged by Mr. Casey, "left the defendant corporation in a desperate struggle to maintain its existence." The right which Pathe relinquished to RKO to produce and distribute motion pictures under its own right and trademark is about to revert to the company, inasmuch as the period for which it was originally given in the sale is about to expire, the Casey complaint disclosed.

Some $1,690,000 of RKO notes held by Pathe were sold to Time magazine for $340,000 last April, and from this purchase Mr. Young inferred that the publishers were interested in the notes in order that they might become more closely affiliated with RKO for the distribution arrangement that was eventually consummated for their "March of Time" magazine newsreel.

"Because of its outstanding attractiveness," Mr. Casey charged, "Pathe fell a prey to and became a victim of the financial wolves."

After consummation of the sale of assets to RKO, the "dominating group" of Pathe directors who brought about the sale are charged with terminating their interest in and activity with Pathe, as a result of which "it was left hopelessly floundering by those who had been responsible for its manipulations."

"As evidence of its former great strength, a few of its remaining assets which seemed troublesome to pry loose at the time of said sale began to take life and attract attention. Some of these remaining assets caused defendant corporation to receive income in the form of dividends sufficient to meet its interest on its remaining outstanding debentures and the stock market value of such debentures began to reflect the outside manipulators' observations and again it became a prey and continues to be the prey of manipulation by stockbrokers, traders and corporation manipulators," Mr. Casey alleged.

Charges Officers, Directors of Pathe with "Wrongful Acts" in Office; Court to Decide on Merits of New Petition

The plaintiff further charges that the setting aside of $195,000 for possible losses on loans and advances made in 1934 and of $135,000 to cover possible loans and advances made in 1935, and the continuation of such loans, "will very soon drive the corporation down in ruins."

Furthermore, "in the face of these staggering losses to the extent even as shown, defendant Kolbe has announced a plan of juggling with the corporate structure which will further confuse, disorganize and financially disintegrate said corporation.

"These astounding admissions of losses already incurred and of a determination to create new loans and new losses are merely the prelude to the complete revelation of the orgy of squandering now threatened by defendant directors," the complaint continues, adding: "The defendants, Kolbe and Young, will continue under the direction of the 'master mind,' Young, the work of destruction already so well advanced. Their interest in stocks and in the stock brokerage business will be paramount and the interest of defendant corporation used as a 'football' in serving those interests."

Citing the authorization to issue preferred stock in the total value of $3,000,000 of eight per cent cumulative preferred stock, consisting of 30,000 shares of $100 par value each, and 500,000 shares of Class A, without nominal or par value, and 1,500,000 shares of common without nominal or par value, the complaint points out that there were outstanding 8,043 shares of the eight per cent preferred, 243,123 shares of Class A, and 948,781 shares of common.

Stuart Webb, the complaint advises, is no longer an officer of the corporation. He formerly was president, having been succeeded some weeks ago by Mr. Kolbe.

Acting "under the direction and command of defendant Young," some of the directors have "aided, assisted, abetted and conspired" with him, "causing the waste and despoliation of the assets" to the great damage of the corporation, it was said.

Allege Condition Concealed

Furthermore, the directors are charged with failing to reveal and "did conceal" from the stockholders "the true and alarming condition" of the corporation at a special stockholders' meeting held on March 4, 1935, when announcement was made that the outstanding debentures had been called for redemption on May 1, 1935, and that $2,032,000 in cash would be required, for which $2,000,000 would be borrowed from Bankers Trust Company and that as collateral security the corporation would pledge its 49 per cent stock interest in Du Pont Film Manufacturing Corporation, claimed to be worth even more than its book value of $4,000,000.

"In furtherance of the plan to dissipate the assets of the corporation, and to lull the stockholders into a false hope that their investment was safe and in the hands of the proper management," the directors are accused of permitting "an examination of the consolidated balance sheet to be made without detail," and that "said examination without detail reflected the deplorable and wrongful dissipation of assets," but that "said report was delayed by directors in presentation to the stockholders until after May 1, 1935."

The change in the presidency from Mr. Webb to Mr. Kolbe "was made by the directors for the purpose of deceiving stockholders and in carrying out the deceit," and, the complaint continues, the directors caused stockholders to receive the delayed report simultaneously with the announcement that a change of presidents and management had been effected in the interest of stockholders. This representation "was false and untrue," it is charged, and Mr. Kolbe, as new president, and Mr. Atkins, as executive vice-president, "were merely dummies . . . dominated and controlled" by Mr. Young, whose position in the brokerage business was cited in this connection.

Hits RKO Note Sale

The sale of half of the RKO notes for 20 per cent of their actual value was said to have been consummated at a time when the notes were worth greatly in excess of their face value. Their untimely sale, therefore, Mr. Casey charged, "was a ruthless gutting and dissipation."

Pathe received total dividends of $588,000 from its 49 per cent DuPont Film stock interest in 1933, it was said. Its ownership gives Pathe "a tremendous advantage in the purchase of raw stock for film manufacture and in the promotion of its laboratory activities at Bound Brook, N. J., in competition with other film laboratories, and in the promotion of its position in the industry."

Pledging of the DuPont stock to Bankers Trust was said to have "had the effect of placing in dire jeopardy the ownership of said stock," and the DuPont interest, therefore, was declared to have been placed in the position where a default in the payment of either instalments of principal or interest would cause the stock to be thrown on the market at a forced sale, "lost to defendant corporation and virtually scooped up by financial manipulators."

The making of "improvident" loans by the directors caused the squandering and dissipation of practically all of Pathe's cash reserve, the complaint continued.

Cites First Division Loan

The directors, "well knowing that the debenture bonds were worth their full principal amount and acrued interest," caused the corporation to discontinue "its profitable transactions in utilizing its cash reserves to purchase in the open market its own debentures at a price lower than their principal amount," thus eliminating the corporation as an important purchasing competitor of the debentures. "At the same time defendant Young, for his own benefit and not for the benefit of the corporation, purchased, sold and traded in the debentures at prices less than their principal amount, and the debentures were then called for redemption at a price three points in excess of their principal amount."

One of the "improvident loans" cited was said to be for $200,000, made to First Division Pictures, Inc. (Ludington, Fiske, Curtis, et al), "and resulted in the complete loss of investment and interest." The directors, in making this loan, are charged with "recklessly" turning over the corporation's cash to a company which had not had any previous experience in production of its own pictures, nor was it completely organized for distribution. The loss is now in default, Mr. Casey's complaint said.

"In further promotion of the scheme, plan or conspiracy to wreck and ruin the financial structure of the corporation, to render its priceless asset, the 49 per cent stock interest in Du Pont Film, a prey to the first taker, the defendant directors effected a loan of upwards of $50,000, which was later increased by upwards of $100,000 to a motion picture corporation controlled by one Rowland, to produce a motion picture known as 'The Girl Friend.'" The film, it was said, was to be subject to the approval of Columbia Pictures as to story, cast and direction, which approval was withheld.

Robert Young Answers in Denial

Defendant Young, replying to Mr. Casey's application which first asked for a receiver for Pathe Exchange, explained that prior to March, 1933, he had no connection with the corporation, "directly or indirectly," and that on or about March 4, 1933, he and his immediate family became "substantial stockholders" by the purchase of preferred and Class A stock, and with subsequent purchases has acquired 25 per cent of the eight per cent preferred and more than 10 per cent of the Class A.

He said he refused invitations from time to time to become a member of the board because he is not a resident of New York and is away from New York for long periods. His only interest in the corporation "has been that of a substantial stockholder, and that only," he declared, adding that the sale of assets of Pathe to RKO in 1931 took place two years before he became a stockholder.

Although not an officer or owner, Mr. Young said that as a stockholder he learned that the sale of RKO notes for 20 per cent of their valuation was consummated after having been first offered for sale to various security houses and investment trusts in New York, including Atlas Securities Corporation which was working on a plan of reorganization for RKO. In that position Atlas was thoroughly familiar with RKO's internal situation, and the best bid they would make was 17.

A bid of 20 was finally made by Time Magazine, to whom they were sold, continued Mr. Young, who, from publication of announcement of Time's distribution deal with RKO for its "March of Time" newsreel got the inference that the publishers were interested in the purchase of the notes in order that it might in that manner become more closely affiliated with RKO. The deal with Time, effected last April, brought Pathe $340,000 for notes with a face value of $1,690,000.

"I am informed that these notes were sold by Pathe in order to reduce to cash what otherwise would have remained an asset of dubious value" in view of RKO's receivership position, and because no interest had been paid on the notes since July 1, 1932, he said.

The RKO notes held by Pathe are unsecured and, according to Mr. Young, are junior in position to notes having a first lien of $1,400,000 and a second lien of $11,600,000, which, he understands, "are secured by first and second liens respectively on the negatives and capital stock of solvent subsidiaries (of RKO), consisting substantially of all of the important assets of Radio-Keith-Orpheum." Moreover, he continued, "I understand that the unsecured notes held by Pathe come in only as unsecured claims along with approximately $45,000,000 of claims filed by RKO creditors. It would seem apparent that a sale of these notes at a price of 20 was fair and reasonable, if indeed not more than their reasonable market value and actual worth."

Calls Charge "Vague Generalities"

"It seems obviously absurd that the largest single stockholder in the company would be trying to 'ruthlessly destroy,' or 'create new loans and losses,' for in doing so it is apparent that I would be injuring myself most of all," explained Mr. Young. "Furthermore," he added, "it is not the fact that I have any say in the management of the corporation, other than that which any substantial stockholder has."

"The actual information of the material allegations" which Mr. Casey in his affidavit claims is in his possession is, according to Mr. Young, "nothing more or less than vague generalities of wishful thinking, without any specific allegation of existing fact. They are made merely for the purpose of bringing on a motion which is entirely without merit, and on which the plaintiff has not and cannot allege any specific fact."

Mr. Young challenged Mr. Casey to "produce specifically" any one single fact that "the alleged conspiracy is being carried out under my direction as the 'master mind.'"

Denying that his interest in Pathe is being used in the interest of his stock brokerage business, Mr. Young declared that his investment in Pathe is 10 times that of his investment in the brokerage business.

"It will interest the plaintiff to know," he said, that the reorganization of the capital structure of Pathe, which Mr. Casey declared "will further confuse, disorganize and financially disintegrate" the corporation, "makes possible the payments of dividends on his eight per cent preferred stock, which otherwise would not have been possible for perhaps ten years, because under the old company's financial setup current earnings were not available for payment of dividends on the preferred stock, even though the preferred dividends were earned many times over."

Mr. Young compared his ownership of 2,000 shares of preferred and 25,000 shares of common with Mr. Casey's ownership of 40 shares of preferred. "The voting of my preferred in favor of this reorganization plan confirms my constructive and hopeful attitude toward the company's securities for in so doing I agreed to accept five shares of the new common stock (valued in today's market at approximately $5 per share) in lieu of nearly $60 of back dividends on every share of preferred stock."

Mr. Young in his answer openly charged that E. B. Derr, "a former employee of the company, and who is hostile to the company . . . and who furthermore has anything but the best interests of the corporation at heart," is allegedly using Pat Casey, the plaintiff, "as a name in which to bring this action." Moreover, he added, Mr. Derr has "had the audacity to ask that the management of the company be turned over to him."

He challenged Mr. Casey to submit any evidence that he has in any way whatsoever exercised any duress upon the Pathe management.

Mr. Young denied that Pathe "is in an alarming financial condition," and declared that the

INDUSTRY FACES NATIONAL SPREAD OF NON-THEATRICAL COMPETITION

New Availability of Portable Equipment at Low Cost and Weight Encourages Renewed Expansion Within the Field

A vast increase in competition from non-theatrical and quasi-theatrical sources is developing and for the next several months the industry will have to face a situation which, if not impossible, will be difficult to control. It is the growing acquisition outside the established field of the means of sound film projection.

The wide spread of exhibition enterprises in competition with established exhibitors has awaited only a favorable improvement of economic and mechanical factors in the availability of standard portable reproducers at low cost and light weight, and with the beginning of the flooding of the market with these equipments for non-theatrical use by leading manufacturers—Bell and Howell. Electrical Research, DeVry, RCA, and others—an immediate and powerful encouragement has been given to the expansion of this competitive field. Apparent in various forms, this competition is, chiefly:

1. Merchants' free shows as a means ot developing trading centers.

2. Showings by itinerant exhibitors.

3. Entertainments in schools and churches.

4. Public exhibitions of industrial films without admission charges.

That something speedily will have to be done to check this quadruple threat is the firm conviction of industry leaders. But the "what" and the "how" of the plan of attack so far remain uncertain.

The coming of sound presented a real problem to the itinerant exhibitors and agencies sponsoring showings outside the established theatre field. The public was growing sound-minded and silent films no longer were acceptable. Too, the supply of silent subjects was being depleted. Lacking the funds with which to equip for sound, hundreds of these enterprises were discontinued. But in numerous instances they were carried on with unsatisfactory equipment.

Portable Equipment Available

Now, however, has come a change. With the gradual improvement in equipments previously considered sub-standard and with the reduction in their cost generally, portable sound facilities of a high type have been made widely and easily available to non-theatrical and other competitive units. And they are rapidly taking advantage of the situation.

Today there are some dozen manufacturers marketing comparatively inexpensive portable and semi-portable reproducers capable of satisfactory performance under difficult or outdoor conditions. Tests have shown they are not far below the quality of sound projection effected by the stationary standard installations in use in theatres.

Purchase of these equipments can be made on the installment plan, at a cost ranging from $600 to approximately $2,500. The initial down payment required is as low as $100.

The portable equipment makes it possible for the itinerant exhibitor to move about from town to town with a maximum of expedition. While not feasible for the larger theatre, this type of reproducers is said by sound technicians to be capable of satisfactory projection in smaller theatres and auditoriums. Nominally, they reach their greatest efficiency in auditoriums of from 600 to 800 seats, but they also have been found to perform satisfactorily in auditoriums of 2,000 seat capacity.

The itinerant exhibitor operating a circuit of several towns and the merchants' free show promoter, who frequently is a traveling showman, are difficult to check for various reasons. In last week's Motion Picture Herald it was described how this type of exhibitor causes considerable trouble to distributors by illegal means of obtaining film.

The major distributors, on the whole, have adopted a rule not to sell itinerant showmen any of their product, especially for towns where there is an established exhibitor. But this has proved no deterring influence because of the illegal operators' subterfuges and because there is a large quantity of product available from sources willing to sell accounts of this type.

Have Large Supply

It is pointed out that of approximately 600 features produced last year by all sources, only some 350 came from the major distributors, so apparently the refusal of some of the large companies to do business with exhibitors considered undesirable does not seriously deprive them of an adequate product supply. It is also explained that a large number of old films, both features and shorts, previously having a major distributor release has fallen into the hands of small independent companies through expiration of release rights and through purchases made in the windup and reorganization of film companies.

The large companies, to a great extent, have found it possible to check illegal use of their films by "Jack Rabbit" circuits and free trade shows, but where the supply comes from an independent source the solution is not so simple. Individually, these types of exhibitors are harmful locally and in the aggregate they divert a huge sum annually from legitimate theatre operators. The yearly loss has been estimated at several hundreds of thousands of dollars. According to reports received by distributors, 25 theatres were forced to close in Michigan last year because of such "non-theatrical" competition.

Kuykendall Halts Free Shows

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has effectively blocked attempts to establish free showings in his home state of Mississippi by appealing to the merchants' sense of fair play. He pointed out that if they put on film shows to draw customers into the town, in competition with the local theatre, nothing would prevent the exhibitor from giving away as premiums merchandise which the stores were trying to sell. This argument proved persuasive.

The free show and the "Jack Rabbit" performance may not be in a locality where there is a theatre, but the "something-for-nothing" element or the lower admission is an effective inducement to persons in the surrounding trading area to stay away from the town nearby where the exhibitor is conducting his operations in a legitimate manner. Many farmers prefer to transport the family ten miles to save a few dimes than drive a shorter distance and pay for entertainment. That the free show is inferior is of no consequence to this type of patron.

Merchants' Free Films, Shows by Itinerant Exhibitors, School, Church Screenings Are Phases of Competition

Rural districts are not the only ones plagued with these elements. In outlying shopping centers of several large cities in the Middle West gratis performances are being put on once or twice weekly, chiefly in vacant lots. The neighborhood merchants subscribe because their advertising message is flashed on the screen. Certain exchanges supply silent films, but this source is negligible.

During the life of the NRA's motion picture code grievance boards, their edicts had the effect of discouraging this type of operation. The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana battled on the issue of free street shows all last summer. Affidavits were obtained and information, early this summer, of violations of Code Authority Case Number 122 (Metzger and 118 other Indiana exhibitors against Sholty, Dennis, Scott, Dye and others) which ruled against performances of this type within 25 miles of any established theatre in Indiana. The Association was prepared to go through both the federal and the Indiana code enforcement machinery this summer to assure enforcement of the ruling. "The collapse of the code," adds the Association's June bulletin, "ends our hopes of smashing this form of unfair competition, but we believe that none of the reputable film exchanges will be guilty of servicing them—so that they must depend on old pictures made five or six years ago."

Lodge Halls Seen as Threat

The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana finds that the code stopped service to churches and other types of non-theatrical accounts. Several decisions in the Indianapolis territory corrected conditions which had existed for several years. Association officials, like others, believe these will now spring up again. They inform members that "all churches and lodge halls remain as threats against your business should film exchanges decide to serve them."

In reality the code had little effect on several types of non-theatrical competition because of conflicting clauses brought about by the insistence of "uplift" organizations that certain non-theatrical showings be permitted.

From Ohio this week came word that free outdoor film shows are being sponsored by merchants at Galena and Groton, and will continue through the summer. Both towns are near Delaware, Ohio, the nearest large city, to which the residents heretofore had gone for their screen entertainment. Free shows also are reported spreading in Nebraska.

When demands are made that film service be denied to churches, the distributors often are in a dilemma, chiefly because the goodwill of religious groups would be alienated. In Kansas City independent neighborhood exhibitors attempted to obtain stoppage of films to the Community Church, where film shows on Sunday have been in vogue for about 15 years. The move was opposed strenuously by industry elements who valued the friendly influence of the pastor, Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, in counteracting censorship and drastic legislation. The complaint later was withdrawn from the grievance board. Similar situations have been reported from other cities.

Schools are also regarded as potentially big factors. The field of church and school motion pictures awaits only improved economic conditions to release the funds necessary to equip auditoriums, in many of which motion picture performances were held in the pre-sound days. Schools and other institutions, convinced of the value of visual education, are eager to install sound equipment. While the plants will be employed, or are intended to be employed, for instructional films, there is little to prevent their use for entertainment at which admission will be charged.

Another phase of competition that looms large at the present is the free showings of films made for industrial and commercial advertisers. The leading corporations are gravitating toward this medium of reaching the public and facilities have been provided for exhibiting and distributing this type of film for any advertiser. What is disliked by the exhibitor is that well known players are in the casts of some of these feature-length pictures and that the sponsors attempt to advertise the performances as entertainment, frequently adding short subjects to round out a two-hour program.

These shows are well exploited by the local dealers and usually are staged in auditoriums, sometimes school auditoriums, and before special groups. Sometimes a theatre is rented for a day.

While some equipment manufacturers making this service available are under no obligation to the exhibitor and hence do not have his interests in mind, Electrical Research Products is careful to devise means of not competing with theatres and conducts its non-theatrical shows in places other than theatres.

More extended use of this service by Erpi was discussed at a meeting of its road show licensees recently held in New York, presided over by E. S. Gregg, manager of the distribution department. It was announced that after four years of effort, arrangements have been completed making it possible for an industrial concern to use Western Electric equipment for non-theatrical purposes. Equipment is provided for 16 mm. and 35 mm. films.

Manufacturers of 16 mm. equipment have inaugurated service departments for industrial firms closely resembling facilities available from the large equipment companies. Some industrial firms have as many as 300 reproducers in use. These are booked along with the film to the local representatives who make all arrangements for the showings.

Court Voids Chicago Sheridan Theatre Sale

The recent sale of the Sheridan theatre in Chicago for $112,000 was set aside in superior court last week in the suit brought by the Chicago Title and Trust Company against Ascher Brothers. The case was continued until late this week, when a motion for receivership by Leo Solomon, representing bondholders, will be heard.

Station WXYZ, pioneer Michigan station, will become associated with the National Broadcasting Company as the regular Detroit outlet for the NBC-WJC network, effective September 29.

LAEMMLE ON THE CODE

In the hectic days of code making under the Blue Eagle in Washington, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, contributed to the humor of the day by remarking that it would be very simple to write a code which should merely say: "We will be on the level."

In time the industry got the NRA code and R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, became a member of the motion picture's Code Authority. And now, this week, Mr. Laemmle has issued a statement of candor in which he remarks to exhibitors:

"I do not know after nearly two years of experience whether the motion picture code hurt or helped Universal, or you!

"But I do know that it did not change any relationship between Universal and its customers.

"Universal cooperated on the code purely out of patriotism. We shall always cooperate with any administration, whether it is Democratic, Republican or something else — not because we want to curry favor, but because we think the nation should always follow its leader — no matter who the leader may be.

"The code is dead — but the spirit of Universal, the spirit of ordinary decency, common sense and fair play, lives on."

Zanuck to Meet With Kent on Product

Product conferences to be held late this week in New York will determine the number of pictures to be made for Fox by Twentieth Century, which recently became affiliated with the distributing organization. It is reported the company will produce from 10 to 12 pictures.

The decision on the quota rests with Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox; Joseph M. Schenck and Darryl Zanuck. With William Goetz, his assistant and general manager of Twentieth Century, Mr. Zanuck arrived from the coast Tuesday. They plan to remain in New York 10 days. Harry Goetz, president of Reliance, which releases through United Artists, was due to arrive in the east, and Mr. Schenck was to reach New York Thursday aboard the Normandie from Europe.

RCA Names Austrian

Ralph B. Austrian, radio and motion picture executive, has been named special representative for RCA Photophone, with headquarters at the company's New York office. He will contact producers and exhibitors.

pledging of the 49 per cent Pathe interest in DuPont Film with Bankers Trust for $2,000,000 thereby materially reduced Pathe's fixed interest charges from seven per cent under the bonds that were redeemed by the $2,000,000, to four per cent required as interest by Bankers Trust.

"Furthermore," he pointed out, "the entire principal amount of the outstanding debentures matured May 1, 1937, whereas only $500,000 of the principal amount of the bank loan matures on May 1, 1937, the balance maturing $500,000 on May 1, 1938, and $1,000,000 on May 1, 1939."

He added that if the present rate of income from the DuPont interest (reputedly $588,000 in dividends in 1933) continues, not only will this collateral be able to pay the interest on the loan with Bankers Trust, but of itself and with no outside aid will actually more than retire the loan with Bankers Trust at its maturities.

Mr. Young disclosed that Pathe in recent months has had opportunities to sell its stock interest in DuPont at a price that would pay off the outstanding indebtedness "many times over," but "it is not the intention of the corporation to sell its stock interest in DuPont at any price."

He said that the corporation "is in an entirely solvent and working condition," and that the delay in issuing the financial statement to stockholders was not an undue delay, only being one month late and was attributed to the seasonal rush at that period of the year experienced by the accountants, Price, Waterhouse and Company.

"There is no danger that the corporation's stock interest in DuPont may be taken away from the corporation," declared Mr. Young, in answer to Mr. Casey's charge that the position in which the stock was placed as a result of the Bankers Trust arrangement jeopardized the holdings.

He denied that either himself or his firm traded in Pathe securities for speculative purposes. He also denied that he picked up Pathe debentures in the open market at a discount in contemplation of their being called by Pathe at a premium. He said he had no knowledge of the making of the socalled "improvident loans" to First Division and to Mr. Rowland, but that he learned from conversations with Pathe officers that the loans "are not at all in the category which the plaintiff seeks to allege they occupy."

The loan to Mr. Rowland was not for $100,000, but less than $50,000, and "will be repaid at least in part" with the added possibility that the loan will net a profit, concluded Mr. Young.

New Jersey Allied Gets Pooling Plan

A proposal to pool theatres in its territory into one large circuit was offered to Allied of New Jersey at a meeting Tuesday. While details were not available, it was learned from members that the idea is similar to a plan now in operation in Michigan.

New York independent exhibitors definitely have rejected a proposal to combine their houses into a circuit. The project was to have included some 150 unaffiliated theatres. It was abandoned.

THE MARCH OF TIME

RKO-Radio announces as an important part of its new season the release of the March of Time, starting with the fifth edition, ready August second. Hailed with increasing fervor by critics and public alike, the March of Time has won a definite place on the screen in less than five months.

Produced by the Editors of Time and Fortune, it has brought to the theatre the same adherence to the curt telling of all the facts that have made history in the publishing field. It does not pull its punches. News is presented as it happens, with all the why it happens. Set to the same dramatic, thrilling pace familiar to millions who listen to the March of Time on the air, it has proven a happy blending of excellent entertainment and brilliantly handled topical information.

RKO-Radio believes that to fully capitalize on this vast ready-made audience of loyal Time, Fortune and March of Time on-the-air fans, that the March of Time must be a fearless, factual journal of the screen. It believes that this new kind of pictorial journalism will win new heights with theatre goers all over the world.

PARAMOUNT BANKRUPTCY ENDS AS OTTERSON, ZUKOR TAKE CHARGE

Executive Personnel Expected to Remain as at Present; Herzbrun, Lubitsch Receive One-Year Studio Contracts

Paramount's status as a bankrupt came to an end on Monday morning, concurrently with expressions of optimism for the future from the new officers into whose control the management passed with the lifting of federal court supervision.

At the helm when the new corporation started business after the last legal entanglements had been untwined were, as previously elected: Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board; John Otterson, president; George Schaefer, vice-president; Austin C. Keough, secretary; Walter B. Cokell, treasurer; H. A. Fortington, chairman of the executive committee, and Henry Herzbrun and Ernst Lubitsch, who continue in charge of production in Hollywood, under new one-year contracts.

Evolvement of the new Paramount Pictures Corporation from the bankruptcy was affected quietly in comparison to the disturbances attending the onslaught of lawyers and conflicting banking and creditor groups in the courtroom in New York when, on that afternoon in January, 1933, the corporation was admitted to be in the state of receivership.

Even as John Edward Otterson, the new president, was ordering the installation of a cooling system in his office in the Paramount tower overlooking Times Square, in preparation for a busy summer at the ninth floor desk where once sat Trustee Charles Hilles, the sales personnel were moving into the field from the annual sales convention at the Waldorf Astoria to bring to exhibitors the new company's first program of 65 features and 107 short subjects. Details of product and sales policy appear elsewhere.

Mr. Otterson will explain to the press his plan for the conduct of the management at a conference at the home office later this week. Meanwhile there appeared no outward indication that the management will digress to any great extent from its present procedure.

Henry Herzbrun and Ernst Lubitsch, continuing in charge of production, will work out a plan of studio management in harmony with the new corporate administration.

Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board, will emerge from the burdensome details of reorganization to give a supervisory eye to production.

Mr. Otterson will conduct immediately a personal survey of the studio situation.

The signing by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe of orders which remove the company from further court supervision permits of an actual transfer of assets on July 1.

Claims of all creditors coming out of the reorganization were disclosed as not exceeding $63,377,046.

Introduced by Adolph Zukor to the personnel at the sales convention in New York, Mr. Otterson complimented those who participated in the reorganization, and declared there will be no personnel changes.

Henry Herzbrun and Ernst Lubitsch returned on Tuesday to their respective posts of vice-president in charge of the Paramount studio and director of production, following a week of conferences in New York with Mr. Otterson, during which, and after action by the new board of directors, it was agreed that both would be given one year contracts when Mr. Otterson completes his survey of the studio, which he will start next week.

No announcement was made of the new arrangement, but at the convention George J. Schaefer, vice-president, declared to the sales force that the two studio executives would continue in charge of production. Mr. Schaefer added "there would be no restoration of former studio management," thereby dismissing reports along Broadway that Emanuel Cohen would return to a high executive post in Hollywood.

Zukor to Remain

On the convention sidelines Eugene J. Zukor told reporters that his father had no intentions of leaving the corporation, adding that Adolph Zukor's position as chairman of the board would enable him to unburden himself of most of the detail work that had been occupying his attention during the reorganization, permitting him to devote much of his time to production observation.

Eugene Zukor's statement made later to conventioneers publicly, was accepted as assuring. He added that Adolph Zukor now occupied as chairman of the board a post in the company "that he wanted and where he felt he could be most useful to Paramount."

The convention cheered both Adolph Zukor and Mr. Otterson when Mr. Zukor introduced the new president to the delegates. Mr. Otterson reiterated a previous remark that he would not have accepted the presidency if his election had not been welcomed by Mr. Zukor, with whom he planned to work closely.

Mr. Zukor told the delegates that for years he has had a desire to be active in Hollywood production and Mr. Otterson's election now gives him that opportunity. Mr. Zukor may accompany Mr. Otterson west, likewise Watterson Rothacker, former producer, who last week became associated with Mr. Otterson's executive staff. It was believed that Mr. Rothacker, who is without title, may be assigned to the studio as a home office liaison.

Corporate Claims Under $64,000,000

Covering the few remaining legal steps necessary to clear the bankruptcy, the Paramount lawyers on Monday, headed by Alfred E. Cook, appeared at a final hearing before Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe, in New York, and explained that the claims of all creditors filed in the reorganization proceedings will not exceed $63,377,046 in allowable amounts, and that they may be "several millions less." This disclosure was in keeping with the requirement of the reorganization plan that claims shall not exceed $65,000,000, and permitted Judge Coxe to sign the orders which removed the corporation from further court supervision, with the actual transfer of assets taking place on July 1.

Under the authorization given it by Congress to investigate any protective committees and reorganization proceedings and report back its findings, with recommendations, by January 3, 1936, the

Zukor to Observe Production, Otterson to Survey Studio; Total Claims of Creditors Will Be Under $64,000,000

Federal Securities and Exchange Commission on Tuesday started a study of the events leading up to the Paramount receivership, the expansion of the company and the financing involved.

The investigation is purely for the purpose of gathering factual material, since the commission is without any authority in interfere in the reorganization, which has received the approval of the Federal court under the bankruptcy reorganization act.

Formation of a bondholders' protective committee composed entirely of bankers, some of whom traded profitably in Paramount securities while members, were outlined Wednesday by Frank A. Vanderlip, chairman. There were no bonholders on the committee.

With the aid of Austin C. Keough, secretary of Paramount, and Sir William Wiseman, Kuhn, Loeb partner, the commission reconstructed the history of the company from prewar days to the present.

Tracing the growth of the organization from Jesse L. Lasky's Famous Players days, counsel for the SEC went over the ground covered years ago by the Federal Trade Commission, but for the purpose, not of showing that the company was attempting to kill off competition but to develop that Paramount's invasion of the exhibition field was the answer to the threat of the exhibitors, through First National, to invade the production field.

Steadily acquiring properties as the years went on, Paramount, at the time it went into receivership in January, 1933, had 501 subsidiary and affiliated companies. Mr. Keough testified.

Members of the commission displayed keen interest in the financing operations of the company and Sir William Wiseman was questioned at length as to the participation of Kuhn, Loeb in the floating of security issues and the profits which accrued to the bankers from these transactions.

Following this, the investigation, covering fully the ground traversed by the court in the handling of the reorganization proceedings, went into the operations and lawsuits which led up to the receivership, and then sought testimony concerning the handling of the receivership and bankruptcy proceedings and the negotiation of the reorganization.

Approves Settlement

Federal Judge Robert Inch, in United States district court, Brooklyn, granted a motion filed last Thursday by Oliver T. Cowan, of Goldwater and Flynn, attorneys for the trustees of Allied Owners Corporation, to approve a settlement of Allied's claim against Paramount.

This settlement is embodied in the Allied plan of reorganization and also in Paramount's reorganization plan.

The claims, originally set at $23,000,000, were for the construction of theatres leased by Paramount. The amount was reduced to $12,000,000 by the taking back of certain of the theatres that had later been abandoned by Paramount.

The settlement provides for the issuance to Allied of $5,000,000 of new Paramount notes and stock, the payment of $150,000 in cash for back rent on the Brooklyn Paramount theatre, the purchase of the Paramount in Birmingham, Ala., and the leasing of the Paramount theatres in Brooklyn, Glen Falls, N. Y., and Fremont, Ohio. The election of Stephen Callaghan, Allied trustee, to the new Paramount directorate, was another condition.

The new Paramount corporation will shortly receive the bill for lawyers' fees for the reorganization, approximately 20 law firms which participated in the proceedings having already started to prepare their statements for allowances, which will be filed July 2. The applications, expected to exceed requests for more than $1,000,000, which must be paid by the new company, will be heard by Federal Judge Coxe in New York on July 18. The court warned the attorneys to submit only "moderate and reasonable" petitions so as not to invite criticism and court displeasure.

Lawyers' Bill Is Ready

Judge Coxe on Monday ruled that former Paramount officers and directors who are defendants in the actions brought by Paramount trustees to recover sums allegedly paid them for salaries and bonuses in excess of reasonable amounts, cannot collect on any claims they may have against the corporation until the excess-salary actions, now pending in state court, have been adjudicated.

Edward Pride, of Hughes, Schurman and Dwight, counsel for some of the defendants, appeared before Judge Coxe in opposition to this provision which is contained in the order carrying out the final steps in the corporation's reorganization. However, the court added that individual cases could be reviewed later.

With total claims against Paramount of not less than "several hundred thousand dollars," but less than $1,000,000, Sidney R. Kent, Jesse L. Lasky and Sam Katz were mentioned as among the defendants in the trustees' suits.

Approve Two Additional Claims

A claim of $59,224 filed against Paramount by Coast Theatres Corporation, a wholly owned California subsidiary, is recommended for allowance in full by Special Master John E. Joyce in a report submitted to the Federal district court. The claim represented the balance owed the subsidiary by Paramount prior to the receivership.

Another report by Mr. Joyce recommended the allowance of a claim filed by John G. Paine, at $29,300. The claim was filed against Paramount by Paine as agent for the owners of copyrighted music. Mr. Paine represented the Music Publishers' Protective Association. Mr. Joyce reported favorably on the $55,000 claim of Mr. Schaefer, Paramount vice-president.

A petition asking approval for the adjustment of a $127,500 theatre mortgage claim filed against Paramount by Samuel and Nathan Goldstein, Massachusetts operators, was submitted to Mr. Joyce by attorneys for the Paramount trustees. A hearing was set for June 24.

The mortgage claim is based on a release of the Goldsteins from liability at the time Paramount acquired the Rivoli, Chicopee, Mass. It provides for allowance of the $127,500 claim at $55,000 and assignment of the claim in that amount to the reorganized G-B Theatres Corporation, a Paramount New England subsidiary, which agrees in turn to reduce the mortgage $27,500.

Referee Oscar E. Ehrhorn sent to the United States district court, New York, his approval of the application of Irving Trust, trustee in bankruptcy for Publix Enterprises, for authority to declare a final dividend to creditors, and also that it be discharged as trustee, and that the affairs of the corporation be concluded.

Report New Cleveland Dual Plan Formulated

The Cleveland single feature agreement, which expires July 8, according to report, will be supplanted with a plan, universally adopted throughout the Greater Cleveland area, whereby there will be only one double feature change a week, and whereby no feature playing a downtown run of seven days, will be shown on a double bill at any time. This plan, said to have been worked out by the board of trustees of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, will be presented to the association members at a general meeting, the date of which is to be announced.

GB Expanding Activities; Not To Be Sold—Lee

Denying that Gaumont British was negotiating with anyone for the acquisition of the company or for supplanting any of its major executives, Arthur A. Lee, executive vice-president, said last week that the company is "extending its activities in every direction."

He named additions to its affiliated theatre circuit in England, greater expenditures on individual productions and enlargement of the activities of its equipment company, all with the purpose of "making Gaumont British even more self-contained."

Mr. Lee also pointed out that Gaumont British is probably the only company in the industry which, in addition to production, distribution and exhibition, has large interests in co-relative organizations such as its own recording process, its own equipment firm, and is investing heavily in inventions and improvements in its studios, its broadcasting station and in television.

Saying that his statement was intended "in no wise to reflect on anyone connected with recent rumors," Mr. Lee affirmed that the Ostrers, in control of Gaumont British, "are in the motion picture business to stay; they have contributed much towards it and have made very definite plans to make even greater contributions in the future."

All announcements pertaining to the productions in the 1935-36 program will be carried through, added Mr. Lee, with the one possible proviso that greater expenditures will be made on some of the pictures than originally intended, and all contracts for the distribution of these pictures will be definitely adhered to.

There is no deal pending between Gaumont British and British International Pictures for a merger or a change in control of either company, reiterated John Maxwell, BIP president, in New York last week. He said there had been some negotiations between the firms some time ago, but these fell through. Mr. Maxwell returned to London last week.

George Weeks, GB's general sales manager, announced the following additions to his sales staff: Leslie Wilkes, formerly with Paramount and Columbia, is now attached to the Dallas office; William Adams, recently with Columbia, is now with the Minneapolis branch, and Ed Canty, formerly a booker, has been promoted to salesman at Detroit.

Films Do Part in Coast Exposition

The motion picture industry is doing its part to make the California Pacific International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., a success.

In the Hollywood Motion Picture Hall of Fame, a handsome pueblo-type building, located on the Palisades, all the glamor and much of the grief of rushing last-minute activities of the industry are being shown by the Screen Actors Guild and the Dominos. So great was the attendance during the opening days recently that Kenneth Thomson, secretary of the Guild, had to send for additional tickets.

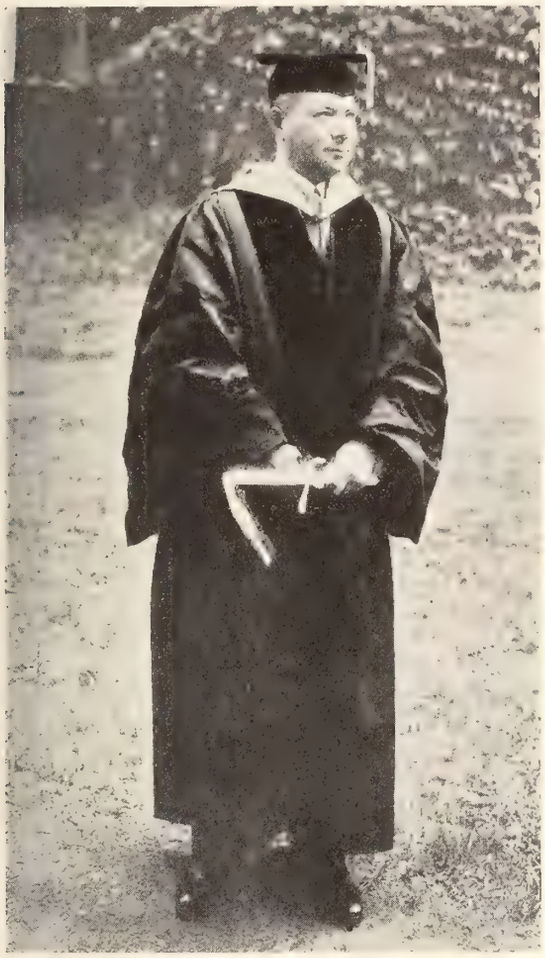
In the Hall of Fame are many of the famous costumes of screen history, including Charles Chaplin's original baggy trousers, funny-looking derby and inevitable cane; the late Rudolph Valentino's sheik outfit and many others.

Another part of the building has been fitted out as a regular Hollywood studio. Here many of the elaborate sets used in noted pictures will be used in showing the public how films are actually made. For the first time, the picture fan will be able to be almost within touching distance of his or her favorite star.

The first set brought here was a drawing room scene. Richard Tucker acted as the director, explaining the intricacies connected with the business of directing. Within the glare of the kleig lights as cameramen worked with their machines, Helen Mann, Florence Short, Amron Isle, Walter McGrail and Warren Burke "acted" a scene from a domestic film.

"The two principal elements in successful directing are those of keeping the sound stage quiet and the players in a good mood," explained Mr. Tucker. He pointed out that the last element had a good deal more to do with good directing than any other single element.

"Actors and actresses have a right to be temperamental," Mr. Tucker continued, "as their work places a terrific strain on them. However, often as not their temperaments get the better of them and we have to take them in hand. There are a few directors who can't handle their players, though."



Among the sets to be seen are: the dungeon from Universal's "Bride of Frankenstein;" Barengaria's cabin from Paramount's "The Crusades," a set from Walter Wanger's "Shanghai;" another from RKO's "She" and others.

There is also a puppet show in another part of the building in which every puppet is a replica of a famous screen star, a special exhibit of sound recording by RCA; Mole-Richardson has an elaborate display of every kind of studio light, while a collection of cameras dating from the infant days of screenland to 1935 is also to be seen.

Universal Chain Dividend

Universal Chain Theatres has declared a third liquidating dividend of $2.50 per share on the eight per cent preferred stock as of May 15. Payment is to be made on presentation of stock certificates at the office of the corporation in the Baltimore Trust Building, Baltimore.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

COMING TO U. S. (Below) Maurice Silverstone, United Artists' British manager, who is due June 20 for the company convention in Hollywood.

GIVEN DEGREE. (Left) David Sarnoff, president of RCA, in cap and gown at Marietta College, Marietta, Ohio, where he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Science.

VACATIONING. (Right) Loretta Young arriving in New York en route to Europe for a rest following completion of her role in Cecil B. DeMille's "The Crusades," Paramount release.

AMONG WINNERS AT FILM GOLF TOURNAMENT. The team victors, recipients of the Albee Memorial cup and Film Daily medals, in the Film Daily links competition at the Progress Country Club, Purchase, N. Y. They are James Cron, George Dembow, Monroe Greenthal, Walter Futter, H. J. Yates, Tom Gerety, Herbert Fecke and Phil Reisman. Participants numbered 180.

CIRCUIT EXECUTIVE HONORED. Harry Shaw, New England division manager of the Loew-Poli organization, with some of those who paid him tribute at a dinner in his honor in New Haven, in recognition of his efforts in behalf of Jewish charities. Also shown are Mrs. Shaw and Louis Sagal, Poli executive.

IN EAST. Edward Arnold, star of "Diamond Jim," first of Universal's 1935-36 program, arriving in New York from Chicago, where he spoke at the Universal convention.

ENTANGLED IN FILM. Now that she has a Warner Brothers contract and is scheduled for an early debut. She is Helen Ericson, formerly of Worcester, Mass., more recently of the New York stage.

HEAT WAVE. Forecast for MGM's "Broadway Melody of 1936" in the dancing of Jeni LeGon, here shown in an arrested passage of a characteristic dance routine. Miss LeGon also sings.

INDEPENDENT DEALERS MOVE TO SET UP EQUIPMENT TESTS

Convention in Chicago also Establishes Committee to Formulate Code of Ethics to Govern the Association

Standardization of equipment and the adoption of a code of ethics were approved this week by the members of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association assembled in Chicago in annual convention.

Joseph E. Robin, who, as president, has led the independent dealers organization to a greatly strengthened position, was voted full power to act in examining all equipment submitted for distribution by member dealers, with instructions to recommend only that equipment which passes the most rigid tests.

A strict code of ethics governing the competitive relations between the dealers will be administered by a committee composed of K. R. Douglas, Boston; Clem Rizzo, Philadelphia; and H. W. Graham, Denver.

Any exhibitor customer or any member may appeal to the code grievance committee in complaint against any dealer, and membership will be limited to those dealers who conduct their business strictly in accordance to the code.

A membership investigation committee was appointed as follows: Mr. Douglas, B. F. Shearer, Seattle, and Mr. Graham.

Officers elected were: President, B. F. Shearer, Seattle; vice president, K. R. Douglas, Boston; treasurer, Clem Rizzo, Philadelphia; executive secretary, Joe E. Robin, New York. The board of directors: Joseph Maronne, Pittsburgh; Joseph Hornstein, New York; George McArthur, Detroit; Joseph Graham, Denver.

A scheduled move to standardize prices gave way when the convention opened to the matter of standardized equipment because, it was said, of trouble caused exhibitors, especially those operating small theatres, by a flood of equipment on the market that does not meet requirements.

Among the addresses given, that of Capt. John Gorby, organizer and expert in sales psychology, was perhaps the most notable. Captain Gorby gave an inspiritional talk on the factors that make for success in selling. He cited as the stones in the salesman's "arch of triumph" such qualities as character, knowledge, the will to work, the will to win, service, confidence and personality.

Discusses Merchandising

"Knowledge is almost limitless," he said. "We could talk all day long on that one point and still not exhaust it. Knowledge of advertising. Do you know what advertising does for the people of America? The American business man this year is spending in excess of one billion dollars in cash to tell his story. Emerson said, 'If you build a mouse trap back in the woods, and build a better one, the world will make a beaten path to your door.' That is a beautiful story, but it does not work. If the salesman and the advertiser tell the world enough about the mouse trap, they will come; but otherwise the world will go on its way."

Advertising in its relation to profitable merchandising was the subject of an address by E. S. Clifford of Quigley Publications:

"Only this week I was privileged to look over the store of one of your members. He was doubling his space and the place teemed with masons and carpenters and other workmen. 'When I started two years ago, they gave me not more than six months to last,' he told me. 'Today I am doubling my space because I have to, to take care of my business. You can't stand still. You either have to go forward or you go backward.'

"I feel he typifies this association of yours. After seeing dozens of associations of this kind bloom and fade within a few months, even during the palmy days of Anaconda leaping to $500 and night clubs charging ten-dollar covers, a great many people gave you men less than six months. Yet here today is an enthusiastic gathering with every key city in the United States represented. You have not only survived; you have become one of the important vital factors in the great motion picture industry."

Cites Equipment Improvement

"You may believe," he continued, "that the fellow across the street or around the corner in the equipment business is your competitor. If so, you are thinking in the days of 1927 not 1935. Your greatest competitor today is the mental state of your prospective customers who have got out of the habit of buying. It is the same in all lines. Three terrible years of depression made buying next to impossible. Then the urge to buy something cheap and the resulting disappointments destroyed confidence. For the past eighteen months business has improved steadily for the theatres, and today there is potentially the greatest market for theatre equipment in the history of the industry.

"You know better than anyone else the tremendous improvements that have been made in all lines of theatre equipment in the past five years. But the great mass of theatre owners do not. They have felt that a dollar saved was a dollar earned—an adage which does not apply to the show business. In the show business it should read a dollar intelligently spent is five dollars earned.

"So what has happened? If the carpets are ragged and the seats broken down, they have been giving the public two features instead of one. If the projection is faulty and the acoustics worse, lure the public in with amateur nights. If the lobby is antique and only half the lights will work on the marquee, give the pubic cut prices or vaudeville. That is not what built this great industry, and you know it. With pictures today the best we have ever offered, there is only one explanation of these subterfuges. The theatres have forgotten that the comfort and satisfaction of their patrons is the very essence of the motion picture's great success in the amusement field."

Mr. Clifford urged the dealer and manufacturer not to wait for the theatre owner to find out accidentally about the wonderful improvements that have been made in all lines of equipment, but to tell them, and tell them repeatedly.

Dealers Represented

Member supply dealers represented at the convention were:

American Theatre Supply, Paul Hueter, Toledo.
Amusement Supply, Ralph Ruben and Russell Ruben, Detroit.
Amusement Supply, J. J. Pear, New York.
Capitol Motion Picture Supply, I. S. Pearse, New York.

Supply Companies Are Urged to Keep Telling Theatres of Improvements in Apparatus; 36 Manufacturers in Exhibit

Capitol Theatre Supply, K. R. Douglass, Boston.

Charles Chaplin, Al Lichtman, Mary Pickford and Samuel Goldwyn (left to right) are pictured above at the Hollywood meeting of the three owners of United Artists at which they elected Mr. Lichtman president to succeed Joseph M. Schenck, who resigned with Darryl Zanuck to associate the Schenck-Zanuck 20th Century Pictures company with Fox Film. Douglas Fairbanks had cabled his choice from abroad.

Mr. Lichtman returned to New York Wednesday by plane to attend pre-convention conferences, and to prepare for the stockholders' meeting scheduled for June 25th, at which his selection will be ratified and a board chairman elected. Mr. Lichtman is expected to function, at least temporarily, as president and general sales manager, receiving salary and percentage as heretofore, it is understood. Samuel Goldwyn may be selected as chairman of the board.

Mr. Lichtman brought back to Broadway word that David O. Selznick will resign as an executive producer at MGM to make five or six a year for United Artists, thus filling the gap left open by the Schenck-Zanuck withdrawal of 20th Century. He will use the studio quarters formerly occupied by Mr. Zanuck. Mr. Selznick will head his own U.A. unit, working as David O. Selznick Productions, Inc. His MGM contract expires in August. He said that his brother, Myron, is not associated with him in the new arrangement.

Douglas Fairbanks will arrive in New York in time for the owners' meeting on June 25th. Charles Chaplin, Samuel Goldwyn and Mary Pickford will also be on hand.

Joe Brandt Joins N. Y. Law Firm

Joe Brandt, former president of Columbia pictures and later head of World Wide and vice-president of Educational, this week announced his association with the law firm of Hartman, Sheridan, Tekulsky and Pecora, in New York, as business counsel and technical expert on matters pertaining to the industry.

The announcement said Mr. Brandt planned to leave for the Coast Saturday "to investigate proposals submitted to his new associates by important financial interests, who are said to be making an unusually intensive survey of the motion picture industry, with a possible view of investments on a large scale."

Continuing, the announcement said: "Mr. Brandt refused to be quoted as to whether or not these investments would involve existing companies or the creation of a new organization. He admitted that his negotiations with the officials of Pathe are still in progress, but would make no comment on their implications."

While it is not generally known that the former film executive is a lawyer, he was graduated from the Law School of the University of New York and was admitted to the bar in 1906. Mr. Brandt will not practice law in his new capacity. He said his legal affiliation will "not interfere with the various proposals he has now under advisement, for financing production and participating in production on a major scale." He will make his headquarters at the offices of the law firm, 285 Madison avenue, New York.

Mrs. James Roosevelt Resigns from Research Council

Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, has resigned her post as honorary vice-president of the Motion Picture Research Council. Mrs. Roosevelt said that for reasons of health, and because of other business, she could take no real part in the council's activities, and did not like to be "merely a name." "I'm much too busy and too old to do anything," she said, "and I don't like to allow my name to be used when I don't do anything."

Drew's Leg Amputated

Pat Drew, one of those injured in the recent airplane crash at Macon, Mo., underwent amputation of a leg below the knee in an effort to save his life at a Hollywood hospital. Mr. Drew was a Paramount studio worker. He had refused to submit to the amputation at Macon following the crash.

St. Louis Action May Be Postponed

The St. Louis anti-trust suit against three major distributors and affiliates may be postponed until fall, it was indicated by Judge George Moore in United States district court in that city on Tuesday when taking under advisement motions for a demurrer and a bill of particulars filed on behalf of Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation, and the company. As the government demanded an early trial, word came from Washington that the possibility of widespread film prosecutions may be revived.

Rumors that the government intended to study the industry's operations were current following filing of the St. Louis suit. It is believed pertinent that Department of Justice agents lately have been seeking to secure Code Authority records stored in New York.

The court allowed counsel four days in which to file briefs in support of the motions. On the question of the date for trial, Judge Moore said he would not decide until he has ruled on the motions, but during the discussions indicated that he probably would not expect to try the case on its merits during July or August. The defendants are Warner, Paramount, RKO and affiliated companies as well as individual officers.

Russell Hardy, special assistant attorney general in charge of prosecution, contending for an early trial, told the court that if it is delayed too long it will prove a useless procedure, as the complainants in the case are "bleeding to death." He attacked the business methods of the defendant corporations. Counsel for the defendants, including former Senator James A. Reed, opposed a trial in the summer.

Mr. Hardy opposed both the demurrer and the plea for a bill of particulars, contending that the indictment was sufficient to warrant a hearing of the testimony and that it clearly set forth the allegations the government was expecting to prove. Former Senator Reed charged the complainants were themselves responsible for the closing of their theatres in St. Louis and had endeavored to obtain a monopoly of the theatrical business there. Sam B. Jeffries, of Warner counsel, said the entire matter was simply a business controversy.

Colonel William J. Donovan of New York argued the demurrer for the defense, while Jacob M. Lashly of St. Louis informed the court of the need for a bill of particulars, saying he desired to avoid surprise moves on the part of the government during the trial.

In Washington this week it was indicated the government was interested particularly in conditions in Texas, where the grievance board experienced considerable difficulty in dealing with controversies over the supply of product. The first step in the alleged investigation was to request all papers relating to an old feud in Texas between Reuben Frells and Sol Gordon which was sent to the grievance boards several months ago, according to report.

In New York this week there was no indication that the Code Authority is ready to hand over its records to the Department of Justice, either in the Frells-Gordon case or any other matter.

RADIO CHARGES ASCAP CONTROL OF POPULAR MUSIC AT U. S. TRIAL

Many Complaints Against Society Filed by Exhibitors, with Number To Be Called Later as Government Witnesses

BULLETIN

Unexpected adjournment to November 4 of the United States Government's anti-trust suit against the ASCAP was taken Wednesday in order, it was explained, to give counsel for both sides an opportunity to arrive at stipulations on evidence, which will speed up the trial when it is resumed.

Calling witness after witness to prove its charge that the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, through its licensing and fee-fixing methods, maintains a monopoly of the nation's music, the government this week delivered some hard blows as it continued prosecution of its anti-trust suit which began June 11 before Judge Henry W. Goddard in the U. S. District Court in New York. The defense fought back through cross-examination of government witnesses.

A wealth of testimony was adduced to show that the vast majority of musical compositions heard on the air is controlled by copyrights vested in the Society, for use of which the broadcasting companies are compelled to pay, under blanket contracts, a fee of 5 per cent of their gross receipts.

The decision in this case will be received with keen interest by the nation's theatre owners, from whom ASCAP each year exacts a kingly ransom in music charges. Also, it will have a definite bearing on organized exhibitors' plans for anti-trust moves against the Society, which are being held in abeyance pending the outcome of the present trial.

As the trial progressed, it was learned that exhibitors had filed a large number of complaints against ASCAP with the Department of Justice and that the Department's agents in New York are concentrating on this investigation for the present. Along with ASCAP, defendants are the Music Publishers' Protective Association and members of the two organizations.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, in New York this week, planned to confer with Andrew W. Bennett, special assistant to the U. S. Attorney General, who is conducting the government's case, on phases of exhibitor participation in the trial. He is one of the prospective industry witnesses for the government.

It was revealed that new five-year contracts with ASCAP have been entered into by the National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting System for stations they own and operate, renewing present agreements to 1940 on practically unchanged terms. Station WCAU, Philadelphia, has signed a similar contract. The radio chains have claimed ASCAP compels them to negotiate blanket contracts for use of members' compositions at the Society's own terms.

Another development was the report that Famous Music Corporation, Paramount's music publishing subsidiary, is considering affiliation with the Warner group of music firms. The company now is a member of the ASCAP organization.

Evidence of the extent to which ASCAP dominates the music business went into the record this week when William J. Benning, program and music director of Station WTMJ, Milwaukee, which is owned by the Milwaukee Journal, testified that of 25,572 numbers in the station's music library, all but 2,801 were controlled by the Society. Benning did admit, however, under cross-examination by Nathan Burkan, chief defense counsel, that the station frequently uses music other than that controlled by ASCAP and that the writers of these songs receive no royalties.

Mr. Benning added to the testimony of other witnesses that the numbers controlled by ASCAP are indispensable to broadcasting. On cross-examination, however, he admitted that thousands of famous musical compositions are available from other sources, including the Radio Program Foundation and much foreign music. He added that the use of foreign songs in this country is limited because the lyrics are not understood. Mr. Burkan drew from him repeated admissions that there was a vast supply of usable material in the public domain, including phonograph records. He admitted that ASCAP rendered a service to licensees in making available a vast supply of music without being concerned about copyright violations.

Trial Moves Slowly

As anticipated, the trial, because of its technical nature and the examination of many witnesses, is moving slowly. In an effort to speed it, counsel for the opposing sides were to attempt to agree on a stipulation of facts that would be admitted without testimony.

A high spot of the testimony was the attempt of government counsel to establish through examination of Thomas Belviso, manager of National Broadcasting Company's music library research department and former Paramount music director in Boston, that ASCAP owned most of the popular music used in broadcasting. Mr. Belviso's testimony concerned music that has come into the public domain through lapse of copyrights or the lack of them and hence is freely available for public performance. The government's contention is that ASCAP's alleged monopoly on copyrighted music makes it impossible to give a succession of varied, public performances of music without being licensed by the organization. Most of the music in the public domain, Mr. Belviso suggested, is the classical compositions of long-dead composers.

Mr. Belviso admitted under questioning by Mr. Burkan, for the defense, that NBC had a music library of its own of 250,000 titles, many of them different arrangements of the same song. Mr. Burkan also brought out that Mr. Belviso himself composed music for NBC programs and endeavored to show that, similarly, other radio programs are prepared without benefit of ASCAP.

To refute Mr. Belviso's admissions under cross-examination that a large store of music available to broadcasters is in the public domain, not subject to copyright, such as numbers controlled by European music societies and the works of classical composers, Special Assistant Bennett asked the witness what the public favored in the way of music. Mr. Belviso replied they wanted popular music, which he defined as current music, all of which, he said, is not in the public domain.

Burkan and Thacher Deny Society Is Strong Enough to Dominate an Industry; U. S. Charges Unfair Tactics

A technical dissertation on broadcasting was put into the record by Mac Asbill, special assistant to the U. S. Attorney General, in reply to Mr. Burkan's contention that music is something "intangible and incorporeal" and not subject to the laws of interstate commerce. The government maintains that music is made up of very real and physical sound waves and that the transmission of these from one state to another is an act in interstate commerce, and secured testimony to this effect from C. B. Jolliffe, chief engineer of the Federal Communications Commission.

Raymond P. Robinson, chief of the catalogue and index division of the U. S. Bureau of Copyrights, and William C. Siegfried, clerk in the bureau, testified that from July 1, 1909, to December 31, 1934, the 102 publishers of the Society and 100 of their subsidiaries took out a total of 164,773 copyrights.

The government, said Special Assistant Bennett, seeks to void all agreements between ASCAP and its members so that holders of music copyrights would be compelled to market their products on the basis of "open competition." He said ASCAP, made up of 102 publishers and 973 authors and composers, had compelled radio broadcasting companies to take out a general license. As an example of the alleged unfairness of this system, he told Judge Goddard that ASCAP received 5 per cent of what a broadcasting company received for Father Coughlin's hour, although the priest broadcasts no music.

Mr. Burkan and Thomas D. Thacher, former Solicitor General, counsel for ASCAP, argued it had been formed to protect the rights of composers and lyric writers and scoffed at the idea that it was strong enough, as charged, to dominate an industry.

Mr. Burkan pointed out that the Society had been organized in 1914 with the growth of musical revues and cabarets, when pirating on a wholesale scale threatened the livelihood of composers. In 1921, Mr. Burkan explained, "broadcasting entered the picture, and there began a battle to secure rights against the newcomer." This ended, he said, in the licensing system established in 1932.

As another example of oppressive tactics, Mr. Bennett said ASCAP charged an electrical transcription fee of 25 to 50 cents for each broadcast of a record, a double fee being charged for the use of a "restricted number." Mr. Burkan explained the double fee was intended to hold down exploitation of a song until sheet music and phonograph record sales had had a chance.

Of the 11,213 musical compositions registered for copyright last year, ASCAP controlled 6,480, it was testified by Richard W. Vannier, employee of the National Broadcasting Company. While Mr. Burkan drew the admission that about 50 per cent of symphonic and chamber music was in the public domain, as well as some show and dance music, he himself admitted that no motion picture production numbers were in the public domain.

EQUITY BODY ORDERS PAY FOR REHEARSALS

Decision Breaks Tradition; Is Effective Next Season; Rule Follows Actors' Protests

Breaking with a tradition holding since time immemorial that actors should rehearse without compensation, the Equity Council Tuesday decided that members of Actors Equity Association and the Chorus Equity Association are to be paid for time devoted to rehearsing next season. Never before in the history of the theatre has this been either compulsory or customary.

The resolution, adopted at a special Council meeting, officially designates the compensation as "rehearsal expense money," and it is to be paid as follows:

A flat $20 weekly for rehearsal expenses of senior members, or those with more than two years' experience.

A flat $15 weekly for junior members, or those with less than two years' experience.

A flat $15 weekly for members of the Chorus Equity Association.

While the new ruling affects legitimate productions primarily, it also increases the cost of presenting stage shows in film theatres where members of either of the two associations are employed. Equity's Council is able to dictate wage and hour standards by reason of the union's closed shop.

Probation Period Retained

The ruling followed repeated protests by actors that while they were guaranteed two weeks' salary under the present Equity rules, they often rehearsed four weeks only to see a show close after a two-week run. The junior members complained that they might play a total of four shows in a season and receive only $200 for 24 weeks' work, 16 of which would be devoted to rehearsing.

The probationary period of seven days for dramatic and ten days for musical productions remains untouched by the new measure. Rehearsals following this period must be paid for.

Frank Gillmore, president of Equity, said the step was taken as "an economic necessity because of the reduction in the number of annual productions and because of the increase in the number of short runs." Equity believes this measure will "help the small salaried actor without hurting the managers."

Makeup of Casts Changed

Equity's resolution, as an incentive to shorter rehearsal periods, further provided that a manager may draw "expense" salaries for the first two weeks of rehearsal, on which the actor is paid from the bond regularly posted with Equity, on condition that at least one week's full salary remain posted. Salaries for rehearsal beyond that time must be paid directly by the manager.

Mr. Gillmore said he did not believe the demand for rehearsal allowances would cause managers to curtail production activities, as some actors fear. Arthur Hopkins, former president of the League of New York Theatres, embracing all managers and producers, agreed with Mr. Gillmore. William A. Brady, who was chairman of the NRA code authority for the legitimate theatre, was one of the first managers to go on record favoring rehearsal allowances.

What may prove more of a financial burden to producers than pay for rehearsals was the Council's action in altering the makeup of casts. It decided that hereafter only 20 per cent of a cast may be composed of junior members receiving a weekly wage of $25, the code minimum which the association intends to maintain. There have been reports that managers were hiring junior members at $25 a week to avoid paying the senior members minimum, which is $40. Old-age parts were even being filled by juniors, according to complaints.

Agitation for rehearsal pay, which has long been the actor's dream, was started last year by the Actors' Forum, liberal group within the union.

Senate Reports Favorably on the Copyright Bill

Materially amended in a number of important respects, the copyright legislation sought by the State Department as a vehicle for acceptance by the United States of the international copyright convention was submitted to the Senate June 17 with a favorable report by the Senate patents committee.

Efforts will be made to secure consideration of the bill before the end of the session, although it is not believed action can be secured in the House of Representatives before next year.

As rewritten for final action, the bill eliminates the $250 minimum penalty for innocent infringement and increases the maximum damages which may be collected from $5,000 to $20,000.

The committee also removed that section of the original measure limiting damages to an amount "equivalent to the fair and reasonable value of a license" where the defendant in an infringement proceeding could show that he had been duped by a third person, but exemption is still provided where the defendant proves he was acting in good faith and infringement could not have been foreseen.

Several provisions apply directly to motion pictures, one clarifying the status of films by providing that the right to exhibit a copyrighted work publicly, if it be a motion picture, may be acquired just as is the right to perform or produce a drama.

Under another section of the legislation, no injunction could prevent the distribution or exhibition of films except in cases where the court is convinced that the defendant is unable to pay whatever damages may be assessed or began production of the film with actual knowledge that copyright was being infringed.

In the same connection, the committee strengthened the provisions protecting newsreels against injunctions designed to prevent reproduction of copyrighted photographs by permitting the issuance of restraining orders after judgment that the reproduction is an infringement. The committee abandoned a former provision removing criminal and civil liability where due credit is given for the use of copyrighted material, but permits "merely incidental and not reasonably-avoidable" use of such copyrighted material in films about current events.

In its report, the committee devoted considerable attention to the question of penalties, defending its elimination of the minimum and increase of the maximum, the former as eliminating a source of abuse and the latter as recognizing the modern increased value of copyrighted material.

"The existence of such a provision, as well as others of the remedial provisions, has a significance much larger than the mere matter of collecting damages," the committee asserted, in discussing the $250 minimum. The committee is firmly of the opinion that to eliminate the statutory minimum of $250 for infringement without proof of damage is to eliminate the chief factor in the use of the law for bargaining, sometimes for coercive purposes, between producer and consumer of copyrighted works.

"So many palpable injustices have arisen from the present law that courts have acquired a dislike for handling such cases and have come to feel that the law is wrong," it was explained. "It is believed that with enactment of this provision of the bill the courts will realize that the statute lays a foundation under which they can do justice and that they may be relied upon to utilize their full powers and abilities to such end."

Ball Receives Patent On Technicolor Device

J. C. Ball, inventor of the key camera process important to the new Technicolor as seen in "Becky Sharp," Pioneer-RKO film, has just received the final patent, No. 2,000,058, on the invention, after four years. Mr. Ball is vice-president and technical director of Technicolor, Inc., and applied for the patent in June, 1931. The patent was issued to Mr. Ball himself, who transferred it to Technicolor.

Reed Honored In Providence

Friends of Edward L. Reed, veteran Providence showman, to the number of 200, last week celebrated his twentieth year as manager of the local Strand at a dinner at the Biltmore Hotel. Edward M. Fay was chairman of the committee. Among the guests were Maurice Wolf of Boston and A. A. Spitz, dean of Rhode Island showmen, as well as civic leaders. Martin R. Toohey was toastmaster. Mr. Reed was presented with the silver service.

ALLIED'S PROBLEMS BROUGHT TO N.Y. AS OTHERS ATTACK UNFAIR PRACTICES

Virginia MPTO Protests Free Shows, Decries Pettengill Bill and Mrs. Gilman's Move for Federal Control

Organized expressions against unfair competitive practices and troublesome theatre problems, many having developed since the code was nullified, were heard this week from exhibitor gatherings held along several fronts, as follows:

Asserted aggression by affiliated circuits in the form of overbuying with intent to deprive independent opposition of a film supply, and Loew's invasion of the Chicago theatre field in a fight on independents at odds with MGM over sales policies were the subjects of conferences in New York by members of the executive committee of Allied States Association.

The Virginia MPTO, meeting at Roanoke, protested "walkathons," free shows, arbitrary play dates, the music tax, score charges, the leasing of sound equipment for free exhibitions, and resolved against government control, the Pettengill bill and Mrs. Robins Gilman, who has been campaigning for both.

Mississippi owners planned to fight the "obnoxious" state amusement tax.

Meanwhile preparations were going forward for state exhibitor conferences in Kansas-Missouri, Georgia, Florida, Massachusetts, and West Virginia, all for the purpose of attempting to arrive at solutions to the issues.

A protest against circuit overbuying was taken to Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, by the leaders of Allied States meeting in New York, and the Chicago Loew-MGM situation was discussed with Felix F. Feist, general manager of distributing for Metro. Mr. Hays is understood to be withholding a commitment pending a discussion with executives of member distributor companies operating theatres.

The committee which interviewed Mr. Hays listed a number of complaints, although the meeting was described as "a friendly and sympathetic exchange of views" in line with the specific resolution adopted at the recent Allied convention to petition the MPPDA head for aid in ending the practices complained of by the delegates at the Atlanta meeting. Primarily, these were circuit theatre practices in Texas as enumerated by Col. H. A. Cole, Allied director, who said they were designed either to force independents out of business or to make them a part of a national booking combine. The complaints submitted to Mr. Hays will be further investigated by his office, it is understood. Serving on the committee were Sidney E. Samuelson, Abram F. Myers, Al Steffes, H. M. Richey, Fred Herrington and Newman Waters.

While Sidney Samuelson, president of Allied, refused to comment on the conference which was scheduled between himself and Aaron Saperstein, head of Allied in Chicago, with Mr. Feist on the Chicago situation, it was reported there would be no change in Loew's plans to go through with its expansion program in that city in opposition to the independent circuits. Mr. Feist recently was in Chicago on the matter.

With reference to the charge that affiliated circuits are practicing overbuying with intent to divert product from independents, a spokesman for the distributors said they do not control any of the five circuits which are named as being involved. While they have financial interests in the circuits, they are all operated locally and the distributors have no voice in the operations, it was said by this spokesman.

President Samuelson said the two-day meeting of the executive committee was an administration session to decide means of effectuating the mandates of the Atlanta convention. In addition to those named, attending were Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel, and Nathan Yamins, Edward Ansin and Bennie Berger. The executive committee may meet again in a few weeks to further consider its program.

Mr. Myers and Mr. Richey were designated to perfect plans for National Allied Day, scheduled for August 5, when member theatres are expected to contribute 25 per cent of the day's receipts to the national Allied treasury. Various territorial problems were discussed, as well as the proposed expansion program in territories not now represented in Allied. There also were conferences on the Pettengil bill which will be presented again at the next session of Congress.

In an interview, Mr. Steffes expressed hope that the industry would bring about a "fair and equitable" arbitration system, but had little confidence his hope would materialize, and blamed the large circuits. He said "bank nights" were increasing in the Minneapolis territory, but that double features were looked upon with disfavor.

Virginia Owners Act

The Virginia M.P.T.O. met in Roanoke, over the weekend, with President Morton G. Thalhimer, of Richmond, in the chair, and Hunter Perry of Charlotteville as general program chairman.

Among the speakers was C. H. Morrissett, state tax commissioner, who expressed the belief that there will be no further state tax on amusements in Virginia.

The report of Mr. Thalhimer, and that of Robert Barton, legal advisor, stressed the problems of the organization as including (1) walkathons and other "rackets" which, while offering competition, are also detrimental to the safety and health of the public; (2) so-called "free shows" given by a large tire company, and exploited with "unfair" advertising; (3) the activities of Mrs. Robins Gilman who, they said, seems to be of the opinion that the industry should be under government supervision.

Mr. Thalhimer stated that it is incumbent upon exhibitors to continue the same fair practice toward their employees as under the code.

Resolutions passed by the assembly upheld the president; favoring "voluntary compliance with the salient principles of the motion picture code eliminating "cut-throat" competition, unscrupulous practices, trade reprisals, and urging the maintainance of the standards of NRA as to minimum wage and maximum hours.

Other resolutions passed expressed opposition to arbitrary designation of play dates by distributors; score charges which have become unreasonable and unnecessary; music taxes which have become extortionate; the leasing of sound equipment for free exhibitions of pictures; the showing of pictures in schools and churches, "which, under the guise of education, are in reality but advertising for some commercial concern."

Of importance was the discussion on block booking by Elmer Brient, of Richmond, in which all the principal arguments were brought out.

A resolution to approve block booking by the entire membership was not approved, but there was united opposition to the proposed Pettengill bill, and to government supervision in any form.

In the discussion regarding the pernicious type of exploitation known as "free movies," it was suggested by Carter Barron that the Virginia M.P.T.O. get together with the national M.P.T.O.A. and with Allied, and with the largest tire companies and automobile concerns, to see if an agreement can not be reached.

Protest Military Post Shows

It was further suggested that exhibitors should take a stand against free first runs, shown in army and navy posts. It was decided to draft resolutions to be sent to the War Department and the Navy Department recommending that the situation be regulated.

Rubey Cowan, speaking as a representative of N.B.C. Artists Service, admitted that radio and the motion picture industry are competitors, but urged that they become allies. Asserting that radio has a tremendous contact with motion pictures and declaring that the public is anxious to see people on the stage, he offered a list of radio artists that could be obtained for appearances at motion picture houses. Among those he included were Paul Whiteman, Major Bowes' Amateurs, Rudy Vallee, Phil Cook, the Pickens Sisters, Gene and Glen, Johnny Marvin, Mary Small and "Molasses and January."

Problems of the small town exhibitor were discussed by Charles Roth, of Harrisonburg.

Charles Loth, of Waynesboro, a small town in which he owns the only theatre, has only the opposition of carnivals, medicine shows and the like. These have been sponsored by the fire department with the Town Council donating the license fee. In cooperation with the Retail Merchants Association, Mr. Loth managed to put through a bill making it impossible for the license fees to be paid by persons other than those connected with the carnivals. Thus he succeeded in sending this sort of competition out into the county, and away from his territory. In the matter of "free shows" that were scheduled to appear at schools, he has managed to have them played at his theatre, and by adding a cartoon, and his trailers for the coming week, has contrived to advertise his own attractions while giving a better "free show" than the school or church could have presented.

The worst problem of the small town exhibitor, said Mr. Loth, is his inability to secure fresh, clean, unbroken prints for his theatre.

Mississippi Owners Attack Taxes

The Mississippi division of the Tri-States Motion Picture Theatre Owners (Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee), meeting Sunday and Monday at the Robert E. Lee hotel in Jackson, and with President R. X. Williams, Jr., in the chair, heard Ed Kuykendall, native son, from Oxford, and president of the MPTOA, outline the national organization's fight for revision of the copyright laws and against the powers of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to assess exhibitors for using music of its members.

How the Arkansas unit had helped to eliminate amusement taxes in that state was explained by President Ray Morrow and Secretary-Treasurer J. F. Norman. Mississippi's group initiated a movement to accomplish the same result. The convention named President Williams and W. E. Elkin of Aberdeen, its secretary-treasurer, as a committee of two to contact all theatres in the state to join in the unit's fight. Other Mississippi officers are J. E. Alford, first vice-president; J. A. West, second vice-president, and these directors: J. T. Sanford, W. S. Tyson, H. H. Alexander, H. J. Williams of Grenada; Al Yeomans, H. Solomon and Arthur Lehman.

Laying of plans for the further organization of their associates featured the session, which closed with a banquet and dance Sunday night.

M. A. Lightman of Memphis, former president of the national organization, was another speaker at the Jackson gathering.

Kansas-Missouri to Talk Code

An answer to the problem of what should be substituted for the code in motion picture trade practices will be sought at the annual convention of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association in Kansas City June 26 and 27. An increase in practices heretofore banned by the code, such as reduced admissions and the lottery type of box-office stimulator, is reported in Kansas City since removal of the Blue Eagle.

"Because of the elimination of the code, exhibitors today are without means of conciliation or arbitration among themselves or with the distributors," said R. R. Biechele, secretary.

Other matters which will demand consideration include an impending special session of the Kansas legislature to pass additional taxes and probably a sales levy, the question of how the Missouri sales tax shall be collected from theatres, and theatre liability insurance. John C. Stapel of Columbia, Mo., is president of the KMTA.

Southeastern Owners to Meet

The lion and the lamb are planning to lie down together.

Affiliated, independent and chain theatremen of the southeast will hold a three-day get-together at Jacksonville Beach, near Jacksonville, Fla., August 11-13, according to R. B. Wilby, one of the dominant figures in affiliated theatre operation in the southeast.

As an indication of the democratic aspect of the affair, the committee in charge of the business program are R. B. Wilby, Atlanta, affiliated operator; Sam Borisky, of Chattanooga, independent and a leader in GFTA Independent Theatres' Association, and Oscar Lam, of Rome, Ga., a former president of the SETOA. General chairman of arrangements is M. C. Moore, of Jacksonville, Fla., an independent. Nat Williams, of Thomasville, Ga., affiliated operator, is chairman of the publicity committee, and is assisted by Mitchell Wolfson, of Miami, Fla., an independent operator.

Headquarters will be at the Atlantic Beach Hotel and 500 are expected to attend.

"This will provide a common meeting ground for all theatre interests," said Mr. Wilby. "The business session will last one morning with the sky the limit on discussions and no subject barred. It is our purpose at this gathering to formulate a non-partisan spirit to fight common evils that beset the industry. With NRA disrupted we consider the coming meeting timely."

Leaders in the southeast are confident that the projected meeting will serve to iron out many of the misunderstandings which arose during the past few months and which gave rise to the birth of the independent organization, GFTA, of which Ike Katz, of Atlanta, is president, and of which N. A. Waters, of Birmingham, Frank Dowler and Sam Borisky, of Chattanooga, all prominent independent exhibitors, are officers.

Eastern Allied to Meet

Eastern Allied directors are to meet in Boston Monday and Tuesday with Abram Myers, chairman of the board and general counsel of Allied States, and Sidney Samuelson, president. The Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, Inc., has arranged for the session, which will be divided between the Hotel Touraine and the organization's headquarters.

Allied Theatres of New Jersey, at its regular meeting Tuesday at the Hotel Lincoln, New York, advanced plans for the annual meeting at Atlantic City.

On June 26 and 27, the Exhibitors and Managers Association of West Virginia will have its gathering at the Greenbrier hotel in White Sulphur Springs. J. C. Shanklin has arrangements in hand.

Exhibitors Unite To Reduce Costs

Pooling of exhibitor strength to effect operating economies and protect mutual interests against outside influences was the aim of developments in the Carolinas and Wisconsin this week.

At Charlotte, N. C., was made known the formation of Interstate Theatres, Inc., by S. S. Stevenson, general manager of Stevenson Theatres of Henderson, N. C., with 25 theatres of both Carolinas reported enrolled in the move for reduction of operating costs and for improvement of public service. Incorporators with Mr. Stevenson were listed as H. R. Berry of Hartsville, S. C.; G. W. Parr, Lancaster, S. C.; J. I. Simms, Orangeburg, S. C.; B. L. Trozier, Rock Hill, S. C.; R. P. Rosser, Sanford, N. C., and F. W. Smith, Monroe, N. C.

At Green Bay, Wis., W. R. Vincent of De Pere, Wis., heads the newly organized United Theatres, Inc., to buy and book pictures for independent theatres in Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, pooling buying power to eliminate percentage deals, forcing of 100 per cent contracts, and unfair clearance.

Musicians Attack Amateur Programs

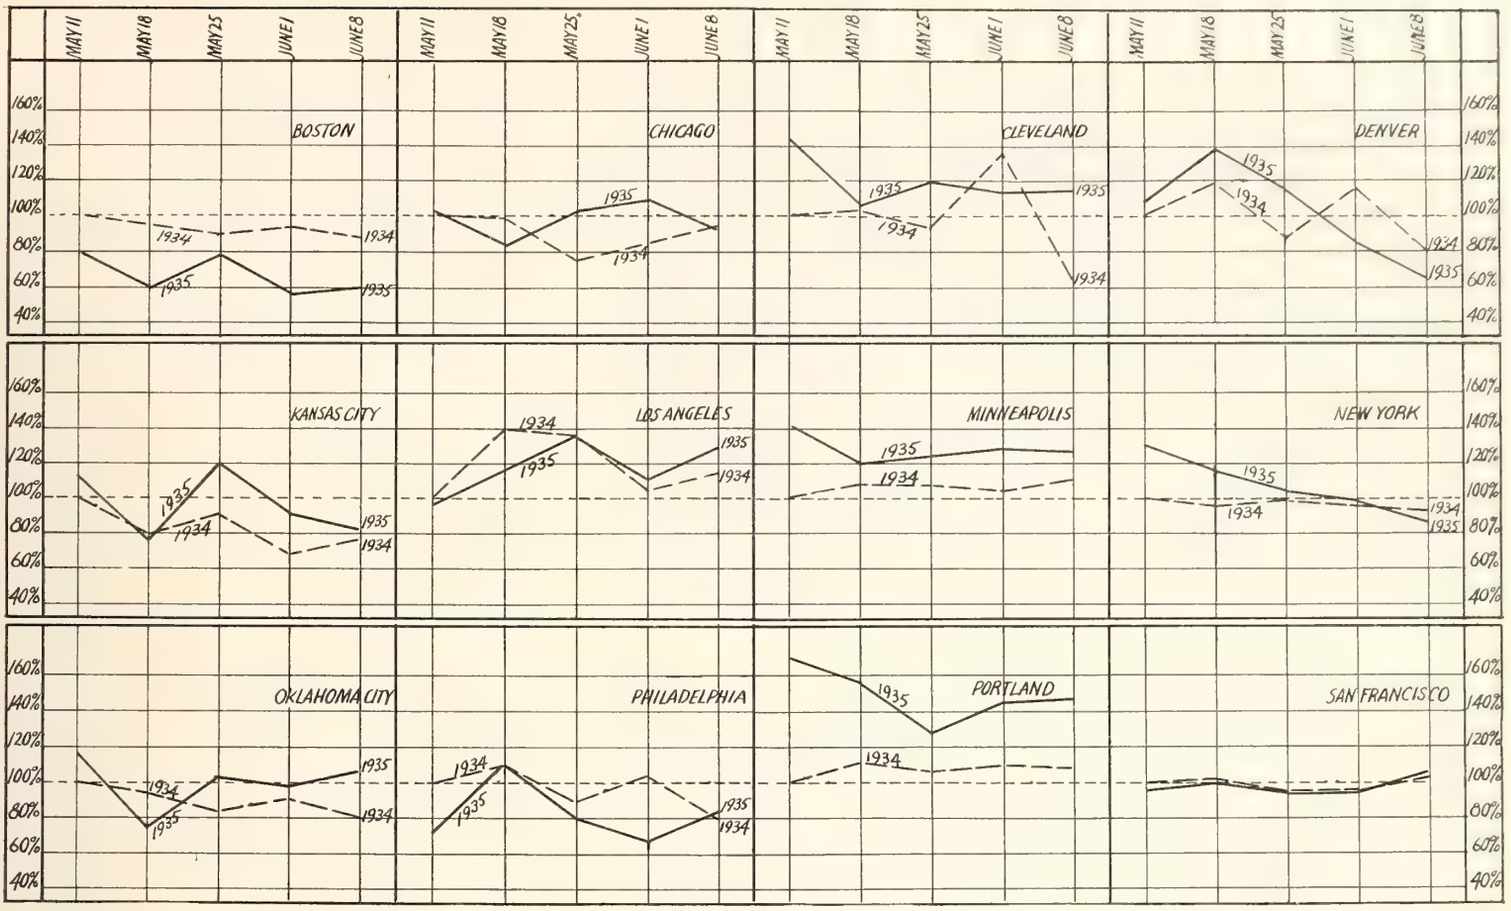
Amateur radio programs and amateur shows were branded as "high powered rackets" by Ralph Whitehead, executive secretary of the American Federation of Actors, at the annual convention of the American Federation of Musicians in Asbury Park, N. J., this week.

Mr. Whitehead attacked the amateur radio performances as a threat to musicians and variety actors, and urged that the musicians' and actors' federations unite against this type of broadcast, which he described as "the greatest Frankenstein of the present time." He said he foresaw the possibility of professionals performing as amateurs. The resolutions committee, however, took no action.

An attack on the allegedly exorbitant royalty fees of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers as being against public policy was also heard at the convention. The federation, however, turned down a resolution to urge dissolution of ASCAP on the ground its activities are "a menace to the employment of federation musicians."

Given Right to Expel

The federation empowered its president to order orchestras to break contracts with any employer who falls under the displeasure of the organization. The president also was given the right to expel any member upon refusal to comply with these instructions. Strike benefits of $50 a week per man for a period of five weeks, if they have been called out by the union, were authorized by the delegates.



Upon recommendation of President Joseph N. Weber, the convention increased his powers and those of the executive board. Mr. Weber was reelected for the thirty-sixth time as head of the musicians' union by the unanimous vote of the 400 delegates. Other officers, all reelected, are: Charles L. Bagley, vice-president; William Kerngood, secretary; H. E. Brenton, treasurer, and Edward Jarrott, member of the executive committee from Canada. Members of the committee representing the United States are James C. Petrillo, A. A. Greenbaum, C. A. Weaver, A. C. Hayden and Oscar Hild.

Violations to Bring Fines

Authorization was voted the president to remove any official of a local union if he is found derelict in his duties or violates the association's constitution. A fine was provided for any union member adjudicated guilty of violating AFM rules. The directing board was given the right to decide cases without a formal meeting and without hearing the persons involved.

All organizations and individuals engaging musicians would be required to enter into an agreement to employ only union musicians, under terms of a resolution adopted. It was explained this was a move to control alleged violations by booking agencies. New members are required, under another resolution, to pay a special "initiation" fee if they have played previously for employers on the black list or in territories excluded by the AFM.

Among resolutions proposed but not reported out of committee was one endorsing the Lundeen bill as the only measure providing for security during the entire period of unemployment; demanding union wages on all projects financed by federal, state and city governments; urging all federation members to refrain from supporting any candidate for public office antagonistic to union labor, and another seeking federation support of a law requiring orchestras broadcasting for remote control to charge $3 extra for each man in the unit when playing for a commercial program. The federation rejected a resolution to compel radio stations using rebroadcast programs to maintain a staff of not less than 10 musicians.

The above chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, indicates the trend of business in each of twelve key cities during the five-week period from May 11 to June 8 in 1934 and 1935. The gross in each city for the first week of the 1934 period is taken as 100 per cent for that city.

New Color Process Is Demonstrated in Chicago

The sons of J. Szczepanik, inventor who died in 1928 after eight years of effort on a color process which bears his name, demonstrated the aparatus last week at Chicago Film Laboratory to an invited audience under the auspices of the Pennington-Hick Corporation, a patents and investment securities house.

It was explained that the camera feeds a continuously flowing negative at 30 per cent above normal speed past a single lens supplemented by 18 to 24 secondary lenses revolved back of it and in front of the negative. Projection is from a single positive with three lenses successively exposed by a revolving shutter device, picture frames being colored green, red and a shade of violet consecutively. It is claimed the production cost is moderate.

Sabatini Wins in Income Tax Appeal

The United States Board of Tax Appeals in Washington last week decided that income derived from the sale of the film rights to five of the books of Raphael Sabatini, British author, was exempt from American income taxes. The books involved were: "Gates of Doom," "Strolling Saint," "Bardelys, the Magnificent," "Tavern Knight," "Captain Blood."

The contracts gave the producers world film rights to the books for $20,000 each. The agreements were signed in London. Mr. Sabatini, however, was held subject to tax in this country for all receipts from the dramatization of "Scaramouche," for which he received an advance of $500 from Charles I. Wagner. The government was seeking to collect approximately $40,000 in tax deficiencies and penalties for the years 1921-1928 inclusive.

Carey Sues Weiss for $12,750 Contract Claim

Harry Carey has filed suit in Los Angeles superior court against Louis Weiss for alleged breach of contract. Mr. Carey claims that in 1931 he was signed by Mr. Weiss to make eight films in 16 weeks at $1,500 per week; that he made four films, was paid $11,500 and told that his serices were no longer required. The actor is suing for $12,750. Artclass Pictures Corporation also is named in the suit.

Business Hard Hit By Omaha Car Strike

Theatres in Omaha were hard hit last week as a result of the local trolley car strike and the presence of National Guard troops. R. R. Cummings, district manager of the A. H. Blank circuit, declared business was so far off at the Omaha and Orpheum theatres that he would welcome a closing order from the authorities.

Cameramen Name Downs

Charles Downs has been appointed business manager of the New York cameramen's local to complete the present term, ending in December. The appointment was made by the executive board last week. Mr. Downs succeeds O. V. Johnson, resigned.

Pictures at High Level, Says Writer, Quoting Breen

Writing in the Grand Rapids, Mich., Press, Mary E. Remington recently said in part that pictures are now at their highest level from the viewpoint of intelligence and morality, according to Joseph I. Breen, head of the Production Code Administration on the Coast. She wrote: "It is the purpose of the Hays office and all others in authority to keep them there."

"The hostility toward the cleanup," Miss Remington said, "which at the start was so vigorous, has given way to enthusiastic cooperation and the higher conception of film entertainment now is believed to be stable."

Reverse Conviction Of Checkers for Ross

The conviction of three Ross Federal Service checkers for trespass in Boston district court was reversed last week after trial by a directed verdict of Judge Butterworth in superior court, according to Ross Federal Service. The case started in May, when two checkers refused to leave the Revere and Boulevard theatres at Revere. They were arrested and fined $10 each.

Theatres Bought at Auction

The Times Square and Apollo theatres, New York, were bought in last week by Timap, Inc., at a foreclosure auction. Timap was the plaintiff in an action brought against Burgwyn Realty Corporation and others. A judgment against both properties, totaling $115,850, was found against the defendants.

BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR MAY

SIX productions playing key theatres during May turned in grosses entitling them to the ranking of Box Office Champions for that month. Of these, the first of the pictures based on Department of Justice activities won the top position. Of the others, one was an operetta, one a drama based on a great classic, one a "shocker," and two were comedy-dramas, albeit even these were quite unlike each other, Mae West being the exploited element in one, and Shirley Temple the star of the other.

SKOURASES CONTINUE OPERATION FOR FOX

Ten-Year Contracts Concluded with Charles and Spyros; Metropolitan Hearing Set

Continued operation for ten more years by Spyros and Charles Skouras of the approximately 400 theatres comprising Fox West Coast and four other subsidiaries is provided in contracts signed with National Theatres Corporation, new FWC holding company of Chase-Fox, last Friday in New York. The signatures climaxed more than nine months of negotiation during which the contracts were held up by several snags. The contracts are retroactive to January 1, this year.

At the same time, three division managers in the west are to be given five-year operating contracts. These include Arch Bowles, district manager for FWC in the San Francisco area; Elmer C. Rhoden, Fox Midwest division manager at Kansas City, and Rick Ricketson, Rocky Mountain division head at Denver. Mr. Ricketson and Mr. Rhoden are to be presidents of the new subsidiaries in their territories, formed to take over theatres formerly in bankruptcy.

Renewal of the deals indicate that major operations will not be disturbed. Signing the pacts for National Theatres were Harry Coxe, treasurer, and Summins Gamby, vice-president.

The contracts with the Skourases stipulate that National Theatres may cancel the agreements any time after five years upon six months notice. Spyros is executive vice-president of National with headquarters in New Yok, while Charles remains in Los Angeles as president of FWC.

Chase Has 58 Per Cent of Stock

National Theatres Corporation was formed as the holding company for the new subsidiaries which have been in process of reorganization since their bankruptcy in the spring of 1933. It has been confirmed that Chase National Bank of New York holds 58 per cent of the National Theatres stock and Fox Film Corporation 42 per cent.

Renewal of the operating deals continues the Skourases in a position of national prominence as theatre operators, an activity which began in St. Louis many years ago. Their appointment in charge of National has the stamp of approval of the Chase financial interests guiding the destinies of the circuit. Marked improvement in the operations of FWC is said to have been shown under their management, since being placed in charge three years ago, in reduced overhead and business stimulation.

Conferences with Mr. Ricketson and Mr. Rhoden were continued by Spyros Skouras, and the division managers' contracts are expected to be consummated by the end of the week when they will return from New York to the field. In Mr. Ricketson's division are 55 theatres, 40 of which are operating, while Mr. Rhoden has 92 of 120 operating.

Pooling of Evergreen State Amusement Corporation, a FWC subsidiary, with John Hamrick theatres in Seattle and Portland has been completed and a new company is in process of formation. Operations will be divided between Mr. Hamrick in Seattle and Al Finkelstein of Evergreen in Portland.

A product deal has been closed with Fox Film for the entire circuit of 400, and negotiations with other companies are under way. J. J. Sullivan, of Los Angeles, and his assistant, Edward Zabel, are staying in New York for the summer for product purchases.

Charles Skouras has returned to the coast from the New York conferences, accompanied by Mr. Bowles.

Under the new structure, National Theatres Corporation is the holding company for the operating subsidiaries, while National Holding Corporation has been formed to hold receivables such as liens on the properties which may be assigned to it. A lien on Fox Midland was recently signed over to National Holding after National Theatres took up secured notes held by M. B. Shanberg and Herbert M. Woolf of Kansas City for about $500,000, representing the balance of the purchase price for the Midland theatres.

By terms of the sale of the bankrupt groups to National Theatres, this company agrees to carry out all contracts and agreements entered into by the receivers or trustees, including all film contracts and contracts for equipment and supplies and contracts for the readjustment of bond issues.

Theatres Added

Among theatres added by FWC in the Midwest division are: Electric, Kansas City, Kan.; Electric, Springfield, Mo.; Rivoli, Beatrice, Neb.; Webber, Denver; Crown, Laramie, Wyo.; Paramount, Joplin, Mo.; Uptown, Muscatine, Ia.

Theatres discarded were two in Charleston, Ill.; two in Mattoon, Ill.; one in Springfield, Ill.; one in Salem, Ill.; one in Johnston City, Ill.; and the Gillham and Mokan, Kansas City, Mo., as well as the Orpheum, Fredonia, Kan.; Broadway, Idaho Falls, Idaho; Strand Missoula, Mont.; Strand, Council Bluffs, Ia.

Skouras Theatres has closed with Leon Rosenblatt for the Westwood, Westwood, N. J., in what appears to be an expansion move, and is negotiating with Ossining, N. Y., interests for a theatre there, which would give the circuit control of the town. Recently Skouras acquired the Glen, Glen Cove, L. I., where it has the Cove.

Fox Metropolitan Hearing Set

Federal Judge Julian W. Mack in New York has fixed June 24 as the date when the docket of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., will be closed against any further assignment of claims. At that time a hearing will be held on a petition asking for the classification of creditors of Fox Metropolitan according to the nature of their claims, fixing the amount of debenture holders' claims and provisionally allowing all claims provided in the Joseph M. Schenck plan of reorganization.

Final Hearing June 27

Indications are that the Schenck plan will be approved by the noteholders, according to J. H. Carlson, secretary of the Fox Metropolitan noteholders' protective committee, which has on deposit 85 per cent of outstanding debentures. Sufficient creditor acceptances have been filed, according to reports. A final hearing on the reorganization plan itself will be before Judge Mack June 27.

An opposition group headed by J. Herbert Stern this week was preparing a new reorganization plan for Fox Metropolitan to be submitted to the bondholders. Mr. Stern recently submitted an offer of cash and securities representing 100 cents on the dollar.

Alliance Depicts Reign of George V

John Maxwell's Alliance Films, Ltd., a subsidiary of British International Pictures, displayed to an invited audience in the gold and silver ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria Hotel last Friday night a piece called in this country "Regal Cavalcade."

It was, in fact, a series of pieces. Composed of news shots with fresh material and a running commentary added, the whole is supposed to reconstruct, in "March of Time" fashion, the 25 years of reign of Britain's sovereign, George V.

There were huzzahs and there were hisses as the film unwound. The scallions, figuratively, were hurled from the general direction of a group of Communists who had received invitations to the screening. Otherwise, however, the audience seemed friendly and frequently Anglophile.

The film is BIP's contribution to the Silver Jubilee, now being observed in Great Britain. The files of stock shot libraries were ransacked for suitable documental material, and these are interspersed with "blackouts" enacted by a large cast. Added to the melange are excerpts from several of BIP's recent films for which distribution is being sought on the American market.

Released in England as "Royal Cavalcade," the picture was shown here under the title of "Regal Cavalcade." Its release on the commercial market is extremely doubtful, said representatives of Alliance Films, since it is realized that, with the exception of a limited audience, the American public cannot be expected to be interested in a subject so patriotically British.

If released in this country, it will probably be for educational purposes, most likely offered to the schools. In any event, the film will be completely overhauled to make it more palatable for American audiences, and shortened from its present running time of 101 minutes to about 70 minutes. As a concession to the American preview audience, there was inserted an old shot of Yankee doughboys marching behind Old Glory. Similar sequences may be cut in if an American release is decided upon.

Knight Receives Award For Gallantry in War

J. T. Knight, Jr., associated with Paramount Theatres Service Corporation as engineer in charge of maintenance and physical operation, and well known nationally for his work in theatre technology, has just been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism in action during the St. Mihiel offensive in France, September 12, 1918.

Mr. Knight was a captain of Battery A, 20th Field Artillery, Fifth Division. During the offensive, according to the citation, Captain Knight's battery was exposed to severe fire and he received a severe wound. He remained on duty despite the injury then and thereafter for a period of two months, during which time his battery was constantly in action.

FRENCH EXHIBITORS PROMISED REDUCTION IN TAXATION BURDEN

The Finance Ministry of the New Cabinet Offers Relief; New Group Will Reorganize the Affairs of Pathe Natan

by PIERRE AUTRE

Paris Correspondent

French exhibitors last week received promises from the Finance Ministry of the latest of the French cabinets that drastic reductions in the oppressive theatrical tax burden would be affected. Exhibitors are expecting a reduction of 50 per cent in the pauper tax and 25 per cent in the state tax. Complete closing of all types of amusement in Paris, scheduled recently as a measure of protest, was delayed on the expectation of a change in the government, two of which have occurred. It is seen as possible in Paris, however, that no reductions will be effected this season, as a result of the present government crisis.

For five months Bernard Natan, chief of Pathe Cinema, the largest organization of the French cinema industry, had been asked by Robert Dirler, representing a group of shareholders of the Society Pathé Cinéma, to show all the accounts of the Society before the trade court. For several years Pathé Cinema has given no dividends to its shareholders.

Recently a judge expert of the trade court and other experts have examined Pathé Natan's books. Nothing is known as yet regarding their findings.

But recently the industry was astonished to learn that Natan was refused a loan by his own bank when he needed money, and that he was being assisted by a French financier, Edouard Worms. It is probable that Mr. Natan and his brother Emile will have to relinquish control of their company.

Will Reorganize Company

The new group with Mr. Worms will undertake complete reorganization of the company. The capital probably will be reduced and the staff changed. After the reorganization the Pathé company is expected to continue with a new production program. The court is still to decide about Natan personally.

On May 24th the cinema committee of the Chamber of Deputies met to hear the report of Maurice Petsche, former Fine Arts sub-minister, on the reorganization of the French cinema industry. About G.F.F.A., formerly Gaumont, and now in receivership, Mr. Petsche thinks it is necessary for the government to retain the company's assets. But the state would grant a private concern the right to manage G.F.F.A. However, the government would have a prior right to use the G.F.F.A. studios and technical equipment for educational and propaganda pictures.

The most important part of Mr. Petsche's report concerns the creation of a credit organization, called "Cinema National Funds," which would help, under the control of the state, only French producers, distributors and exhibitors. This would be a private society which would lend money especially to the producers, at moderate interest. Financing of this organization would come from a special tax on the importation into France of all foreign pictures and also a tax on sound royalties.

The report shows also that French production is entirely in the hands of individual concerns which, in the past two years, have shown their superiority. The "Cinema National Funds" would help especially all these independent producers who cannot produce more than one picture every 12 or 16 months because they have to await return from one film before starting another. Under Mr. Petsche's plan, the state would become a "regulator and a animator" of production.

Form New Distributor Body

At the same time that Mr. Petsche's report was read, there was proposed another plan to transform all the syndicate organizations, such as the Chambre Syndicale Francaise de la Cinematographie, Syndicat Francais des Directeurs (Exhibitors), into one big organization which would have special branches or Syndicates.

Recently a new organization has been formed out of the Chambre Syndicale, Union des Distributeurs, which intended to take in hand all questions concerning distributors in their relation with producers as well as with exhibitors. President of this organization is Mr. Loureau, the managing director of Films Sonores Tobis. Mr. Loureau has left the Chambre Syndicale as well as all the French branches of American firms, which are all now a part of this group.

Against the Chambre Syndicale it has been said that it is particularly a union of producers who, with Natan at their head, had voted the quota and the restriction on imported pictures. At the present moment, exhibitors are a part of the exhibitors' syndicate or of the exhibitors' section of the Chambre Syndicale. The same is true of the distributors.

The scheme would be for a general organization with private sections or syndicates, entirely independent, as exhibitors, producers, distributors, laboratories, technicians and the like.

Early 1935 Production

During the first five months of 1935, 226 new pictures have been released in France, as follows:

(1) 149 pictures of general exhibition:

(a) 45 French talkers:
- 34 produced in France (French pictures)
- 8 produced in Germany (French versions)
- 2 produced in Hollywood
- 1 produced in Italy

(b) 104 dubbed pictures:
- 79 American
- 11 German
- 9 British
- 5 miscellaneous

(2) 99 pictures of restricted exhibition (foreign talkers), which can be shown only in 15 French theatres. Among these 99 foreign talkers, 22 also had been released as dubbings so that in general there are only 77 foreign talkers. These 99 talkers include:

- 68 American (12 also dubbed)
- 16 German (5 also dubbed)
- 6 British (3 also dubbed)
- 4 Russian
- 5 miscellaneous (2 also dubbed)

The number of French pictures released is much smaller than for the same period of 1934, when 60 French pictures were released. On the other hand there were 104 dubbings compared with 65 in 1934. The number of foreign talkers remains about the same.

Former Minister Offers Plan for a Credit Organization; 226 Pictures Released in France During Five Months

In all French territory there are now no more than 50 theatres able to show foreign talkers, 30 to 35 in Paris and about 15, divided in such chief cities as Bordeaux, Marseilles, Nice, Lyons. No foreign talker has a chance of being shown in more than three or four theares in Paris and five in the provinces so that the restriction law of 15 theatres does not present any exhibition problem.

There are some exceptions. Pictures like "Little Women," "The Unfinished Symphony" (Austrian version in German), "The Invisible Man," have been allowed to be shown in more than five theatres in Paris and ten in the provinces.

Generally, except for the houses specializing in foreign films, French theatres show French pictures and dubbed pictures.

Rely on French Films

French pictures, good or not, are the main "food" of the French theatres, especially in the provinces, where there are only one or two theatres in each town. Dubbed pictures must be very big and sensational to be shown as features. They also have to be suitable for French patrons. The biggest success of the present season is an American dubbed picture, "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

French production is divided into several kinds: popular pictures of local appeal, especially good for district halls, with not much morality. These pictures generally are not produced by French producers. In these pictures are included all the military farces and stage comedies. These vulgar pictures, which cannot be exported from France, represent about 50 per cent of French production. Producers have some excuse to make them in the fact that they are cheap and always recover their cost, even in the French market alone.

Happily the French studios have also produced during these five first months of 1935 high class pictures such as "Golgotha," "Le Bonheur" (Happiness), "Crime et Chatiment," "Tovaritch," "Maternite."

They produce also good comedies, such as "Monsieur Sans Gene," "Quelle Drole de Gosse," "Le Clown Bux," which are good and clean entertainment.

With the French talkers are shown also the French versions of foreign pictures which are French talkers made in foreign countries. They are generally French versions made in Berlin of Ufa pictures. The quality of these Ufa French versions has decreased for two years.

Two French versions of American pictures, "La Veuve Joyeuse" ("The Merry Widow") and "Folies Bergere" have been successes in France. "Folies Bergere" has been shown as a first run since May 10 at the Colisée Cinema, Paris, to packed houses.

104 Dubbings Released

One hundred and four dubbings, among them 79 American, have been released since January. The most successful of them are: "Here Comes the Navy," "The Count of Monte Cristo," "Enter Madame," "Mandalay," "Bright Eyes,"

French Exhibitors Promised Tax Cuts

"American Madness," "Hollywood Party," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "Charlie Chan in London," "British Agent," "Mysterious Mr. X," "It's a Gift," "Hide Out," "Treasure Island," "The Adventure' (German) "Forgotten Men," "Evergreen" (British).

All the other dubbings are shown as supporting pictures, even those which in their original version have been very successful in their first runs in Paris. "Little Women," which ran seven months in Paris in the original, was unsuccessful in dubbed form in the provincial halls. So was "It Happened One Night," and some other excellent pictures.

In five months the Paris theatres specializing in foreign films have absorbed 99 foreign talkers, 68 of them American. These specializing cinemas were very successful two years ago when there were no more than nine or 10. Now there are about 30. As a result the biggest of these theatres book the best pictures and the others have only program materials.

Among foreign talkers the real successes of this season have been: "Gay Divorcee," "One Night of Love," "Hide Out," "The Gilded Lily," "Broadway Bill," "The White Parade," "Sequoia," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," "Black Fury," "Ruggles of Red Gap," "The Thin Man," "Treasure Island."

At the present time the chief foreign talkers playing in Paris are: "Sweet Adeline," "Devil Dogs of the Air," "The Whole Town's Talking," "Clive of India," "Private Worlds," "Murder in the Private Car," "Charlie Chan in Paris," "The Wrecker," "Palooka," "One Night of Love," "Roberta," "Babes in Toyland,' "The Fountain," "Mighty Barnum" and some German pictures.

Independents Dominate Production

French production has definitely become a matter of independent producers. While, during the first six months of 1934, 49 pictures over five reels had been produced in the French studios, 40 pictures have been produced or put into production from January 1 till May 31, 1935. These 40 pictures represent 38 producing companies. Only one of them has made two pictures. All the others have made one.

These 40 pictures have been produced at 10 studios: eight at Billancourt, six at Eclair, five at Pathe Natan Joinville, four at Neuilly, Paramount, Photosonor and Gaumont, three at Montmartre Studios and one at La Garenne.

Of these pictures fourteen are dramas, 18 local comedies, for popular French audiences, and eight general comedies suitable for everybody. The origin of these 40 pictures include 16 original stories, 15 stage plays and nine novels.

30 Films in Work

At the present time there are about 30 new French pictures which will be put into production.

Films Sonores Tobis, which after the fall of G. F. F. A. and the halting of Pathé Natan, may be considered as the leading French producing and distributing company, has announced a program of 10 French pictures for the next season. The French branch of Paramount will release for 1935-36 a program of 10 French pictures produced in the Paramount studios near Paris, and by others.

United Artists intends to distribute a rather large program of French pictures. It is expected that Alexander Korda will make some French versions in London or Paris of London Film productions. Some independent producers will make pictures in Paris for United Artists. MGM, Universal and Warner do not seem to be interested in French production. They are the only concerns in France distributing exclusively foreign talkers or dubbed foreign pictures.

SMPE Section Nominating Officers

Members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Atlantic Coast Section, are making nominations by mail for three offices. Those whose terms expire January 1, 1936, are: L. W. Davee, chairman; D. E. Hyndman, secretary-treasurer, and M. C. Batsel, manager, the latter filling a two-year term.

The Atlantic Coast Section will have its fall convention at the Wardman Park Hotel, Washington, October 21 to 24 inclusive.

Berlin Theatres Show Attendance Gains for 1935

At the end of 1934 there were 5,005 motion picture theatres in Germany, including the Saar district, according to a report to the Department of Commerce from Douglas Miller, acting commercial attache at Berlin. The total seating capacity at that date was 1,854,328. Small theatres with seating capacity under 500 constituted the majority of the houses.

During the fiscal year 1934 (April 1, 1934, to March 31, 1935), 51,608,865 attended Berlin theatres, as against 47,942,721 the previous year. Box office receipts showed a notable advance, the total for 1935 being 40,468,539 marks as compared to 36,660,128 marks for the previous year. Out of 18 features first run during March, 1935, 10 were German, two American, two French and one each British, Italian, Austrian and Swiss.

A new producing company has been formed in Berlin, "Presto Films," which plans a number of features. Theatre patrons are to provide the cost of production under a unique method. A publicity campaign, together with an advance ticket sale for the theatres which will eventually show the film is planned. The sums received from advance sale will be turned over to the producers. One week is the scheduled time to complete production, with two days allowed for cutting and making of prints. On the evening of the fourteenth day the film is supposed to be ready for showing in those theatres which conducted advance sales. If the advance sale is not satisfactory, the sale is to be stopped, the production called off and the money refunded.

Jack Cohn Buys 350-Acre Estate

Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, has bought the 350-acre estate of Mrs. Augustus F. Kountze at Katonah, N. Y., held at $150,000. The property includes an old colonial type of house and numerous outbuildings, and overlooks the Croton Lakes. The office of Nathan Burkan, film attorney, negotiated the purchase for Mr. Cohn.

Reissues Must Be Approved

All reissues of past releases must be approved by Joseph Breen before release, according to word from Hollywood. MGM, which is reviving "Smilin' Thru," is sending a print from New York for approval.

Extend U. S. Tax Two More Years

Extension for two years of the admission and other excise taxes was voted Monday by the House at Washington, without amendment.

Representative Francis D. Culkin is preparing a new sortie against block booking. The Pettengill bill on the same subject is to be strengthened with amendments and a new bill is expected to be introduced under sponsorship of the Parents and Teachers Association.

In California the House adopted a conference report fixing the proposed state income tax rate at 25 per cent of the federal. The Senate now gets the measure.

Biennial sessions of the Massachusetts legislature will be voted upon at the next election. The legislators in joint session indorsed a resolution to that effect.

Missouri's one per cent sales tax goes into effect August 27th. Coupon books, for use in making purchases involving a tax under one cent, would contain stamps of ⅛, ¼ and ½ cent value.

The 2 per cent sales tax bill in New Jersey was signed by Governor Hoffman. No provision was made for administrative costs and there will be only the week from June 24 to July 1 in which to pass such legislation.

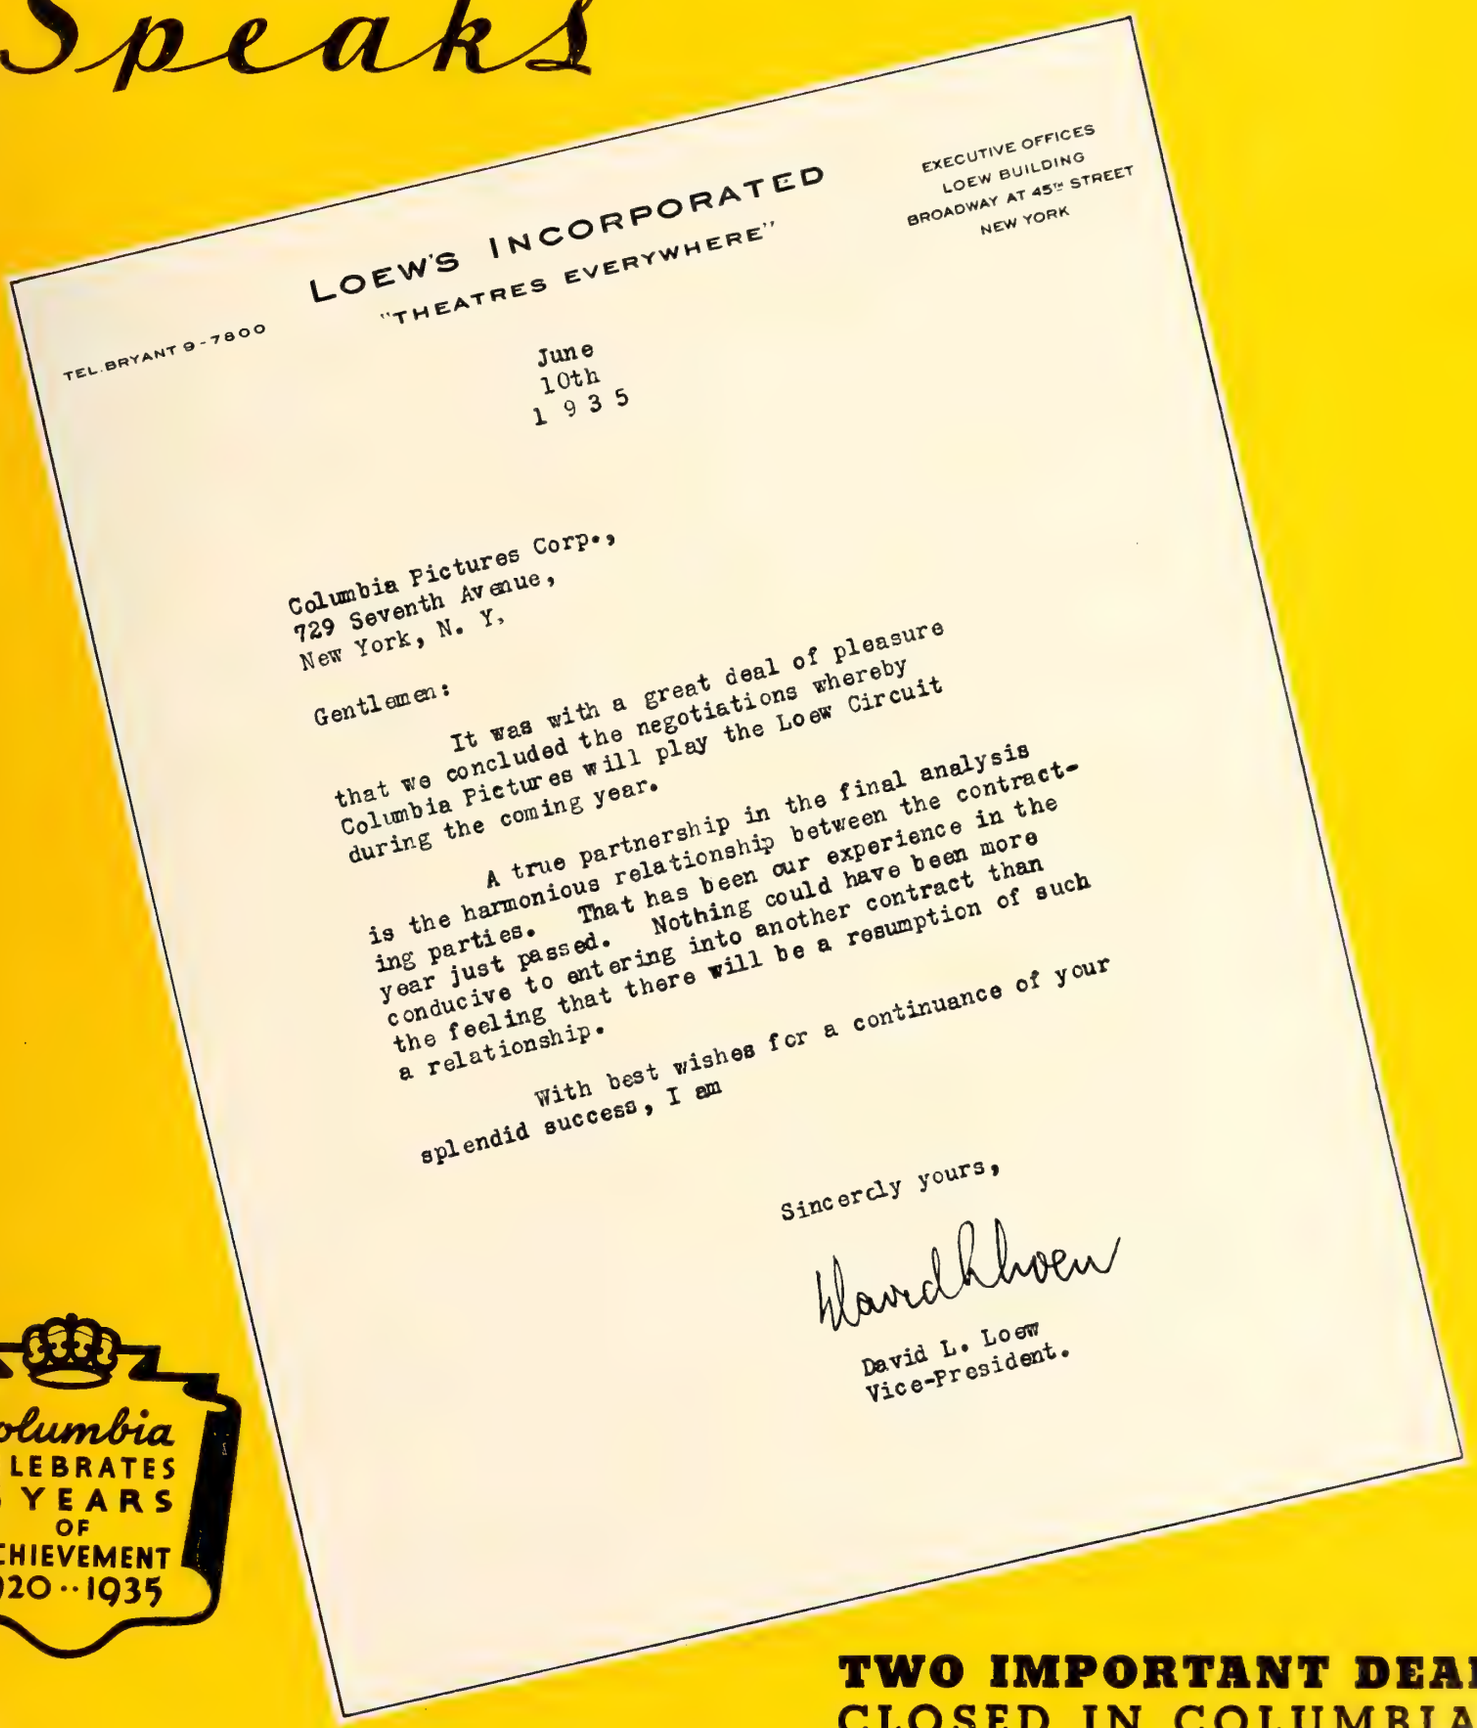
Ohio's exhibitors may face a restoration of the 10 per cent admission tax, as well as heavy increases in income taxes and in the 3 per cent sales tax, to meet the requirements of bills passed or contemplated, expected to entail the raising of $40,000,000 to $60,000,000 by new taxation.

Utah's sales tax is constitutional, Judge Charles F. Koelsch ruled at Salt Lake City.

Circus Shows in Parks Urged as Relief Project

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York has scheduled a meeting for late this week with a committee of the American Federation of Actors and heads of local relief agencies to discuss a plan to produce circus shows in public parks, armories, auditoriums and institutions. The shows were suggested by the Federation to give employment to idle actors.

Four circus groups would be included in the project under the Mayor's plan, each employing 56 persons. A nominal admission of 10 cents has been suggested, but there is no restriction by the Works Relief Department against making the project self-sustaining. The Mayor has suggested a temporary wage scale of $55 a month for unskilled workers and $94 a month for actors and musicians.



Yorke Returns to Coast

Gabe Yorke, Fox studio publicity and advertising director, who was in New York last week conferring with home office officials, has returned to the coast. He came east after attending the Fox annual convention in Chicago.

Assigned 500th Role

Tom Ricketts has been assigned a role in MGM's "A Tale of Two Cities," which will mark his 500th motion picture in 22 years on the screen.

Gentlemen:

It was with a great deal of pleasure that we concluded the negotiations whereby Columbia Pictures will play the Loew Circuit during the coming year.

A true partnership in the final analysis is the harmonious relationship between the contracting parties. That has been our experience in the year just passed. Nothing could have been more conducive to entering into another contract than the feeling that there will be a resumption of such a relationship.

With best wishes for a continuance of your splendid success, I am

Sincerely yours,

406 FEATURES FROM 11 COMPANIES FOR 1935-36; RKO ANNOUNCES 48

Independents Are Expected to Contribute Up to 200 Features, with Increased Budgets to Meet Competition

The season of distributors' sales conventions which each spring sends the selling forces on their way in a competitive race to the exhibitor's doorstep with new product lines is virtually at an end and from it 11 of the largest companies have emerged with commitments for 406 features, 474 short subjects, five newsreels, each of 104 issues, and 12 chapter plays.

The product already announced for 1935-36 compares favorably from a numerical standpoint with previous years and promises at least as much in quality as some of the best of the seasons that have gone before.

Radio Pictures this week added 48 features and 107 short subjects to the 1935-36 lineup that has been under construction since the first of the majors, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, met in convention some six weeks ago. United Artists will be heard from on July 8.

To be added, too, are the promised programs of dozens of new and old independents who will continue to do business on the state rights markets, and who, in 1935-36, may be expected to contribute any number up to 200 features, which, with the anticipated importations from abroad, will easily round out the usual annual average of from 650 to 750 releases.

Moreover, some of Hollywood's independents, somewhat disturbed by the strengthened position of their competitors who have aligned under the banner of the new national Republic Pictures, have decided to increase their production budgets in order to meet the competition with better product.

Still More Independents

Another half-dozen independent producing companies appeared this week, the while established companies continued to cover the last steps in rounding out programs that had been partially disclosed at sales conventions during the past month.

Fox production plans were expanded to embrace 10 British-made pictures, arranged for in London by Joseph M. Schenck, new board chairman, on the eve of his return to New York.

Mascot insists it will make 24 features next season, even though the company has joined the Republic forces, which are down for 46 as a whole.

Paramount concluded its sales convention with messages delivered at first hand by Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board, and John E. Otterson, president of the new company which emerged on Monday from bankruptcy after nearly two-and-a-half years. They assured the delegates that there would be no changes of import, and admitted that Henry Herzbrun and Ernst Lubitsch will continue to supervise the product source, with Mr. Zukor taking on increased production interest.

Radio opened and closed its convention in three days at Chicago, where Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president, expressed the assurances that there is no basis of fact to rumors of a merger.

Republic held the last of its series of regionals, under the chairmanship of Edward A. Golden, sales manager.

Warners' conventioneers, in closing sessions at the studios in Burbank, were told that 4,000 contracts, representing 36 per cent of a normal season's business, had already been negotiated.

New product and sales policy activities this week follow:

Beaumont

Mitchell Leichter, president of the new Beaumont Pictures, arranged to have "Black King," a new Arabian film stunt horse, appear in four feature series: six Black Kings, eight Conway Tearles, six Jack Hoxies and six Lane Chandlers.

British Lion

London interests in British Lion Film, Ltd., cabled from London that S. W. Smith, managing director, had sailed for New York to arrange for an "invasion" of the American market such as that contemplated by Alliance, British International and others. No mention was made as to what might be expected from the company for 1935-36.

Danubia

Bela Black and Eugene Lang said in New York that their Danubia Pictures had been selected by the Hungarian government motion picture bureau to represent it in the future distribution of all Hungarian-made product in the United States, Canada and South America. Mr. Lang added that Danubia will present some of the product next season on Broadway.

Fox Film

Joseph M. Schenck, board chairman, acting in behalf of the new Fox-20th Century, announced Monday in London, before returning to New York, the formation of Elisabeth Bergner Production Company, Ltd., and Paul Czinner Production Company, adding that he will eventually organize enough British divisions to make at least 10 pictures a year in England for the company.

Starting with George Bernard Shaw's "St. Joan," Miss Bergner is planning three pictures in the next two years, all under the supervision of Mr. Czinner, her director-husband. In addition, Mr. Czinner will make films without Miss Bergner.

Fox, active in California in promoting its new feature schedule, took up Tutta Rolf's option for her continuance in starring roles in 1935-36.

The source of Fox-Educational short subjects will be recreated when Al Christie resumes July 8 at the Astoria studios on Eastern Service.

To stimulate selling interest in the four new George O'Brien westerns, Sol Lesser, producing for Fox, will offer $4,000 in prizes for the first five exchanges showing the best sales performances.

GB

The first of GB's "key" features for the new season will be ushered in at "de luxe" previews for leading exhibitors in key cities east of the Mississippi. Arthur A. Lee, vice-president, and George Weeks, sales manager, left New York this week on a tour to effect the plan.

The company denied that Bela Lugosi will appear in "Marie Celeste" next season, nor is the film to be one of its releases.

International

Jack Goldberg was appointed sales manager, and Charles Ferrar an executive of International Road Shows, Inc., which next year will distribute a foreign film series, starting with "Life Is Real," made in England by Universal. Offices have been opened in the Film Center, at 630 Ninth Avenue, New York.

Lefco

Another new season release will be "The Eternal Jew," produced in New York by Lefco Productions, Abraham Leff, president. Louis Waldman, boy cantor, is starred.

Majestic

Both Herman Gluckman, president of Majestic, and Thomas A. Brennan of Atlanta, stockholder, director and franchise owner, denied that the company is contemplating an alignment with Republic Pictures or any other company.

"Majestic will continue to maintain its identity and is in no manner affected by other consolidations or mergers in the independent field," said Mr. Gluckman.

However, Mr. Gluckman and Mannie Goldstein are new additions to Republic's executive staff.

Mascot

Nat Levine's Mascot Pictures, another independent aligned with Republic, sent word from Hollywood studio headquarters that the previously announced program of 24 features for 1935-36 still stands.

Mr. Levine said in New York that Mascot will deliver its present commitments under 1934-35 contracts and will go into the Republic setup for 1935-36, when Mascot will cease to function as a distributor under its own name. The company's production organization will be kept intact, but the home office staff in New York will be partially dispensed with, the remainder probably being consolidated with the Republic organization.

Medallion

Titles of the eight features to be produced by Medallion Productions, Victor and Edward Halperin, follow: "The Gods Strike Twice," "The Zombies Will Get You," "Mutiny on the Submarine," "Return of Dr. Jekyll," "Murder in Chinatown," "Melody in F," "I Live Forever" and "Slave Ship." These will be distributed on the states right market.

In addition, the Halperins are reported to have entered negotiations with Captain A. C. N. Dixey for the production of eight features for Dixey's Anglo-American Renters, of England. It was said that four would be produced here and the others in London, and that the Dixey interests would attempt to arrange for a national distributing release.

Jackie Cooper will not appear on Metro's 1935-36 program, the company having failed to renew his contract following "O'Shaughnessy's Boy." MGM is grooming young Freddie Bartholomew as star material to replace Cooper. Mickey Rooney, another juvenile, is also under contract.

Paramount

Excluding affairs of a corporate and management nature, which are reported on in detail elsewhere in this issue, and which were discussed at the sales convention in New York by Adolph Zukor, chairman of the board, and by John Otterson, new president, Paramount's home office officials and sales forces, meeting at the Waldorf Astoria, were taken up with policy of sales and program construction. The nature of the 65 features and complement of short subjects were detailed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week, when the convention opened.

Charles Reagan, western division manager, announced 15 new members elected to the "100 Per Cent Club" by virtue of their sales performances, as follows: T. Abner, Philadelphia; G. Elmo, Pittsburgh; J. A. Harris, Boston; Irwin Lesser, New York; E. B. Price, Atlanta; F. A. Tomes, Dallas; H. Roth, Cleveland; E. Walter, Buffalo; C. J. Duer, Denver; H. R. Hamburg, Chicago; G. Hinton, Omaha; G. E. Sessler, Sioux Falls; A. Taylor, San Francisco; J. E. Lenahan, Milwaukee, and L. D. Hatfield, Toronto. Each received the usual emblem and a $3,000 life insurance policy.

Neil Agnew, general sales manager, welcomed the 140 delegates from here and abroad, and was followed by J. J. Unger, eastern and southern divisional head, who distributed checks to sales contest winners.

John Hicks, vice-president of the foreign subsidiary, and Cecil Graham, London; Jack Rappaport, Havana, and George Weltner, assistant to Mr. Hicks, conducted a foreign session.

Lou Diamond, short subjects executive, explained the nature of the product over which he has charge, while A. J. Richard, editor of Paramount News, talked on newsreels.

Grantland Rice, producer of Sportlights, told the delegates that Ted Husing had been signed as commentator.

George J. Schaefer and Mr. Agnew outlined the company's policy on sales to national circuits and discussed the grades of pictures that will break down into 35, 30 and 25 percentage playing brackets.

Mr. Schaefer also told the conventioneers that a new producing arrangement had been signed with Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, for two pictures next season, and that the duo will change their diet to a "down to earth" fare "designed for the masses," instead of the "classes."

In a reciprocal deal with Columbia, explained Mr. Schaefer, the company will get Frank Capra to direct one picture, lending Bing Crosby to Columbia for one.

Pending, but not signed, is a new arrangement with Walter Wanger for a series of six features next season, Mr. Wanger having arrived in New York to sign the agreement.

Advertising, publicity and exploitation plans for the new season were outlined in detail by Robert Gillham, Bill Pine and Don Velde.

The company was considering plans to roadshow Cecil B. DeMille's "Crusaders," reputed to have cost $1,000,000.

Both Mr. Unger and Mr. Reagan left over the week-end, after adjournment of the New York convention, to begin two series of regional meetings with branch managers and salesmen, starting with Minneapolis, on June 19 and 20; Chicago, June 21 and 22; Kansas City, June 24 and 25; Denver, June 27 and 28, and San Francisco, June 30 and July 1.

Radio

Assurances by Merlin Hall Aylesworth that RKO will not merge, despite Broadway and Wall Street rumors to the contrary; concentrated discussions on the part that color will play in the company's future product, and an announcement of 48 features and 107 short subjects were the highlights of the fourth annual and first international convention of RKO Distributing Corporation, Radio-Keith-Orpheum subsidiary, which was held this week at the Drake Hotel in Chicago.

"We will not only retain our identity, but we will climb to greater achievements," Mr. Aylesworth told the 275 home office, sales and studio executives, branch and office managers, head bookers and salesmen who were assembled in the ballroom of the Drake. After reviewing operations of the past season, expressing tribute to Chicago's Mayor Kelly, as "the showmen's friend," and giving the company credit for sponsoring the release of the first "perfected" three-color production, "Becky Sharp," Mr. Aylesworth returned to New York by airplane.

"Motion pictures are the sound board of the entire country," Mayor Kelly declared in his address of welcome.

Ned E. Depinet, president of the distributing subsidiary, and Jules Levy, vice-president and general manager, opened the sessions on Monday morning, and Mr. Levy presided through to Wednesday night.

Mr. Levy, following a company welcome by Mr. Depinet, reviewed this year's product, now being rushed to completion in Hollywood, with eight to go, and then engaged in a general discussion of sales policy.

S. Barret McCormick, director of advertising and publicity, explained the exploitation plans for new specials, including "She" and "The Last Days of Pompeii," while Edward L. McEvoy, eastern sales manager, and Cresson E. Smith, western sales head, analyzed individual product promises.

Other speakers Monday afternoon included Michael Poller, manager of the contract liquidation and playdate department; A. A. Schubart, manager of the contract division; J. P. Skelly, in charge of exchange operations; Thomas Quinn, legal departments; Sid Kramer, in charge of prints; William Clark, treasurer; George Muchnic, legal head, and Edward J. Smith, in charge of audit control.

Courtland Smith, president, and Jack Connolly, general manager of Pathe News, discussed their division's plans for 1935-36.

"Perfected color is bound to come to newsreels," predicted Mr. Smith, who believes that the "ideal" newsreel will have the four following elements: 50 per cent motion, 25 per cent sound, 15 per cent color and 10 per cent third dimension.

John Hay Whitney, head of Pioneer Pictures, which produced "Becky Sharp," and which will make two more in Technicolor in 1935-36, told the convention that color would not be as revolutionary as sound. Rouben Mamoulian, "Becky Sharp" director, added that color was of secondary value, but emphasized it was a great aid in developing dramatic effects.

Mr. Mamoulian continued on to Hollywood and Mr. Whitney returned to New York by plane.

J. R. McDonough, president of RKO Radio Pictures, was on hand from Hollywood for the key address on behalf of the management, concentrating his remarks on plans and policies of the production division.

Irving Berlin, composer under contract to RKO, and Lily Pons, who will sing in a Radio feature next season, both made appearances.

Besides branch and office managers, head bookers and salesmen from each of the 32 exchanges, the following executives were on hand:

Martin, managing editor; Ralph Rolan, vice-president; Fred J. McConnell, special sales representative; A. K. Mills, in charge of publicity; Otis Williams, Richard Beck.

Mr. McCormick, advertising head, at a later session, told the conventioneers that the sales and advertising-publicity departments must be inseparable if a company is to function 100 per cent. "It is the obligation of salesmen to team with the advertising men and press agents," he added.

Maurice D. Kann, editor of MOTION PICTURE DAILY, advised the delegates that the measure of success next season will be governed by the ability of the studio to deliver box office product.

The company set as its 1935-36 sales objective 9,700 contracts, as compared with the 7,200 sold in 1932-33, 7,700 in 1933-34, and 8,370 in 1934-35.

Convention headquarters were filled with special 12 art 24-sheets, column pieces, six-sheet sales messages, 24 five-foot star cut-out heads and 40 by 60 layouts, as arranged by Leon Bamberger, sales promotion manager.

Studio officials brought the message that the company is faced with the need for additional production space in Hollywood to carry out the increased activities planned.

Mr. Levy welcomed the following newcomers who have joined RKO during the year: Cleve Adams, Pittsburgh; H. W. Boehme, Seattle; L. S. Gruenberg, Minneapolis; P. Harrison, Jacksonville; H. W. Landstrom, Salt Lake; H. B. Lovelace, Salt Lake; J. Meyers, Winnipeg, and C. R. Westbrook, Pittsburgh.

"March of Time"

John S. Martin, managing editor of Time, Inc., producers of "March of Time," which RKO will release beginning with the fifth issue, told the convention that the reel is in no sense competitive to the newsreel. He told of the history of Time, Fortune and March of Time on the Air.

Don Hancock, Van Beuren production supervisor, explained his company's short subjects scheduled for next season, explaining that there will be a concentration on types with novel and diversified treatment. Van Beuren will use the new three-color Technicolor for the "Rainbow Parade" cartoons.

Addressing the delegates on the closing day were Mr. McDonough, Mr. Depinet, Mr. Levy, and William Mallard, chief counsel, and Phil Reisman, in charge of foreign distribution.

The convention was told that 1935-36 features will be produced by Pandro S. Berman, Merian C. Cooper of Pioneer Pictures, Edward Kaufman, Kenneth Macgowan, Lee Marcus, Zion Meyers, Cliff Reid and Robert F. Sisk. Ten directors will work on the product, including John Cromwell, George Cukor, John Ford, Philip Moeller, George Nicholls, Jr., Stephen Roberts, John Robertson, Mark Sandrich, William Seiter and George Stevens.

Among the stars under contract for the new lineup are Katharine Hepburn, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Lily Pons, Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Richard Dix, James Barton, Ann Harding, Irene Dunne, William Powell, Gene Raymond, Charles Boyer, Barbara Stanwyck, Ann Shirley and Lionel Barrymore. There will be 28 featured players in support.

Product Plans

Product scheduled for 1935-36 follows:

MARY OF SCOTLAND, Theatre Guild play, starring Katharine Hepburn, to be produced by John Ford.

SYLVIA SCARLET, book, by Compton Mackenzie, to star Katharine Hepburn.

QUALITY STREET, James M. Barrie's story, a third Hepburn starring feature.

TOP HAT, co-starring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers; music by Irving Berlin.

FOLLOW THE FLEET, with Irving Berlin music, to co-star Astaire and Rogers, to be produced by Pandro Berman and directed by Mark Sandrich.

"This department contributes its vote to the assured success of 'Becky Sharp'. . . . Further, it predicts that it will be henceforth as important to the cinema as 'The Jazz Singer'. . . . It is brisk and lively, sensitive and serene, and what excitement there is exudes naturally from the story."

—Murray Boltinoff, N. Y. American

"The most important cinematic experiment since moving shadows first became articulate. . . . 'Becky Sharp' promises to be the most widely discussed film of the season."

—Howard Barnes, N. Y. Herald Tribune

"The production offers a happy harmony of color and action, with neither one distracting the attention from the other. . . . The brilliant novel has been skilfully transferred to the screen and very well cast."

—Rose Pelswick, N. Y. Evening Journal

"The general effect (of color) is fascinating. . . . It is soothing to the eye and it is sharply defined, but it does not jump up and slap you in the face. . . . Indeed, there are times when one is scarcely conscious of color at all."

—William Boehnel, N. Y. World-Telegram

"The death knell of black and white films was sounded yesterday with the arrival in glorious raiment of 'Becky Sharp' . . . Even without color it would be a superior picture; in the naturalistic hues with which the improved Technicolor has invested it, 'Becky Sharp' becomes more than a photoplay; it is an exciting adventure in a new medium, a finger pointing dramatically toward hitherto unrealized possibilities in motion picture art."

—Thornton Delehanty, N. Y. Post

"Science and art have joined hands to endow the screen with a miraculous new element in 'Becky Sharp.' . . . It produces in the spectator all the excitement of standing upon a peak and glimpsing a strange, beautiful and unexpected new world."

—Andre Sennwald, N. Y. Times

"A truly beautiful film. The color is exquisite . . . Miriam Hopkins is ravishingly lovely in Technicolor and gives a flawlessly convincing performance."

—Bland Johaneson, N. Y. Mirror

"The success of 'Becky Sharp' demonstrates that color has a definite place in the scheme of pictures . . . It is endowed with a great deal of pictorial beauty . . . presents Thackeray's famous gold digger as the center of a brilliant and witty screen play."

Reliable Pictures

Harry Webb and B. B. Ray will in 1935-36 increase their feature program from 16 to 24 features, promising six each of Tom Tyler westerns; Richard Talmadge action dramas; James Oliver Curwood stories and six "Real-O-Dramas." Distribution will be by sale on the states right market.

Harry Webb was due in New York from California to establish permanent headquarters.

T. Hayes Hunter was said to have made arrangements with Reliable to represent the company in Europe, Africa, Asia and Continental islands.

Republic

Following a midwest sales meeting held in Denver's Cosmopolitan Hotel, Edward A. Golden, Republic's sales manager, arrived in Seattle last week-end to preside at a northwest conference of franchise owners, which was held in the New Washington Hotel.

A banquet, to which exhibitors were invited, followed the business session.

Republic's final regional will be held June 20, at the Hollywood Roosevelt. Floyd St. John will head the San Francisco exchange delegation, and Howard Stubbins will bring in the Los Angeles salesmen.

The studio will be represented by Trem Carr, president of Republic Productions, Inc.; Robert E. Welsh, executive producer; Herman Schlom, production manager; Paul Malvern, producer in charge of westerns; Dorothy Reid, story editor.

Arthur C. Bromberg, Republic executive head in the Southeast, appointed W. B. Fulton to handle sales in Atlanta, replacing E. A. Rambonnet.

Fifty exhibitors and exchangemen attended the opening by B. H. Mills of the Republic exchange at Albany. Herman Rifkin, distributor in New England, also held a reception on the opening of Republic Pictures Corporation in that territory.

Latest developments in the progress of Mascot Pictures, Nat Levine, president, since the company entered the Republic fold last week, will be found in the resume under the company's name.

Universal

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, was en route to Universal City from New York to superintend the making of next season's product. He was accompanied by Jack Ross, his assistant.

Mr. Laemmle, who has fully recovered his health, expressed extreme optimism. He came east to the convention two weeks ago in Chicago and to spend a week at New York headquarters. He is giving up his annual trip to Europe this season to devote his entire time to production matters.

"Diamond Jim," first 1935-36 release, is already completed. Next to go into production are "Storm Over the Andes," with Jack Holt; "King Solomon of Broadway," with Pinky Tomlin and Dorothy Page; "Magnificent Obsession," with Irene Dunne, Warren Hull and Ann Sothern; an untitled burlesque on crook chasing, with Zasu Pitts and Hugh O'Connell, and an untitled football picture.

Ultramares

Lewis Maisell has organized a producing unit known as Ultramares Films, with headquarters in the Paramount Building at Times Square, New York, to produce a series of Portuguese language features for world distribution, the first of which is titled "Despojos DoMar" (Spoils of the Sea), and which will be directed by George Terwilliger.

David Strong's Criterion Films will distribute.

Warner

Further conferences between studio, sales, theatres and home office executives continued at the Warner convention at Burbank, which opened June 10. Next season's program of 60 features and 130 short subjects was detailed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week.

As the convention neared an end on Tuesday, and following a series of advertising campaign conferences, Albert Warner and S. Charles Einfeld left by airplane for New York, to be followed on Wednesday by Norman Moray and Harold Bareford. Harry Warner will remain at the studio for a few days.

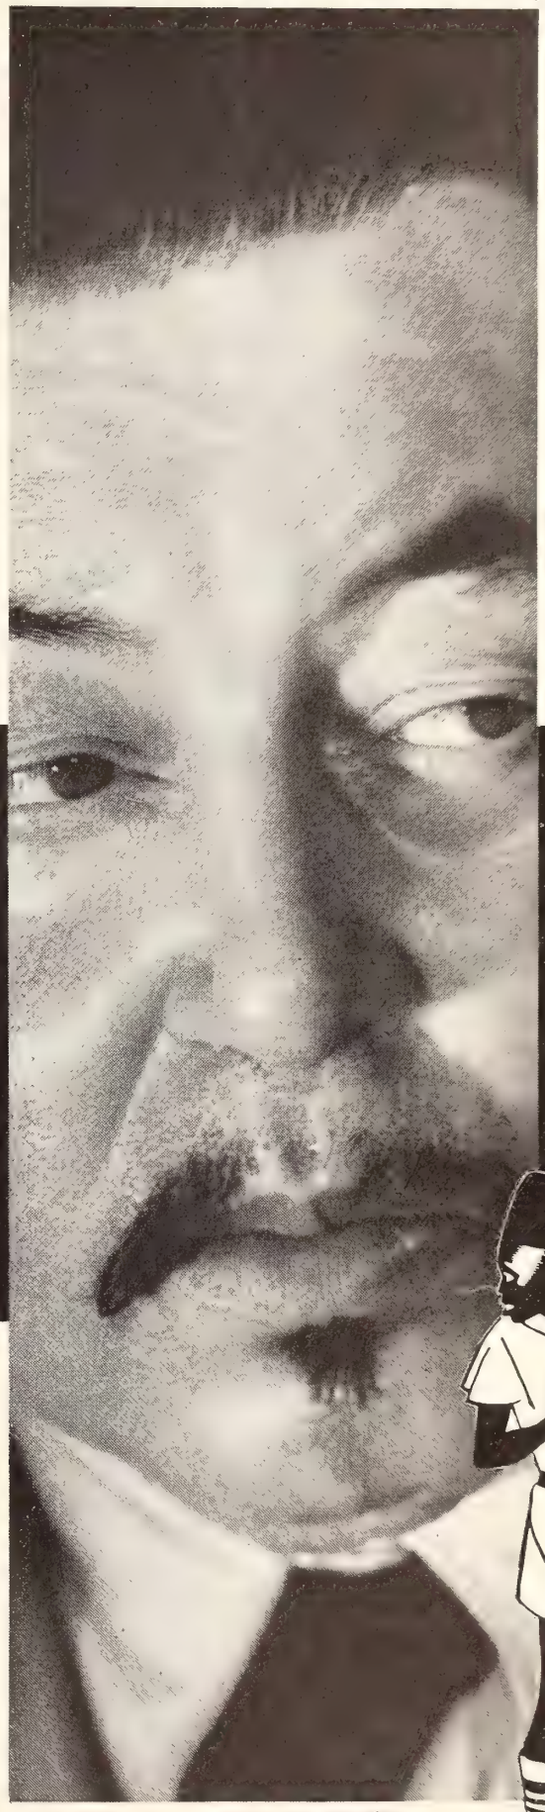
Others leaving for the home office were Gradwell Sears, Carl Lesserman, Ray Haines, Fred Jack, Jake Wilk, Tom Spry, A. W. Schwalberg, Arthur Sackson and A. M. Dougherty.

"Motion pictures today," said Jack Warner at the closing session, "are a very important factor in world betterment; we are no longer merely in the entertainment business, but are helping standards, morals and living conditions."

E. B. Hatrick, vice-president of Cosmopolitan Productions, expressed pleasure at the affiliation between Cosmopolitan and Warner.

Hal Wallis, studio executive, strongly favoring conventions where pictures are made, said the sales executives will make periodic trips to the Coast for product conferences.

Mr. Einfeld announced that the company had already signed contracts for new product representing about 36 per cent of total possibilities, to some 4,000 accounts.



Harry Warner dramatically told how he and his brothers continued as controlling factors in the corporation, explaining that he did not own a single share of stock in any other company except Warner Brothers Pictures, and that the three brothers held more stock in their own company "than any executive head of any company in the world held in his respective organization."

Andy Smith and Gradwell Sears, sales executives, announced the formation of a "One Hundred Per Cent Club" composed of ace salesmen from which Warners will draw its future branch managers.

Becky Sharp

(RKO-Pioneer)

Drama

The latest, and in many ways the most important of a rather lengthy series of experiments in applying color to the feature picture, "Becky Sharp," entirely in the new three-color Technicolor, emerges from under the guiding hands of Rouben Mamoulian, its director, and Robert Edmund Jones, color designer, as a successful experiment, a long step forward in the inevitable development of color in features.

Largely to Mr. Jones must go the credit for so selecting color values in sets and costumes that a harmonious blending of color has been achieved. There are no jarring notes, no clashes of tone. The color throughout is soft, smooth, often breath-taking, and always impressive.

As far as the picture, as a picture, is concerned, the adaptation of Langdon Mitchell's play, in turn from the famed "Vanity Fair" of William Makepeace Thackeray, must be considered highly sophisticated material, telling the story of the glamorous Becky of the early 19th Century, who lives by her razor-sharp wits, and eventually outwits herself in a last desperate effort to save the honor of the husband she really loves, and whom she loses.

A costume picture, that fact in this instance must be considered a definite asset, since thus it has been possible to attain a result in color which otherwise might not have had the same impressiveness. The exhibitor, in selling the picture, should have no difficulty in arousing patron interest, stressing the fact of this being the latest and extensively talked about effort in the direction of color features. It should be possible, through planned pre-selling, to bring the patronage to a point where they will be awaiting the showing of "Becky Sharp." Emphasis also on the origin of the picture, the Thackeray novel, may be found effective. Miriam Hopkins' splendid characterization of Becky is a factor, as are the other performances, although the other names may not be classified as of strong marquee power. Included are Frances Dee, Alison Skipworth, Nigel Bruce and Billie Burke.

The sophisticated nature of the story makes of this an adult attraction exclusively, but that very sophistication permits of a glamour which brings the most out of the color medium. The dialogue is couched in the conversational style of the period, which may be considered stilted to the ears of today, but which appears wholly in keeping with the picture's theme and setting.

Miss Hopkins leaves an exclusive girl's school in England with Miss Dee, but Miss Dee is favored, Miss Hopkins a charity pupil. She realizes the necessity of making her own way and determines to use her wits. She obtains a governess post after Bruce, Miss Dee's brother, fails to marry her because of parental objections. She meets Alan Mowbray, soldier, falls in love with him and they are married. From that time it is a case of debts and more debts, gambling, living far above their means, never paying bills, cajoling money here and there, living by the wits of Miss Hopkins.

Then, at a grand ball in Belgium, to which the regiment has been ordered when Napoleon escapes from Elba, comes the approach of Napoleon, and as the officers rush from the panic-stricken party, occurs the scene which may be considered a highlight of the film from the color standpoint. She becomes friendly with Cedric Hardwicke, a baron and wealthy, and is able to use his influential position without obligating herself. But when a gambling debt of her husband must be paid, as a last resort she goes to Hardwicke. Her supper party with him is interrupted by her husband, who misunderstands, and leaves her. Penniless, she wanders until found by Miss Dee and her brother. In order not to cause the breaking of Miss Dee's engagement, she refuses to accept the girl's hospitality, and as the picture closes she and Bruce, both without money, leave her cheap lodgings together.—AARONSON, New York.

Orchids to You

(Fox)

Romantic Drama

Viewed from a showmanship or audience entertainment angle this is an attraction which exhibitors and patrons are likely to appreciate. Rather than being a guaranteed sensation it is one, which, given an energetic advance campaign, unique ideas for which are to be found in the story, may well prove attractive to audiences,

Concentrating on a human interest theme, it tells an intriguing romantic love story. Embellished by commercially valuable settings, it centers its interest on the woman proprietor of a swank florist shop. The worth of its motivating premise and high class production backgrounds, which are a potent exploitation asset in themselves, are amplified by the inclusion of several surprising dramatic situations which, in contrast, develop unusual comedy, more action than is ordinarily expected and a thread of suspense which give the picture unusual heart appeal.

The ingredients of which "Orchids to You" is spun are understandable. Camellia, the florist, is experiencing lease difficulties. Corporation Attorney Bentley, charged with evicting her, first becomes sympathetic and then infatuated with the prospective victim of big business greed. In this he has for a rival the amorously ambitious Teddy Stuyvesant.

Meanwhile Mrs. Draper, meeting domestic difficulties, retains Bentley to secure a divorce. The situation becomes amusingly complicated when it is evident to all but those most directly concerned that Bentley's wife, Evelyn, as the unidentified co-respondent in Draper's affair, has been the cause of Mrs. Draper's troubles. During the trial it becomes known that in her dealings with class trade, Camellia has come upon many secrets and knows all about the Evelyn-George affair.

Rather than embarrass the man who has been so considerate, she calmly takes a contempt jail sentence in preference to testifying. But the hopeful Teddy, feeling it his moment to rescue his beloved damsel in distress, and thus make himself a sure shot, blurts out the truth, which, of course, leads to a happy ending for the right people.

The elements of the film, being modern and catchy, are intelligently handled and acted. As there is no doubt as to its moral or ethical value, there is much at hand with which aggressive exhibitors may work. Possessed of a popular title, through which much effective exploitation can be evolved, the idea of its flower shop setting is one that opens the way wide for many unusual business stimulating cooperative contacts. Additionally there are many names of better than usual publicity value, particularly John Boles, who, besides acting in splendid fashion, sings a couple of songs, and Jean Muir, Charles Butterworth, Ruthelma Stevens and Harvey Stephens, about which group practically all of the picture is centered. Presented in a manner that reflects the entertainment and showmanship worth of the attraction, it may be considered material for class and mass audiences.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

GET IT WHILE IT'S HOT!

interest, it is that kind of attraction which ordinarily has no difficulty in catching popular enthusiasm.

The picture starts in a manner that smartly conceals what is to happen. Publisher Randall makes a bet with best selling author Dick that he cannot write a romantic adventure book while making a walking trip from New York to California. Although much happens, he doesn't get an idea for a yarn until the trip is almost completed, when he is forced to seek shelter in a mountain cabin during a storm. There he meets Judy, Jack and Jill, later to be revealed as Randall's madcap grandchildren, Henry, the owner of the cabin, and a pair of ex-yeggs, Slug and Babe. While the yeggs are trying to recoup a lot of stolen money secreted in the cabin, Dick and Judy, who, falling in love, are pestered by the twins, are suspected by Henry as being a pair of crooks.

What happens in the situation results in hilarious amusement. But when all is straightened out, Dick has the desired material to win the bet which assures a happy future with the girl.

The picture moves with zest and speed. There being plenty to amuse in action, dialogue and situations, the show is the kind that may be offered to patrons with confidence. While the title is hardly relevant to the picture's theme, it is of exploitation value in combination with the names and story character. The production values offer opportunity for the development of clever showmanship.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Calm Yourself

(MGM)

Comedy

Made for general audience consumption, comedy is the only way this film may be characterized. It runs through lots of unrelated situations, gets a lot of fun out of each, and then apparently forgetting in other than a most sketchy way what has gone before, skips along to something else with only a mild regard for continuity. It has entertainment and showmanship possibilities.

This has the kind of fun which, under the spur of clever exploitation, may well attract a fair amount of attention.

The idea of the story is simple. Pat, a zestful young modern, loses his advertising job because he insists upon making love to his irritable boss's daughter, Mary Elizabeth. Broke, his pet slogan, "Calm Yourself," gives him an idea. Establishing "Confidential Services, Inc., an organization that will take care of anybody's worries, no matter how trivial or difficult, Pat doesn't do much business, but the audience may well have lots of fun. After becoming custodian of a menacing Great Dane, his first real job is tendered by Banker Rockwell, who doesn't want his new wife to know that he has a grown daughter.

When Rosalind arrives in town Pat first takes her in tow to fulfil his contract then installs her as his secretary after using his erstwhile boss, Allenby, to show the girl what a holy terror her father is supposed to be. Then the picture swings off as, in caring for a baby, which a rather thoughtless nurse has left in the hands of Kent, Allenby's candidate for his daughter, Mary Elizabeth's hand, "Confidential Services" is embroiled in a supposed kidnap case. There follows a wild chase after a couple of gangsters in a taxicab, during which the laughs come fast. Later, with the cops butting into the case, the whole cast is gathered in the firm's offices as the baby is restored to its parents, and Rosalind finds out who her father is and the reasons for Pat's keeping them separated. The expected happy ending sees many of those prominent in the start shuffled into the discard.

The title and the idea of "Confidential Services" should be productive of unique exploitation that should stimulate popular interest in the attraction. It appears to be more important than cast names, even though there are listed many better than average names. Sold as straight amusement, and emphasizing the idea that the whole thing is all in fun, appears the best selling tack.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Vagabond Lady

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

A light but engaging story of romance in a department store, this is made up for the most past of comedy, with laughs thickly spotted through the picture, and the drama never permitted to become overly serious. The harum-scarum, world traveling son of the always dignified store owner comes back home to fall in love with his straight-laced brother's fiancee, to cause havoc in the calm and quiet atmosphere of the place and, en route to the completion of the romance, induce laughter through comedy in situation and dialogue.

Robert Young is the happy-go-lucky youth, Evelyn Venable the girl in the cast, Berton Churchill in another of his excellent characterizations of pomposity, the father; Reginald Denny the chip off the old block, and Frank Craven, of the stage, and a few pictures, Miss Venable's perpetually inebriated father and head of the store's janitorial department. Thus it is apparent that the cast names are not of outstanding marquee quality in drawing power, making necessary on the part of the exhibitor greater concentration on the story itself. It might be well to indicate in the selling that the title, which might be taken by the patronage as implying a sophisticated drawing room narrative, merely refers to the real inclinations of the girl, who is in danger of marring the ultra-dignified side of the "House of Spear."

The department store setting may well open the way for lively exploitation in the community, perhaps with the cooperation of the local department store operators. The romance and the dominating comedy element suggest themselves as the most likely and probably most productive selling lines.

Churchill, head of the house of Spear, has as his motto, "dignity, always," a creed to which son Denny subscribes fully. The fly in the ointment is Craven, old college chum of Churchill, and head janitor of the store. Craven's daughter, Miss Venable, in the store's business department, is engaged, unofficially, to Denny.

Then wild son Young returns from a South Seas trip in his small boat to stir memories in the heart of Miss Venable and completely wreck the dignity of the store and the family, aided chiefly by Craven. Young has never considered himself the marrying kind, but finds himself developing new interest in Miss Venable, as he takes her about the town, trying, at his brother's plea, to play the John Alden and instill in Miss Venable appreciation for some of the finer cultural things in life.

Then they quarrel, when Young high dives in evening clothes at a diving exhibition, and Miss Venable determines to marry Denny, to which her father strenuously objects. The wedding is set for the Long Island home, and Craven gets drunk so he will not be able to give the bride away. He reaches Young's boat, Miss Venable follows, and en route to the wedding a storm blows up and the battle of the couple ends in their reconciliation. But Young falls off the boat. Miss Venable thinks he has changed his mind again, and only as the ceremony is being performed does Young dash in to sell his brother the idea that he should not marry the undignified Miss Venable, and runs off with the entirely willing girl.—Aaronson, New York.

Going Places with Lowell Thomas No. 9

(Universal)

Of Interest

With the explanatory dialogue rendition of Lowell Thomas an asset to the subject, this subject, as do the others in the series, records the unusual, seen in almost any part of the world. Herein are pictured the manner of capturing the fleet-footed proghorn antelope in Wyoming for zoos over the country; the hazardous but breath-taking thrill of mountain climbing, on the Nisqually glacier of Mt. Rainier in the West, and the strange wedding ceremony in a small upper Austrian village, where the couple complete, with a wedding, a courtship of 40 years. In the dress of the 1850's the scene is picturesque, interesting, as is the entire subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Laughs

A New York theatre audience found several of these sufficiently amusing to send them into gales of laughter. There is no reason why any audience should not find at least a few of them which will afford them a hearty laugh. A short short, it should fill a spot on almost any program.—Running time, 5 minutes.

Going Places No. 10

(Universal)

Interesting

Characterized chiefly by the interesting and excellent rendition of explanatory matter by Lowell Thomas as commentator, this number of the series takes the audience to ancient Athens, in Greece, to view the ruins of what was once the most magnificent group of public buildings and forums in the world, then to America's west, there to see something of the fashions in dress and occupation of the American Indian squaw of today, wearing the dresses of the 1870's and working at their skillful rug weaving; and finally a bit of camera concoction to picturize a fisherman's dream—literally.—Running time, 10 minutes.

VOLUNTARY CODE IS DISCUSSED FOR MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

Use of Voluntary Arbitration Also Studied; Reaction on a Code Is Varied in Field, but Arbitration Finds Favor

The possibility of a voluntary code for the motion picture industry and a return to voluntary arbitration this week continued as subjects of wide discussion, while the National Recovery Administration, with none of its crack-down powers left, entered its dotage, its life extended by Congress for 9½ months so that it might gather statistics on the effects of codes on business.

As exhibitors throughout the country debated the consequences arising from the supreme court's voidance of the NRA structure, these factors stood out:

Reports from key cities in the field revealed varied sentiment on the adoption of a voluntary code for the industry.

Sentiment for the establishment of voluntary arbitration is growing in favor among exhibitors and distributors.

The days of the film code are ended, as few of its provisions would meet the requirements of the new Congressional legislation.

Present executive personnel of the film code is retained temporarily until the President's plans are revealed.

Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, reported strong exhibitor support of the proposal to enforce trade regulation by contract riders.

Exhibitor leaders in Seattle, Baltimore and Charlotte came out for establishment of some sort of voluntary regulations, while Chicago, Kansas City and New Orleans opposed the idea as unworkable.

In the Pacific Northwest territory, Hugh Bruen of Seattle, president of the Allied Amusements of the Northwest, said a majority of exhibitors favor the "maintenance of the good features of the recent codes." At the next board session of Allied Amusements, scheduled for June 25, the first steps to draft a voluntary code will be initiated if the members endorse the move. Mr. Bruen added that "a movement is on foot to produce a voluntary code that will retain clearance and zoning provisions, certain admission price principles, legislation against lottery plans and giveaways and other provisions formerly part of the code."

See Value in Code

Morris A. Mechanic, president of the New Theatre, in Baltimore, expressed a typical local attitude, saying, "A voluntary code, if properly worked out, should function for the best interests of the industry as a whole."

A number of the leading exhibitors in the Charlotte territory are satisfied with operations of the code, and Charles W. Picquet of Pinehurst said he hoped for continuance of code boards. Most exhibitors in that territory are reported to be still observing code regulations.

Opposite viewpoints are expressed by leading exhibitors in Chicago where voluntary code suggestions fell on barren ground. The prevailing opinion is that if a code supported by federal authority could not be enforced no other kind stands a chance. There is, however, some sentiment for regulations pertaining to labor for the protection of employes.

Spokesman for B. & K., Barney Balaban said: "Based on our local experience, no arbitrary regulation of trade practices such as resulted in frequent injustices in decisions lacking equity is desirable to us." Edwin Silverman, speaking for the Essanay circuit, was equally emphatic.

Kansas City is another center where it is believed impracticable to seek to codify trade practices. There, Jay Means, head of the ITO, opposed the move with the assertion that "the ten per cent chiseling fringe can control any voluntary setup."

Opposes "Kangaroo Court Stuff"

"So far as arbitration is concerned," said Mr. Means, "any fairly constituted board with final authority and with power to enforce its decisions would be acceptable in the settlement of differences between exhibitors and distributors, but I don't want any more of this kangaroo court stuff."

Most independents in Kansas City are reported to have taken the position they can get along without any code or arbitration setup, providing contracts are enforced and the circuits restrained by the anti-trust laws.

A majority of exhibitors in the New Orleans territory are opposed to interference and exhibitor organization leaders are split on the question. Henry McLeod, president of the Gulf State Theatre Owners Association, feels that key independents and circuits would accept a voluntary code and planned to call a meeting to obtain member sentiment. On the other hand, Henry Lazarus, Allied president, believes a code of any sort would not be advantageous to the small operator.

Exhibitors in San Francisco differ on the issue. While spokesmen for the major exhibitors favor such a setup, most of the independents indicate they would not accept it. A telegram signed by four San Francisco independents, Morgan A. Walsh, Aaron Goldberg, H. V. Harvey and George Nasser, was dispatched to John C. Flinn, Code Authority's executive secretary, as follows:

"We believe the opportunity exists to set up tribunals in exchange centers through cooperation of distributors and exhibitors for the purpose of settling controversies within the industry, if such tribunals, by mutual consent with distributors and exhibitors, are cloaked with sufficient authority and local autonomy."

Retains Code Wages and Hours

Fox West Coast in the northern California district has retained code wages and hours.

Voluntary arbitration sessions continued in New York as exhibitors in some cities viewed arbitration as a feasible substitute for a code. Early response to a bulletin sent to members of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois indicated exhibitors favor the idea.

Arbitration in New York

Arbitration proceedings at the New York Film Board of Trade on Tuesday resulted in an award of $245 in favor of Fox against Matty Chrystamos, Mineola theatre, Mineola, L. I., on a charge of breach of contract. A complaint pending between Fox and the Rivoli, Hoboken, N. J., was settled, while the case of United Artists against the Casino, Richmond, L. I., was postponed. These two also alleged breach of contract.

A skeletonized NRA, restricted solely to industrial research and effective until April 1, 1936, was legalized late last week when the House accepted by a vote of 336 to 31 a Senate amendment to an extension resolution, and president Roosevelt affixed his signature.

As extended, the recovery act retains none of the original code-making and enforcement provisions which were held illegal by the supreme court, but it does leave a presumptive authority for the President to approve voluntary agreements of employers which do not violate the anti-trust laws. Suspension of the anti-trust laws as provided in the original act is restricted in the resolution adopted to agreements on collective bargaining with labor, and to child labor, wages and hours and unfair trade practices as defined by the existing law.

Few of Film Code's Provisions Would Meet Requirements of New Legislation; Authority Staff Already Skeletonized

While Congress gave the administration authority to accept voluntary agreements from industry, it so hedged those agreements with conditions as to make it unlikely that any important move toward self-regulation will ensue, particularly in view of the fact that similar agreements but without the conditions may be secured under the trade-practice submittal procedure of the Federal Trade Commission.

A study of the new legislation and of the film code indicated that the code was largely concerned with matters that would not conform with the new requirements. Many of its most important provisions dealt with subjects which were not originally in violation of any federal law.

New NRA Head Named

American industry this week was invited to submit voluntary agreements under the revised legislation, but was warned by Administrator James L. O'Neill several weeks will probably elapse before the machinery can be set up to deal with them.

A substitute for the code machinery will be one of the topics of discussion at the annual convention of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association, scheduled to be held in Kansas City June 26 and 27.

A bill designed to preserve many of the NRA features in Massachusetts has been introduced in the state legislature. It calls for the appointment of a state commission on interstate cooperation.

Code Authority Skeletonized

Sol A. Rosenblatt, compliance and division director of the NRA, who, as deputy administrator, negotiated the film code, has arrived in New York with the announcement that he is definitely returning to private law practice, his connection with the Blue Eagle setup being at an end.

The personnel of the motion picture code will remain in present positions on a temporary basis until further notice, according to Administrator O'Neill.

During the year and a half of its operation, Code Authority held 47 regular sessions and 10 special meetings. There were 76 meetings of appeal boards on which more than 100 different persons sat. More than 1,200 distributors and exhibitors sat on local boards throughout the country.

CLAIMS AGAINST RKO CUT BY $12,500,000

Reductions Are Recommended in Report of Special Master Thacher to Company Trustee

The claims against RKO have been reduced, in reorganization proceedings, by approximately $12,500,000, according to a report submitted late last week to the RKO trustee, Irving Trust Company, by Special Master Thomas D. Thacher. The report covers hearings held last year on $25,800,000 of the total claims filed against the company.

Of the reductions recommended by Mr. Thacher the largest was that relative to the Rockefeller Center claims of $18,500,000, which were reduced to $9,600,000. These claims were based on RKO's liability for part of the construction cost of the two Radio City theatres and for office space in the RKO Building. The portions of the claims based on "furniture rents" were disallowed.

A second large claim substantially reduced was that of Walter Reade for $2,700,000, based on a lease on the Mayfair theatre on Broadway, which was reduced to $337,500. Numerous other smaller claims were cut materially or entirely disallowed. It is expected that the RKO trustee will further contest the Rockefeller Center claims, and others are likewise expected to appeal the special master's rulings.

The Thacher report is considered a vital factor in clearing the way for further progress in the reorganization of RKO, since it indicates the approximate amounts for which provision will have to be made in any reorganization plan.

Of the approximately $10,000,000 in claims not heard by Mr. Thacher, more than $2,500,000 have either been withdrawn or dismissed by the court and more than $2,000,000 are under negotiation relative to withdrawal. RKO has approximately $16,200,000 of gold notes and debentures outstanding for which no proof of claims have been required by the court.

Reade Claim Based on Lease

The Walter Reade claim, for the Broadway and 47th street Corporation, is based on a 10-year lease expiring in 1940 and calling for a minimum $270,000 yearly rental over the period. With respect to deficiencies after September 28, 1934, the Mayfair claim is disallowed, but without prejudice to application for equitable treatment of contingent claims under any reorganization plan.

The claims of the Hoblitzelle Investment Company, Hoblitzelle Realty Corporation and Hoblitzelle Corporation are allowed for deficiencies in rent due up to September 28, 1934, on three Texas theatres. The claim is disallowed for any deficiencies after September 28, 1934. The theatres were leased by the RKO Southern Corporation, which went bankrupt, and payment was guaranteed by RKO.

The claim of the Hippodrome Building Company, owner of the Hippodrome theatre, Cleveland, is allowed only to the extent of deficiencies in rent owing on November 4, 1933. The claim of the Worth Properties Corporation owner of the Hollywood theatre, Fort Worth, is allowed for deficiencies due on September 28, 1934. In the case of both the Hippodrome, Cleveland, and the Hollywood, Fort Worth, the RKO subsidiary which leased the theatres, went bankrupt and the leases were disaffirmed.

The claims of Cora E. Gregg, Gordon W. Burnett and Mudd & Mooney are disallowed. The claim of the Criterion Advertising Corporation is allowed for $4,903, plus the damages due under two contracts to supply billboards to RKO. This claim is now in process of settlement. The claim of George B. Lamb for commission promised him if he procured from a theatre owner a proposal of sale at stated terms is allowed for $14,500. The claim of the F. F. Proctor Holding Corporation for $50,000 is disallowed. The Illinois Central Railroad Company is allowed a claim of $157.80.

The claims of Richard B. Gilbert, Fay H. White and Sydney H. Conway have been withdrawn and that default and disallowance have occurred on the claims of Hoover Company, Carrier Engineering Company and Ben F. Luetze. The claims of Lustrolite, Inc., and National Supply Company have been settled subject to court approval. The claims of the G. W. F. Realty Company, E. M. Glucksman, Copia Realty Corporation, Boyle & Priest and Alfred E. Fiegel are settled or in process of settlement.

Hess Wins Libel Verdict Against "The Churchman"

Gabriel L. Hess, General Attorney for Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., was granted a verdict of $10,200.00 for libel today by a jury in the Supreme Court, New York County, against The Churchman Company publishing the religious publication called "The Churchman," and its editor-in-chief and Vice-President, Dr. Guy Emery Shipler, who was a minister of the Episcopal church. The verdict was rendered by a jury after a two day trial presided over by Supreme Court Justice Lydon. The jury assessed $10,000 as punitive damages and $200.00 as actual damages, making a total verdict of $10,200.00.

There was admitted in evidence, a judgment rendered a few weeks ago by another jury in favor of Gabriel L. Hess v. Peter S. Harrison, publisher of "Harrison's Reports," and the Judge directed the jury to take this previous verdict into consideration, since The Churchman claimed that it had merely copied the libelous article from Harrison's Reports.

Louis Nizer of Phillips & Nizer, represented the plaintiff, and Arthur B. King, of King, Buhler & Miller, tried the case for the defendants.

Dr. Shipler, under cross examination by Mr. Nizer, admitted that he knew the Harrison's Reports were hostile to Mr. Hays and to everybody associated with the Hays organization, and that he himself was hostile to Mr. Hays. Mr. Nizer argued that the copying of the article from Harrison's Reports was therefore malicious and part of an attack which had been made for several years against the motion picture industry and against Mr. Hays and his associates.

Mr. Nizer urged Dr. Shipler, as well as Don Seitz, former editor of the New York World, who wrote the article for The Churchman, to admit that they were reckless and had no facts to back up the article which they copied from Harrison's Reports. The following testimony was given by Shipler on cross examination by Mr. Nizer:

"Q. Your idea of publishing a magazine is not to be too cautious about it, is that it?

A. Exactly.

Q. And if something is wrong, you have got to take your chance about it?

A. Correct."

Mr. Nizer said in summation:

"This publication, which bears the holy name of the church, and which should devote itself to religious subjects and to devout purposes, has gone out of its way on economic questions to attack a great industry, hoping by its sensationalism and reckless charges to increase its circulation. Instead of preaching the doctrine of goodwill to man, it stabs a knife into the back of Hess, because it bears venom and hatred in its heart to Mr. Hays and everyone associated with him. We admit Mr. Hess suffered no financial damage, but we plead for vindication in the form of a verdict for punitive damages against The Churchman Company and its editor, Dr. Shipler."

Mr. King argued that The Churchman had innocently copied an article from Harrison's Reports, and that Mr. Hess had already won $5,200 from Mr. Harrison for the same libel, and that no verdict ought to be given him in this case for an innocent error.

Those who testified for Mr. Hess in respect to his reputation, were Ambassador James Gerard, Max D. Steuer, Frederick Wood, Richard Dwight and David L. Podell.

Move to End Picketing Begun by Mayor LaGuardia

An end to the picketing of motion picture theatres is the objective of Mayor La Guardia of New York in asking Police Commissioner Valentine to call a conference of exhibitors and union leaders, following increased picketing activities in the Times Square sector. Eleven pickets who, police said, were members of operators' Local 306, IATSE, were arrested last week at the Times Square and Liberty theatres.

Several hundred delagates from nine southeastern states, at the seventh district IATSE convention at Birmingham, Ala., Sunday and Monday, heard addresses by W. P. Raoul, of Atlanta, international representative, and George Cushing, president of the New Jersey State Federation of Labor.

The general executive board of the IATSE met in St. Louis this week. Among those in attendance were George E. Browne, president; Lou Krouse, his assistant, and Harlan Holmden, in charge of the operators' locals of New York and Chicago.

Before the general executive board meetings end, Harry Holmden, third vice-president and steward of Local 306, New York, is expected to move for reorganization of the local. It is expected that the local will receive a new charter with a new name and number. Mr. Browne is expected to personally supervise the New York reorganization.

SCHENCK SEEN AS A DOMINATING FIGURE IN THE BRITISH INDUSTRY

Completing Deal on Behalf of United Artists Theatres to Mean a Deutsch-Donada-UA Circuit Planning 500 Houses

by BRUCE ALLAN

London Correspondent

The presence in London of Joseph M. Schenck at a time when his name is most important in connection with changes in the American industry is not being regarded on this side as just a flattering coincidence. It is considered a compliment to England that he should continue his more or less retired existence at the Savoy while New York continues to hang mergers to his name, but England has a very distinct feeling that its proprietary interest in Mr. Schenck is just about as big as America's. That is not so surprising when it is realized that Mr. Schenck's proprietary interests in England look like developing to a point which will leave him without question the most powerful single individual in British production.

Whatever views America may have as to the nature of the divorce between Mr. Schenck of United Artists and Mr. Schenck of Fox-Twentieth Century, there are on this side no doubts about the matter at all. That particular separation has no validity in England and Mr. Schenk is very frank and explicit on the point. He remains chairman of United Artists, Ltd., the British company, and on behalf of United Artists theatres company he is completing the deal with Oscar Deutsch and C. J. Donada which means a British circuit, tied to United Artists, which will certainly number 100 theatres in the very near future and is already being talked, and with some reason, as planning a total of between 500 and 1,000 theatres in a few years. Oscar Deutsch himself has announced a policy of an Odeon in every town in England, and there is no reason to believe he cannot get all the money he wants.

Therefore, when Mr. Schenck makes it a point to emphasize to United Artists salesmen in conference that his interest in United Artists is as keen as ever—that he has taken 20th Century to Fox because United Artists looked like having too many good pictures while Fox hadn't enough—he is driving home to the British trader the fact that, on this side, the recent deals mean a unity of interest, centered in the personality of Mr. Schenck, between United Artists, with a minimum of 14 British pictures a year and a probable 20, Fox, with a planned British program of 12 supers from associated independents, and a theatre circuit which, if it develops according to program, will in five years have surpassed even Gaumont-British in number and class of theatres.

Dominating English Position

If the studio sources from which Fox and United Artists must draw their British films are examined it becomes even clearer that, whatever may be his ultimate position in the American industry, in England Mr. Schenck will occupy a definitely dominating position.

United Artists draws its British films from London Film Productions and British & Dominions. It is making rapid plans to supplement these 14 (London 6 and B. & D. 8) by a series of independent supers. Typical is the plan for the first Technicolor feature to be made by Tower Film Productions, with which Sir Adrian Baillie, the financial figure in the Technicolor British company, is associated with Dr. Paul Czinner and Marcel Hellman. There is another ambitious project to make "La Vie Parisienne" on multi-lingual lines, with Dolores del Rio and Evelyn Laye and a famous French director under consideration.

Will Tax Resources

Fox, if it makes the 12 pictures planned, will probably take several from General, C. M. Woolf's new company, but to supply the balance of its demands will strain the present resources of British studios pretty severely, at least from the point of view of quality. British footage is enormous, but the only British companies who have so far shown any signs of consistently attaining American entertainment value are the two companies just mentioned and Gaumont-British.

The immediate result of the recent Schenck move, therefore, seems likely to be that United Artists and Fox between them more or less may monopolize the percentage of British films fit for world distribution, with the exception of those made by Gaumont-British. There is the important qualification that Associated British will sooner or later, and probably as part of a reciprocal deal with America, plan its production on an international instead of an insular basis and that concerns like A. T. P., Anglo-American and Twickenham will make the American market regularly.

For the present, nevertheless, it seems that it will pay the really ambitious British producer much better to tie up to Fox or United Artists than to attempt to attack America single-handed. The Schenck plans look like an option on British production brains and British production finance for several years to come.

It is a remarkable position for one man to occupy, but no one underestimates the courage and imagination which have made it possible. Alone among the big men of the American industry, Schenck seems to have realized that, from the day the Films Act was passed, British films must become either an asset to the American distributor or a millstone around his neck. By giving Korda and Wilcox a break he made British films a source of profit while other American companies were writing them off as bad debts, and if it is his role to make big profits out of the final establishment of the Anglo-American market as a unit, no one will be able to say he hasn't earned them.

Boon to Quota Fight

It will be an instance of the irony of history if the Schenck achievements are the means of bringing about the abolition of the quota clauses of the Films Acts, but more unlikely things have happened. Resentment against the quota among exhibitors is usually based on the quality of the worst films made for registration, but the real enemies of the quota are the good films and the producers of good films. The "quickie" hurts the latter as much as it hurts the exhibitor. If British production develops rapidly, under the stimulus of Schenck releases and Schenck finance, on an international basis, a very powerful interest will emerge which will attack the quota as a very serious handicap to first-class production.

United Artists and Fox Seen Monopolizing the Quality in English Output; Statistics Show British Film Progress

In the meantime, the eternal agitation against the Act on the part of exhibitors seems likely to develop on rather different lines. At the C. E. A. Summer Conference at Cardiff it will be attacked on the grounds that, with the exhibitor's obligation reaching the same level (20 per cent) as the distributor's on October 1, there will not be enough films of acceptable quality to go around. The official answer that exhibitors are already showing considerably more than 20 per cent of British films is being countered in advance by the argument that G. B. theatres take their own G. B. films, that A. B. P. films go to the A. B. C. theatres and that the Deutsch theatres will get most of the other usable subjects. Exhibitors want repeal, but hope they may get a half-loaf in the form of a "quality" standard, probably expressed in a minimum cost clause, entailing the expenditure of from £15,000 to £20,000 a picture. Considering that the Schenck estimate of average cost is £80,000, this does not seem unreasonable, but it has to be remembered that "quickie" costs ranged about £6,000, and that some American companies want 12 British features a year.

Instancing that the quota is once again a matter of real public interest, the "Daily Mail" recently published an article from its film correspondent, Seton Margrave, occupying over two full columns under a half-page head on the chief news page in which, captioning it "British Films Face a Crisis," Margrave, after stating the exhibitor position very impartially, Quotes Herbert Wilcox as describing the quota regulations as "out of date and derelict," and Alexander Korda as saying that "if the quota quickie were removed there is no reason why Btitain should not lead the world in film quality."

Board of Trade statistics released in London afford further proof of the progress of British films, which continue to get business from the theatres on a scale greatly in excess of the demands of the quota provisions of the Cinematograph Films Act.

For the year ended September 30, 1934, the Act demanded the exhibition of 15 per cent of British films. The actual percentage exhibited was, as regards all types of films, 26.1; taking features alone the British percentage was 28.4. Both figures exclude newsreels and travel films, which are not registered under the Act; under the former heading, the percentage is chiefly British, making the actual position even more favorable to home producers than the official figures show.

Color Films Reported

Marcel Hellman, French producer; Paul Czinner, who directed "Escape Me Never," and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., are mentioned in connection with a deal to produce Technicolor features for United Artists release in America. Herbert T. Kalmus, president of Technicolor, has refused specific comment.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE

Paramount

When W. C. Fields is the central figure of a picture, no matter what the title, its entertainment character and showmanship potentialities are an understood quality. In this case, other than having the hero on a continual mental and circumstantial flying trapeze, the only relation between this and a circus is that it will probably be funnier and more thrilling than a three-ringed one. In this story Fields is a henpecked husband, but very oddly an efficient and trusted veteran office clerk. His one ambition to escape from domestic discord, all treated in hilarious fashion, he attends a wrestling match. Between the naggings of his wife; the use of the old "mother-in-law died" gag to get a days off; his lummox stepson stealing his ticket, experiences in getting to the stadium as well as those encountered in getting another ticket and finally having a mammoth wrestler heaved into his lap which in rendering him unconscious convinces his wife that he's drunk, the situations are contrived to produce the maximum amount of slapstick comedy.

The story is an original by Charles Bogle, Fields' pen name, with screen play by Jack Cunningham, who did two previous Fields pictures, "It's a Gift" and "The Old Fashioned Way." The direction is by Clyde Bruckman, recently credited with "Spring Tonic."

The cast supporting the star includes Kathleen Howard as his wife, Mary Brian, Vera Lewis, Grady Sutton, Oscar Apfel, David Clyde, Tammany Young, Walter Brennan, Lew Kelly, Lucien Littlefield and Arthur Aylesworth.

The Fields popularity, made a thing to be considered by his work in "Copperfield" and "Mississippi," appears to be the keynote of any interest-creating campaign. That, circused in a manner to give literal comedy significance to the title tone, should be sufficient to meet any requirements.

THE MURDER MAN

MGM

In title, cast, story content and production credits, this feature is promising of both unique commercial exploitation and entertainment. Essentially it is a thrill-filled murder mystery yarn, plus romance, drama, comedy and excitement, all being welded together in a unique manner. The reason for its title is that its central figure, a newspaper man, is a murder specialist, the best reporter in handling crime cases. While its substantiating qualities are of the understood and appreciated type, its murder mystery premise is so cleverly concealed and developed that audience anticipation of the climax should be something to tax the ingenuity of the most astute crime sleuths.

Original story is by Tim Whelan and Guy Bolton. Whelan, who is also directing, has recently been occupied in making British pictures and this is his first since returning to America. Added dialogue is by John Higgins.

The cast is composed almost entirely of well known screen names. Spencer Tracy will be seen in the title role as the reporter with the inside story of all the dire goings on that baffle police and who aids them in solving the case. He will be supported by Virginia Bruce, Lionel Atwill, Harvey Stephens, Robert Barratt, Louise Henry, William Collier, Sr., Lucien Littlefield, Fuzzy Knight, Theodore Von Eltz and Robert Graves.

Combining the demonstrated values of a smart newspaperman story with those vivid essentials of a puzzling murder melodrama, the feature is being given better than unusual production backing that should prove a worthy commercial asset. A campaign that sells the title for all it is worth, in combination with the value of cast names and the acknowledged appeal of its story character should prove effective in arousing patron curiosity.

JALNA

Radio

This picture treats of the dramatic, romantic life of a family which for many generations had lived on the farmlands of Jalna in Southern Ontario. It's a story of dreams, that in sometimes coming true were frustrated when brought face to face with the conflicting currents of real life, and of melodramatic tragedies and travail that blossomed into a happiness that neither its hero or heroine dared to dream.

The production is adapted from a wellknown novel by Mazo De La Roche, from which the screen play was prepared by Anthony Veiller with adaptation by Garrett Fort and Larry Bachmann. Direction is by John Cromwell, previously credited with the sensational "Of Human Bondage," and the recent "Village Tale." Experience gathered in those two quite similar productions should serve to add to the showmanship value of Cromwell's direction.

The production, in which a sincere effort is being made to capture the full dramatic spirit of its motivating realism, features a cast which for the most part is generally wellknown. It centers its romantic, dramatic theme about Ian Hunter, the real head of the family; David Manners, a younger brother, visionary poet, who is standing on the threshold of literary fame, and Kay Johnson, who becomes the third figure of its unusual dramatic, romantic triangle. In the principal supporting roles it presents C. Aubrey Smith, Halliwell Hobbes, Jessie Ralph as the elderly members of the family; Peggy Wood, the daughter, household manager; Theodore Newton and Clifford Severn, the youngest child. Other players are Nigel Bruce and Molly Lamont, neighboring farm folk.

Being produced in a down-to-earth manner, with no pretense at artificial stimulation, the story is continually serious. As such it calls for an understanding brand of showmanship in which the power of theme should be given considerable attention.

PETER IBBETSON

Paramount

This production, adopted from the classic novel by George du Maurier, is the picturization of one of literature's greatest love stories. To bring it to the screen in all its gripping realism and strangely weird quality, Paramount has chosen Gary Cooper and Ann Harding to play the leading roles and selected one of the industry's ace directors, Henry Hathaway, who made "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," as the director.

Based on the novel and play as presented by John Nathaniel Raphael and adapted by Constance Collier, the screen play is by Vincent Lawrence, who collaborated on "Good Dame" and "Behold My Wife," and Waldemar Young, who was associated with "Men in White," "Cleopatra" and the forthcoming "Crusades."

The story is that of Peter Ibbetson and Mary, Duchess of Towers. An idyllic childhood romance in which the parts are assumed by Dickie Moore and Virginia Weidler, Peter, when grown to manhood, again meets his youthful love. Her husband killed, Peter is jailed for life. Brutally treated by guards and fellow prisoners, he dreams that he again meets Mary, wandering in the gardens they knew as children. Fearful that he will awaken from his dream, she gives him a ring to prove that all is real. Strangely, the ring is delivered to him. From that time on, in prison, he is able by concentration and the aid of the ring to conjure her image and to live for years in the joy and beauty of her spiritual association. One day she vanishes, promising Peter they will meet in the hereafter. It is shown that Mary has died. Peter dies almost simultaneously.

A picture that is completely different in story content and thus coming within the scope of the demand for novelty, which suggests its own showmanship, the producers have surrounded the leading players, Cooper and Miss Harding, with a host of important screen names. Included are John Halliday, as Miss Harding's misunderstanding husband; Douglas Dumbrille, the two mentioned child actors, Doris Lloyd, Elsa Buchanan, Christian Rub, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Gilbert Emery, Marcella Corday, Adrienne D'Ambricourt, Bodil Rosing, Colin Tapley and Clive Morgan.

Securities Commission to Decide on Salary Data

The Securities and Exchange Commission, Washington, is expected to reach a decision shortly as to the action to be taken in the cases of corporations filing registration applications for securities, and in which salary information is withheld. Salary data was omitted in the applications of several film companies.

Balaban & Katz Corporation, Chicago circuit, filed an application requesting registration on the Chicago Stock Exchange of 26,126 shares of $100 par value seven per cent cumulative preferred stock. The application states the company is a subsidiary of Paramount Publix, which holds 87.8 per cent of its stock, and that it, in turn, is the parent company of eight wholly owned and six partly owned subsidiaries. Data on holders of 10 per cent or more of any class of security and salary information were lacking, the company contending such facts should be regarded as confidential.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

SEES NO SHORTAGE OF "AVERAGE" PRODUCT
YOUTH IS HAVING ITS DAY ON THE SCREEN
COAST I.T.O. PREPARING OWN ZONE PLAN
ELEVEN PICTURES START, SIX ARE FINISHED

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

WHEN Mascot joined forces with Republic last week, the states rights clan on Hollywood's Film Row asked the questions: "Will there be a shortage of average product?" "Where will pictures that cost between twenty and forty thousand dollars come from?"

Sam Wolf, attorney representing a number of independents in both production and distribution, said optimistically: "There will be no shortage of product. The combination of Monogram, Mascot and Liberty under the Republic banner will give independents such as Chesterfield, Cameo, Invincible and others an opportunity to increase their budgets, and also will provide a market for more pictures. Smaller houses operating on small budgets need low cost product. Republic producers should go places under their arrangement, just as Columbia did. The merger will work out for the interest of the entire industry."

Meanwhile, interested parties are awaiting the return of Nat Levine, Maury Cohen and George R. Batcheller to Hollywood. Sam Berkowitz, who heads the Far West Exchanges, distributors of the Mascot product, has had no official word from Mr. Levine about arrangements for the coming year. Lon Young, in charge of production at Chesterfield and Invincible during the absence of Mr. Cohen and Mr. Bacheller, is also without orders, but is continuing to make pictures. The two companies have six more features to make on the current program. "There will always be independent exchanges," says Mr. Young, "and they need pictures to do business. Our business is to make pictures, and we will see that the state rights boys are taken care of."

Parade of Child Players

Youth is being served in Hollywood.

Shirley Temple leads the child parade, with Jane Withers, Sybil Jason, Baby Jane Quigley, the Holts, Virginia Weidler, Freddie Bartholomew and a score of others rolling up on the box office board walk.

Now Sol Lesser has signed Bobby Breen, and the baby boom is on, for that veteran showman makes few mistakes in sensing cycles. It was Mr. Lesser who made the early Jackie Coogan pictures and had Baby Peggy under contract. Bobby Breen is a phenomenal child, lyric tenor. He made his debut at the age of three in Toronto, and has been singing ever since, getting sensational response in Chicago, New York and on the air with his mature voice in a boy's body.

In 1935 his sister, Sally, herself a musical comedy singer, brought the child to Hollywood to work under Dr. Mario Marafioti, widely known opera coach. It was at his home that Sol Lesser heard the child sing a difficult aria from "Rigoletto," and put him under contract. Lesser is looking now for starring material for Bobby, meanwhile booking him with Jack Benny's radio hour and other national hookups.

Shirley Temple, of course, leads the child parade which is causing every studio to set up nurseries and school rooms on back lots. Shirley's success prompted the same company to contract nine-year-old Jane Withers following her playing of the infantile heavy in Shirley's "Bright Eyes." Miss Withers just has finished "Ginger," and is set for stardom in her next film.

MGM has under contract Freddie Bartholomew, who all but ran away with "David Copperfield," and who may be starred. Mickey Rooney, an experienced trouper of 11, also is on their list as is Cora Sue Collins, age seven. Rooney is expected to move into a star spot following release of "Midsummer Night's Dream," in which he played Puck for Warner. And, of course, Jackie Cooper, another contract player, has been on the top of their list for years. He now is sharing stellar billing with Wallace Beery in "O'Shaughnessy's Boy."

Paramount Has Six

Warner has six-year-old Sybil Jason, a mimic from Capetown, Africa, under contract, and fondly expect to find her a star by public acclaim, following the release of "The Little Big Shot" which was re-written to build her part to major proportions.

Paramount has six children under contract, and is preparing "Too Many Parents," which will give top billing to Baby LeRoy, two; David Holt, seven; Betty Holt, five; Virginia Weidler, seven; Lois Kent, eight; and Billy Lee, four.

Universal starred Baby Jane Quigley, who was put under contract following her appearance in "Imitation of Life" in "Straight from the Heart," and is looking for another starring story for her. She is three and a half years old, and has been acting since she was something over a year.

The free lance players are not doing badly, either. George Breakston is in constant demand, and is signed now for a big part in "The Dark Angel" for Sam Goldwyn. Marilyn Knowlden is steadily engaged in featured roles. So are Fay and Denis Chaldecott and a score of others. And, of course, Hal Roach's "Our Gang" goes on and on.

This sudden almost wholesale contracting of children is significant. In spite of the excellence of "Skippy," made some years ago, audiences were not ready for many pictures with children.

11 Films Are Started

With 11 pictures going into work as six were completed, Hollywood's shooting schedules increased to a total of 45 productions actually on the stages.

Columbia started three pictures. In "She Married Her Boss," Gregory LaCava directing, Claudette Colbert is starred and the support includes Melvyn Douglass, Michael Bartlett, Jean Dixon, Katherine Alexander and Edith Fellows. The second, "Super Speed," will present Norman Foster, Florence Rice, Mary Carlisle, Arthur Hohl. Lambert Hillyer is directing. In the final starting feature, Nancy Carroll, Lloyd Nolan and Harry Langdon are the principals in "Atlantic Adventure," which Albert Rogell is directing.

At Warner, during their convention week, two pictures were started. "The Real McCoy," which Robert Florey is directing, will feature James Dunn, Claire Dodd, Patricia Ellis and Frankie Darro. With Paul Muni, Ricardo Cortez, Ann Dvorak and Barton MacLane in the leads, "Dr. Socrates," adapted from a recent popular magazine serial, also started. William Diertele is directing.

Two pictures also started at MGM. Cast for the first, "Here Comes the Band," are Ted Lewis, Harry Stockwell, Ted Healy, Nat Pendleton, Donald Cook, Betty Furness, Otto Fries, Fuzzy Knight, Jack Mulhall, Florence Gill and Monte Vandergrift. Also in work is the long deferred Marx Brother feature, "A Night at the Opera." In this, which Sam Wood is directing, the comedians, now a trio, are currently supported by Kitty Carlisle, Walter King, Allen Jones, Margaret Dumont, Seigfried Rumann and Robert Emmett O'Connor.

Universal started "Outlawed Guns." An outdoor adventure picture, it features Buck Jones, with Ruth Channing, Roy D'Arcy, Joan Gale and Frank McGlynn, Sr. Ray Taylor directs.

Republic's contribution to the new activity is "Forbidden Heaven," being directed by Reginald Barker, with the cast featuring Charles Farrell and Charlotte Henry, supported by Beryl Mercer, Fred Walton, Phyllis Barry and Eric Wilton.

At Paramount, with Bing Crosby and Joan Bennett again together, "Two for Tonight" started. Mary Boland and Lynne Overman currently head the featured supporting cast. Frank Tuttle is directing.

Winding up the starting group is Mascot's "Harmony Lane." Douglass Montgomery, Evelyn Venable, Adrienne Ames and Joseph Cawthorn are the featured players. Joseph Santley is directing.

Six Features Completed

On the completed side of the record, Radio has two pictures. The first, "Top Hat," stars Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, supported by Edward Everett Horton, Helen Broderick, Erik Rhodes, Eric Blore and Donald Meek. Mark Sandrich directed. The second, "The Return of Peter Grimm," which George Nicholls, Jr., directed, will present Lionel Barrymore, Helen Mack, Edward Ellis, Donald Meek and George Breakston.

Warner likewise completed a pair of pictures. "We're in the Money," again couples Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell in their go-getting roles. The support includes Hugh Herbert, Ross Alexander, Hobart Cavanaugh, Phil Regan, Henry O'Neill. Ray Enright directed. "Broadway Joe" features Joe E. Brown with Ann Dvorak, Patricia Ellis, William Gargan, Joseph Cawthorn and Henry O'Neill. Busby Berkeley directed.

At Paramount the W. C. Fields picture, "Man on the Flying Trapeze," formerly titled "Everything Happens at Once," finished. The cast supporting Fields lists Kathleen Howard, Mary Brian, Vera Lewis, Grady Sutton, Oscar Apfel,

The last of the completed productions, "Born to Fight," a Maurice Conn picture, features Frankie Darro, Roy Mason, Barbara Worth, Edwin Maxwell, Arthur Hoyt, and John Ince.

DEAR HERALD:

When they put Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery, Lewis Stone, Otto Kruger and May Robson all in one picture the public has a right to expect something out of the ordinary. Five big stars ought to make a pretty big picture, and when they played "Vanessa" William K. (or was it Robert K.) Howard, the director, got all out of it he could and did exceedingly well with the story material he had to work with.

"Vanessa" is a story of the love between Helen Hayes, an English girl, and Robert Montgomery, a roving gypsy, and being a love story it ought to get all the women out to see it, although we doubt if the men would drive more than 10 miles through the mud to see it the second time. Lewis Stone was the father of Vanessa and was cremated when he had heart failure and fell over and upset the lamp and set the building afire. Otto Kruger was the husband of Vanessa who went crazy when he found out that Vanessa was in love with the gypsy (this ought to please the women) and he died, which left the gate open to the matrimonial field for Vanessa and the gypsy, although they had been trying to climb the fence before the bats went to flying out of the belfry of the crazy husband.

Memories of Grandmother

May Robson acted just like our own grandma used to do back soon after the close of the Civil War (we are glad May did that because it filled up a gap in our memory of long standing). May said she was a hundred years old and glad of it, and she looked it, but she acted a whole lot like she did in "A Night Out" although she was somewhat younger in those days. Vanessa makes a good second picture on a double feature program, in fact we have seen a whole lot worse (and some better).

We were told recently that they cut down some trees that were two feet in diameter to make room for the sprouts they are setting out on that "shelterbelt" to "bring rain". These trees had been nursed for a number of years by the farmers. When they get that shelterbelt planted they will probably set the bunch to bailing out the ocean to keep the lobsters from getting wet. Don't try to cook a blue pelican, they smell too "fishy".

Pictures Are Getting Better

One of the things that is hard for us to understand is that business at the theatres seems to be on the increase while other lines seem to be at a standstill or falling off. We have heard several reasons assigned for this, the main one being that the outlook for the coming season is better than for a long time. Maybe that's the correct reason, but we've got a hunch that that reason isn't entirely watertight. Our guess is that the reason is because pictures are getting better and better all the while and Hollywood has learned that the American public wants less sex and more sense in its entertainment, thanks to the Legion of Decency. It has also learned that it is better to please the good judgment and taste of the public than to please gum-chewing Lucy and moon-eyed Oscar.

The other night we saw Cross & Dunn in a one reel comedy that was worth the price of a whole show, which proves our long-standing contention that quite often a short subject holds up the entire program. These boys impersonated several oldtime stage stars, Chauncy Alcott, Caruso, Bert Williams et al, and when Bert Williams came out and sang "Ah haint never dun nothin to no baw-dee, no time, no where" it took us back to the days when Bert was the best colored comedian this world ever saw. When you get this reel be sure to three sheet it, it's worth extra billing.

To Check Up in Midwest

When the water goes down and they get highways fixed so we can travel we are going into southern Iowa, then over into Wisconsin and then into Minnesota to see how the boys are acting over there. We were over there before the repeal of the 18th amendment and they were doing as well as could be expected but no telling what they are up to now. We left Wisconsin in the hands of Fred Hinds of Whitewater and we understand that the state is still in the Union.

We left Minnesota in the hands of Andy Anderson of Detroit Lakes and Bonnie Benfield of Morris and instructed them to go over and settle the scrap between St. Paul and Minneapolis and to locate Ole Olson halfway between the two. John Piller of Valley City, North Dakota told us he would keep the snow shoveled off the roads until we got up there in August. Thanks, John.

Did you ever see Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe in "Under Pressure?" This is a story of the "muckers" digging a tunnel from New York City to Brooklyn under the Amazon river (or was it Goose Creek). There were a couple of girls connected with the work, or rather connected with the work of Victor and Edmund. One of 'em was a newspaper reporter, although she didn't report much, and the other one was the proprietor of a beer joint that was pretty well patronized by these two boys and the other "muckers". The director put these two girls in probably to lend a little tone and dignity to the picture (which needed a whole lot). This picture is full of action and you will marvel at the settings and wonder why they went to so much trouble to make a picture of this kind. They had to make this picture true to actual conditions. For the kind of story, it is an excellent picture. You ought to see it, then you will know how they dig tunnels under a river.

The Barn Needs Cleaning

May Robson and her three sons called to our mind several families we have known in the past, and of several you have known and heard your aunt Jane tell about, when they played "Strangers All". May had about 60 of as uncomfortable minutes in "Strangers All" as she ever did with her other boys, and much more so than she did in "A Night Out". One of her boys was a fairly good chap and treated his mother like a boy ought too. One other boy was an agitator and tried to inflame the public mind against the government by making speeches to a crowd of hammerheads in the park but was run in by the cops and tried for inciting treason.

The other boy was "Hollywood struck" and ought to have been struck with a broom-handle by his mother, but instead she gave him a thousand dollars to go to Hollywood and get a "career" which was the last cent she had. This "screen idol" felt, like some other "idols" we know of, that "my public needs me", when the fact was that the cow barn needed cleaning out. Which, by the way, would be a good job for some more of 'em we know of.

We wish May wouldn't act the way she does sometimes. She makes us feel sorry for the way we treated our grandma after she had given us cookies and bread and butter with jelly on it.

Well, anyhow, you better get this picture, and you will even like the way that guy acted who wanted to go to Hollywood. In fact you will like all of 'em. Doggone such boys anyhow.

As Will Rogers says "All we know is what we see in the papers" but as soon as we get that Old Age pension we are going to buy a saxophone and get us a love-song crooner and join a jazz orchestra. We can't disappoint "my public" any longer. Be patient friends, be patient.

Residents Win Round In Madison Avenue Battle

Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew in New York last week denied the application of Henry Mandel, builder, for a peremptory mandamus directing New York's license commissioner, Paul Moss, to grant him a permit to erect a theatre on the corner of 79th street and Madison avenue. Thus ended one more round in the battle of the society folk who live in the neighborhood to prevent Mr. Mandel from building a motion picture theatre in their "residential" section. Nathaniel Phillips, attorney for the residents' committee, which is headed by Norman H. Davis, U. S. ambassador-at-large, and includes such as Winthrop Aldrich, said the building of a theatre "will at once disastrously change the quiet tone of the neighborhood." Mr. Mandel may appeal from the court decision.

Named to Reorganize Beacon

Sydney Cohen, advisor to the bondholders' committee of the Roxy theatre in New York, and treasurer of Artco, which has a management contract with the theatre, has been retained by the Beacon theatre bondholders' group to reorganize the property. Springer & Cocalis is now operating the house.

MGM Office Men Meet

MGM held a meeting of exchange office managers in San Francisco early this week. R. W. Carmichaels, Los Angeles office head, and John Jacobs, booker, were among those attending.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

AGAINST THE LAW: John Mack Brown, Sally Blane—Many patrons stopped to say how thoroughly they enjoyed this feature. Business, however, was not too good. Played May 11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

BEYOND THE LAW: Tim McCoy, Shirley Grey—Just average draw. Probably satisfied the regular fans and kids but no extra pull. Played June 6.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myra Loy—Baxter hasn't the draw. Loy OK. The trailer doesn't do the picture justice. Too bad, because those who saw it liked it. Average attendance.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Myrna Loy, Warner Baxter—This picture holds the interest all the way through. It is a down-to-earth story that all can understand, plenty of action and excitement as well as humor. Where did Columbia ever find Raymond Walburn? He is a perfect substitute for Guy Kibbee, just as fat and jolly and just as funny. The race in this picture, ending with the death of a gallant horse is unforgettable.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

CARNIVAL: Lee Tracy, Sally Eilers—A fairly good bunch of hokum that will entertain fairly well and do an average business. Running time, eight reels. Played May 31-June 1.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson—Played it on a double bill. Not much comedy in this feature but fairly entertaining.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore—Wonderful, but small towns don't seem to know what it's all about. They become restless. We heralded it and looked for the crowds, but they just didn't come, so, fellow exhibitors, beware.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

First National

BLACK FURY: Paul Muni—No doubt this picture will rank among the best of the year, but we still doubt its general appeal. Leave it to Warner to blaze new trails, and in "Black Fury" they have dared to tackle a highly controversial subject, at present particularly delicate in view of economic conditions. Warner has made a great picture; it is, we judge, technically perfect, gripping in its intensity, and Muni, always a favorite with me, reaches new heights. "Black Fury" is not popular entertainment by any means and the women will not like it because of its sordidness and brutal scenes. For those people who take the trouble to plumb the depths of this picture, it is an epic. We played "Black Fury" before the city houses, but we doubt if this accounted to any extent for the lowest weekend gross in months. In situations where labor troubles are frequent, this picture may prove more popular than out here, where we are surrounded by wheat fields and labor troubles are virtually unknown. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 6-8.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir, Margaret Lindsay, Ann Dvorak—A good tale for young college graduates to see. Life as it comes. We enjoyed it.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

IN CALIENTE: Dolores Del Rio, Pat O'Brien—One of the best pictures of the year and a real treat for patrons and myself.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—Just a fair picture with some auto racing to supply the action. There was very much talking.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

Fox

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—I can always depend on Will Rogers to bring in better than average crowd. Wish other companies' product was as suitable as Fox for our village. Played June 1-2.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: George O'Brien—Even those who do not ordinarily care for westerns spoke well of this one. The western scenery was especially beautiful and the comedy kept folks in good humor. The only thing we regret about George O'Brien westerns is that there are not enough of them. Running time, 61 minutes. Played May 22.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen—This proved a very satisfactory picture for the weekend. Drew average business and seemed to please.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT 40: Will Rogers—This is just as good as any of the rest of the Rogers pictures. Drew the usual Rogers good business. Played May 26-27-28.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Another like this and "Servants' Entrance" and Gaynor will be a "has been." Aren't there any more stories like "Carolina" and "Daddy Long Legs"? People have had enough of the depressions in their own lives without paying a quarter to see some one else suffer. Played May 7-8-9.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MGM

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett—We played this two days to excellent business. Gable has just the part we like him best in and this is the first time Constance Bennett has ever received much favorable comment in my town. We consider this one of MGM's best pictures this year.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—No good. Just talk-talk-talk.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombard, Chester Mosris—Not a bad picture. At least it seemed to please those few that saw it.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Maurice Chevalier—There is nothing merry in it for the exhibitor. When everything is in his favor and the picture doesn't bring them in a 70 per cent French town to see Chevalier, he's out with us.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: Lionel Barrymore, Robert Montgomery, Helen Hayes—Put this picture in to substitute for one of this year's group we wished to skip. The picture drew well, but folks felt that the stars were wasted and the ending left some of the boys in doubt as to just what it meant. It was rather depressing but the scenery was magnificent, and we felt it did folks good to know the hardships of air mail flying. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 26.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye—Be sure to run a good comedy right after this picture (we used Todd-Kelly in "Opened By Mistake") because it has such a sad ending. In spite of the sad ending it is a good picture with beautiful music and an interesting if trite story. We played it on Sunday and Monday to fair business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker—A different animal story that drew extra business and pleased 99 per cent of the people that saw it. We would like to have another like this one. Played June 4-5.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker—Another animal picture in which the animals do some unreasonable things. It seems to be what they want as it is the only picture we have had in a long time that we had to turn people away for lack of seats, so you had better run it. Running time, seven reels. Played June 7-8.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

STUDENT TOUR: Jimmy Durante, Charles Butterworth—We put this in as a special picture for the graduates and everyone was pleased. Some considered it the best musical ever shown here. Butterworth is a favorite comedian with us. We considered the picture educational as well as entertaining with the tour ending up at the beautiful Taj Mahal. Running time, 85 minutes. Played May 19.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

VANESSA: HER LOVE STORY: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—This pleased about 50 per cent. Business below average.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Carl Brisson, Elissa Landi—Put this on first four days of week and started off to fair business only and by the last day it petered out to less than nothing at the box office. The picture seems to be all right but——.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray—A dandy Friday-Saturday show. Comedy, action, romance and suspense to suit everybody. Good business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross, Jack Oakie—A nice production and generally well liked. Joe Penner seemed to be the center support of the picture and I also think the main draw.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

DEVIL IS A WOMAN, THE: Marlene Dietrich, Lionell Atwill, Cesar Romero—Not so hot. We like Marlene Dietrich and wish she could have better stories and better direction.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL: Richard Barthelmess—If you think Dick Barthelmess is about done, better see this one. It is thrilling and holds interest.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—O. K. for patrons and box office.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert—This pleased very much and drew fairly well. Not another "It Happened One Night" by any means, but a nice comedy drama extremely well done.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—This one pleased the cash customers 100 per cent. Business, however, was slightly off.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

GOIN' TO TOWN: Mae West—Mae West, in spite of Legion of Decency activities against her previous efforts has come back in this picture with a bang. We set this for last part of week, being unable to secure booking opening on Sunday. Opened first night with average business and next night. Friday, to the biggest Friday night's business this year and turned them away on the third and last night. Mae West is the greatest show girl of the screen.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby, Kitty Carlisle—Fair picture. The box office said it was terrible. Crosby seems to be washed up in this town.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Randolph Scott, Jackie

Coogan—Good western. Jackie Coogan retains his following and the theme song by Joe Morrison didn't hurt the picture a bit. His voice ought to take him far. Business somewhat better than usual. Played May 4.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—No good. Fields is poison for me. We had fewer patrons in the theatre at the end of the picture than at the start. which means what?—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—One of the truly great pictures of the year. Unfortunately, we ran into a mess of commencements, class plays and other school activities, so business was completely off.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Francot Tone, Richard Cromwell, Sir Guy Standing—This picture is a splendid production. It is so different from the ordinary run of program pictures. It fairly speaks out of modernistic direction, tireless efforts, ceaseless preparations and it is really red-blooded, top-notch entertainment. We get so many schedule pictures that one like this can be appreciated. This deserves your very best days and extra advertising. Paramount should be congratulated for this picture and if it is not one of the best of the year, I'll miss my guess. Played March 31-April 1.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett, W. C. Fields—Songs seemed weaker. Played to only a fair crowd. Men don't seem to go for him.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Joan Bennett—Drew extra business and pleased 100 per cent. —L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

ONCE IN A BLUE MOON: Jimmie Savo—This is without a doubt the poorest piece of entertainment that my patrons have ever seen in this town, and may the Lord have mercy on me if ever in my life I run a "Hecht and MacArthur" picture again. Played June 6-7.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS, THE: Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett—In spite of extra advertising and special lobby display, this failed to pull even average Sunday business. In fact, we had the worse Sunday in months. Personally, I thought it was a clever little comedy, but sure couldn't get folks to part with their money to see it.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

STOLEN HARMONY: George Raft, Ben Bernie—Extra good picture. Made to order for my town.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott—An old western that pleased on Saturday.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

WAGON WHEELS: Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick—This is the kind of pictures we small town exhibitors need. Business was above average and how they ate it up. Some came back second night.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix—Business good on this picture. Seems a good bet.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

CHASING YESTERDAY: Anne Shirley, O. P. Heggie, Helen Westley—Two adolescents and four elderly people give an excellent performance so far as acting is concerned, but it's not entertainment for the general patron. My Sunday and Monday smallest for months, with bad road and weather conditions. Try Anne Shirley in something up-to-date once. "Green Gables" scored because of the book, not because of stars. Played June 2-3.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Alice Brady, Edward Everett Horton—A very good dancing picture. If your trade likes good dancing, don't fail to book this one. Ginger and Fred sure put it on. I played it pretty late, but what are we small town one and two changes a week going to do? We can't play all pictures as they come out. Played June 8-9.—R. L. Riddle, The Kiva Theatre, Santa Rosa, N. M. Mixed patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—This picture sure let us down. Too smart for small towns. Those who came liked it, but we missed many regular patrons.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—This is a delightful comedy leading up to the famous Continental dance, which was indeed fascinating. For some reason the picture did not draw as well as we had hoped it would, but perhaps we played it too late. Ginger Rogers is appealing and Fred Astaire is unforgetable and the two of them can dance as has never been shown on our screen before. Running time, 107 minutes. Played May 25th.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

INFORMER, THE: Victor McLaglen, Margot Grahame—Fine, strong, understanding entertainment. Victor McLaglen comes back in a big, big way.—E. T. Mathes, Avalon Theatre, Bellingham, Wash. General patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason—This is good. We ran it on a double bill and I think it held its end of the program up very well. There's plenty of comedy to offset the suspense.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RED MORNING: Steffi Duni, Regis Toomey—This picture drew very well and everyone was pleased. It has plenty of exciting action and some beautiful scenes of the South Sea islands, especially of the wrecked ship and the fleet of native war canoes which are mustered to save the ship. Played May 18.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Charles Starrett, Sally Blane, William Farnum—Excellent production which pleased all fans. Business good. Played May 18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SING AND LIKE IT: Zasu Pitts—Some told us they didn't like it, thought it silly, but many were more than pleased. Ned Sparks is the real comedian here. His sour face combined with a terse wit are never before shown to better advantage. Nat Pendleton at the head of a troop of silk-hatted gangsters that help him carry out his plans to make Zasu the great prima donna is very laughable.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—If we had more westerns of this type, instead of the shoot 'em up kind, we would make more money on westerns. Very pleasing. Not a big picture, but liked by all. Played May 25-26.—R. L. Riddle, Kiva Theatre, Santa Rosa, N. M. Small town patronage.

WEST OF THE PECOS: Richard Dix, Martha Sleeper—Above the ordinary westerns and pleased. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 24-25.—Dennis J. Mooney, Princess Theatre, Ordway, Col. Small town patronage.

United Artists

KID MILLIONS: Eddie Cantor—Fair picture, but lacked the millions at the box. Musicals in small towns are divided with us. They seem to like westerns on week ends.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

LES MISERABLES: Fredric March, Charles Laughton—This can compare with the "Count of Monte Cristo." A wonderful picture that drew extra business. A little too strong for children, but fascinating for the grown ups. Brought in people that are not regular movie fans. Played June 8-9.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery—They went for Wallace Beery in a big way. Plenty came twice to see him.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

Universal

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—A picture really worth showing. Very good. Many compliments from cash customers.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

THREE EXHIBITORS JOIN CONTRIBUTORS

Canada, the West and the Southwest are represented this week in the list of three new contributors to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department of the HERALD. The new exhibitor-reporters, whose first reports appear in this issue, and their theatres, are:

L. D. JONES, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho.

HARLAND RANKIN, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada.

R. L. RIDDLE, The Kiva Theatre, Santa Rosa, New Mexico.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—Big disappointment.—L. D. Jones, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

MR. DYNAMITE: Edmund Lowe, Jean Dixon, Esther Ralston—Hammett's story made into acceptable detective picture drama, with comedy element kept to the fore. Pleased. Played June 7-8.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

NOTORIOUS GENTLEMAN, A: Charles Bickford, Helen Vinson—A picture that is really interesting and entertaining. Pleased. Played April 5-6.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—The biggest draw since we opened. They came out satisfied. Play it by all means.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Gene Raymond, Henry Hull, Frances Drake—Liberty Magazine story by Octavus Roy Cohen made into entertaining romantic drama. Clean. Pleased. Played May 31-June 1.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Henry Hull, Gene Raymond, Frances Drake—Don't miss this picture. Many, many favorable comments received from patrons here. Story by Octavus Roy Cohen. Worth mention in advertising. Played April 7-8.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and country patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones—Despite the fact that there were no counter attractions and Buck Jones is usually a good draw here, this production failed to bring out the fans. Played May 25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

Warner Bros.

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis, Margaret Lindsay—This pleased a small crowd. So far it has been hard to get people in to see a Muni picture.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—Swell show that pleased everyone. Business, however, was off owing to so much school closing activities.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak, Ned Sparks, Helen Morgan—This is a very good picture and the very best that Rudy Vallee ever made, but poor Ann Dvorak, she just did not seem to fit in the picture, but in general it is top notch entertainment and will fit nicely in the best days in any house. Played May 12-13-14.—Bob Ouellette, Dixie Theatre, Brooksville, Fla. Small town patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—Pleased 100 per cent.—L. D. Jones, Star Theatre, Malad City, Idaho. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BIRDMAN: Krazy Kat Kartoons—This cartoon of Krazy Kat building an airplane and his experiences with it had some fine music. The next day everyone was singing or whistling the tunes. Running time, nine minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

COULD NOT DO WITHOUT "HERALD"

"I look forward to your copies of the HERALD and don't know what I would have done without it. The first page I look for is 'What the Picture Did for Me'. I find it most consistent, in certain situations the films varying," writes HARLAND RANKIN of the Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada.

"I feel that more Canadians should put forth more interest in this department, as most of my fellow exhibitors are subscribers. I hope to be one of your regular subscribers to this department and hope to see some more Canadians make a showing."

MEDBURY IN HOLLYWOOD: Laughing with Medbury Series—Very interesting discourse and pictures of the odd and freakish sights of Hollywood.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Educational

HOW AM I DOING?: Marriage Wows Series—Kept a Saturday night house in an uproar.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MOTH AND THE SPIDER, THE: Terry-Toon—An exceptionally good cartoon. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MGM

DONE IN OIL: Todd-Kelly—Not very funny. You can skip it. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HI, NEIGHBOR: Our Gang Comedy—Plenty good. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LOST CHICK, THE: Happy Harmonies—Delightful. In fact it's so good, I'm thinking of repeating it. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

OPENED BY MISTAKE: Todd-Kelly—Absolutely the funniest comedy we've played all winter. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RAINBOW CANYON: FitzPatrick Travel Talk—Another excellent number in this series.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SHRIMPS FOR A DAY: Our Gang Comedy—A mighty fine Gang comedy, with a swell climax. You cannot go wrong on this; put in your best spot. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

RKO Radio

EVERYTHING DUCKY: Clark & McCullough—Just a fair comedy. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FIDDLIN' FUN: Cubby the Bear Cartoons—Cartoon showing the time of Nero with an exciting chariot race. Running time, seven minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO ZERO: Clark & McCullough—Just so-so. Not good, not very bad. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.
SHORTS—add RKO .. ..

HOW'S CROPS: Cubby the Bear Cartoons—Not a bad little cartoon of the drought showing the worm as the helper of Cubby. Running time, nine minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

LA CUCARACHA: Steffi Duna, Don Alvarado—Lovely color, good singing, good dancing. It pleased very well, but was not worth the extra we paid for it. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ODOR IN THE COURT: Clark and McCullough—The boys seemed to like this comedy. I heard a lot of laughing.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

PATHE TOPICS: A very fine production for any show. Running time, 10 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

SPIRIT OF 1976: Headliner Series—Out of the ordinary and has a clever idea. Keep it away from musicals. Made mistake of putting it on program with "Roberta." Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

CASTLE OF DREAMS, THE: Morton Downey—Good in spots, but most of it very ordinary. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

I HAVEN'T GOT A HAT: Merrie Melodies Series—This is a dandy little colored cartoon. We heard many favorable comments and it covered up our embarrassment at having shown and advertised a two-reel that had nothing to it.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

SMOKED HAMS: Shemp Howard—We bought some advertising on this and people looking at the gaudy one-sheet and set of features thought "Smoked Hams" would be worth seeing, so did we, till we saw it. It is poor, one of the poorest two-reelers we have shown in months.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

SO YOU WON'T T-T-T-TALK: Roscoe Ates—Got lots of laughs. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Serials

First Division

YOUNG EAGLES: Boy Scouts—It isn't often that I express my opinion to a very great extent, but I hope this note will help some other small exhibitor like myself from making the mistake that I did. "Young Eagles," the serial put out by First Division and indorsed by the Boy Scouts of America, is one of the best flops I have ever put on the screen.—L. E. Evans, Movie-Tone Circuit Company, Great Falls, Mont. General patronage.

Sturdivant Takes Over Arizona Radio Station

E. B. Sturdivant, who is associated with George H. Christoffers in the operation of the Orpheum theatre in Yuma, the Somerton in Somerton and the Flagstaff in Flagstaff, all Arizona, has taken over Station KUMA. As yet no manager has been appointed to succeed Don Hastings. Mr. Sturdivant has had an interest in the station since February, 1934. Prior to that the station was owned by H. A. Schermann, of Flagstaff. KUMA is the only radio station in southwestern Arizona and is one of seven in the state.

United Airlines Speeds East-West Plane Service

United Airlines has speeded up air mail, air express and passenger service between New York and other eastern cities and Los Angeles and other West Coast cities. The motion picture industry is a large user of air transportation. Under the new arrangements, overnight plane service has been established between the two coasts. Eastbound service has been improved similarly.

Buddy Cantor in New Program

William Randolph Hearst's Station WINS in New York has arranged with Buddy Cantor, Broadway press agent, to act as motion picture commentator in a new program series at 9 P. M. on Wednesdays and Fridays. Mr. Cantor was "The Film City Reporter" on a Schenley program over American Broadcasting's key WMCA.

NBC Engineers Meet

All divisional engineers of the National Broadcasting Company met in New York this week for the first general conference since the company was founded in 1926.

Amalgamated Vaudeville Makes Unit Revues Available

Amalgamated Vaudeville Agency, producing for and booking the Comerford and affiliated circuits of New York, Pennsylvania and New England, and which has been reorganized under the direction of E. M. Fay, has made its service available to a limited number of theatres. The reorganization has resulted in unit revues rather than unrelated acts for stage presentation.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Strollers past 823 South Wabash avenue, and that includes everybody in the business and a gallery of mere citizens, are getting a clinching object lesson in how to lick an over-touted depression. For it is here that the theatre equipment firm of Joe Goldberg, Inc., stages daily the spattered spectacle of a masons' and mechanics' chorus engaged in the gay business of doubling the already expansive floor and window space to accommodate the growth of a two-year-old business that its best friends gave a thin six months to live.

In the expanded and remodeled quarters the company will have ideal facilities for display and demonstration of the line of theatre equipment and appurtenances it dispenses to a steadily growing clientele. To this end, the showrooms are being decorated and furnished in the smartest modern manner, affording an attractive and efficient setting for the merchandise presented. Among the new lines added to the extensive Goldberg stock are the Royal Chrome metal furniture for theatres and the Capital City electric light fixtures. Invitations will be issued to a formal reopening scheduled to take place as soon as the painters fold their ladders like the plasterers and silently steal away.

Strike Darkens 3 Mexican Theatres

Three neighborhood theatres in Mexico City have been closed as the result of a strike, called after the allegedly unjustified dismissal of 25 ticket-takers and refusal to accede to a demand for an increase in wages. One other first run and five additional second run theatres are similarly threatened.

A boycott of Mexican and foreign distributors has been voted by the Mexico City branch of the Confederation of Workers and Peasants, strongest labor organization in the country, as a protest against distributors' refusal to allow their employees to join the Cinema Employees' Union. The confederation has advised some distributors that the boycott will be put into effect unless they reinstate employees dismissed for alleged union activities. Other branches of the confederation are supporting the boycott move. The distributors point out that these workers already have a union of their own.

The popularity of dramatic and romantic stories based upon Mexican history among Mexican audiences has led Felipe Mier, who resigned last fall as Warner manager, to undertake distribution on his own, to branch out as writer and producer. His first production is "El Tesoro de Pancho Villa" ("Pancho Villa's Treasure"). The film is scheduled for release this month. Exhibition rights for southern United States have been sold. "Martin Garatuza," produced by Aguila Films, S. A., with a historical background, has met with a good reception from Mexican audiences, it is reported.

TECHNOLOGICAL

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 270 (one of a special group on sound).—(A) What care should be given the sound reproducing (exciter lamp) optical system? (B) What effect will a dirty sound gate mechanism or aperture have on reproduced sound. (C) How often should the sound gate aperture, film tracks, etc., be cleaned? What means should be employed in cleaning them?

Answer to Question No. 264

Bluebook School Question No. 264 was: (A) What do you regard as the minimum amount of spare parts, in good condition, that should be carried by theatres to enable rapid correction of the more common sound equipment troubles? Indicate why all defective parts should be segregated from the spart parts carried in stock. (C) What are the most common causes of flutter in sound reproduction, for which projectionists should constantly be on the lookout?

The engineers who contributed this question say:

"(A) Two exciter lamps, both of which have been focused and set up for instant use. At least one of each type of vacuum tube used in the system (when three or more of any one type of tube be used, the number of spares should be increased in proportion). One P. E. cell. One charger or power unit bulb (where power units are used the bulb should be set up, ready for instant use). One stage speaker unit. Five of each kind and capacity of fuse used in the theatre system. Adequate quantities of all greases and oils used to lubricate the sound reproduction equipments. One set of C-batteries, if used. One disc reproducer, if used. One set of drive belts, if used. One set of rubber couplings (disc), if used. One set of any special wrenches required to facilitate assembling and disassembling sound reproduction sets in use.

"(B) Unless defective or worn parts are immediately either destroyed or at least very definitely segregated, it is very possible, or even probable, they will become mixed with good parts, whereupon, in case of emergency, when one is in a hurry (for seconds count with an audience waiting) a defective part may be picked up by mistake instead of a good one, which of course means vexation and delay.

"(C) Worn sound sprocket; eccentric sound sprocket or bent sound sprocket shaft; dirt, emulsion, wax or other foreign accumulations on the working surfaces (film contact surfaces) of the sound sprocket; improperly adjusted or dirty sound aperture or sound gate mechanism; excessive or jerky takeup tension."

The following projectionists made acceptable answers: S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; C. Oldham; A. F. Sprafke; G. E. Doe; J. Wentworth; B. De Vietti; P. and L. Felt; D. L. Sinklow; T. Van Vaulkenburg; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; E. Hodson and S. Johnson; F. L. Savlor and G. N. Guidotti; R. and K. Wells; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; H. Edwards; P. H. Kay; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; M. and J. DeVoy; T. Turk; L. D. Geddings; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; H. Pitchkey and C. Mellinger; N. C. Bandman; D. Lally and F. Ferguson; N. Goldberg; J. O. McClellan; A. A. O'Verko; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; P. L. Stone and R. Carmody; T. N. Onby; G. Wayne and R. Stellegos; E. Mantol and H. Hughes; D. L. Andrews; L. H. Joy; V. J. Anderson.

The answer to Section A of Evans and Rau coincides largely with that of the engineers. They say:

"One vacuum tube of each type used in the equipment. One P. E. cell. At least two exciting lamps, with brackets, if brackets are used. One set of B-batteries, if used. Six fuses of each capacity and type used. Spare receiver units. One spare disc reproducer, if discs are used. One of any drive chains or belts used on the equipment."

Danielson says: "At least two spares of all amplifying tubes. One P. E. cell. Four exciter lamps, two of which are set up in spare brackets, if provided. One spare receiver for the medium frequency band. If trouble is experienced with condensers, transformers, etc., new ones should be installed, the defective one repaired and stocked as a spare. Note that last does not of course refer to condensers. A new spare should be stocked. Where the film path is adustajble, a buzz track should be included, or a small roll of negative film. [Maybe I'm dumb, but I don't quite get that last with certainty. Suppose he means a strip of test film.—F. H. R.] One set of spare guide and pad rollers. Spare motor brushes. Should any part last over a considerable period of time it is reasonable to assume that it need not be carried in stock, a spare only being obtained when there is reason to believe the one in use may fail before long. Should one need a part not ordinarily stocked more than once, it may reasonably be held that it should be stocked as a necessary spare part."

Oldham put it thus: "Spare parts for sound equipment usually considered as essential are tubes of each kind used. Exciter lamps. P. E. cell. Grid leaks. Fuses. Receivers for loudspeakers. Reproducer units. I would hold the minimum to be: Vacuum tubes, one of each kind used in the equipment. P. E. cell, one. Exciter lamps, six. Grid leaks, two of each kind. Receivers for loudspeakers, two. Reproducer units, one, the same complete as to swivel arm and reproducer unit; also, one 4-A reproducer unit. Fuses, spares of each kind in use."

To Section C Danielson replies: "Dirty sound sprocket face. Bent sound sprocket shaft. Worn bearings. Worn sound gate parts. Buckled film or film that buckles slightly at the sound aperture. Worn or improperly adjusted pad roller. Film sprocket damaged. Badly adjusted takeup tension or takeup parts that function poorly. Excessive vibration. Vibration of lens assembly elements [Improbable is it not?—F. H. R.] Microphonic tubes. Loose exciter or loose exciter filament."

I'm not quite certain about a few of Brother Danielson's items. What do you think about it?

G. E. Doe says: "I believe the most commonly encountered causes are (a) dirt adhering to film contact surfaces of sound sprocket; (b) sound sprocket shaft not straight, or its bearings worn; (c) uneven take-up pull due either to faulty adjustment or to parts that do not work properly; (d) sound sprocket with undercut or badly worn teeth; (e) worn gearing; (f) film that is buckled or that for some other reason does not pass the sound aperture in a perfectly straight line; (g) dirty sound aperture may produce flutter as well as volume loss; (h) worn sound gate mechanical parts—film tracks, for example; (i) sound sprocket loose on shaft."

"However," Doe continues, "the 'common cause' part of the question is not so good. One projectionist may find one thing to be a 'common cause,' and the next may have no trouble of that sort at all. Generally speaking, sound sprocket and shaft trouble, and worn or dirty sound gate parts are, I believe, the really most common causes."

May I put in my oar? To me it seems the "most common causes" are checked by (a) maintaining an even and not excessive take-up pull; (b) keeping sound sprocket perfectly clean, shaft perfectly straight, sprocket tight on shaft and teeth in good condition; (c) keeping parts of sound gate assembly, including aperture, scrupulously clean; maintaining a proper tension of film, and preventing film from buckling, which latter means seeing that tension shoes and film track are perfectly flat.

National Screen Seeks Data

National Screen Service has asked Warner for a bill of particulars indicating in detail the damages charged by Warner in its $1,000,000 suit against National Screen.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

DESERVES CHEERFUL SUPPORT

Convention time has come and gone. Optimism in fat, juicy slices is apparent as sales and production representatives scatter to the far corners brimming over with high spirits for the new season's product. Gladly we join hands in a ring-around-the-rosy of welcome to what the studios have on the fire for coming exhibition. It looks like a fine harvest.

But—and there always is a "but"—the expected box office rewards cannot be realized fully unless there is an unbroken front displayed by producers and their stars in the matter of high-powered exploitations that require studio cooperation.

True, this cooperation is taken for granted in most instances. Today's stars as a class are smart enough to realize the importance of lending themselves to worthwhile tieups. But this cannot be said of all stars or, for that matter, all studios.

The coming product may be the best in the history of our business, but, as always, the hard-fighting showman will be called upon for those final and telling exploitation thrusts to push grosses up to expected levels. Whatever the sins of exploitation (and there have been more than a few), its virtues are sufficiently abundant to win cheerful support from stars and studioites inclined to regard it with the same suspicion as a healthy rash of measles.

$50,000 PER YEAR

The merchandising manager of a leading Boston department store with 15 big windows on the city's busiest street recently told Harry Browning, M and P circuit ad head, that not one of these windows could be rented for as much as $50,000 per year.

Browning cites this conversation in a general discussion on the value of good co-op windows pointing out that unusual displays of this kind are conspicuous by their infrequency. Further says Harry:

Windows have a circulation just like a newspaper, magazine or radio. Every person that passes your window is like the newspaper reader that stops, reads, and digests your newspaper ad.

Store windows being what they are, are among the most positive attention-attractors and thus most every tieup returns a certain value to both merchant and manager, varying of course with the unusualness of the display.

Many years back we remember a department store man telling us he'd be durned if he'd give up valuable window space for just any kind of a picture tieup, but would break a leg reaching for one that would help sell merchandise.

BREAKS

When Nat Silver of the Strand, Lowell, Mass., learned that Nelson Eddy was due in town shortly to appear in concert, he arranged for newspaper interviews and a reception committee to greet the star on his arrival. Photos and stories were forthcoming, Eddy describing at length the making of "Naughty Marietta" booked to open at the Strand a few days later.

Last week we told of Elmer Brient's activities in breaking out with ads and announcements anent the NRA Supreme Court ruling. Elmer not only jumped the town, but also broke into the front pages.

The difference between the garden variety of manager and a showman is that the showman never misses in taking advantage of the breaks.

Among his other duties at the Capitol, in Paris, Canada, Manager Joe Bolinsky cheerfully assumes the temporary guardianship of offspring left outside in their carriages while mater catches the cinema. Writes Joe, reporting on these extracurricular activities of a recent Spring afternoon:

" . . . what a time the babies gave me, but I gave them the best of attention. Some would cry and I would pick them up, lay them down and give them their bottles . . . while this was only a small chore, some day these children will be theatre patrons."

And they'll have babies, too, Joe.

CITATIONS

For wielding so prodigious a mace in the very front ranks of press book defenders, Joe Weil, exploitation head of Universal, in recognition of his excellent work on "Bride of Frankenstein" and "Diamond Jim" is hereby medal-of-honored.

And high on the honors list let there also be recorded the name of A. J. Schubert, who in the sturdy community of Gooding, Idaho, that answers to a population of barely 1,600 souls, put over a campaign on "Ruggles"—recounted elsewhere in this section—that would fair make your eyes grow round as saucers. Gentlemen, a serenade to Schubert.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

"I know you look very smart when you sit in the lounge—but, after all, we did come to see the movie."

Parades and Contests In Pop.-1,600 Town

Gooding, Idaho, answers to a population of 1,600, all of whom seemed to be concerned with A. J. Schubert's campaign on "Ruggles" at the Schubert Theatre, according to the drive put across by this showman on that date.

Two parades featured the exploitation. The first was a combined boy scout and boy and dog parade, in which the canines (see photo) were properly bannered. Over 75 pet owners were reported to have accepted Schubert's invite to get in line.

The second parade included the high school band and students in costumes of the picture's period. Banners were carried by horsemen also dressed a la West (territory, not Mae). Further school participation was an oratory contest at the high school for the best delivery, male or female, of the Gettysburg address, the superintendent carrying notices on bulletins and encouraging students to enter.

Cartoon contest, based on the ads from the picture, was put on at state school for deaf and blind, with entrants allowed to draw their entries during regular classroom drawing periods. Schubert also called upon the radio to further publicize the date, offering tickets to those who could recall the author of "Ruggles" and could state when the story was written.

JUNE DEADLINE AND JUNE JUDGES

Midnight of Saturday, July 6th, has been determined as the deadline for the Quigley June Award entries. Managers are again reminded that campaigns must be at Committee Headquarters, 1790 Broadway, New York, by that time.

The following have been selected to act as judges and will be confirmed in the next issue: Samuel Frisch, Randforce Circuit; A. W. Smith, Jr., Warner Brothers, and A. P. Waxman, Gaumont British. Decisions will be announced in the issue of July 13th.

Local Crime Head Ties In With Herb

To tie in the picture to present day conditions and thus get away from any possibility of dating it, Herb Morgan, on the "Les Miserables" date at Loew's Century, Baltimore, succeeded in having the Managing Director of the local Criminal Justice Commission contribute three special newspaper articles in advance comparing the theme of the picture with modern Jean Valjeans that came to his notice. Articles, run in the news section, carried the title and theatre. The crime head also spoke over the radio on the same subject.

Other newspaper stuff included two want ad contests, double truck ad flash on refrigerator display in lobby and other co-op ads by men's clothing store. Windows were secured on books, pipes, dresses, and the candlestick theme of the picture was hooked into a daily candlelight tea at prominent class eating place, smartly publicized. The same spot put on special after-theatre supper in connection, and other restaurants cooperated with cards placed at all tables.

Libraries of course tied in, and Herb landed full window at main branch (see photo) and counter displays in all branch libraries throughout the city. Bookmarks were distributed by the circulating libraries and other stores carrying the book. Date was also announced by teachers of English.

Letters of endorsement by the management were placed in all packages at leading retail spot, as did chain grocers, which used special insert tied in to Valjean's stealing bread in the picture. Railroads and bus lines placed window cards in all stations in drawing area urging attendance and suggesting the various means of transportation to do so.

Serializations, essay contests tied in with the refrigerator exhibit, plus a bang up newspaper advertising and publicity campaign otherwise featured Herb's effort.

Snake Story?

Ewell Bingham, Howard Theatre, Taylor, Texas, swears it wasn't planted for his "Mississippi" street bally, but when a goodly crowd stopped out front to listen to the strumming of a darkie seated atop a bale of Mississippi cotton, a six-foot chicken snake reared its ugly head from inside the bale and gently (?) wrapped itself around the colored boy. Ewell tells us that in the excitement a bystander whipped out a revolver and shot the snake dead away.

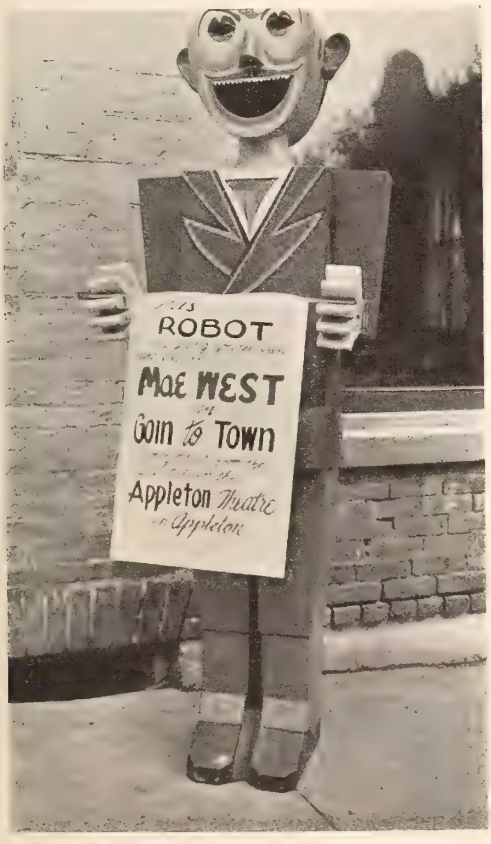
Al Goes To Town With Radio Stunts

Licensed by the government is Al Sindlinger's amateur radio station, W9PJW, operated by the manager of the Appleton, Appleton, Wis., and used plenty in his "Goin' to Town" campaign that won the Quigley May Silver. Fourteen pairs of wires connected from the apparatus to various parts of the theatre enable Al to pick up patrons' comments and to broadcast to any of these points. The outfit also allows for a remote control gag put over on this campaign.



Among the radio stunts were three contests, viz., to name recent West pictures and her leading men, second, to make up a "westticism" and third, the West voice imitation gag. Sindlinger's remote control stunt was a hookup to broadcast from moving car, promoted from Ford dealer. Program was "voice of the people" idea, questions of course leading up to the picture. Same idea was carried out from a boat that led parade celebrating opening of yacht club.

Also smart was this Round Tabler's "television" screening, wherein the guests were asked to speak over portable mike from the theatre while they viewed the picture. Comments were broadcast and brought in a flock of phone calls. Another ace slant was a "talking billboard," the stand in the heart of the city hooked up to the theatre station, with dialog and songs coming from the cut-out of West on the billboard.

Unique trailer idea clicked, with sound cut off from the booth, and connected with loudspeaker from a grill at the very top of the auditorium. The operator switched this sound whenever Mae asked the boys—"to come up and see her." Comment-building also was a robot-man idea (see photo), the figure taken to various parts of town and nearby spots. Robot was connected with the remote control transmitter from theatre through lines on sound truck which accompanied the robot. Plug came from loudspeaker in mouth of the robot.

There were other stunts of course outside of the radio, among which were having Mae join Al's kid club, members sending her a giant invite, and studio sending back picture of West reading the club paper. A Mae Day hooked up with 37 cooperating merchants also brought big returns, including double trucks, posters in windows, etc.

Fancy front with "laff indicator" and the see-yourself in a-Mae-West-gown gag were lobby-stoppers. Boys distributing "Mae West Shot" newspapers also made talk, second line of copy reading "—the works to make," etc. Newspaper and store tieups topped by Hollywood night opening and style show were other highlights that featured Sindlinger's very praiseworthy campaign.

Irwin Holds "Ruggles" Preview for Shop Girls

A preview of "Ruggles" was held two weeks ahead by George Irwin at the Lyceum, Duluth, for beauty parlor operators and sales girls in larger department stores. Each person attending was given two stamped cards with following copy to be mailed to friends: "I have just seen an advance showing of Ruggles; be sure to see it when it comes to the Lyceum." Additional postcards were promoted from leading hotel and mailed to prominent women.

Imprinted cardboard handle bar mustachios were distributed to children; all checks at five leading restaurants bore "Ruggles" plug and for lobby display, George used large apple barrel with a number of monkey cutouts in it, copy reading "funny as a barrel of monkeys," etc.

THE WINNERS FOR MAY

AL SINDLINGER

HERB MORGAN

Introducing Al Sindlinger and Herb Morgan, who took down the Quigley plaques in the May competitions. Al skippers Warner's Appleton Theatre, in Appleton, Wis., and was voted the Silver by the judges on Paramount's "Goin' to Town". Herb is the Loew Baltimore publicist and won the Bronze on U.A.'s "Les Miserables" at the Century.

Ties Jubilee to "Dance" Opening

The Silver Jubilee, celebrated in Canada at the time George Rotsky played "Go Into Your Dance," this Dominion Round Tabler took occasion to tie in the festivities by decorating his front and interior, and also to turn his upper mezzanine floor into an Empire exhibition with products from the various British colonies.

Photographs of their majesties, the King and Queen of England, were displayed on the marquee front, further decorated with the British colors. Inner lobby carried shields with names of the Canadian provinces, and crests of the colonies. From the Sea Cadets, Royal Naval Reserve and various regiments George promoted the use of numerous flags, draped throughout the theatre, as were pictures of the Royal Family.

Exhibits from Colonies

The Empire exhibit contained representations from six of the colonies such as mounted kangaroos from Australia, giant trout from New Zealand, and scenes of various phases of activity from all the far-off lands. From local jeweler, Rotsky arranged display of highly valued antique silverware, dating as far back as 400 years.

Sharrock Dresses His Staff

Raleigh Sharrock, Palace Theatre, Morrilton, Ark., dressed his entire staff with 10-gallon hats and bands reading "Goin' to Town." Sidewalk stencils with the West silhouette were used profusely and Raleigh promoted co-op ad, merchants all tying in ad copy with title.

Murphy Promotes Special Neon Sign

In a laudable endeavor to vary the lighting effects for the front at Loew's Penn, Pittsburgh, Gene Murphy, ad head, approached an electrical house and sold the idea of making up a neon sign (see photo) three feet wide by forty long, on "Les Miserables."

Sign men constructed the flash for a very moderate sum with the expectation of doing further business with it on a rental basis with houses playing subsequent runs on the picture. Murphy cooperated additionally by supplying dates for solicitation of these rentals.

Schlaifer Puts Over Novel Co-op Page

Advertising Manager Charlie Schlaifer, Tri-States Theatres, Omaha, promoted a co-op page in connection with the Frenchy Revue stage show at the Paramount, center of page carrying crossword puzzle which, when solved, correctly answered questions scattered throughout merchants' ads. Theatre ad prominently displayed offered tickets to winners.

Department store cooperated by sponsoring Shirley Temple resemblance contest on "Little Colonel." Store displayed photos of contestants, winners decided by votes. Twenty-five dollars was awarded winner with lesser prizes to runners-up.

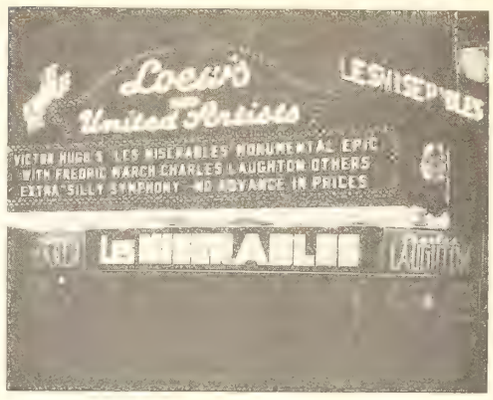
Store Free Short Show Builds Gilbert's Advance

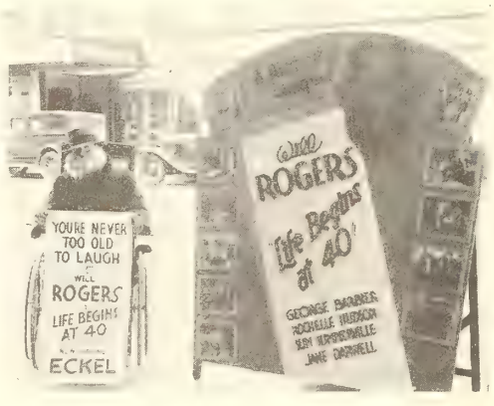


Although of course the youngsters in Bluefield, W. Va., and vicinity were well aware of the coming of "Little Colonel," through the advance campaign of Manager H. J. Gilbert, of the Granada, over 2,000 children had occasion to be especially grateful for the coming of Shirley's picture.

The occasion: A tieup with leading department store to sponsor a free show of cartoon shorts and vaudeville acts at the theatre as a pre-easter party. Merchant printed the tickets, distributed them at store and took display space to invite all children between the ages of 14 and under to attend. With ticket each child also received star still, reverse side of which carried copy on the coming "Little Colonel" date.

On arrival at the theatre, children further received Temple buttons, and after the show bags of candy. Then the youngsters were formed in line and paraded with police escort to the store, where Mickey Mouse slates and play money were given to each.

Gilbert reports the parade as completely tying up traffic for an hour at the city's busiest corner with the local paper, usually tough on free publicity, going for the stunt in a large way. Accompanying photo shows merchant's store display.



Store paid all expenses of advertising and promotion in addition to an admission charge of two and one-half cents per child, theatre supplying copies of the weekly program, which in this case carried plenty of advance buildup on the Temple picture.

De Haven Features Special Sections

Merchants in the towns of Springfield, Greenville and Wilmington, Ohio, are well trained to the advantage of tying in on cooperative newspaper advertising, according to the excellent layouts in two special sections reported by A. Milo De Haven, Chakeres Theatre divisional director.

In Wilmington, a number of stores tied into the date on "Reckless" at the Murphy Theatre with a batch of two and three-column ads, the paper coming in with a full page headline banner, copy reading: "Don't Be Reckless, Wilmington Merchants Advise," followed by a two-column story on the various displays. In addition the section was graced with a lot of theatre stuff, topped by a three-column cut.

De Haven adapted the stunt on "Our Little Girl" for the date at the State, in Greenville, with merchants in that spot tying in ads with cuts of Shirley and prominent mention of picture and date.

This Round Tabler reports similarly effective exploitations each week in the three towns of his territory in building up advance interests in the coming attractions. Population of Greenville is 7,500, and Wilmington, 5,500.

A neat co-op ad was secured by George Rotsky, Montreal Palace Theatre, on "Little Colonel," from local beauty salon whose ad with photo plugged a Shirley Temple ringlet permanent for adults.

Special front was constructed with Temple doll on revolving table (see photo) attracting the curious. Department store featured window display and photos of the starlet were scattered about toy department.

Di Pesa Reports First Cool Shot

As do the first robins bring signs of Spring, so do theatremen announce the coming of Summer with newspaper shots of their cooling plants with pretty gals, local celebs, and what have you, in attendance.

The honor of being the first to report this year goes to Joe Di Pesa, Loew's State, Boston publicity chief, who sends along the shot illustrated here of Stephenson Corey, local lad, recently returned with Admiral Byrd from the Antarctic, turning on the cooling breezes for the season in the presence of the pulchritudinous trio to the right. As to be expected, Joe cracked the local dailies for a flock of two-column cuts on the stunt.

Pharmacist Ties In with Chuck on "Society Doctor"

Following press book suggestions, Chuck Shannon, Warners' Hollywood, Dormont, Pa., tied up local pharmacist for window displays on "Society Doctor." Chuck also promoted imprinted kites distributed to kids at matinees.

On "Red Hot Tires" Chuck painted a tire cover red with theatre copy and had boy roll tire through streets. Cooperating merchants paid for printing and distribution of heralds, which were also inserted in bundles leaving store.

Black Plugs "Reckless" With Peep Hole Box

Two weeks ahead of his "Reckless" opening, Harry Black, Poli's, New Haven, constructed novel peep box in lobby featuring huge eye with pupil cut out for peep hole and copy inviting folks to get an eyeful of Jean Harlow. Stills of the star with plenty of allure were the reward of the curious who stepped up to the display.

Bamberger Constructs New Lobby Display for Mae West

Attractive lobby display, as can be seen from accompanying photo, was used by Herman Bamberger at the Paramount in Springfield, Mass., for "Goin' to Town," the flash depicting the front of a theatre against a New York skyline with illuminated windows in the buildings. Large electric signs were placed on either side.

Directional arrows were planted on highways pointing to Springfield, sandwich men covered busy sections and imprinted tire covers were placed on cabs.

REASONS WHY TIEUPS FLOP

Publicity Man Usually at Fault, Says Former Theatre Ad Chief In Discussing Tieup Weaknesses

by FLOYD L. BELL

It's rather flattering always to be asked by an editor to express one's own views on any subject. It gives one that sort of revitalized feeling that comes from a "pick me up" the next morning, relying for this latter upon the related experiences of friends. But when an editor writes, as Mike Vogel has, asking one to relate one's views on why merchants' tieups often fail or how one might improve his method of attacks on these merchants, one begins to wonder a bit. Perhaps Mike realizes that the man to whom he directed the letter has had more than his share of such failures and thinks, "Well, what the Heck, I might as well go straight to headquarters and ask what is the cause for these flops."

Truthfully, our own opinion why so many socalled tieups "flop" may be expressed very simply. It's usually the fault of the promotion man or the press agent himself. And the reason, in most instances, is because the aforesaid publicist has failed to keep his promises or has deceived that merchant or some friend of his in the past.

There's another thing—the tieup which is arranged merely for the purpose of pasting a few clippings in the scrap book or in order that the home office may gaze in amazement at the report and exclaim, "What a great guy this fellow up in Boston or down in Atlanta is. He has 15 tieups and columns of clippings this week in his campaign to put Dolly Twinkletoes over."

Objects to Terminology

Then there is one other thing—personally we do not like that word "attacks" which the editor used. Perhaps right there is the secret of some of the failures. Too often we do, all of us, think of these tieup possibilities as attacks when in reality they should be smooth, diplomatic approaches. The merchant who cannot be swayed by bull-like force and high-powered pressure may often be swung into line with a bit of flattery and just a little pandering to his vanity. You know, after all, the tieup to be a success must be as beneficial to the merchant as to the theatre. Only in that way can future tieups be assured and only thus can friendships which mean so much in any business be made and held.

On the average picture campaign fully fifty per cent of the tieups are made with no object in view other than that of impressing the "bosses." That's sharp but it's true. How often have we sat in meeting of department heads, where everyone had his eyes if not his head out the window gazing into the street below, and heard someone propose a tieup which would result in a socalled flash and the expenditure of another two or three hundred dollars and then have heard it enthusiastically okayed because the men in attendance were anxious to get out of the meeting and were ready to approve anything which might point toward adjournment.

Lengthy reports, in which the weary but job-fearing publicist, after consulting the files and picking out tieups of past years, goes into detail about some tieup where "1,000 window cards may be obtained free" or where John Jones, the merchant down the street, will give us a line in all his advertising if we let him put a refrigerator in the lobby. All hooey of the worst sort. No one ever obtained results without expending effort and giving quid pro quo.

If a merchant expects to decorate your lobby with what nots, refrigerators, displays of shoes and other articles of merchandise, he has but one thought in mind—that it will aid him in his sales. He frankly doesn't give a tinker's dam about your theatre or the success of your picture. And, by the same token, too often the press agent doesn't care much what happens to the merchant so long as a nice photograph can be taken of the display and that this can be sent into New York to presumably impress the big boss.

Unfilled Promises Make Foes

Too many press agents promise a merchant anything under the sun in order to promote a tieup. Strangely enough the merchant is no dumber than the average and he stores carefully in his mind those promises and when they are not fulfilled he becomes a foe of the theatre itself. When a manager or a press agent deliberately lies to a merchant or an advertising manager and tells that man of the thousands who flock into the theatre each night and who will see his display stuck off in a corner near the retiring rooms and sees only one third the seats in the theatre occupied he says to himself, "what a lot of bunk that fellow fed me. But I'm cured, never again." We have known managers and press agents who could go out and make the most beautiful tieups in the world, whose ballyhoo was supreme, whose scrap books will show hundreds of pages of these. But—and here is the rub—they never repeat. They never can go back to those same merchants and arrange another tieup. Strangely, it is true, some of these fellows go on forever. Perhaps the field is large enough so they can make new contacts and new enemies each week or month.

Newspaper publicity, the printed word or radio tieups are after all, in our mind, still the dominating factors in any campaign. The printed or spoken word will be convincing but a window display out in a chain store or a line in an advertisement telling the world—if any—of it reads that portion—that Reginald Warburton, picture star, drinks Pale Blue Ale or buys his shoes at John Urbane's never yet brought a patron into the picture theatre.

Faith must be kept with the merchant and even before this, it must be definitely determined that the possible tie up is one which will bring results other than a pat on the back by the moguls.

If tie ups continue to be made, as they are now, just to give greater opportunity for some lazy manager to sit back and preen himself and to purchase more paste for the scrap book activities of the office boy then the percentage of failures will always continue high.

GIVES HIS VIEWPOINT FROM THE OTHER SIDE

The author of the article set down on this page is no stranger to this department, for Floyd Bell has been a loyal Round Tabler for many years. Previously in charge of publicity at the Metropolitan in Boston, and before that with the Ringling Circus, Floyd is now at the head of his own advertising agency in Boston.

Being on the other side of the fence now, so to speak, Bell is in a position to discuss with authority the reasons why some tieups do not "tie". It is with pleasure we present his findings to our readers.

Police Tieups Feature Irwin's "G-Men" Drive

Leading off in George Irwin's smart campaign on "G-Men" at the Lyceum, Duluth, Minn., were a number of effective police hookups, the first of which was a preview for department heads and officers, federal agents and police reporters. This was followed with a special screening for the students of the police school, students parading to the theatre with boys carrying banners.

Irwin also was able to borrow the fingerprint police apparatus which was placed in the lobby with expert taking fingerprints of patrons and prominent citizens which latter was arranged through Chamber of Commerce and broke all papers. Another lobby click was a panel with blowups of local front pages describing the late Dillinger's escape from the Wisconsin woods.

"Reward" heralds with the supposed finger prints of Public Enemy No. 1 were distributed with space on bottom for prints of those who wished to compare theirs with the notorious gangster.

Teaser type ads were started ten days ahead, with instructions for readers to watch space the next day, followed with display teasers, as illustrated below, which ran until the regular ads broke. George got himself another keen break with copies of a Sunday feature story on how the G Men crack down on gangsters' gals, overprinting these with red ink and distributing them to women.

THE ART OF PINCHING PENNIES

Florida Round Tabler Finds Art Department Difficulties Often Arise from Waste of Material

by HAL KOPPLIN

Wometco Theatres, Miami, Fla.

Most managers realize the importance of an art department. Some wonder at its seemingly expensive upkeep, which results, oftimes in the cutting down of help or the department's elimination altogether. Both of these methods are a fallacy.

Most of this trouble comes from a source few consider. The artist blames the manager for too much work, the manager blames the general manager for calling him to time for too high an art bill. Most of the trouble I find is due to the needless waste of much valuable material. And, because that is true, it's the artist upon whose shoulder most of the guilt lies. But guilt is a dirty word; better to use innocence. I change the word to innocence because, in many cases the artist is too busy doing the next job—on planning the next display—to give much thought to the saving of material.

Few of them realize the value of paint, of wall board or of one by two's. That the manager should think of this item is quite out of his line. His training calls for thought in line of men and labor. None of his business has anything to do with material (with the exception of cleaning compounds, etc.). So therefore, his first line of thought is too much salary or too many men.

But let us get to "The Art of Pinching Pennies in Art," a subject every artist would do well to know and to practice. It may save his job for him sometime.

Primarily there's that biggest expense wall board. Anyone who has ever done art will agree that it's great fun to take out a nice, clean new piece to start a job. I imagine it's every artist's idea of heaven (outside of a raise). It's handy to do a line of twelve inch lettering in the middle of the sheet. Handy because the artist can kind'a lean on the easel while working—but it plays havoc with expense. After the lettering is cut out we have scrap. Very often that's the line of reasoning used—so the balance is broken up for the trash pile. It may be a little harder to plan the lettering for the bottom or the side of the sheet, but in the end, when the letters are cut out, we still have a big sheet remaining.

Then again, in reproducing a picture—sometimes we set up the board and "shoot" the picture up to size regardless of where it hits the board. The same result occurs here as with the lettering. Too many big pieces become scrap. A little care in where a new job is laid out on a new sheet results in a great saving.

Dismantles All Displays

Numerous displays are built to a good size. Many of them with full sheets as backgrounds. Oftimes in the skeleton construction used in displays the nail-holes aren't too great an obstacle to use most of this board over again. Too often we forget that wall board has two sides. A method we use in our shop is to dismantle all displays as soon as they come back from use. We save the lumber and at least half of the board.

To the many meaty articles on art that have been run in the Round Table, is added the discourse on this page by Hal Kopplin, who functions successfully as ad head and art director of Wometco Theatres, in Miami, Florida.

Arrangements are now being made for other artist-members to contribute to this series inaugurated by Kopplin, who is now working on another article entitled "Bossing an Art Shop" which is to appear in an early issue. —A-MIKE.

This serves a dual purpose. It creates room to work, which is always at a premium, and makes much good material ready to do its work all over again. In dismantling these displays the artist should not be mistaken in the fact that he should stop his work and do it himself. In most cases there is a "hanger-on" who is willing to do this for a pass or two. But even if this is not possible it would pay the artist to do it himself, for it strengthens his position because of his readiness to co-operate in saving all he can.

Most theatres except those in the larger metropolitan cities use large wall-board signs over the entrance doors or similar spots around the theatre. We have three such houses. Our method of saving in this respect is this: First the board is cut to size—then it is coated on both sides with clear lacquer or airplane dope (cheaper but serves the same purpose)—third, paint the background in variegated shades, designs are plain color (usually dark or very light tint)—and last, coat the painted side with two layers of white damar or varnish.

Varnish Is Definite Saver

This varnish takes show card color beautifully and lengthens the life of the board surprisingly. Each time when the board comes back in the shop all that is necessary is to take a wet sponge and wash off the lettering (very easy too) and it is all set for reuse. In using both sides of the board by this method some of them have stood up under constant use for over a year. That means that no material was used during all this time other than the actual color in relettering them. This not only saves material but time.

Another way to use this board over and over again is to coat the raw board with two or three layers of clear lacquer. Then paint your background and lettering. This means, however, that when you wash it the entire background comes off with the lettering.

Some artists prefer to paint an entirely new background each time, but good contrasting backgrounds are few so this proceedure is not followed here. A good idea, which we follow, is to have a number of "color-ranges" already made to fit any color theme used with a picture.

In most cases, that is, in all but the very large displays, we do not even use what is termed regulation wall board. We have discovered what is known as box board (about half thickness) which serves a "one time" purpose just as well as the other. This new board is a saving of about 50 percent. Its size is 41 inches by eight feet. Most of the lobby easels (some artists call them standees) are not larger than can be cut out of this size, so one sheet makes a fairly good sized set piece. However, it can be put together and pieced just as easily as the standard board. It won't stand the weather if the display gets any rain. It has a tendency to "get the bends". Anyone desirous of getting the name and address of where to get this material will please write me. I'd kinda like to know if anyone read this darn thing anyway.

Cheap Color Poor Economy

Color is the last thing the artist worries about and the first thing he finds fault with. Most of us know that the cheapest color does not make the most economical display. We should try to get a good color in enough quantity so that the price is brought to almost that of a cheap color sold singly. Here at Wometco we buy in gross or half-gross lots, but I realize that many artists who work in single theatre shops cannot buy in such quantities. They should try to buy in dozens at least. Even in this way there is a worthwhile saving. I hope I'm not unethical, but we use Prang's and Palmer's colors. I cite that, because in keeping with the theme of pinching pennies, I find that, although these colors are not the cheapest, their quality and good covering ability more than pays the difference in economy. But regardless of what color is used in the shop the artist should remember to never leave his color open. I have seen cases of wasting half the material by letting it stand and dry up. By merely covering it not only saves it but keeps it in a good workable condition.

This article has not covered all the methods of economy in an art shop, but has tried to hit the high spots where most of the loss occurs. My final preachment is this:

While planning a display always figure how you can use some material you have already used in conjunction with what naturally has to be new. You'll find it pays to be conscientious in this respect.

Free Rides in D. C. On "Goin' To Town"

To go to town in Washington two days ahead of the opening of "Goin' to Town" at Loew's Palace, was accomplished by residents in the Capitol, by simply stopping one of the fleet of bannered sedans (see photo) promoted by Angie Ratto and Lou Brown. Cars started each morning from a given point and proceeded slowly into the city, drivers inviting the folks to ride in free of charge and during the course of the trip, telling the passengers all about the coming picture and date. Terminus of the journey was at the theatre where further plugs were carried.

Newspaper returns were distinctly more than usual and co-op ads were numerous. These running as large as four columns on 300 lines included auto dealers, radio, florists and beauty shops, the title being the natural that attracted notice. The boys also planted a lot of publicity on the nationwide telephone conversation held by critics in 12 cities with Mae West at the studio, as Washington was one of the spots selected.

Contests were numerous, two on the classified field angle with different papers, another the "write a Westicism," and still another carried an identification slant, full figure cuts of various stars run daily with faces routed out. Correct guessers received cash and tickets.

Baker putting out new loaf of bread had salesmen plant large window streamers carrying two-column head of West in grocery windows, and streamers, blown up, were placed on all delivery trucks. Brown even made up imprinted sheet music wrappers, given to stores selling the song hits.

Heralds, specially designed counter cards, shopping bags, eye-catching front and midnight preview with all the trimmin's were other of the highlights put across by the Washingtonians that earned them a corking May First Mention.

Doc Joe Lee Lands Sunday Feature Story

That was the old Doctor himself, yes sir, Joe Lee, pumper-upper of sick theatres, and now skipper of the Paramount, Brooklyn, New York, who landed a full page by-lined feature story in a recent issue of the New York Sunday Mirror entitled "Tricks of the Trade."

In the flash Joe detailed some of the inside on various exploitations he had put over to cure houses that were run down, story illustrated by photo of Joe himself.

Tompkins Goes Old West On "Ruggles" Front

That was a smart idea of Manager Al Tompkins, at the Majestic, Reno, Nev., to transform his front on "Ruggles" (see photo) to what he thought Red Gap looked like at the time of the picture.

Al had a wooden sidewalk laid over the concrete, covered over his box-office to resemble a log cabin, rigged up the side of the house with a saloon, general store and Wells Fargo front, and even changed the name of the next door sweet shop as shown in photo below.

Windows in the various units were transparencies with lights behind adding much to the effect after dark. Stunt was so well done that the local papers referred to it as one of the most unique advertising gags in Reno's theatrical history.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

A PREDICTION ABOUT TWO M-G-M PRODUCTIONS

WATCH FOR PREVIEWS!

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS. IT CONCERNS YOU VITALLY!

Shortly in California M-G-M will hold public previews of two completed attractions that are on the 1935-36 new season line-up of your pal Leo.

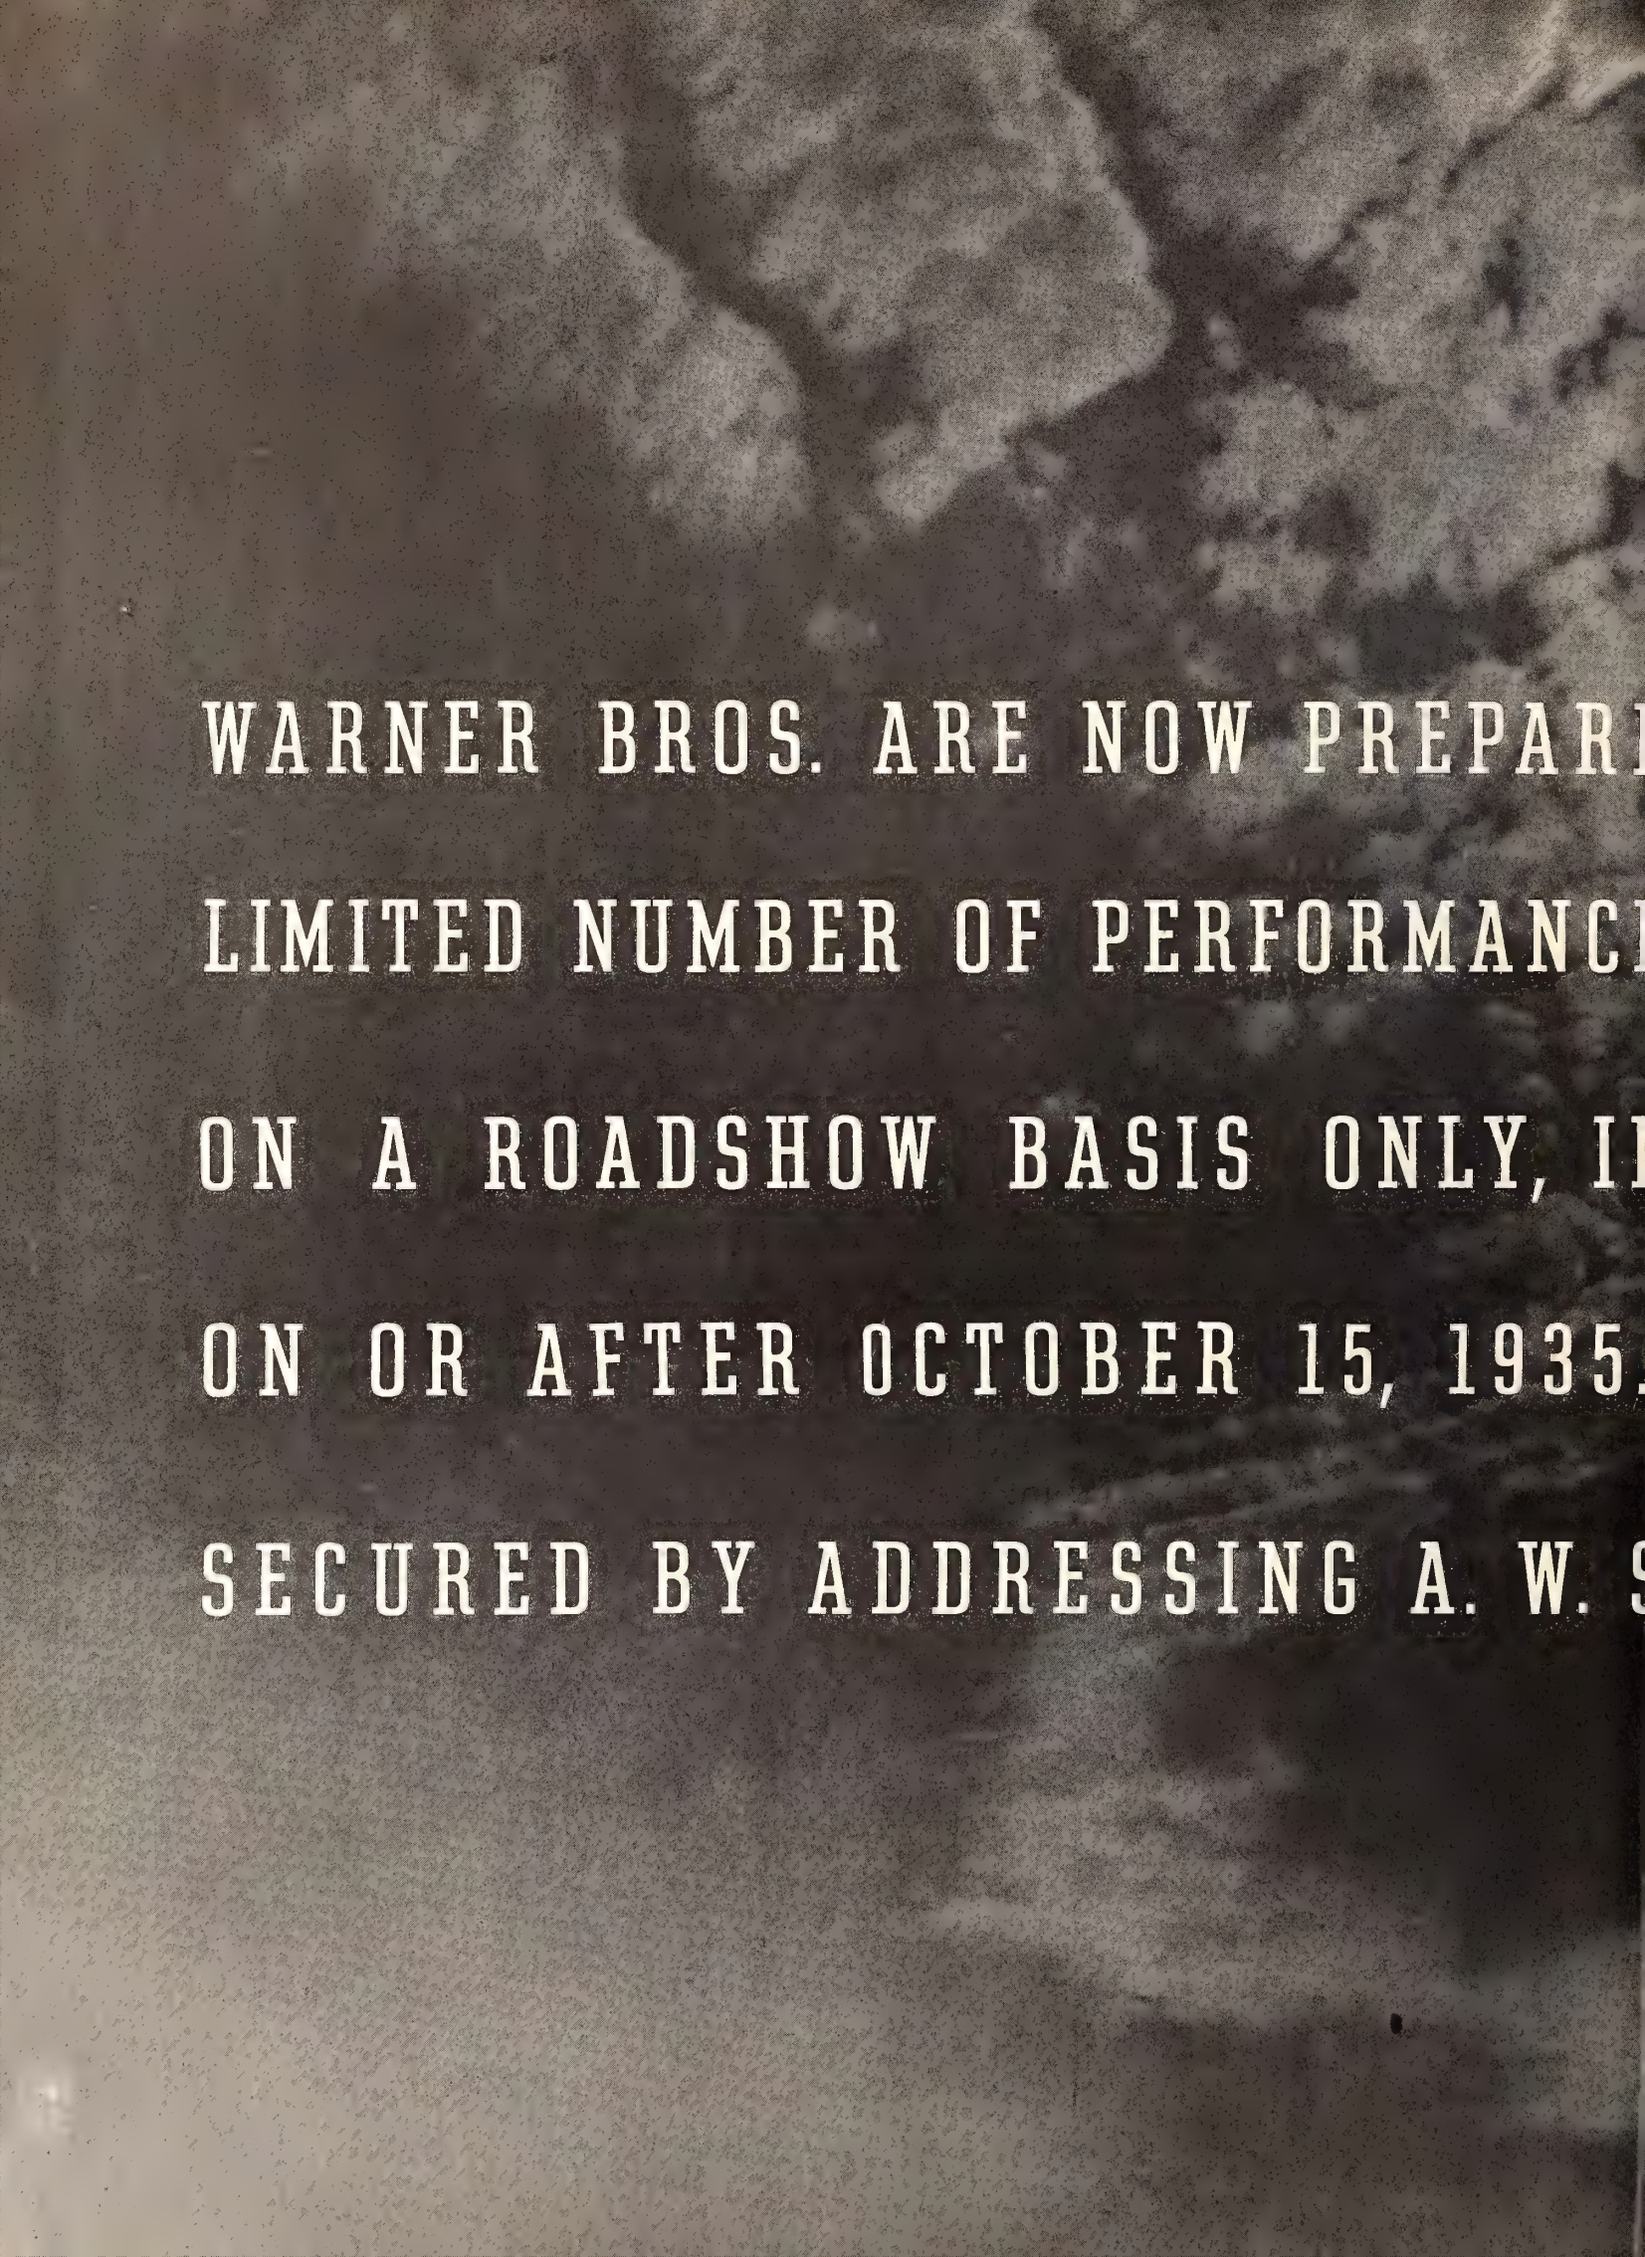
You'll hear plenty about these. Right now we'll go on record to predict that the critical notices from California will more than back up our most enthusiastic prophesies. Watch for the previews. Watch for the notices!

To the thousands of exhibitors who are currently being visited by M-G-M salesmen we take this opportunity to state that these productions are typical of the great M-G-M product of 1935-36, the extended run hits next season. Blessed Events:

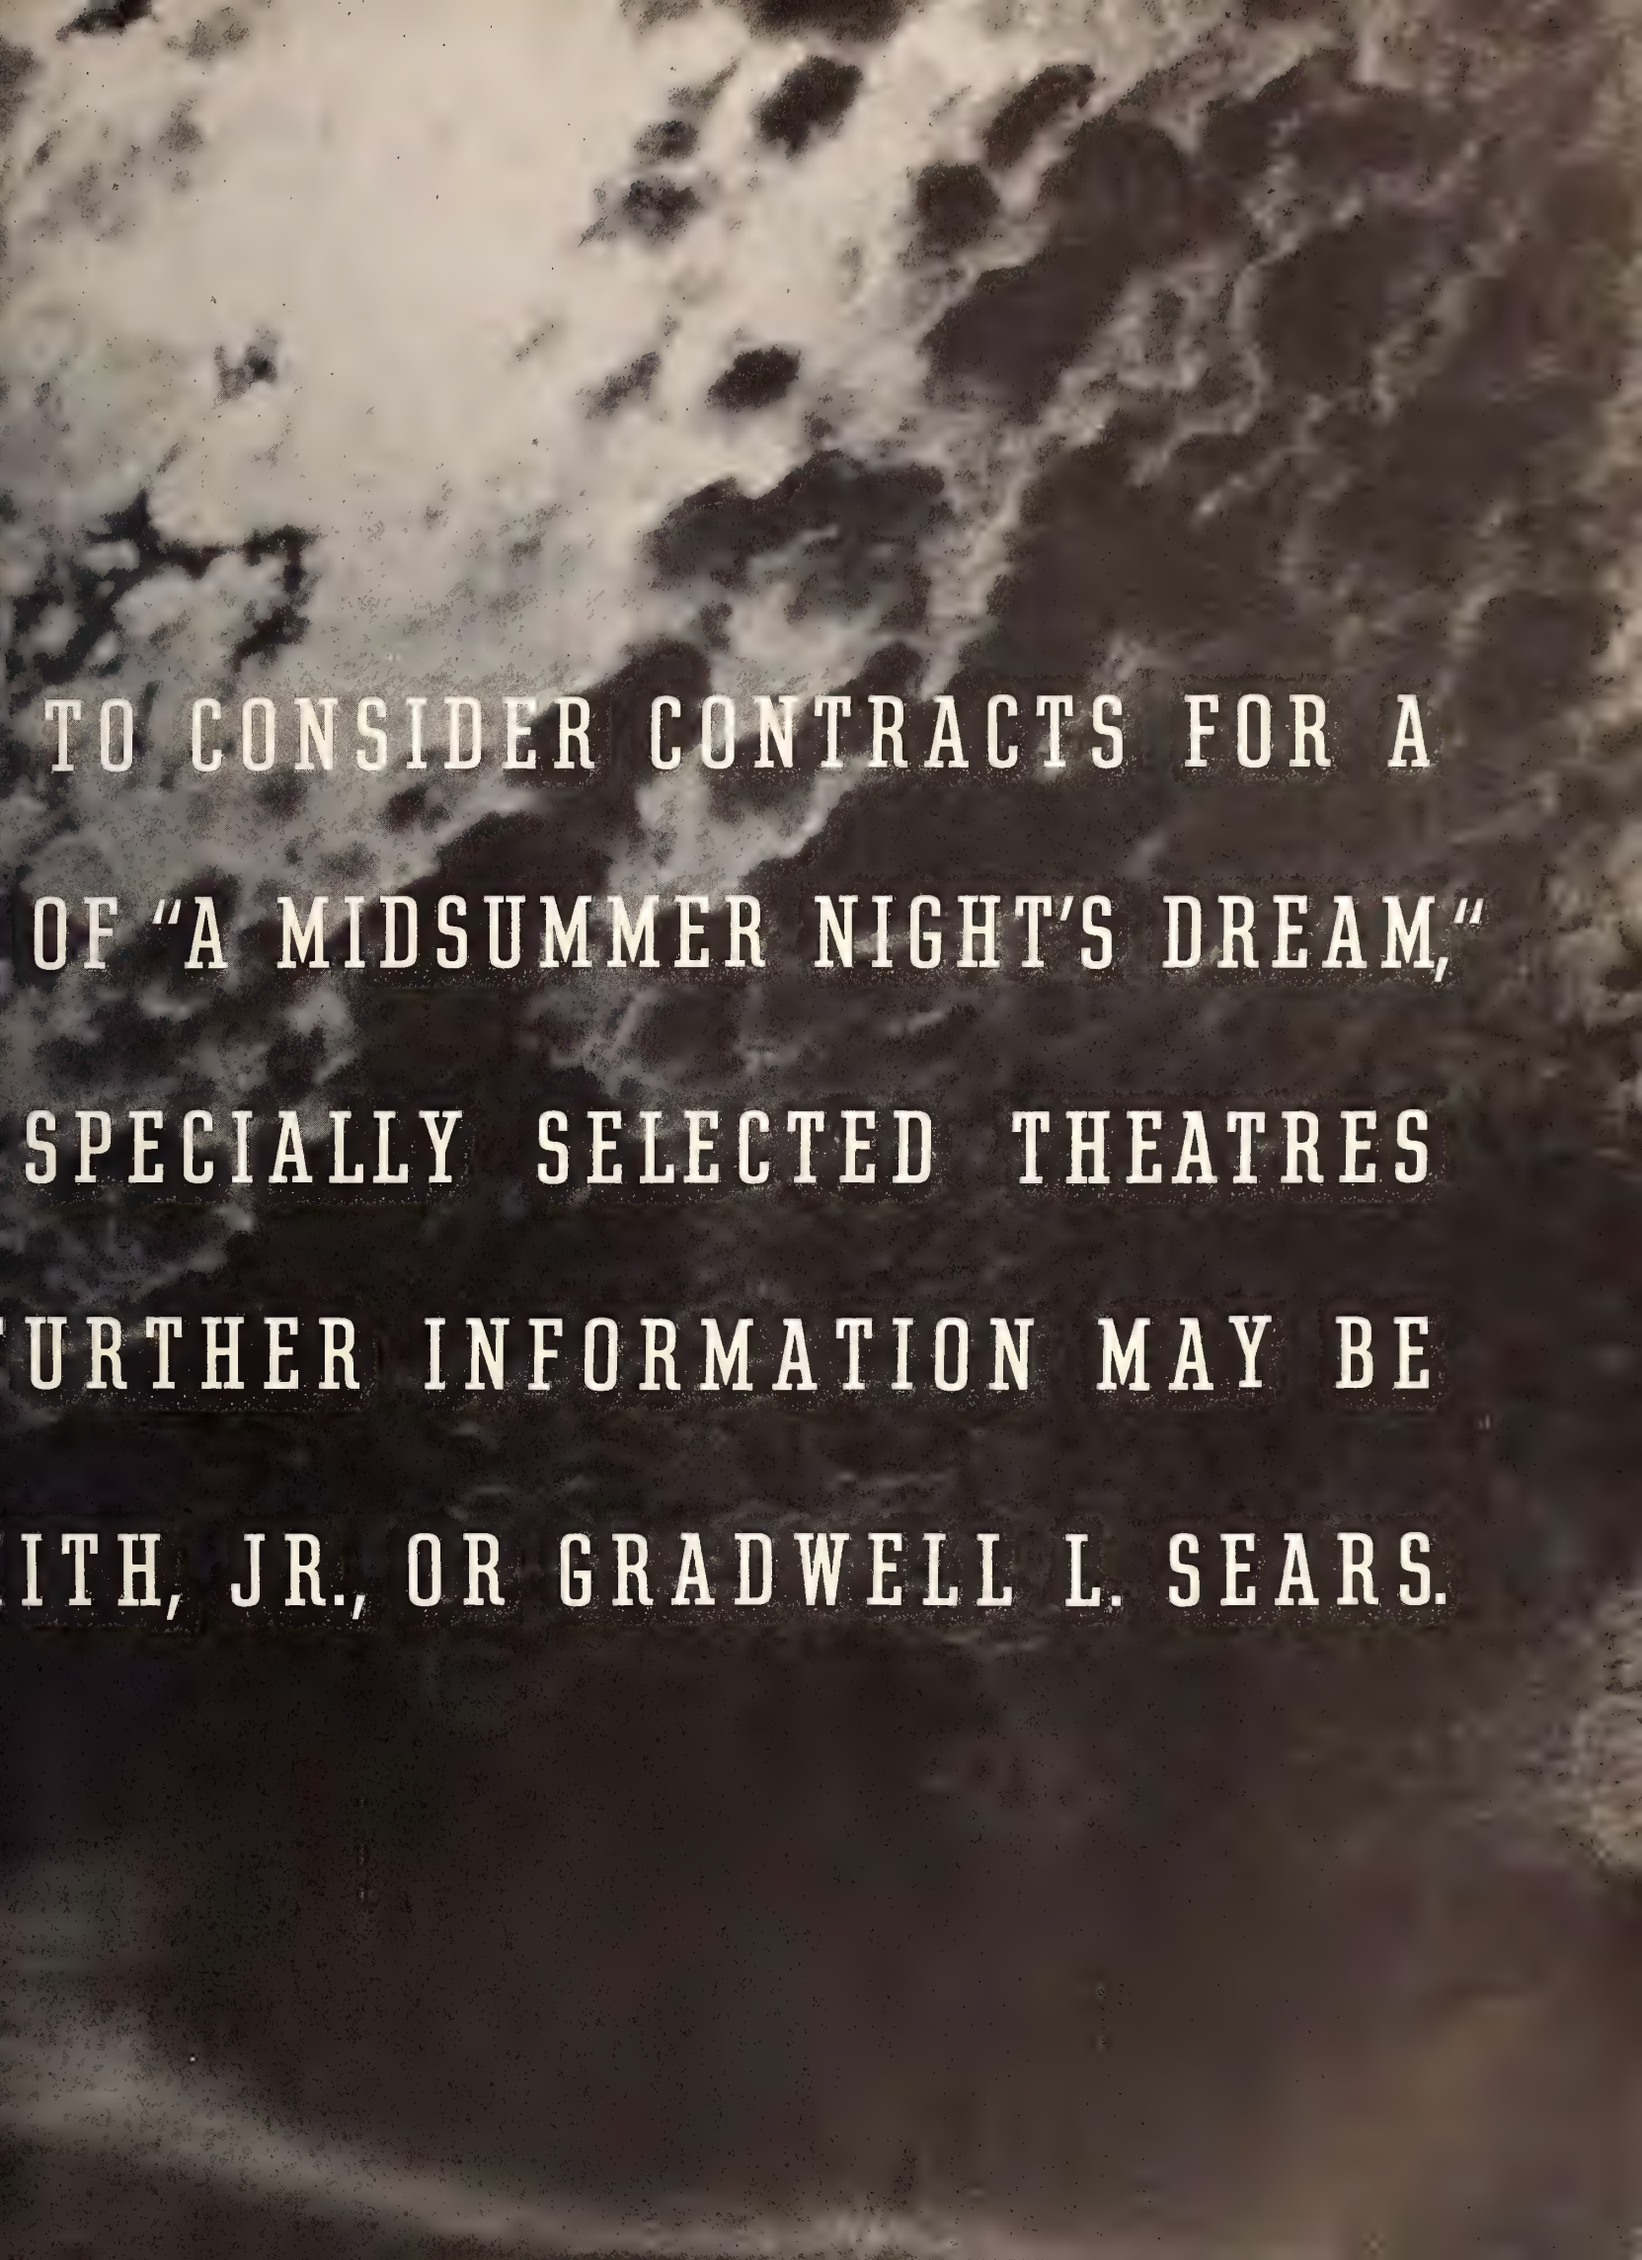
CHINA SEAS

CHINA SEAS, starring CLARK GABLE, JEAN HARLOW, WALLACE BEERY and a big supporting cast. Irving Thalberg (a whole company in himself) produced it and not since his "Big Parade" has this industry been in line for a mightier entertainment. An August release.

ANNA KARENINA



ANNA KARENINA is ready for preview. There will be excitement in this industry when it happens. GRETA GARBO and FREDRIC MARCH plus the first appearance of FREDDIE BARTHOLOMEW since "Copperfield." Plus Clarence Brown's direction of a brilliant M-G-M cast. Another production triumph from David O. Selznick. A September release.



Somebody's coming to their house!

POOR NELLY

AN inspired and contentious British press recently made great furore about the British cinema art and its rights at the hands of the American industry's self-regulative Production Code, basing the outcry considerably upon certain difficulties attendant upon getting a code seal for "Nell Gwyn".

In due season, however, a seal was issued to the production and it has gone to the public at the excellent Rivoli theatre in Broadway.

It develops, meanwhile, that the public has not gone to "Nell Gwyn". This triumph of British art, presenting in the amber of the cinema that mellowed historical classic of the King's mistress, appears to be due for the award for the all-time low at the Rivoli. On such a good show day as Sunday last, the box office takings were, we are informed, about $700. The dying King Charles said, and it seems in vain: "Let not poor Nelly starve." Must we blush for an American public that honors no kings and sees no art in Nelly—or what?

RUSSIAN BLANK

MISS MAE WEST is "of no great world significance" but Mr. Mickey Mouse "is of cosmic value" in the opinion of Comrade Boris Shumiatsky, director general of the Cinematography Industry of the U.S.S.R., now on a tour of study of the motion picture industry of America.

In his opinion, the Russian people would not be interested in Miss West. The proletariat would not understand her, he feels, although he admits, just admits: "the intelligentsia might know Mae West could exist, but they would not know why."

When Comrade Shumiatsky finds Mickey's whimsies cosmic, we are willing enough to agree, but when he denies for all the Russias and all the Russians a possibility of understanding that unsubtle something in the type that Miss West so ably delineates, we are again convinced that all the Soviet knows about machinery is said with tractors.

HOTTEST SPOT

THE hottest spot on earth has been discovered, and it is neither in Yuma nor in Mr. Martin Johnson's Africa. The National Carbon Company's research staff found it, in the crater of a carbon arc, the light that illumines the motion picture screens of the land.

When you see a motion picture, it is from the rays given off by a glowing bit of carbon at 6,687 degrees on the Fahrenheit scale.

Incidentally, the National Carbon's electrochemists have settled a long debated question concerning the behavior of carbon, which was once supposed to liquefy under heat. It is now found to pass directly from the solid to gas, somewhat as frozen carbon dioxide, or dry ice, does.

This gives every motion picture theatre a hot spot—and points to the responsibility of both the projectionist and the machine which he operates.

MERE FIGURES

DR. MARK A. MAY, executive director of the Yale Institute of Human Relations and president of the Council of Film Patrons, has been quoted in recent news dispatches as saying that the picture industry is "stupid not to see that actually 50 per cent of the market of theatre patrons is not yet exploited." This 50 per cent, he explained, so Motion Picture Daily reports, is represented by "the higher intellectual class."

The motion picture industry is currently serving a public of about sixty million persons. By Dr. May's estimate it is neglecting another sixty millions, all highbrow, or at least intellectual. Since our population is somewhere in the region of a hundred and thirty millions, that neglected sixty millions would take in most everybody not now going to the screen theatre.

There must be something wrong with Dr. May's arithmetic—among other things.

CABLE KICKERS

THE opposition of the Western Union and Postal telegraph companies to the proposed installation of a television cable between New York and Philadelphia by the American Telephone and Telegraph company, shortly to go to hearing before the Federal Communications Commission, partakes of the same quality of merit as the demonstration of the British weavers against Arkwright's invention of the machine spinning jenny a century ago.

The trouble seems to be that the specially shielded cable to be used in the intercity television project has also an incidental capacity for some two hundred message circuits, and the telegraph companies fear it may be used to carry messages, competitively.

It would appear that the progress of time will prove their objections either incompetent or irrelevant, and likely immaterial. If the cable proves to be the best instrument of communication it will be and nothing ultimately will prevent its use.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S NEWS SUMMARY COVERING THE SCREEN WORLD

Block Booking

They called it service back in 1905; now it's termed block booking; but whatever it's labeled, it afforded the exhibitor security, a guarantee of continuous availability of product, and freedom from overbidding, says Elmer H. Brient, of the Naborhood Theatres, independent circuit of Richmond, Va. Formerly Mr. Brient was manager of Loew theatres in the South, so he speaks from the experience of one who has operated both independent and affiliated theatres.

One thousand pictures in one block—that was the renting policy in 1912 or thereabouts—and exhibitors were glad to get the product on that basis, Mr. Brient told the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia. (See page 13).

"In towns with one theatre, block booking gave to that theatre the choice of any one of the three products—Universal, Mutual, or General Film . . . the choice of any one of the three . . . one complete service," Mr. Brient explained. "And to keep down film costs in those days it was not unusual for three exhibitors to get together and decide in advance which service should go to each."

"If that was block booking," he declared, "we were grateful for it because it guaranteed us a change a day and a continuous supply of pictures. We set our policy on the strength of that contract. . . .

"The elimination of block booking is mythical at best, something without substance. It is a dream that will wind up like the proverbial fall from a restful bed. It is something that we really think we want, but which will be our downfall if we ever get it."

Film Museum

The Rockefellers have endowed the Museum of Modern Art, a public institution, with a sizable grant and promised perpetual aid to develop the cultural aspects of the motion picture in America, making possible for the first time a permanent and comprehensive study of the cinema as a living art, like sculpture, art, architecture. John Hay Whitney, of "Becky Sharp," is in charge.

Colleges and museums throughout the land will receive regularly from the museum motion pictures of fine and historical value so that the film may be studied and enjoyed at first hand by the student as any other one of the arts is studied and enjoyed.

The motion picture industry has promised its cooperation, turning over prints that are requested. But, in order to assure exhibitors there will not be any unfair competition, these will not at any time be made available until they have completed their course in theatrical distribution.

The Museum will trace, catalog, assemble, preserve, exhibit and circulate among colleges and museums single films or programs, production stills, music scores and historical data of the film since 1889. The plan and its purposes are described in full on page 15.

Summer Competition

Looking over the summer theatre, Fred Ayer, who recently left a reportorial post with the HERALD to go to dramatic production on Broadway, writes of the summer theatre and finds that what was once a workshop contributor to the metropolitan stage—and indirectly thereby to the screen—has become just another summer amusement activity, building nothing, going nowhere. His array of summer theatre projects suggests an amazing array of shoddy barn-theatre competitions for the box office dollars of the amusement seekers of the summer colonies from the seashores to the mountains. The article, statistically supported, starts on page 35.

Television Advances

Television broadcasting of newsreel pictures from the scene of the event to the screen for home or theatre was reported from Germany this week. Other new developments in the field were these: Montreal was looking forward to early establishment of citywide service; the first broadcast was made in the South; American interests concluded an equipment agreement with the Baird company in England; 500 exhibitors met in London to consider the relation of television to the theatre; television of color was reported from Belgium; Holland was showing interest in the medium. Radio Institute

Radio, which the pundits have called "the Fifth Estate," has acquired a Radio Institute of the Audible Arts. Founded by the Philco Radio and Television Corporation as a public service contribution to the American people, the Institute attempts to stimulate public recognition and appreciation of the best in radio. It is a creation by Edward Bernays, celebrated public relations counsel.

The methods bear marked similarity to those of Carl E. Milliken's public relations department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America in its contacts with organizations and individuals interested in and by the field of radio. The Institute's formation, with Pitts Sanborn, music authority of the New York World-Telegram, as director, and a representative advisory committee, is seen as further tangible evidence of the stirrings within radio for self-reformation. Meanwhile there is continued public demand for a housecleaning and a bill in Congress by Representative Monaghan of Montana for government ownership of the nation's broadcasting plant.

A Radio Institute brochure defines radio as "the most impressive cultural medium discovered since the invention of printing." It is also the medium of the seller of toothpaste and patent medicines and breakfast foods. The story is on page 59.

New Product

Optimistic Gus McCarthy, reviewer of Hollywood production for MOTION PICTURE HERALD, having looked over the announcements of the news season's product and having already seen some of it in the making, reports with unwonted enthusiasm on its box office promise. Mr. McCarthy finds greater diversity of material, more individual attention to productions, less of the old program pell-mell. Mr. McCarthy's story is on page 54.

Profits

Wall Street banker witnesses, appearing before the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission investigating Paramount's reorganization, were somewhat startled when commission counsel faced them with "private" papers evidencing the extent of their quiet trading in Paramount securities during the time they served on Paramount "protective" committees. Kuhn, Loeb and Company netted $334,995 in this manner the while Sir William Wiseman, one of the partners, served on the bondholders' committee. It was a story of high finance as played by Wall Streeters "in the know" that was brought out by the Commission, and as told on page 49.

" . . . the elimination of block booking is mythical at best, something without substance. It is a dream that will wind up like the proverbial fall from a restful bed. It is something that we really think we want but which will be our downfall if we ever get it. . . ."

Milwaukee Wants Singles

Single feature programs are preferred by four out of five patrons in Milwaukee, according to the results of a poll of theatregoers in 44 motion picture houses. The canvass was made by the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, Inc. Sixty-five thousand ballots were distributed in the theatres. Trailers urging the public to cooperate by filling in the questionnaires were shown in the participating houses. The Milwaukee Sentinel published ballots daily.

The independent exhibitors, members of the association, had felt that double featuring not only had not increased business in their theatres but had been accompanied by a decline of receipts. They went to the public direct for a check-up; a vote of 4 to 1 in favor of single features was the answer. See page 18.

Voluntary Code

Some form of voluntary code to fill the place made vacant by the demise of the Blue Eagle is the subject of deliberation by a Code Authority special committee consisting of Austin C. Keough, Harold S. Bareford, Charles L. O'Reilly, Nathan Yamins and Tyree Dillard, Jr. The group is conducting a thorough study of the legal angles involved preparatory to a report in about two weeks. Throughout the country there seems to be a fairly general desire to come to some sort of effective self-regulation, but how this can be accomplished is something else again. As the industry continues to discuss the pros and cons of voluntary agreements, sentiment is in evidence in New York and other cities for arbitration tribunals. At the moment, the situation hangs in mid-air. A comprehensive view of the situation is on page 48.

Resigned

Arthur and David Loew this week resigned their directorships in Loew's, Inc., but will continue in their posts of foreign sales chief and film booking, respectively. According to an announcement issued by David Loew, the step was taken by the two brothers to relieve them of the responsibilities of directors. No change in point of active duty is contemplated by either, Mr. Loew said.

Arthur Loew is a first vice-president of Loew's, Inc., and a director of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. David also is a director in the latter company. The Loew board will meet July 3 to act on the resignations.

No successor to Major Edward Bowes as vice-president of MGM has been named as yet, but it is expected the Loew board also will act on this matter at its July 3 meeting.

NBC TO AID RADIO TALENT

The National Broadcasting Company has devised a plan for aiding auditioners who display unusual talent. Facilities have been set up to coach such talent. Once each month the director of auditions, J. Ernest Cutting, will "exhibit" his "finds" to a select audience of NBC executives and experts in various phases of the amusement field. They will consider each candidate's possibilities for radio, motion pictures, vaudeville and the like.

Reelected

Reelection of Merlin Hall Aylesworth as chairman of the board of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and J. R. McDonough as president was voted Tuesday by directors, meeting in New York. The company is the producing subsidiary of RKO.

All other officers were reelected: B. B. Kahane, Ned E. Depinet and Herman Zohbel, vice-presidents; Mr. Zohbel, treasurer; William Mallard, secretary; W. H. Clark, assistant treasurer, and J. J. Nolan, assistant secretary. The directors, reelected last month by stockholders, discussed production matters. Mr. McDonough and Mr. Kahane returned to the studios Wednesday.

The Atlas Corporation, major investment organization, is reported to have abandoned the survey of RKO in which it has been engaged over the past several months, with a view to developing a reorganization plan for the company. The conclusion of the study is taken to indicate that Atlas will not submit a reorganization plan for RKO, at any rate, not at this time.

Verdict: "Obscene"

A jury in United States district court, New York, took only 35 minutes Wednesday to declare "obscene and immoral" the Czechoslovakian motion picture, "Ecstacy." The film has been banned by Pope Pius II, excluded from Germany and prohibited from exhibition in this country by Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury. Attorneys for Eureka Production, Inc., said the company would appeal.

The state censorship board of New York at Albany last week denied an exhibition license to producers of the Hungarian picture, "Spring Shower," because it "makes a mockery of religion, the administration of justice and the action of respectable society generally." Distributors of the film had termed it a "high Sunday School lesson." The board also denied a license to distribute "The Last Will of Dr. Mabuse" because it "tends to incite crime, chaos and overthrow of civilization."

Giveaways

The "something for nothing" craze rolls into peak proportions as, free from code restraint, the number of exhibitors adopting giveaways mounts throughout the country. The latest of the circuits to join the movement, Loew's has picked three theatres in the Bronx, New York, for tests to determine which of three plans is the strongest draw, with possible wide adoption later. Along several fronts attempts were being made to halt the tide. The post office authorities in Chicago warned newspapers against lottery advertising by theatres. Women's groups in the same city took up arms against gambling menaces to their children, and declared a boycott on theatres using chance giveaways. Cleveland exhibitors wondered what would be the result if the courts should deny an appeal in a test case by Meyer Fischer of the Fountain to restrain bank nights at M. B. Horowitz's Haltnorth. And so it goes, as the story tells on page 41.

Lichtman on Sales

Announcing as his company's declaration of policy that production and sales will be continued on an individual basis, Al Lichtman, newly elected president of United Artists, expresses the belief the industry as a whole would benefit if all companies adopted the United Artists policy, which has withstood the test and storms of 17 years. Better product would result, he says, and standards automatically would be raised. They need raising, he continues, for the present practices of duals, low admissions and premiums are militating against higher film rentals, which in turn limit production budgets. Mr. Lichtman's statement of policy and his remarks on "the vicious cycle" will be found on page 58.

Five-Day Week

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, meeting in St. Louis last week, ordered that all members of Projectionists Local 306 in New York go back on a five-day week, beginning this week, rescinding a previous order that one day be taken off each week to relieve unemployment. Another means of taking care of the 250 to 300 unemployed out of 1,800 members of the local will be devised.

Mayor LaGuardia in New York has appointed Frank Tichenor, publisher, as arbiter to attempt to settle the differences among rival projectionists' unions in the city. He has ordered that mass picketing in front of theatres is a menace to public safety and must be stopped.

Thomas Kohler, member of the recently organized "rebel" operators' union in Chicago, has confessed a plot to bomb the school for motion picture operators maintained by the Motion Picture Operators' Union.

BLOCK BOOKING PROVIDES SECURITY FOR EXHIBITOR, DECLARES SHOWMAN

by ELMER H. BRIENT

Independent Circuit Executive

Block booking, currently a lively issue within and outside the motion picture industry, has been a part of it almost since the very beginning of the business, in the early 1900's. Elmer H. Brient, pioneer of the early theatre days, always keenly interested in the problems of block booking, points out herewith what might happen should "open booking" or single-picture booking become a reality, as sponsored by some exhibitor groups and by outside "crusading" interests advocating governmental regulation. His ideas were expressed last week at Roanoke to exhibitors gathered for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia.

Mr. Brient speaks from the experience of one who has operated for and with both affiliated and independent theatre interests. Before his present position, in an executive capacity with the Naborhood Theatres circuit, independent, of Richmond, he was manager of Loew theatres in the South.

'Way back in 1905, when I first entered the business, we received our films from the old Pittsburgh Calcium Light Company's branch office in Cincinnati—and our contract called for six reels per week, or one each day. We received these films on a flat rental per week basis. There was no other source of supply at that time so we bought their full lineup.

We merely called it service in those days but the present day exhibitor would more than likely term it block booking. If that was block booking we were grateful for it because it guaranteed us a change a day and a continuous supply of pictures. We set our policy on the strength of that contract.

True enough, a special came along occasionally—"The Great Train Robbery," "Runaway Train" and "The Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight" are a few that come to mind. They were one-reelers. We bought them and shelved pictures from Pittsburgh Calcium Light in order to play them. That was in 1906 and, though 30 years have passed since then, the same practice is still in vogue today.

Along in 1908 or 1909 the Motion Picture Patents Company began to release pictures. They started with two pictures each day or 14 a week. It was their policy to sell a regular service of all their releases—14 each week or something like 700 per year. Well, we bought their output and were glad to get it. Block booking again, and this was back in 1908—not 30 to 60 pictures as is the case today, but 700 pictures in one block.

Carl Laemmle entered the field in 1909. Then in 1912 came John R. Freuler and his Mutual Film Company. These three companies then began to release 21 reels each per week, and when you bought from any one of them you entered into a block booking arrangement for better than 1,000 pictures in one block. We didn't worry about block booking because we knew we had a constant source of supply and I willingly venture the statement that it was because of block booking that we had the courage back in those days to build other theatres. I firmly believe that the much discussed system of block booking had much to do with the growth of our industry.

In towns with one theatre, block booking gave to that theatre the choice of any one of the three products—Universal, Mutual, or General Film, outgrowth of the old Patents Company of 1908. The choice of any one of the three, mind you—not the choice from all three—but just one complete service.

That was block booking sure enough, and with better than 1,000 pictures in the block. In towns with three theatres there was enough service to go around. And to keep down film costs in those days it was not unusual for three exhibitors to get together and decide in advance which service should go to each. Yes, the exhibitors were obliged to put their heads together to avoid sky-rocketing of film prices. These exhibitors got together, each taking a full block of 1,000 pictures with no chance to pick the pet pictures from any of the other services. Block booking, if you please, and in its severest form, for you only had the output of one company in those days.

In 1914 came the feature films "Zigomar," "Last Days of Pompeii," "Love and Aviation," the first of the big air spectacles, and "A Tale of Two Cities," which will be re-created this coming season by one of the major producers.

For a short time these features were sold on open booking by outside concerns. We bought them and shelved some regular service to make playing time. Oh, yes! Block booking in those days sewed up your playing time just as it does today. The only difference was that in those days you sewed up 365 days per year to one company instead of a few as is the case today. The old-time companies quickly went into feature production and asked for extended running time, fewer pictures, but still giving you a full service—blocks that took up every play date in the year.

Bigger prices, higher admissions and advertising followed, with the result that the public began to get star conscious—Mary Pickford, Owen Moore, Mary Miles Minter, James Cruze, Marguerite Snow, Katherine Williams, Florence LaBadie and Pearl White were favorites about 1914 and 1915. Then came Charlie Chaplin, Fred Mace, Mack Sennett, Ford Sterling, Bessie Barriscale, Florence Turner, Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Bill Hart and a lot of other names that are dear to those who were in the business 20 years ago.

The old Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was organized about this time and started out right off the bat with two features and several shorts each week. Their initial sales policy in 1915 was on a basis of all or none. Many of you can recall that all-or-none idea when we were already booked solid with other product.

Block Booking Name in 1917.

It was full or complete service back in 1906 and on through 1914. In 1915 it became an all-or-none policy. You can call a rose by any other name, but they still cost $10 a dozen—we had block booking back in those days, but we hadn't really found that name for it until the "Star Series" era started, in the fall of 1917.

There were rumblings against the system, but time seems to have proved that there was no good substitute, because block booking in one form or another has been with us since the very inception of the industry, and we must all admit that the industry has grown to enormous proportions under the system.

The security it afforded an exhibitor, the guarantee it gave for continuous service, the freedom from overbidding were made because of block booking and we have grown because of it, in my opinion, instead of being stifled by it.

Paramount came out with their "Star Series" policy in 1917, with 104 features per year. They offered six Marguerite Clark pictures, six with Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks four, Wallace Reid eight, two Griffith productions, six with Pauline Frederick, six with Bill Hart, etc. The exhibitors had been using complete service up to that time on the all-or-none policy, but this new "Star Series" selling brought separate quotations on each star according to their box office value, and the exhibitor quickly seized the opportunity to think in terms of stars rather than complete service. He was willing to pay the old price for the "pet" stars, but didn't want to include the "palookas" in the deal. Paramount didn't weaken, but the battle was on.

Selling the "Weak Sisters"

The old Metro Company, Mutual, Universal, Fox and V. L. S. E. were producers at that time. They all went "Star Series" and they all had difficulty in selling the weak sisters with the better pictures. They all stood their ground and have done so ever since in the highly competitive spots, even though they split their blocks quite regularly where the exhibitor has a controlled situation. As more money was spent in specials, bigger prices were demanded and the inclusion of weak pictures in a block became a tougher selling problem. Block booking then became a necessity on the part of the distributor because he could not survive without selling his whole product. The rentals, no matter how high, on the few outstanding pictures could never offset production costs on other pictures if they were excluded from the sale.

Block booking became more desirable on the part of the producer-distributor and less desirable with the exhibitor. I hasten to add that the exhibitor and distributor had entirely different problems and the exhibitor in my opinion failed to recognize that the distributor must get back his full investment on a season's product or the industry could never survive.

The Other Pasture

This controversy that exists on the merits and demerits of block booking is an issue that may never be settled. It is too theoretical because we have never had a full taste of open booking and I'm afraid it's the old story of the other pasture looking greener.

United Artists is the only company that has ventured on the open booking plan and they have never gone as far in that direction as the advocates of one picture and open booking are promoting as a cure-all for our ills of the depression.

It is not amiss to ask each exhibitor to ponder a moment on how you have relished open booking in your dealings with United Artists. They have made many wonderful pictures and sold them on a more or less one-picture basis. It would perhaps be better to say they have sold on a basis that is a cross between block booking and a one-picture basis. Every exhibitor I have ever talked to says in no uncertain terms that he has had to pay much higher for his films on that basis than on the block booking system of other companies, so high in fact that it was not uncommon a few years ago to have to raise the price of admission when showing a United Artists picture. Then, lo and behold, the next picture with that star in it cropped up in our opposition house—our competitor had outbid us and gotten the pictures.

A United Artists man may take exception to this statement of fact, but he is not to be held accountable for the policy. It is the system of open booking and a system is a system and nothing else. The cost of selling is higher and higher rentals must be gotten. Exhibitors have had their experiences along this line and know that what I have said is exactly the truth.

Should we ever get open booking through legislation or by any other means (and it is my daily prayer that this will never happen), we can expect nothing but a recurrence of our experiences with the one company that has always championed the open booking policy of selling.

British Law's Workings

The Films Act of Great Britain prohibits blind booking and has been in force in that country since October, 1930, so it might be well to look into the workings of that law for a moment. It is the only law now existing that we can use by way of comparison.

The British law is supposed to be air-tight. One of the clauses says, "No film may be booked until it has been shown to the trade and officially registered." Another clause says, "A film bought should be used within six months." These two clauses would eliminate both block booking and socalled "blind booking," but they don't work that way in practice.

It is still possible for a distributor to book 40 to 60 pictures providing they have already been produced, screened for the trade and registered, and he can have legal support in getting all his dates within six months. By withholding films a producer can book a theatre solid for six months and at the same time sell an option on the balance of his product which in effect is block booking plus forced dating. True enough, this is not practical except in the smaller situations.

In strictly first-run situations block booking has not been eliminated because of "gentlemen's agreements" and the "options," and it has created no end of trouble when one exhibitor finds his competitor has a gentleman's agreement or has taken an option on two or three "pet" producers' output. This is especially true in towns where circuits are operating. Blind booking has become a thing of the past, but block booking under one guise or another is being continued in a number of spots. In those spots where there is keen competition and no circuit theatre, the options are not given and open bidding has become the vogue, resulting in film costs rising as much as 400 per cent on the better films. Let's not pass over that point too quickly. Film rentals have increased as much as 400 per cent in England under the Films Acts which is similar or identical to what many theatre men are urging for this country. Yes, they get to eliminate an occasional picture, but when they do their competitor usually gets the preference from then on. Bidding, swapping of accounts, turmoil, rising costs—this is what the elimination of block booking has brought down on the heads of the exhibitors in England.

Bigger guarantees against stiffer percentage terms, and longer playing time are the order of the day in Great Britain. Nearly all contracts are now written on a guarantee and percentage basis. Options and gentlemen's agreements have taken the place of term contracts where it is to the best advantage to the producer. Bargaining power has passed from the exhibitor to the distributor. Instead of picking and choosing their films, exhibitors now have to fight for them. Poor films on which one loses money are the only ones that can still be bought on fair terms.

Fewer Theatres

There are fewer theatres in England today by far than there were before blind booking became illegal. Some of this decrease no doubt is because of the depression. However, it is a known fact that bigger and finer theatres have been built in the thickly populated districts in order to pay larger film rentals and with the opening of each big house several of the smaller ones have been forced to go out of business for the want of suitable product.

Yes, the elimination of block booking is mythical at best, something without substance. It is a dream that will wind up like the proverbial fall from a restful bed. It is something that we really think we want but which will be our downfall if we ever get it.

I firmly believe that an exhibitor who advocates open booking is one who has failed to reckon with the facts in the case. Or perhaps he is one who is in a non-competitive spot and believes he can in a fashion club the exchange into selling him the better pictures at the same prices he now pays without reckoning with increased selling costs. I doubt that he has considered the need of nearly 400 first-run pictures in cities with two theatres or more. He is more than likely thinking only in terms of localities where 150 pictures would supply the demand, and wishes against all possible hopes that he could pick the 150 best out of the 400 that are now produced each year and live in eternal luxury. I am inclined to think that he is supporting the Pettengill Bill with the hope that he can pick his pictures, without recognizing the turmoil it would throw our industry into and without realizing that film costs would go sky high as they have in England, where the principles of the "Pettengill" bill are now in operation, where it is illegal to sell or buy on the blind booking plan.

Let us not forget that most of our troubles today are the outgrowth of the depression. There is nothing wrong with our present system, nor with the industry in any respect that good times will not rectify. Let us profit from the experiences of the Great Britain experiment. Let us not plunge into deeper water than the depression itself.

THE WRONG INTERPRETATION

Nat Turberg, manager of the Paramount, at Hamilton, Ohio, found it politic to pull Paramount Newsreel No. 91 after a two-day showing, when patrons persisted in placing the wrong construction on one of the scenes, as evidenced by spontaneous laughter whenever the scene appeared. The shot referred to a prize offered any Canadian couple producing the largest family over a certain number of years, and showed a father, mother and 14 children as among the contestants. When interviewed, the father said he was a street car conductor, and did most of his work at night. One lady patron complained that this was positively indecent. That was too much for the management.

Meyerfeld, Circuit Head, Is Dead at 80

Morris Meyerfeld, Jr., 80, head of the old Orpheum Circuit in San Francisco for 23 years, died last week at his home there.

Mr. Meyerfeld took over the Orpheum in San Francisco in 1897. He engaged the best talent and presented them at popular prices through his circuit of theatres, with the assistance of Martin Beck and John Morrissey. He expanded his local circuit and theatres in Los Angeles to fifty houses, with widespread affiliations. He retired in 1920, until that time remaining as president of the circuit.

Stars who played in his theatres included Ethel Barrymore, Blanche Bates, Sarah Bernhardt and Ruth St. Denis.

He was born in Beverlunger, Westphalia, Germany, in 1855, and was educated at Cologne. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Nannie Friedman Meyerfeld, and a daughter, Mrs. Leon Roos, of San Francisco.

Roosevelt Suggests Corporation Tax Change

The imposition of a graduated income tax on net incomes of corporations, ranging from 10¾ to 16¾ per cent, replacing the present flat rate of 13¾ per cent, was asked of Congress last week in a special message from President Roosevelt. The President also suggested increases in the tax on very large personal incomes. The suggested corporation tax change was indicated as a method of offering relief to weaker corporations.

ROCKEFELLER FAMILY GRANTS FUND FOR A MOTION PICTURE MUSEUM

John Hay Whitney Is President of Corporation; Museum and Library to Make Old Films Available for Close Study

The Rockefeller millions, which flowed into open amusement channels first to sponsor, and eventually to operate, the motion picture and stage theatres set down among the towers of the $250,000,000 Rockefeller Center at Radio City, are to be expended in part to develop the cultural aspects of the motion picture in America. A Rockefeller endowment to the Museum of Modern Art, public institution, makes possible for the first time a permanent and comprehensive study of the cinema as a living art.

The first step, taken this week, was the establishing of a motion picture museum and library, to be extended nationally, to trace, catalog, assemble, preserve, exhibit and circulate to museums and colleges single films or programs—outstanding and historical films of all types, but none new—in exactly the same manner in which the art museums and other mediums of esthetic expression circulate paintings, sculpture, models and photographs of architectural design, or reproductions of works of art, so that the film may be studied at first hand and enjoyed by the student as any other one of the arts is studied and enjoyed.

That part of the industry that is represented by Will H. Hays as its official spokesman is in complete accord, and promises tangible cooperation in achieving this cultural inclination of the sponsoring Rockefellers, the Museum and those wealthy art patrons of the Museum, all of whom are together in the project, financially and otherwise.

The motion picture theatre owner is assured by the Museum that his box office will not suffer from any functions of the plan, which could not be workable in its present form without industry support.

Nor need producers in Hollywood worry for years to come about this new cultural appreciation having an influence on the standards under which they produce motion picture entertainment for the masses. Study is limited to films taken out of theatrical circulation, by class study groups in attendance at colleges or museums sponsoring "strictly non-commercial" exhibitions.

Corporately, the grant from the Rockefeller Foundation established the Museum of Modern Art Film Library Corporation, chartered in New York with the following officers:

John Hay (Jock) Whitney, president.

John E. Abbott, vice president and general manager.

Edward M. M. Warburg, treasurer.

Miss Iris Barry, curator.

The board of trustees of the Art Museum selected Mr. Whitney, himself a trustee, because of his familiarity with the motion picture and not because of his position as a large stockholder in Technicolor or as the president of Pioneer Pictures, producer in Technicolor of "Becky Sharp," now showing. So said Mr. Abbott, well known heretofore in the Museum's developments and in the cultural films, who will manage the new project.

Edward M. M. Warburg, likewise a Museum trustee, is the son of Felix M. Warburg, member of the Wall Street banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Miss Barry, wife of General Manager Abbott, was formerly librarian of the Museum. She founded the London Film Society and is a director of the New York Film Society, both intended, on a lesser scale, to further the motion picture culturally.

The Rockefeller grant is not the only financial support enjoyed by the new film museum, although it is considerably larger than that made by private sponsors, presumably the wealthy Museum trustees. With it went a gilt-edge promise from the Rockefeller Foundation to match, in addition to the original sum, every dollar obtained from the private sources, thus assuring perpetuation of the study.

Museum officers would not disclose the extent of the Rockefeller patronage, the amount subscribed by, or the identities of the other supporters.

Some idea of the strength of the Museum's patronage may be obtained from a study of its trusteeship, which embraces:

A. Conger Goodyear, president of the Museum. Manufacturer; president of the Great Southern Lumber Company and of Bogalusa Paper Company; chairman of the board of Swayne and Hoyt; chairman of the executive committee of the Gulf, Mobile and Northern Railroad Company; a director in other large corporations.

Stephen C. Clark, secretary and treasurer. Banker; director of Chartered Investors, Fulton Trust, Safe Deposit Company, Singer Sewing Machine Company.

William T. Aldrich, noted architect, and brother of Winthrop Aldrich, president of Chase National Bank and director of Rockefeller Center, Inc.

Cornelius N. Bliss, director of Bankers Trust, Bliss and Fabyan, National Broadcasting, New York Life Insurance, Otis Company, Radio Corporation of America, Radio-Keith-Orpheum and other RCA subsidiaries.

Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, wife of the diplomat.

Mrs. W. Murray Crane, wife of the New England paper manufacturer.

Frank Crowinshield ("Arthur Loring Bruce"), editor of Vanity Fair.

The Lord Duveen of Millbank.

Raymond B. Fosdick, lawyer, of the firm of Curtis, Fosdick and Belnap; director of Consolidated Coal, China Medical Board, Rockefeller Foundation, Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research and of various education boards.

Philip Goodwin.

Mrs. Charles S. Payson, wife of the president of Payson and Company and of Rustless Iron and Steel Corporation.

Duncan Phillips.

Nelson A. Rockefellr.

Paul J. Sachs, professor of fine arts, Harvard University.

Mrs. John S. Sheppard, wife of the senior member of Sheppard, Jones and Seipp.

Edward M. M. Warburg.

John Hay Whitney.

There exists a widespread and growing demand on the part of colleges and museums for the means and material for such study, which are now lacking, in the opinion of sponsors. Already 180 colleges and museums have agreed to embrace the plan, out of 500 contacted last spring. The full 500 are expected to take part eventually.

Non-Profit Project Has Full Co-operation of M.P.P.D.A.; Exhibitors and Producers Assured of No Competition

The charter of the Museum of Modern Art stated that it is "established and maintained for the purpose of encouraging and developing a study of modern art and the application of such art to practical life, and furnishing popular instruction."

The trustees of the Museum have planned, since the foundation of the institute in 1928, to develop such a motion picture department.

"The art of the motion picture is the only great art peculiar to the 20th century," said a general statement of purposes. "It is practically unknown as such to the American public, and as such almost wholly unstudied."

The sponsors do not mean that there is a lack of study of the educational film in the grade or high school classroom, nor of the scientific film as such in the laboratory, nor of the motion picture as entertainment, but explain:

"People who are well acquainted with modern painting and literature, the drama and architecture, are almost wholly ignorant (from a purely cultural viewpoint) of the work of such great directors as Pabst, Sennett, Clair, Eisenstein, Pudovkin, Griffith, Chaplin or Seastrom. Yet the films which these and other men have made have had an immeasurably great influence on the life and thought of the present generation.

"This new and living form of expression, a vital force in our time, is such a young art that it can be studied from its beginnings: the primitives among movies are only 40 years old. Yet, the bulk of all films, whether foreign or domestic, new or old, which are of importance historically or esthetically, are not merely invisible under existing circumstances but are in serious danger of being permanently lost or destroyed."

Cite Lack of Study Facilities

Although much has been written and much said in the past ten years about the cultural influence of the film and its inherent esthetic qualities, the library sponsors are of the opinion that little has been done to treat the motion picture as if it actually possessed esthetic qualities, and that nothing has been done to make possible any consistent study, nationally, of its content, style, history, development. The considerable number of individuals interested in the film as art rather than merely as a current distraction, have been able to view the material only haphazardly as isolated films, it is held. And, they added, from year to year it is more and more difficult to see old films of importance.

"Some 70,000,000 people are said to attend cinemas each week in the United States," the Museum statement pointed out. "The very great influence of the motion picture in forming the taste and affecting the life of the large bulk of the population is well known. This influence has both been deplored and occasionally lauded. Yet, little has been done to arouse a critical, selective attitude toward the film in that part of the public which is usually considered as most educable—students, visitors to museums and art galleries and the active group in each community which is readily responsive to the arts.

"The situation is very much as though no novels were available to the public excepting the current year's output. It is difficult to avoid the conclusion that had the novel since Defoe and Behn been known under circumstances similar to those under which the film is shown, the repute of the novel and the level of creation in novel-writing would both have remained considerably lower than they are."

The film museum will undertake a number of activities, chief of which will be to assemble, catalog and preserve as complete a record as possible, in the actual films, of all types of motion pictures made in this country or abroad from 1889 to the present day. In addition to exhibiting and circulating these films to museums and colleges in the same manner in which other departments of museums now assemble and exhibit works of art, the film library will assemble, and encourage colleges and other museums to assemble books and periodicals on the film, production stills and such, and gather other historical and critical material, including the vast amount of unrecorded data in the minds of the men who were either active participants in or close observers of the development of the motion picture from its beginning.

The film library also hopes to assemble a collection of old music scores originally used to accompany the silent films.

All activities of the museum will be "strictly non-commercial." The fee charged each college or museum, arbitrarily set down for the first year's programs, will be $250 for the year, whereas the sponsors estimate that it will cost them $1,000 to service each unit participating.

Any college or museum that desires to charge a nominal fee must agree to spend 50 per cent of any net receipts in promoting cultural appreciation of the film in their institution and pass on to the museum headquarters in New York the remaining 50 per cent for perpetuation of the idea.

Under the agreement entered into by and with the Rockefellers, the Museum itself and the motion picture industry, the venture must be non-profitable. All excess sums must be expended in the development, either in film research, or for acquisition of material for the library.

Conversations have been held with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, Will H. Hays, president, over a period of weeks, and although none of the Museum's officials or of the Hays organization would confirm it, Mr. Hays is understood to have obtained from the member companies their consent to cooperate.

However, all requests made to distributors for films would be confined to those pictures which have run their course at all regular theatres, thus eliminating the possibilities of unfair competition. Aside from the competitive angle the Museum feels that with current films available for viewing in thousands of theatres it would be pointless to embrace them in the plan.

The distributor would turn over a single print of the film requested and the Museum then would make duplicates on its own, sufficient in number to care for the needs of the college and museum circulation. Some 16mm prints will be made available for institutions thus equipped.

The first group of films assembled by the library will be circulated in single units in the fall at the beginning of the academic year. There will be four groups of from eight to ten features the first season, four in the second, two in the third, two in the fourth and one program each year thereafter. All the programs will be kept intact in permanent circulation, each season's group being added to the previous.

The programs will be made up in advance of the season and will treat of narrative types, documentary, spectacular, western, slapstick, comedy-drama, musical, animated cartoon, abstract, scientific, educational, sound, dramatic, newsreel, and such.

Acceptable subjects will be made up from each group, so that a complete program of, say, eight features, shown over a period of eight weeks, will tell the complete story of the advancements in that particular subject. One program, for example, would trace the development of slapstick, another the western, still another the musical.

Test Program Shown Colleges

The museum made up a test program for the Film Society of Bryn Mawr and Haverford colleges, where they screened, one each Sunday evening, the "four most famous films": "The Great Train Robbery," American, 1903: "Birth of a Nation," American, 1915: "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," German, 1919, and "The Battleship Potemkin," Russian, 1926.

They designated "The Great Train Robbery" because, until the time it was shown, "the motion picture was chiefly regarded as a semi-scientific curiosity or toy," while "Birth of a Nation," 11 years later, "established the full-length picture and conferred social prestige on the cinema generally." Of "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" they said: "Though it had been acknowledged much earlier that the film contained at least the germ of an original art form, the "Cabinet" was the first film consciously to set out to be art." "Potemkin" was included because "it was not until 1925 that the Russian directors brought about a definite break with the theatrical unrealities which the German cinema as a whole conferred on cinematography, and from which many current Hollywood films still suffer," and, although "the Russian films derived from D. W. Griffith and the open-air American films of action generally, it is they who are restoring, at any rate in part, the naturalness and fluidity which the earliest American films spontaneously achieved."

Sound projectors will be made available to colleges and museums lacking this facility until such time as they obtain their own equipment. Arrangements have not yet been made with any of the sound manufacturers for the purchase of reproducers, nor has the Museum decided how or at what rate these projectors will be loaned.

Printed programs will be composed on each exhibition, including a critical appraisal of the films, to aid the student in appreciation of the medium. These criticisms, however, will not be directed at the box office or entertainment capabilities, but at the esthetic value.

The Museum, in addition to preserving and circulating the musical scores which were originally issued with the silent films, will arrange scores (sheet music or phonograph records) to be used when needed.

There are other basic ambitions:

(1) To act as a clearing house for information on all aspects of the film, and to maintain contacts with all interested groups, both in America and abroad;

(2) To make available the sources of technical information to amateur makers of motion pictures; and,

(3) To publish a "Film Museum Bulletin" with articles and illustrations to make known the organization's activities and to further the appreciation of the motion picture.

The Museum will not publish "reviews" of motion pictures as such. And, even if it did they would have little or no influence on the box office because of the age of the films studied.

Backed by the Rockefeller influence, the Museum already has made overtures to the principal foreign governments for their aid in enlisting the support and cooperation of their respective film industries. Contacts will be made with the government film bureaus in those countries where the motion picture is either a government subsidy or under government control. Trade associations will be communicated with elsewhere.

The program plan and service for the colleges and museums will be elastic. Any institution may make an agreement, all to be in writing, for as many single pictures or programs as are available, or as few as required. Also, any specific picture may be requested by an institution and it will be provided if not in use elsewhere.

From five to a dozen prints per picture will be required the first year, enabling the Museum to route the expected lineup of 32 pictures of the first four programs to at least 160 institutions at one time. The institutions must pay express charges from and to the nearest shipping office, of which there will be three: New York, Chicago, Los Angeles.

Museum to Pay Printing Costs

All printing costs will be paid for by the Museum. Whether the distributors will charge the cost of the print which they supply as the master print has not been determined.

The Museum believes that the motion picture industry never would succeed on its own in developing a study of the film as an art medium, this because it must function for the masses in much the same commercial manner as the merchandiser of any other product. "Let the industry produce as it will," they said, "but it's art's right to say what is art."

The plan later will embrace the Japanese and Scandinavian motion picture, both of which are virtually unknown in this country. Japan is said to be the largest film producing country in the world, turning out 600 to 800 features each year.

At the end of four years the Museum expects to have "the finest motion picture library in the world," according to Mr. Abbott, but he added, at no time will it enter production.

Yearsley to Handle Roadshow for Warner

C. L. Yearsley on Monday will join S. Charles Einfeld's Warner publicity and advertising staff, starting with special handling of "Midsummer Night's Dream," a roadshow. Mr. Yearsley had been operating a Warner West Virginia theatre.

Edison Foundation Formed as Tribute To Great Inventor

A Thomas Alva Edison Foundation has been incorporated at Albany, N. Y., for the purpose of creating a living tribute to the great inventor. The charter provides a wide range of activity, in which education is to play an important part, according to the announcement. It has "for its particular objects the advancement and diffusion of knowledge in the fields of physics, chemistry and the engineering arts and sciences, both basic and applied."

The Foundation was developed by the Edison pioneers, a group of co-workers of the inventor, and the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, with the approval of the Edison family.

The first accounting of the Edison estate, as filed this week in Newark, N. J., showed a valuation of $2,871,000.

Incorporators of the Foundation are: William S. Barstow, president of the Edison Pioneers; Howel H. Barnes, Jr., L. W. W. Morrow, editor of the Electrical World, and Chas F. Scott, professor of electrical engineering at Yale, representing the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and W. S. Mallory and F. A. Scheffler, representing the Edison Pioneers.

Mr. Barstow said:

"The name of Thomas Alva Edison needs no publicity, but the public must be reminded of the debt it owes to him and his memory and be given the opportunity of paying this debt.

"It is planned by directors of the Edison Foundation properly to recognize the debt of the world to Edison's memory and to secure a fund with which to put this recognition into concrete form.

"The week of October 21, 1935, is to be the starting point for nationwide efforts to obtain such a fund.

"As the entire cost of the campaign itself will have been underwritten by friends of the inventor, every dollar thus secured is to be placed to the credit of the Thomas Alva Edison Foundation.

"One of the aims of the Foundation is to continue and perpetuate Edison scholarships, initiated by Mr. Edison, for the better preparation of American youth along technical educational lines."

Justice Edgar J. Lauer in New York supreme court last week delivered a verdict of guilty against the Photo Color Corporation, Photo Color Pictures, Inc., and four of the officers and directors, charged with violation of the laws prohibiting the fraudulent sale of securities.

Convicted were John A. Bolles, Frank E. Nemee, Henry A. Tupper, Arthur Waddingham. They were accused of issuing false prospectuses, falsifying their books and misrepresenting securities offered for sale by agents of the companies. They were permanently enjoined from dealing in securities in New York state.

AFTER pleading for several years for cooperation from other studios on the loaning of production personalities, Columbia's resignation from the producers' association in Hollywood may be interpreted as Mr. Harry Cohn's announcement to the world that he is dropping the plea for cooperation for a program of attack.

While it is generally understood that in the mad scramble for outstanding personalities there are headaches and heartaches for all concerned and particularly for such producers as those who do not happen to have long lists of important contract players, yet the opening of a star-raiding interlude in Hollywood involves several serious considerations for the industry at large—including in an important way the persons who pay the price of film rental.

Inflated salaries for performers whose box office value is not proportionate is already a sufficiently grave factor in the rental charges. The prospect of an open warfare in Hollywood—which in the Hollywood fashion would receive stimulus from vanity as well as other more practical motives—is not at all pleasant to contemplate.

Mr. Cohn doubtlessly feels much aggrieved, which may be warranted in this instance—although this may not be conclusively assumed as he is known at times to have become aggrieved about not much—but the record seems to disclose that Columbia has made some important borrowings from other studios — among them the stars that gave it the Academy Award this year.

There is not only an advantage for the industry but an imperative need for cooperation among the studios in Hollywood. Samuel Goldwyn withdrew sometime ago from the producers' association. His example has now been followed by Mr. Cohn. It would seem that there should be important advantages to membership in the association. Up to now it seems to have been possible, at least in some instances, to enjoy the advantages of membership without the responsibilities of actual membership. Perhaps this rather illogical state of affairs will soon be brought to an end.

SEVERAL months ago rumors were broadcast in the trade relative to profit-making operations of insiders connected somehow with the estate of the Paramount company, then in bankrutpcy, growing out of speculation in the company bonds.

Last week in a federal commission hearing in Washington it developed that certain bankers and brokers formed a bondholders' "protective" committee, the members of which acquired ownership of bonds only after the formation of the committee and, presumably, after they had acquired inside information on the real worth and the probable future market value of the bonds.

Here, then, is another item to be added to the already long list of instances of banks and brokers approaching the motion picture industry in a patronizing and superior manner and, immediately that the first chance presents itself, proceeding to display a brand of ethics that makes the attitude of their approach appear decidedly counterfeit.

WHEN Paramount showed no further interest in the services of Mr. Joseph Von Sternberg following his unforgettable, if not unforgivable failure, with the effort unpleasantly known as "The Devil Is a Woman," it was freely predicted that in the well-known Hollywood tradition some other producer would immediately hurry after him. The expected has happened and Mr. Von Sternberg is to make a picture for Columbia.

After "The Devil Is a Woman" there is of course reasonable question as to the wisdom of placing too great reliance upon Mr. Von Sternberg's efforts, not merely because this picture happened to be a failure but rather because of the utter disregard of his employer's interests and the public's tastes which were strongly indicated in the history of this picture. Mr. Von Sternberg has, as is generally recognized in the trade, demonstrated in the past a fine talent in motion picture production. But his last effort for Paramount and his method of handling the assignment suggested that in his own mind his greatness had evolved to a point at which he could rightfully hold the industry and the public in hearty contempt.

Mr. Von Sternberg's next picture may be very good and we hope that it will be. It may prove that Mr. Von Sternberg is really ready now for another important assignment—and not a course of reconstruction in some subordinate capacity; but if there is to be no penalty for such high-handed procedure as was demonstrated in connection with "The Devil Is a Woman," then periodic instances of this sort of thing will continue to be part of the Hollywood system. And the industry at large may continue to shoulder the burden.

FOUR OF FIVE OPPOSE DOUBLE BILLS IN VOTE OF 45,000 AT 44 THEATRES

Independent Exhibitors of Wisconsin Find Heavy Majority Against Double Featuring at Advanced Admission Prices

by WILLIAM SCOLLARD
Milwaukee Correspondent

Four out of five patrons prefer single feature programs, Milwaukee film circles learned in a poll conducted in 44 theatres of the county by the Independent Theatres Protective Association of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, Inc.

Sixty-five thousand printed ballots were distributed among the theatregoers in the canvass, which started June 10th. Forty-five thousand replied. The questions presupposed an increase in admission prices if double featuring is to be continued. The questionaire read:

"Do you want this theatre to continue the double feature policy with a necessary increase in admission price? Or do you prefer seeing one outstanding picture with cartoon, newsreel, comedy, etc., at the same admission?"

Trailers depicting a courtroom scene were run in all the participating theatres with the following copy: "Dear Patrons: You are the judge and the jury. Help us to determine whether you prefer double or single feature programs. Your desires will assist the management in giving you the kind of entertainment that you prefer. Thank you."

In addition, the cooperation of The Milwaukee Sentinel was obtained, and the newspaper daily published ballots similar to those distributed by the theatres. Approximately 500 of these were mailed back.

A letter to the Sentinel from the Better Films Council of Milwaukee voiced its sentiment as follows:

"If such a thing is possible, you may count the attached vote as 21 votes against double features. This action was taken the other morning when the previewing group of the Better Films Council of Milwaukee county voiced that opinion at its meeting."

Members of the Independent Theatres Protective Association have felt for some time that it would help the industry to revert back to single features. These same exhibitors have found the double features have failed to increase their business and that they are taking a loss instead of a profit.

Among the reasons advanced for this decline were these: Many patrons are lost because they have seen one of the pictures on a double feature bill at another theatre; they may not wish to see one of the films; shows with double features are too long and parents complain because their children fail to get home early enough, while many adults become bored.

These exhibitors also believe that while one good picture may appeal to the patron, on a double feature bill, the other may fail to, thereby nullifying the effect of the pleasing picture and leaving the patron disgruntled. The showmen feel that double features fail to permit proper exploitation of pictures, together with authors, novels and stars.

Call Cost Higher

Turnover of patrons is considerably less under double feature programs, these theatre operators point out, and the cost of film rental and operating is higher because the projectionist is obliged to work overtime in many instances. It is also felt by these exhibitors, all of whom are neighborhood operators, that if double features become a general policy, the producers will turn out many fill-in films to run as twin features.

For these reasons, the Milwaukee county exhibitors in the association have sought to banish the double feature. In their efforts, however, they failed to obtain the cooperation of Fox, operator of about a dozen theatres in the county. It was said that H. J. Fitzgerald, general manager of Fox, had declared he would rather raise prices and keep double features than go back to a single feature policy. The questions in the poll were framed with this situation in mind, to prove to Fox that the public desired single features at present admission prices in preference to double bills at increased prices.

"Substitute for Hotel"

Comments received from patrons in connection with the votes were in many instances similar to those voiced by the exhibitors as reasons for opposing dual bills. Some declared the policy was driving them from the theatre, other that double features, no matter how good, are too tiresome. One with a sense of humor, signing himself "Hotel Night Clerk," declared, "Double features are cutting into the hotel business. Traveling men now go to a 25-cent movie to sleep instead of a hotel."

Following a report that Arthur Stiegel, stepson of Albert L. Warner, and a partner are to open two double-feature theatres in Philadelphia, Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner theatres, said in New York Tuesday:

"If this gossip is true, I want to say emphatically that these men have no relation whatsoever with our theatre setup. I am unalterably opposed to the introduction of such a policy in Philadelphia and we will regard them as unfair competition."

Cleveland exhibitors' single feature agreement expires July 8th, but no plan for a uniform policy has been adopted, although substitute plans have been in the making for the past three months. It looks as if exhibitors of the Greater Cleveland area will fail to get together this season, with the result that the city will be wide open with cash nights, duals, premiums and all the other policies eliminated last year by ironclad agreement. Within the past few weeks there has been a general tendency to cut admission prices in the smaller subsequent-runs.

Allied Directors In Regional Meet

The regional meeting of directors of Allied States Association units was held in Boston this week at the Hotel Touraine, and at the headquarters of the Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, local affiliate. Discussion of a voluntary code for the industry and its possible provisions received most attention from the delegates. Sidney Samuelson, president of national Allied, and Abram Myers, general counsel attended the sessions. Walter B. Littlefield acted as chairman.

Allied Theatre Owners of Indiana has been incorporated at Indianapolis. Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, whose officials filed the incorporation papers, said there is no indication that the unit is to affiliate with national Allied. The action was merely to set aside the name so that no other group might use it.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is to address the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Association convention in Kansas City this week at the President Hotel. National affiliation will be an important topic of discussion.

The Independent Theatre Owners of Mississippi, meeting in Jackson, last week passed a resolution protesting against publicity concerning the representation of Mississippi exhibitors at the recent Allied national convention, believed to have been authored by Allied. Another resolution endorsed Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA.

A plea for closer member cooperation is being made by the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio to combat pending legislation which would restore the 12 per cent admission tax, which was suspended for one year on January 1.

The Southeastern Theatre Owners Association anticipates a large gathering at the convention scheduled for Jacksonville Beach, Fla., August 11-13. M. C. Moore is general chairman. The business program committee includes R. B. Wilby, Sam H. Borisky and Oscar Lam. H. V. Manning of Etowah, Tenn., is president of the organization.

The West Virginia Motion Picture Exhibitors are holding a convention at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., this week.

The Saskatchewan Exhibitors Association, Canadian organization, held a meeting at Regina last week. Officers elected were: P. W. Mahon, president; Jack Fields, vice-president; Walter F. Davis, treasurer; Larry Graburn, secretary.

Newsreel Man Freed

Abelardo Domingo Rios, Universal Newsreel cameraman in Havana, has been acquitted of a charge of espionage by an urgency court. He was arrested following the showing of films of the execution of a Cuban before a firing squad. He proved that he had been given permission to make the films.

PARAMOUNT IN STORIES

It is a well-known fact that Paramount possesses the largest library of motion picture properties of any company in the industry. Some of these great properties from which Paramount will produce pictures during the coming year are as follows:

"ANYTHING GOES"—The No. 1 musical comedy of the year. 260 performances to date and still S.R.O. Cole Porter's score, with such songs as "You're the Top" and "I Get A Kick Out of You", is the sensation of the nation.

"SO RED THE ROSE"—The No. 1 best-selling novel of 1934. Over 100,000 copies sold to date. Over 1,000,000 readers. Publicized by newspapers, magazines, and word-of-mouth to additional millions.

"NATIONAL VELVET"—The No. 1 best-selling novel of 1935. The "Book of the Month" for May with advance sale of 50,000. Every company in the business tried to buy this great story of the famous Grand National Race.

"CARMEN"—The No. 1 opera. For many years the most popular operatic attraction on the boards. Bizet's flaming and tempestuous "Carmen" should make a musical entertainment of gigantic box-office proportions.

VICTOR HERBERT OPERETTAS—The No. 1 operettas. Paramount, in possessing these great properties, owns romances that all the world wants to see—music that all the world loves.

"ROSE OF THE RANCHO"—The No. 1 David Belasco stage hit. So many requests have been made to turn this famous Belasco stage hit into a motion picture that Paramount now produces it as the first "big outdoor musical."

"PETER IBBETSON"—The No. 1 classic. Read by millions as Du Maurier's novel. Seen by millions as the celebrated stage play. Heard by thousands more as Deems Taylor's magnificent opera. This is sure to be a big hit.

"THE LIGHT THAT FAILED"—Rudyard Kipling's No. 1 writing achievement in pathos. A novel of world-world fame—a dramatic love story of universal heart appeal. A No. 1 property from which to make a No. 1 picture.

"THE CRUSADES"—The No. 1 historical romance . . . from Harold Lamb's famous books . . . the magnificent adventures of Richard, the Lion-Hearted . . . set against the spectacular background of the world's first great war.

"CASE vs. MRS. AMES"—The No. 1 magazine story of 1934. The 5,000,000 people who read this story in Collier's last year found it so exciting they could scarcely wait a week for the next installment.

ZANE GREY NOVELS—The No. 1 Western fiction of all time. These popular novels are the favorite stories of millions the world over. For years they have made the best "Westerns."

"HOPALONG CASSIDY"—The No. 2 Western fiction. Clarence Mulford's famous and exciting novels have sold in excess of 3,000,000 and have delighted more than 20,000,000 readers.

SUMMER THEATRE TURNS PEEP-SHOW BUT IT'S PROBLEM TO EXHIBITORS

Institution, Once Launched as Gateway to Broadway for Promising Talent and Plays, Now Suspected by Producers

700 Productions Expected to Hold Forth in 70 Theatres, but Only 100 Plays at Outside Will Be New Material

by FRED AYER

The summer theatre, onetime indirect contributor to the screen through its function as a proving ground for talent and entertainment material, albeit a seasonal competitor of the motion picture theatre, has become just a shoddy summer amusement activity, writes Fred Ayer, former member of the HERALD'S reportorial staff and now in Broadway's dramatic production field. Statistical information, naming the summer theatres and the productions they promise, appears on the following

The summer theatre, precocious child of Broadway, is off again on its annual junket in the easily-satisfied wilderness of the country's resorts, seaside and mountain, fashionable and not-so-fashionable. It appears, however, that what originally was intended eight or ten years ago to become a medium through which Broadway managers could look at and judge new plays and players—a laboratory in which new actors and directors might be given opportunities to test their latent talents, where managers and playwrights might work harmoniously away from the turbulence of Times Square to sharpen their wits—has turned into little more than a summer peep-show, a commercial institution in which a few would-be managers who seldom are heard from during the colder months attempt to "clean-up" in a few short weeks, generally to the detriment of the theatre as a whole.

Some 70 theatres, according to the announcements, are promising repertoires for the current summer, but few seem to be maintaining the concept of this experimental medium as a means for trying out new plays on a constructive basis. The majority are sticking to the old and tried material, apparently afraid to trust themselves or their audiences with something new, whether it be play or player, director or stage manager. This is borne out by the many announcements from summer stock managers.

Most of the plays to be seen this summer are old to Broadway, most of the players have been selected because of their name value alone. Few hope-to-be actors and actresses will be given their "big chance" and still fewer unknown directors.

Only 100 New Productions

The 70 or so theatres—most of them along the eastern seaboard, the inland New England states, a few in the Middle West—which have announced summer seasons to date will probably place before the public at least 700 productions during the next two and one-half months. Of this number, however, it is safe to say that, at the outside, only 100 productions will be the new works of unknown or even of established playwrights. Practically every summer theatre averages an eight-week season, or plans for one, and some of these are straight repertory. Some managers may present one production a week, while others may adopt a twice weekly change of bill. Some managers plan no new plays and others tentatively contemplate the production of one or, at the most, two in a season.

Many playwrights are in favor of the summer theatre as a means of improvement of their own works before submission to Broadway managers. There was a time, prior to the depression years, with far fewer seasonal stock companies dotting the resort areas, when Broadway managers made a habit of attending them on a rotation basis, chiefly concerned with new material and talent discoveries. Today, so many factors have combined to break down the original ideal that New York producers are growing to regard them almost as an evil.

Few Carrying On

The summer theatre had its inception in the efforts of such groups as the original Provincetown Players and the Jitney Players, and through the individual enterprise of such men as Jasper Deeter and Charles Leatherbee who believed that new and intelligent acting and playwriting talent should be given an opportunity.

Jasper Deeter still carries on the tradition at his Hedgerow theatre in Moyland-Rose Valley, Pa. Mr. Leatherbee, who died last winter, was responsible to a large extent for the continued success of the Beach theatre in West Falmouth, Mass., and several of his former associates are applying his policies in other endeavors.

For the most part, however, the men now heading summer stock theatres are looking more toward what they can immediately gain for themselves. There seldom has been a time in any division of the organized theatre in which abuses have been so flagrant. Parasites from many theatrical and semi-allied strata have crept in; their credo has been the exploitation of the actor and the frustration of Broadway managers and the public.

The reaction of Broadway managers and the most important artists' representatives to the present-day summer theatre is, perhaps, best summed up in a recent column devoted to the subject by Robert Garland, dramatic critic of the New York World-Telegram.

"With openings as scarce as hen's teeth on Broadway and current offerings down to eighteen in number, the persistent playgoer must turn to the highways and the byways for dramatic sustenance," said Mr. Garland. "Good, bad or indifferent, Ye Cowshed Showshoppe is his theatre-going auditorium of last resource. That, or nothing!

"More often than should be it is that and nothing. Last summer, within an evening's easy motoring from Manhattan, I came upon some of the most deplorable plays, the most deplorable playing and the most deplorable production I have ever seen. Then and there I damned the theatre with hayseeds in its hair, the drama's hot dog stand.

"There's no gainsaying that the average summer theatre is pretty hard to take. Makeshift, pretentious, inefficient, nothing more momentous than Tonio Selwart and 'The Pursuit of Happiness' has come of it. That there's something rotten in the rural rialto when taken as a whole, nobody will deny. Yet the rural rialto keeps on going. How and why?"

The "why" can be answered with the old faithful platitude that summer resort audiences are easily entertained and are seldom as discerning as they would be in the strictly commercial theatre. In many situations, the average Broadway manager will say, audiences have come to regard these summer theatres as little more than first, second or third-class art or Little Theatres.

Then, again, the artistic sincerity of many leading legitimate actors and actresses has fallen so low that they are indifferent to management and production quality and are interested chiefly in furthering their own individual cause.

Smaller actors take on the general atmosphere of inefficiency and makeshift about them, while the new actor who works for little or nothing, and generally works hard for it, is not permitted to tread on the toes of his betters.

Equity's Hopes

Here comes up one of the most important matters, the relation of Actors' Equity Association to the summer theatre management. For several seasons Equity has been waiting an opportunity to curb many of the abuses rampant in this field. Equity has a completely closed shop in the legitimate acting profession. What Equity's Council and membership agree to can and will be enforced, and right now there is strong agitation to establish for Equity members working in summer stock a minimum salary basis comparable to that adopted in the legitimate theatre's NRA code, which, incidentally, Equity will continue to enforce on Broadway and on the road, namely, $25 weekly for junior members (actors with two years' or less experience) and $40 for senior members. If Equity does this, in addition to several other matters to be dealt with in relation to this subject, it will go far toward elimination not only of many unfair practices but of a number of irresponsible fly-by-night managers as well.

For many years summer managers have been offering little more than "pin money" for small-part and featured players. Stars, regarding a summer season more or less in the nature of a holiday, have consented to remuneration far below their normal Broadway salaries. In a great many situations smaller actors received no salaries at all, being given room-and-board for the season. In some instances managers actually have had the temerity to demand "tuition" fees from amateurs looking for a break.

The theory has been advanced time and again by champions of the summer theatre that if Equity "cracks down" and forces summer managements to pay minimum salaries the majority will be forced to discontinue their production activities. Equity hopes to do just that.

WHAT SUMMER THEATRES PROMISE

The following listing of plays promised and hoped for by the summer theatres of the country was culled from official and tentative announcements and is subject to change. The listing represents, however, the most accurate information obtainable as of June 20.

Sues for Radio Remark, To Ask Senate Inquiry

The Summit Hotel Company of Uniontown, Pa., has filed suit in Pittsburgh asking $25,000 damages from Al Jolson and the National Broadcasting Company, for injury to the "good name, credit and reputation" of the hotel, as a result of four words used by Jolson in an interview on the air with Sam Parks, Jr., new national open golf champion. It is charged Jolson said, "That's a rotten hotel."

In addition to the suit a protest is being lodged with the Federal Communications Commission by Leo L. Heyn, president of the hotel company, who said he will ask the commission to issue a cease and desist order. "I have also asked Senators Davis and Guffey to demand an immediate Senate investigation of the whole practice of commercial broadcasting," he said.

Jackie Coogan Sued as Result of Auto Accident

Two damage suits, totaling $500,000, were filed last week against Jackie Coogan in Los Angeles, as a result of the automobile crash on May 4 in which four, including Jackie's father, were killed. Young Coogan was the sole survivor. The suits were filed by Anna V. Horner, mother of Robert J. Horner, playwright, and by Grace Durkin, guardian of Trent (Junior) Durkin, both killed. The plaintiff's charge that John H. Coogan, Jackie's father, was driving "at an excessive speed while under the influence of liquor." Damages of $250,000 are asked in each suit. It is contended that Jackie is liable because he failed to remonstrate with his father for driving so fast.

Kansas City Paper Drops Star System

Lowell Lawrence, motion picture critic of the Kansas City Journal-Post, recently discontinued the use of the star system in rating films. He explained that the system, which was expected to become the standard over the country, has petered out. He said further, "Rating a picture artistically or technically does not always indicate the entertainment character of the picture. A lot of pictures poor technically are good entertainment." Mr. Lawrence expressed the belief the brief written summaries at the beginning of the reviews provide a system which is simpler, fairer and more effective.

Mexico City Theatre Strike Is Spreading

The strike of the Cinematographic Employees' Union, in Mexico City, has spread to seven neighborhood theatres. It is predicted that unless exhibitors accede to the strikers' demands that dismissed employees be reinstated, the strike will extend to every theatre in the city within a week. The government is trying to settle the dispute. It has been estimated that the strike already has cost exhibitors more than $20,000.

Braddock Signs for Screen, Radio, Stage

James J. Braddock, new heavyweight champion, last week signed a contract with William Morris, theatrical agent, for motion picture, stage and radio appearances. According to Mr. Morris, the contract will yield the champion a total of $500,000, guaranteeing him a salary of $6,000 per week for stage appearances alone, plus a percentage of receipts. Mr. Morris said he was arranging for a nationwide tour for Braddock, and that the Morris Hollywood office was negotiating a motion picture contract.

'CHINA SEAS' CINCH HIT: THRILLING ENTERTAINMENT

Gable, Harlow And Garnett The Tops

"CHINA SEAS"

(MGM)

Associate Producer.....Albert Lewin
Direction .....Tay Garnett
Novel .....Crosbie Garstin
Screen Play: Jules Furthman, James Kevin McGuinness.
Photography .....Ray June

Cast: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery, Lewis Stone, Rosalind Russell, Dudley Digges, C. Aubrey Smith, Robert Benchley, William Henry, Live deMaigret, Lilian Bond, Edward Brophy, Soo Young, Carol Ann Beery, Akim Tamiroff, Ivan Lebedeff.

"China Seas" is one of the best straight movies produced in many a day. It has everything that any audience could want and is chock full of the stuff that shoved the picture business to the top of all amusement enterprises.

Any picture that offers the combined talents of Clark Gable, Jean Harlow and Wallace Beery is destined for great box-office success, but place these three in a story that has all the thrills, chills and entertaining values of "China Seas," and you have an important picture and one that will bring out the old fans and create a lot of new ones.

Jules Furthman and James K. McGuinness have taken what was an idea by Crosbie Garstin and shaped it into a story with at least a half dozen plots, all taking place on a boat sailing the China seas, mastered by Clark Gable. On this boat are passengers from all walks of life, with entirely different destinations, plus a cargo of gold that is the bait for Wallace Beery and his conniving pirates. During the voyage you are treated to a typhoon, a great drunk by Robert Benchley, and Harlow's greatest characterization as a lady of easy virtue in love with Gable.

The yarn is packed with suspense and moves at lightning speed, with the main characters backed by as fine a cast as has ever been thrown together for any one picture, all under the masterful direction of Tay Garnett. There is never a dull moment in the picture, nor is there a moment for the audience to relax, for if it's not sitting on the edge of its seat thrilled by the plot's intrigue, it is laughing at the antics of Benchley and others or enraptured by the romance indulged in by Harlow in her winning battle for Gable.

Clark Gable plays the captain of the ship with ease and assurance that will win him many new admirers (as though he needed any new fans). The captain is a natural for Gable, a kindly fellow who hides his warm heart with gruffness. It is a grand piece of casting.

Jean Harlow takes another step forward as a dramatic actress. It is unquestionably the finest portrayal she has ever given, one that offers a wide emotional range.

Wallace Beery is swell as the undercover leader of the pirates. His work is minus any of his usual mannerisms and he plays a straight menace. Lewis Stone, too, has a greater opportunity than has fallen to his lot for some time. Rosalind Russell is again impressive. She is going far. Robert Benchley does the best drunk the screen has ever seen.

Among the others of the perfect cast, there are particularly outstanding moments by William Henry, an up and coming juvenile, Dudley Digges, C. Aubrey Smith, Akim Tamiroff, Lilian Bond, Ivan Lebedeff and Edward Brophy.

Production is ace high in every department, and the photography of Ray June tops even his usual high standard. Several of his shots, the lighting on the bridge for instance, should be framed. The storm sequence is a technical wonder. Herbert Stothart's musical score also deserves your attention.

"China Seas" is sure to ring a merry tune on every cash register. It has everything.

BOX OFFICE STIMULATORS SPREAD RAPIDLY FOLLOWING END OF CODE

New Sales Problem Developing As Exhibitors Ask Cuts in Rentals on Ground Premiums Are Draining Their Profits

Spreading with the speed of a grass fire since the NRA and its codes were killed by the supreme court, box office stimulators of many sorts are engulfing theatre operation throughout the country, and new schemes are springing up as in spots legal bans and disputes over their use enliven the scene.

Premiums and lottery enterprises, which have reached major, and to some industry quarters, alarming, proportions, are a factor to be reckoned with by sales forces of film companies as they launch their 1935-36 drives. Exhibitors in some centers are demanding adjustments of film rentals on the ground that the cost of the stunts and the cash prizes given away are devouring profits.

From many states come reports of large-scale giveaway operations engaging the attention and concern of the industry. The situation, as reported from the field this week, is:

Prosecutors in Detroit and Fort Worth ordered screeno discontinued at theatres in compliance with the law.

Loew's will start games of chance at three theatres in the Bronx, New York, in an experiment to find the most effective stimulator, with a view to general adoption later.

The Chicago post office notified newspapers it would bar them from the mails if they ran advertising mentioning lotteries.

Women's groups in Chicago launched a move to boycott theatres conducting lotteries.

Owners of the bank night copyright released an attack against infringements on several fronts.

The success of the owners of bank night, screeno and a few other pioneers in the field of cash giveaway enterprises has led others to devise similar schemes. Among stunts which have made an appearance in recent weeks are: treasury night, jack pot, buck-night, ritz night, prosperity night, big money night, keno, tango, cash night, pay nite, sweepstakes, pay-off and gold mine.

Three states have been added to those which regard theatre stimulators in violation of the law. In two widely separated cities, screeno has been declared a lottery and ordered stopped. Duncan McRea, prosecuting attorney at Detroit, has sent warnings to theatres to stop the game, which is distributed in the motor city territory by Louis Weinberg. In Fort Worth, Texas, three Interstate circuit houses, the Hollywood, Palace and Majestic, have been ordered to abandon screeno by District Attorney Will R. Parker, who ruled it violates the gambling statutes.

Bank nights are continuing throughout North Dakota, however, despite an opinion by the state's attorney general they are illegal. Missouri is another state where bank night has been outlawed officially, but where it continues.

The state's attorney of Louisiana is reported to have said unofficially that he considers screeno in violation of the gambling laws.

Claiming they are forced to adopt the practice by similar operations at competing theatres, houses affiliated with the large circuits are veering toward giveaways and games of chance, the latest being Loew's in the New York area. Fox, Skouras operated, and Warner circuit theatres have been using giveaways for some time. About 10 Balaban & Katz subsequent runs in Chicago are on the policy, as are 20 Mullen & Pinanski theatres in the Boston territory and 12 A. H. Blank operations in Iowa and Nebraska. All three circuits are Paramount affiliates. Mr. Blank has a large interest in Affiliated Distributors of Des Moines, which handles bank night in the midwest area.

Loew's is instituting a test of three different games at as many theatres with a view to determining the most effective inducement before general adoption. The Boston Road, Victory and Elsmere in the Bronx section of New York have been chosen as the proving ground. The three are last run houses on the circuit.

RKO, Loew's largest competitor in the New York zone, will stear clear of giveaways for the time being and until such time as circuit heads feel that its theatres are being hurt by schemes at opposition houses.

"Lucky" Used in New York

With 112 houses in the metropolitan New York area already signed up, Parco Company, distributor of Lucky, expects to have 250 theatres playing the game within the next three months. William Raynor, general manager of the company, said since last month the firm has increased its sales more than 100 per cent. Independents in New York have adopted Lucky.

Federal post office authorities in Chicago ordered all newspapers to delete mention of illegal cash prize stunts from theatre advertising on penalty of being barred from the mails. Such advertising has been ruled in violation of the postal regulations by the New York post office and elsewhere.

Women's Clubs Act

Women's clubs and groups launched a crusade in Chicago last week against theatres using screeno, bank night, keno, sweepstakes and other chance games, circulating petitions pledging families to boycott these houses. Chance games have spread in Chicago to a point where screeno is now being offered in 18 Essaness circuit houses, while sweepstakes is in force at 15 and bank night at six.

Alleged infringers on the copyrighted bank night plan owned by Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., of Denver are encountering legal difficulties. Three actions charging copyright and trademark infringements have been filed against Kansas and western Missouri exhibitors, according to R. W. McEwan, Kansas City distributor for bank night. S. P. Halpern, Minneapolis attorney, recently was retained by Affiliated Enterprises to serve as general counsel for such actions nationally. Infringement suits are to be instituted soon in Minneapolis.

The first of an expected number of infringement actions in Boston was to be inaugurated this week in federal court. George Ryan, attorney for E. M. Loew in his anti-trust suits and attorney for the bank night distributor in New England, was preparing to move against James Kennedy, former Educational-World Wide representative at Boston, who left the bank night firm to sponsor a premium plan of his own, called "gold mine."

Affiliated Enterprises also moved against alleged infringers in San Francisco, where R. H. McNeill, president of Golden Gate Theatres, and M. A. Naify, circuit operator in northern California, are preparing a defense.

Success of Bank Night, Screeno, Pioneers in Field, Has Led to Many Similar New Ideas, Several States Ban Schemes

Exhibitors Disturbed

The playing of percentage pictures in conjunction with bank night and other cash giveaways is causing exhibitors worry in a number of centers. A hotly contested court battle to halt the spread of money giveaways is in progress in Cleveland. The court of appeals has overruled a motion to advance a hearing on the local bank night appeal by Meyer Fischer of the Fountain, and Saul Danaceau was appointed referee to hear the issues of fact. M. B. Horwitz as operator of the Haltnorth is defendant.

If bank nights are sustained in the courts, it is considered inevitable that the city will be thrown wide open to duals, giveaways, two-for-ones and premiums.

The battle of automobile giveaways between theatre groups has been renewed in Denver.

Bank Nights in Milwaukee

In Milwaukee, exhibitors are resorting to bank nights in an effort to bolster summer grosses and reports have it that by early in July approximately 80 per cent of the theatres in the city will be sponsoring some sort of giveaway.

Premium promotions of theatres in Kansas City and its territory have reached a new high. The Publix Newman, downtown first run operated by B. & K. of Chicago, which has been running screeno on Tuesday since June 4, beginning next week adds bank night as a regular Wednesday night feature. Emanuel Rolsky, operator of the St. John and National and official of the Independent Theatre Owners, said that with practically every theatre giving away something, even over the weekends, premiums are losing their pulling power.

In the suit brought by Mrs. Hazel Greene against the Tampa theatre, Tampa, Fla., for a $650 bank night prize, Mrs. Greene says she was outside the theatre when her name was drawn and she claimed the prize as soon as she could, but it was refused her on the ground she had not purchased an admission. In an amended petition Mrs. Greene alleges that the Tampa theatre has a direct financial benefit from the bank night drawings because it stimulates business and "makes it possible to show inferior pictures on these nights."

Mitchell Fitzler, who with his brother, Joseph, operates the Kenmore theatre in Buffalo and the Rivoli and two other houses in Syracuse, said in New York on Tuesday that as the owner of the copyright of the "treasury night" promotion plan, he will prosecute anyone infringing, having been informed that New York exhibitors are adopting the plan without the right to do so.

Another new scheme is the Invisible Club Color premium, for which Sam Davidson, head of Cameo Screen Attractions in Boston, has acquired New England rights.

Exemption on Tax May Be Increased

The possibility of an increase in the exemption on the federal admission tax next year was indicated last week in Washington by the Senate finance committee in reducing from two years to one the period for which the emergency taxes are to be continued. The committee reported to the Senate the measure passed earlier by the House, and indicated the shorter period has been adopted in the expectation that the enactment of tax legislation as suggested by President Roosevelt would make possible the elimination of the socalled nuisance taxes.

Admission tax collections in May reached $1,343,876, as reported by the Internal Revenue Bureau at Washington, which compares with $1,164,598 in May of last year and $1,157,970 in April of this year.

The California legislature finally completed its session, the motion picture industry coming through unscathed, although no fewer than 200 bills affecting the industry were introduced. Not one developed into a law which could be considered as adversely affecting motion pictures. Governor Merriam has set July 12 as the date for public hearings on the bill legalizing pari-mutuel betting on dog races. The bill has been passed by the legislature. The Beverly Hills city council has passed an ordinance imposing a license fee of $50 per year on theatrical and film agents.

The legislature in Massachusetts has killed a bill imposing a $5 tax on all vending machines.

A delegation of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois conferred with state auditor Forest Smith of Missouri on methods of passing along to patrons the state's one per cent sales tax which becomes effective July 27.

United Artists is acting as the point of attack in a test case in New York city to ascertain whether or not the city tax collector can collect taxes from film exchanges, the distributors contending they rent film to theatres, and do not sell it. Conferences will be held with the comptroller, it was decided by the legal committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. If no decision is reached the matter will be taken to court.

Retaliating against passage in Ohio of a bill raising the censorship fee from $1 to $3 per 1,000-foot reel, Universal will make no more newsreel pictures in Ohio, according to a telegram from the home office to Ralph Lembeck, Cleveland cameraman. It is expected the action will cause exhibitor protest which will force abandonment of the tax. Bookers predict the tax will reduce the number of Ohio prints, retarding distribution.

A conference has been arranged for late this week at Cincinnati between local attorneys for RKO and Judge Charles H. Moorman of the United States district court, to determine whether RKO's case to test the validity of the state law banning designated playdates can be heard by that court and when. An effort is being made to transfer the case to the United States circuit court of appeals, since three judges are required and are not available in the district court.

Governor Earle of Pennsylvania has signed the four per cent tax on theatre admissions, effective July 22. The law requires exhibitors to have permits at $1 per year. A two per cent discount is granted "if the tax return is paid on time."

State tax commissioner Carlisle H. Morrisett of Virginia, indicated to the MPTO convention at Roanoke that he would oppose any general state sales tax, according to Morton G. Thalheimer, president.

Five bills in the Wisconsin legislature affecting exhibition have been indefinitely postponed with the likelihood they will not be acted upon during this session.

Exhibitors, sport organizations, amusement parks and other amusement interests are uniting in the fight against the Ontario government in Canada in its recent drastic admission tax increases. Allied Sports and Amusement Association has been organized to press the fight. Exemption of low price tickets is sought.

RKO Loses Case Under Arbitration

Operation of the Apollo as a neighborhood first run, to play day and date with the Academy of Music or the Jefferson, and payment of $45,000 damages to the former Meyer & Schneider circuit was ordered in an arbitration award given against RKO in New York Tuesday. The decision disposed of a case pending for months on breach of lease charges involving the Apollo and Hollywood, East Side houses leased by RKO from Meyer & Schneider.

While the lessors accept the award as a "complete victory," RKO sees it as a further complication in an already involved situation, and RKO attorneys indicated they would attempt to ask the arbitrators to "clarify" their findings, with a definite appeal to the supreme court for modification of the award. Representatives of RKO said the arbitrators were imposing an order that could not be fulfilled without product concessions from Skouras, operators of the Academy of Music.

The award also ordered that RKO designate the Apollo as an RKO or Keith theatre and to advertise it as any other first run. It was also directed that the Hollywood be operated as a second run following the Apollo or as a neighborhood first run, or, as an alternative, to operate the Hollywood as a subsequent run on giving the lessors 30 days' notice of such intent. In the latter event, the lessors would be permitted to terminate the lease on the first of the following month.

The award for damages was designated as $25,000 to the Apollo and $20,000 to the Hollywood The arbitrators, Robert McC. Marsh, George W. Retz and Maurice Deiches, granted leave to open or modify the awards only in case of a "substantial change of circumstances during the term of the leases." M. & S. contended the leases were breached by the operating policies maintained by RKO and that damages through loss of earning power resulted.

Jesse Huffman Dies at 66

Jesse C. Huffman, general dramatic director for Lee and J. J. Shubert, theatrical producers, died late last week at his home in New York, of heart disease. He was 66 years old and unmarried.

Action Is Desired In Films Abroad

The ideal production for the English and Continental European markets should contain 50 per cent action, 25 per cent dialogue and 25 per cent music, according to Red Kann, editor of Motion Picture Daily, as the result of interviews of RKO Radio's foreign managers who were attending the RKO convention in Chicago last week.

The English subsidiary will release, in addition to the company's 48 features, 15 to be made under the Films Act, made by Stafford Productions, Embassy Productions, G. S. Enterprises, and Joseph Ermolieff, Russian. Hollywood talent will be used, with half of the product planned for American distribution. E. D. Leishman, chairman of Radio Pictures, Ltd., and managing director of Radio Pictures International, said the negative cost of each will run between £30,000 and £40,000. Ralph Hanbury, general sales manager in England, said business in England had dropped off in April but regained in May. He foresaw danger of overseating in the building activity current in England today.

Harry W. Leasim, general sales manager of Radio Pictures International, Ltd., and managing director of Radio Pictures, S. A., France, said the greatest obstacle to the normal progress of American distribution abroad is the successful effort of many European governments to halt the flight of capital. He declared that European production is gaining.

Joost Smit, director of Radio's distribution unit in Holland, said that a slight increase in Dutch production would not affect Hollywood product there, since American films "had the edge" in facilities and quality of product. Two of the features to be made for Radio in England will be made also in Dutch.

Max Bosman, in charge in Belgium, suggested less dialogue and a consequent decrease in superimposed titles. He considers Belgium admission scales too low. Pierre Le Long, in France, favors dramatic pictures, although he reported success with musicals. He plans two French originals this year and will "dub" eight of Radio's 48.

Most of the group of foreign representatives will sail from New York at the end of this week.

Karl K. Kitchen, Writer, Dies in New York at 51

Karl Kingsley Kitchen, newspaper columnist and for a long period a commentator on the theatre, died last week in New York from an infection followed by pneumonia, at the age of 51. He was buried in Ferncliff Cemetery, Westchester. Among the floral offerings were those of Adolphe Menjou and Charlie Chaplin. Watterson R. Rothacker was among the honorary pallbearers.

Philip Leigh, Actor, Dies

Philip Leigh, English actor who had appeared in many productions of the Theatre Guild in New York, died last week in his room at the Hotel Irving, the victim of a heart attack. He was 55 years old.

6 MORE PRODUCERS GET SET FOR SEASON

United Artists Prepares for Five-Day Meet in Hollywood; Sid Grauman in Production

The addition this week of only six new producing companies to the lengthy list of old and new producers who in the past two months disclosed to exhibitors their plans for engaging in the competitive race to sell their lines in the new season, comes near the end of the pre-season period of moulding product forms and sales policies. Hollywood already is deep in production and the sales forces are by this time widely scattered in the field selling on paper the promised product, while United Artists, practically the last of the large companies to get started on 1935-36 activities, was preparing to move its personnel to Hollywood for five days to attend their annual sales convention, which starts next week.

The new production possibilities which entered the field in the week were: France-Film, which will import; Sid Grauman, pioneer showman, who will enter film production for the first time; Harry Sherman, financed by Nicholas Ludington of the Fiske-Curtis-Ludington combination; Ray Friedgen and Ray Heinz, working together, and All-Star and Bernardi, independents. Their plans and those of others which came to light this week follow:

Ajax

Bob Savini's Ajax Pictures was reported considering a plan to follow this season's series of four Harry Carey westerns with a similar group for 1935-36.

All-Star

Interests behind Hollywood's Overdoff Casting Agency were reported backing the new All-Star Productions, with I. O. Overdoff, president; P. B. Mahoney, vice-president; Edward Gear, second vice-president and treasurer, and Jack Rochelle, business manager. "Kid Carnival," Josh Binney directing, will lead a feature series, to which will be added some short subjects, both groups with juvenile leads.

Beaumont

Charles Hutchinson will supervise all of Beaumont Pictures' new series, six with Black King, a horse, eight westerns with Conway Tearle, and six Jack Hoxie westerns. Mitchell Leichter, president, was also reported to be negotiating with Mr. Hutchinson for two serials.

Bernardi

Bernardi Productions started casting for musicals for pictures and roadshows.

British Lion

Sam W. Smith, managing director of British Lion Pictures, arrived in New York from London to get under way a contemplated invasion of the American market. The company may double its 1935-36 schedule of 20 features if expansion plans are consummated, these involving N. L. Nathanson and Lord Beaverbrook, both important in Canadian and English motion affairs, respectively. Mr. Nathanson would spend some time in London if arrangements are concluded.

Many of the new pictures would be produced with an eye toward this new market, while the program in England would be augmented by Republic's product under terms of a distribution deal now being negotiated for England with Norton V. Ritchey, Republic's foreign sales director. Republic, however, is also considering proposals from other companies for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Smith brought six pictures with him for distribution here.

Celebrity

In addition to a third series of ComicColor cartoons already scheduled for 1935-36, Celebrity Productions is considering an entirely new line of Ub Iwerks cartoons.

DuWorld

With a feature lineup of 25 already arranged for distribution in 1935-36, DuWorld this week obtained distribution rights to "Legong, Dance of the Virgins," produced in Technicolor in the tropics by Bennett Pictures and directed by the Marquis Henry de la Falaise. The Marquis returned to New York this week from the Island of Bali.

Fox

The completion already of eight 1935-36 features has enabled Fox Film to cease shooting at Movietone City until July 8, when there will be placed in work "Ball of Fire," with Alice Faye and Jack Haley, and the Jane Withers production, "Meal Ticket." One week later "Beauty's Daughter," "Charlie Chan in Shanghai" and "Ramona" will start.

France Film

Robert Hurel, president of France-Film Corporation, Ltd., of Canada, has formed France-Film, Inc., with headquarters at 66 Fifth Avenue, New York, to distribute French films in the United States. In Canada the company imports 80 per cent of all French films shown, operates six theatres and shows its product in 60 others. Only 10 French features were imported into the United States this season, whereas the new division will bring in 25 in 1935-36, showing first at the Fifth Avenue Playhouse, which will be rechristened the "Cinema de Paris," and serve as the key showspot. Mr. Hurel will also import short subjects and newsreels from France.

France-Film, through its Parisian headquarters, 92 Bvd. des Courcelles, also plans to act as sales agents in Europe for American films, with Mr. Hurel in charge there, too.

First of the new group to arrive in New York for fall release are "Le Dernier Milliardaire," the last film to be directed by Rene Claire; "Maria Chapdelaine," from the story by Louis Hemon, winner of the Grand Prix du Cinema Francais 1934; "L'Ordonnance," from Guy de Maupassant's novel, and "Charlemagne" with Raimu. All will have English titles.

Friedgen-Heinz

A new company was reported in the making in Hollywood, headed by Ray Friedgen and Ray Heinz, to produce a serial for distribution through William Pizor's Imperial Pictures.

G-B Pictures

Arthur Lee, G-B vice-president in this country, this week set the first new releases, starting in July, as follows: "Loves of a Dictator," Toeplitz production starring Clive Brook and Madeleine Carroll and directed by Benn W. Levy; "My Song for You," with Jan Kiepura; "The Clairvoyant," from Ernst Lothar's novel, directed by Maurice Elvey, and "The 39 Steps," directed by Alfred Hitchcock.

Grauman

Sid Grauman, pioneer showman in California and one of the leaders in elaborate presentations at theatres, arrived in New York this week with Darryl Zanuck and indicated that he will enter film production, making three or four features yearly for distribution through one of the large companies. He was scheduled to return to Hollywood Thursday.

International

Four Negro features will be produced by International Road Shows, Inc., starring outstanding Negro talent: Ethel Waters, Bill Robinson, the Mills Brothers, Paul Robeson, Cab Calloway and Duke Ellington. Saverio Gugliotta is said to be financing the enterprise. International now distributes British productions.

MGM

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer continued active in rounding out 1935-36 releasing plans, having signed Grace Moore, now in Europe, for at least one feature, arranged with Robert Benchley for five additional novelty shorts, and agreed to Hal Roach's plan to produce at least four features.

Jack Chertok, assistant to Harry Rapf, will produce the Benchley shorts, of which Mr. Benchley will act both as writer and star.

Full length comedies will be a regular Hal Roach policy hereafter, this arrangement having been decided at New York conferences between Mr. Roach and Nicholas M. Schenck, president. Heretofore Mr. Roach's policy has been concentrated on shorts, with only an occasional venture into the feature form. For the feature group he already has assembled a stock company of comedians, including Charley Chase, Thelma Todd, Patsy Kelly, Jimmy Finlayson, Spanky McFarland and Our Gang. The first will be "The Honesty Racket," written and directed by Mr. Roach.

Metropolis

Next season's Metropolis feature schedule will be augmented with "The Rich Uncle," Italian musical, which starts a Broadway run June 28 at the Westminster Cinema. It was directed in Rome by Amleto Palermi.

Monarch

Hollywood reports indicated that Monarch Productions, headed by Ralph G. Fear, will finance independents next season in addition to producing 26 on its own.

Northern

Jesse Goldberg's Northern Films will make six features next season, starting with "Trans-Pacific," with Heather Angel, Conway Tearle, Ralph Forbes and William Cagney.

Paramount

Paramount Pictures was holding regional conventions, following New York's main meeting, in Chicago, Atlanta, Buffalo, Boston and Kansas City, to be followed later this week and next by Denver and San Francisco. Charles Reagan is presiding over western regionals, J. J. Unger over those in the East.

The company finally decided, as expected, to road show Cecil B. DeMille's "Crusaders," starting late in the summer.

Radio

At the final RKO convention sessions, held last week in Chicago, it was said that the 1935-36 sales policy, driving for increased preferred playing time, will call for a guarantee against percentage on four specials in small towns, based on the receipts of "Roberta" or "Little Women," depending upon which had the largest gross.

Jules Levy, sales manager, will take charge of the policy in large cities, but model contracts

VOLUNTARY COMMITTEE IS NAMED TO SIFT ALL-INDUSTRY BOARD IDEA

Keough Heads Subcommittee to Consider Legal Phases of Establishing Voluntary Code Structure for Film Industry

Viewing several hundred letters received by the Motion Picture Code Authority and individual members as crystallizing demand for the creation of a setup to perpetuate the benefits of the code, the Code Authority this week initiated the first steps in what may result in a voluntary code for the industry and a clearing house for its problems.

Code Authority members and alternates have formed a Voluntary Industry Committee to investigate the possibilities of setting up an all-industry board for quasi-judicial handling of industry disputes. Members of the Authority are unanimous that certain features of the code should be continued.

Members of the Voluntary Industry Committee are J. Robert Rubin, MGM, temporary chairman; Austin C. Keough, Paramount general counsel; Nathan Yamins, national Allied leader; Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Charles L. O'Reilly, head of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York; Harold S. Bareford, Warner counsel; Leslie E. Thompson of RKO; W. C. Michel of Fox; Edward A. Golden, Republic general sales manager, and Jack Cohn. John C. Flinn will act as secretary and Tyree Dillard, Jr., as general counsel.

A subcommittee headed by Mr. Keough was named, with Bareford, O'Reilly, Yamins and Dillard, to explore the legal aspects of establishing voluntary code structures, with special reference to the antitrust laws. This committee is to make known its findings at a meeting of the larger group on July 8.

While industry opinion is divided on the feasibility of codes depending on voluntary observance, advocates believe enforcement could be obtained through a threat of removal of code benefits.

Other Industries to Be Guide

The special committee studying the legal phases of codes will be guided by what is being done towards establishing voluntary agreements by other industries through trade associations. Inasmuch as no trade group exists that embraces all the elements in the motion picture industry, the Code Authority itself, representative of all interests, is taking the initiative. The committee will avail itself of information from a Government bureau set up to assist voluntary code makers.

How to perpetuate the handling of disputes without infringing on antitrust decisions is considered a difficult problem by the Authority's legal experts. The supreme court's decision outlawing interstate agreements and the existence of two decisions in industry antitrust cases are regarded as having a definite bearing. These are the decision in the Binderup case several months ago at Omaha when clearance and zoning were declared in restraint of trade, and the Thacher decree about three years ago outlawing compulsory arbitration.

As soon as the Voluntary Industry Committee evolves a plan in conformance with the antitrust laws, it will be submitted to exhibitors and distributors for reactions. The Code Authority has received a flood of telegrams and letters from the field recommending ideas for a setup along the lines of the clearance and zoning and grievance boards.

Arbitration in New York

The 10-members committee, with four represented by alternates, met Monday to discuss voluntary codes.

New York is the first territory to return to voluntary arbitration. While there are five or more cases on the docket every week, most of the claims are settled before hearing. Louis Nizer, secretary of the New York Film Board, is sponsoring the procedure.

Mr. Dillard completes his duties with the Code Authority Friday and plans to sail July 3 on a Mediterranean cruise. Mr. Flinn will continue until all books are closed and records filed. Price, Waterhouse is completing an audit.

There were also tangible indications from various sections that some plan to replace the defunct Blue Eagle is favored. There was skepticism in many quarters, however, as to the method of enforcement.

MPTOA Plan Praised, Opposed

The proposal of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to regulate trade practices through riders to contracts was both attacked and lauded. In home office distribution circles it was considered the most practicable form proposed. Others, however, called it limited in scope and local in application.

All voluntary agreements entered into by industry will be handled by the revised National Recovery Administration, it was reported this week from Washington. The Federal Trade Commission has abandoned its trade practices submittal policy in favor of the NRA. It was represented that unless NRA was given sole control of agreements there would be little or nothing for it to do outside of compilation of statistics.

The movement for arbitration and conciliation tribunals gained momentum with announcement that the MPTOA directors would meet in a few weeks to consider ways and means of setting up a plan.

The way is clear for substitute code boards, but independents must be equitably represented or Allied will not be interested, Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied, told independent exhibitors in Boston Monday.

In New York, Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, instructed Leon Rosenblatt, chairman, and Bernard Barr, legal head of the unit's code committee, to confer with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America for establishment of a tribunal in New York replacing the code boards.

Similar Moves Elsewhere

A similar move is underway in Milwaukee where the Independent Theatres Protective Association has named a committee to confer with circuit operators, independents and exchanges. The committee consists of B. K. Fischer, Ross Baldwin, Ed Lurie and R. J. Patterson. Reports are current that the Film Board of Trade will be revived in Milwaukee.

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, has appointed a special committee consisting of Louis Ansell, Dave Nelson, Leto Hill, E. E. Rudolph, Jr., and Mr. Wehrenberg an ex-officio member.

Portland exhibitors have agreed to a code on admission prices, pledging downtown theatres to drop 25-cent balconies and other subnormal admissions. These prices have been agreed upon: 25 cents to 1 p.m., 35 cents to 6 p.m., and 40 cents for all seats at night. The neighborhood houses have agreed on a 25-cent night admission. Pictures will not be made available to 10-cent houses until one year from the date of first-run release. Availability has been extended also in other low price brackets.

New York Returns to Voluntary Arbitration; MPTOA Plan for Contract Rider Both Supported and Attacked

Attack MPTOA "Rider" Idea

Charging that "the MPTOA is trying to take America's independent theatre owners for a rider," the Independent Exhibitors Association of Philadelphia bitterly assailed the national organization's plan for regulation of trade abuses by a rider to the exhibition contract. The Association's bulletin called the plan a "cunningly premeditated attempt to stifle the independents, make it possible for the major producers to grab theatres wholesale from the independents, and to further strengthen the monopolistic powers" of the large distributors.

Col. H. A. Cole, Allied head at Dallas, is opposed to the idea of voluntary codes on the ground of "dominance by the major interests." Buffalo and Omaha exhibitors like the proposal, independents in Los Angeles were skeptical.

The Independent Exhibitors of Massachusetts, Inc., Allied affiliate, advised members not to reduce employees' wages or to increase working hours unless obliged to do so to keep their theatres open.

New Jersey Group to Act on Pooling Deal

The plan to effect a cooperative merger of about 200 independent New Jersey theatres, which has been under discussion for some weeks, will be put to test next week when definite action is to be taken on the proposal. Several of the exhibitors who will be affected by the proposed merger met in New York this week with Leon Rosenblatt to consider the matter, but until Sidney Samuelson, Allied States president, has had opportunity to consider the move, they refused to commit themselves.

Independent theatre men in New York, meanwhile, were considering a similar move, with Milton C. Weisman and the Independent Theatre Owners of New York reported interested. The consensus among Broadway theatre men, however, is that neither plan will go through.

Argentine Actor Killed

Carlos Gardel, Argentine actor, singer and tango dancer, who had made a series of pictures for the Spanish market under a Paramount contract, was killed this week in an airplane crash near Medallin, Colombia. H. Swartz, occasional representative of Universal in Bogota, Colombia, was also killed, as were eight others.

WALL STREET BANKERS QUIZZED BY S.E.C. ON PARAMOUNT STOCK DEALS

Commission Seeks to Show Kuhn, Loeb Netted $334,995 with Wiseman, a Member, on Bondholders' Committee

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Bureau of the HERALD

High finance, as played by those "in the know," was brought into the light last week by the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission in concluding its investigation of the Paramount reorganization.

Bondholders' "protective" committees on which there were no bondholders, attorneys who sought to form protective committees that they might obtain the job of counsel, and protective committee members who made large sums by dealing in the securities they were supposed to protect, were pictured by Wall Street witnesses—willing and unwilling—who were called before the commission at Washington.

Expected by the "wise ones" to be merely a formal proceeding in conformity with a mandate of Congress that it investigate reorganizations under Section 77-B of the bankruptcy act, and to be confined to rehashing the information developed during the federal court reorganization proceedings in New York, counsel for the Securities Commission threw a bombshell into Wall Street by digging up facts not divulged during the reorganization proceedings to show that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. made a net profit of $334,995 by trading in Paramount securities during the time Sir William Wiseman, one of the partners, served on the bondholders' protective committee.

Sir William also made some money in the same way, as did at least two other members of the committee or their firms, it was stated.

Vanderlip Testifies

Admitting that the ways of modern financiers were beyond his ken, Frank A. Vanderlip, former president of the National City Bank, gave the testimony which paved the way for the commission's big disclosures. As a result of the Paramount hearing, it is predicted that Congress next session will be asked to tighten the reorganization provisions of the bankruptcy act, requiring members of protective committees to have an interest in the company they seek to protect and prohibiting trading in the stock.

Mr. Vanderlip told the commission he originally was approached by a New York attorney with the suggestion that he accept the chairmanship of a committee about to be formed, the attorney apparently having in view a position as counsel.

Before making any decision, however, the banker decided to discuss the matter with members of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who countered with a proposal that he become the chairman of a committee they were about to form.

Mr. Vanderlip accepted the Kuhn, Loeb offer—also he accepted, in toto, the nominations of Kuhn, Loeb for membership on the committee, with the result that it was composed entirely of bankers, and the only member to hold any Paramount securities at all was Sir William Wiseman, who possessed four shares of Famous Players Canadian.

Later, Mr. Vanderlip related, he felt he ought to have an interest in the company and bought some of its securities.

The committee was formed early in 1933. Late in 1934, Mr. Vanderlip testified, he learned for the first time that some of the members were trading in Paramount securities. He did not learn the details of their transactions, however, until they were laid before him at the Washington hearing by counsel for the commission.

Leading the veteran banker into the realm of ethics, counsel for the SEC obtained from him his views on various phases of the committee's makeup and activities. Bankers who sell securities, Mr. Vanderlip declared, have a "moral responsibility" to protect their customers in the event the paper becomes impaired and therefore should serve on protective committees. But, he added, such committees also should have actual holders of the securities involved, and it was for that reason that he personally bought Paramount securities.

Further, he told the commission, no banker or official charged with mismanagement or misrepresentation should serve on a protective committee, this being in reference to Sir William Wiseman, who, however, resigned before suits were started.

No member of a protective committee, he said, should trade in the securities involved, on the basis of information gathered as a member.

All this led up to the testimony of Mr. Wiseman, the British partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Company, who, although treated with the utmost courtesy by SEC counsel, as were all witnesses, nevertheless had an uncomfortable time as he attempted to justify Kuhn, Loeb's profitable dealings in Paramount paper.

As related by Sir William, he personally traded in Paramount for only a fortnight, turning his holdings over to his company when it began operations on a large scale. The purchases, he said, were for investment purposes; sales made simultaneously, however, were to keep an orderly market.

Sir William originally had offered the explanation that the company bought for investment and sold when the reorganization loomed. He did not mention profits until counsel for the commission laid before him, much to his surprise, a detailed record of Kuhn, Loeb purchases and sales.

Denies Inside Information Factor

The witness denied that the transactions were based on inside information available through his membership on the committee, although admitting that it looked odd, but finally agreed that protective committee members really ought not trade in the securities of the company even though, as he maintained, they were well within their legal rights in so doing.

As a final surprise, counsel for the commission developed that possession of less than one-sixth of Paramount's outstanding indebtedness had been a sufficient lever for the group headed by Harold A. Fortington, insurance man, to become an important factor in the reorganization and to put Mr. Fortington in as chairman of the executive committee of the company.

Bankers present at the Washington hearing did some quick figuring as Mr. Fortington related the holdings of the various interests he represented, and then privately said they had figured him as a lot heavier than he actually turned out to be.

As a side issue, the commission revealed that plans for committees were laid long before the company went into receivership, and while Mr. Fortington declared he had been approached by the various interests which later comprised his group, and that there had been no injection into their conversations of anything so mundane as remuneration, he admitted that a memorandum flashed on him by commission counsel had been prepared by him long before he was to be seen in the Paramount reorganization picture.

That memorandum, the last of a series of SEC presented special features, attacked the old management of Paramount on five grounds. Starting out with the charge of mismanagement,

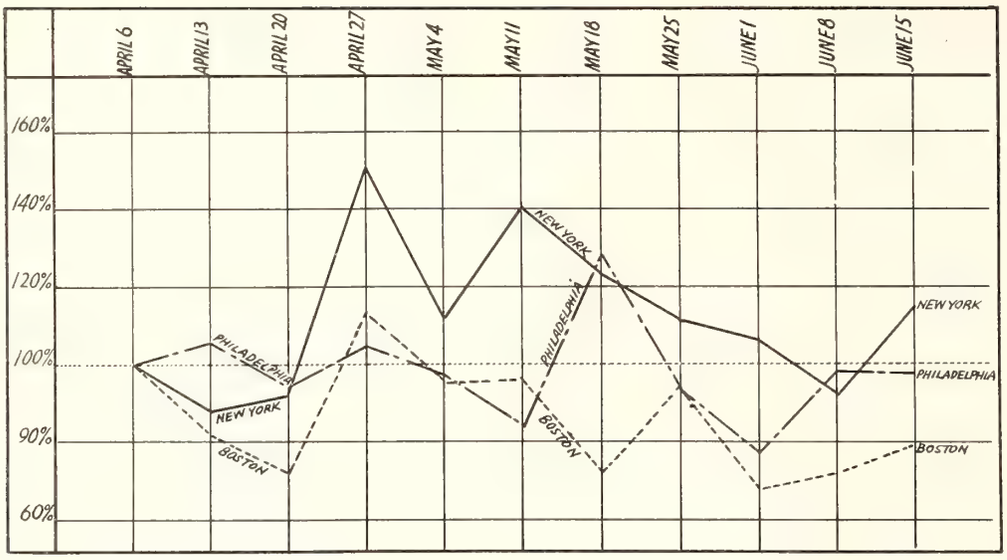
OTTERSON TO COAST, NEW COMPANY PROCEEDS



While the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission this week was investigating bankers' participation in the reorganization of the old Paramount company, which emerged from bankruptcy two weeks ago, the new management was proceeding normally.

John E. Otterson, new president, leaves New York Sunday for a first-hand investigation of the California studios. Adolph Zukor probably will remain in the East for a time.

A market for Paramount stock subscription warrants is anticipated by the company in a letter of instruction to stockholders on the transfer of old securities for new.

Under the reorganization plan each share of old stock is exchangeable for ¼ share of new common of $1 par value per share and the right to subscribe before August 30 at $2 per unit for a unit of an additional ¼ share of common and 1/5 share of new second preferred of $10 per share par value. Security holders may obtain a subscription warrant, valid until August 30.

Some 64 per cent of Paramount Properties bondholders already have approved the reorganization plan of Publix Enterprises and a hearing will be held July 8, in Los Angeles.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of theatre receipts, shows the business done in Philadelphia, New York and Boston key houses in the ten weeks' period from April 6 through June 15. In each case the receipts in each city for the week ended April 6 are taken as 100 per cent for that city.

Paramount Bond Deals Reviewed

it alleged that excessive salaries and bonuses were paid to a favored group of officials, several of whom received "grotesque" bonuses in stock, while excessive salaries were the general rule rather than the exception, with the president and one or two vice-presidents receiving salaries with "no relation to what they should be," the memo said.

The memorandum also charged the management with improper distribution of several million dollars to common stockholders out of capital, the wrongful disbursement of more millions in the repurchase of stock, the wrongful hypothecation of assets with bankers as collateral in connection with Film Production Corporation; the wasting of large sums in the purchase of real estate at excessive prices, and the padding of payrolls with unnecessary employees and relatives of officials.

Mr. Fortington charged company officials with collusion with bankers in the designation of paid committees and alleged they had arranged with the courts for the bankruptcy. Pressed as to the payment of committees, he named the Vanderlip bond and Holmes stock committees, although Vanderlip had testified there had been no discussion of remuneration for his services.

The witness bolstered his charges with testimony that he had been approached in 1932 with a view to his becoming a member of the protective committee for Paramount Broadway Corporation, at which time it was indicated he would be paid for his services.

Three long days were expended in development of the testimony, the commission concluding the hearings last Thursday. The next chapter will be written when the SEC reports to Congress, at which time it is anticipated it will have something to say regarding the desirability of tightening up the federal bankruptcy act.

Fox Metropolitan Claims Allowed to Permit Vote

Claims against Fox Metropolitan Playhouses were allowed provisionally in the amount of $7,735,000 by Federal Judge Julian W. Mack in New York this week in order to permit the claimants to vote on the Joseph M. Schenck-Fox Theatres plan of reorganization late this week. The claims were tentatively allowed in the amounts filed and will be contested by the Fox Metropolitan trustee before finally being allowed.

The largest single claim is that of Fox Theatres for $5,776,577. Two-thirds of the general creditors' claims must approve the reorganization plan before it becomes effective. The Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee, representing 89 per cent of the necessary two-thirds of the $12,500,000 of gold notes and debentures outstanding, has declared itself in favor of the plan.

No Action on Pathe Case Is Expected Until Fall

The trial of the charges of mismanagement brought against officers and directors of Pathe Exchange, Inc., by Pat Casey, a stockholder, cannot be held until next fall at the earliest. In a ruling by state Supreme Court Justice Edward A. Dore last week the original application of Mr. Casey for the appointment of a receiver was denied on the ground that no cause for such an appointment had been indicated by the plaintiff. The court thus ruled despite Mr. Casey's withdrawal of his receivership application.

The court ruled that Mr. Casey might ask for a preference on the court calendar for his mismanagement action.

Dowling to Produce Two Plays Next Season

Eddie Dowling plans to produce two new plays on Broadway in the fall season. One is a melodrama, "He Who Sups with the Devil," and the other is a comedy, "Agatha Calling." Mr. Dowling also expects to go on the road with the musical "Thumbs Up."

Amiglaze Corporation Moves

Due to expansion, the Amiglaze Corporation has removed its executive offices to 225 West 34th Street, New York. Distribution headquarters remain at 146 Featherbed Lane, Bronx, New York. The company handles a liquid refinisher for theatres. Ben Miller is president and Ed Guild, secretary-treasurer.

6 More Producers Plan New Season for smaller towns specify three pictures for seven days each at 50 per cent; three at seven days each for 40 per cent; seven for seven days at 30 per cent; 10 for four days at 25 per cent; 10 for three or four days at 25 per cent, with an increasing "split" if the run lengthens out.

The remaining 19 pictures on the feature list will be sold on a flat rental.

J. R. McDonough, president of the producing company, told the delegates on the last day that the company has developed the "acme of manpower" and within the next month will have 12 of the 1935-36 features in work.

B. B. Kahane, president of RKO Studios, predicted that the company's flexible production policy will permit RKO to acquire new and timely stories and talent as the season progresses.

Exchanges of Jacksonville, St. Louis, Salt Lake, Winnipeg, Minneapolis and Toronto won sales prizes of one week's salary, while consolation prizes went to the exchanges at Indianapolis, Oklahoma City and Washington.

Republic

Edward Golden, general sales manager of Republic, returned to New York from Seattle, Salt Lake and Los Angeles, where he presided over the final regional sales meetings attended by franchise owners and their sales staffs.

Budd Rogers, sales manager of Liberty, will transfer headquarters to Republic's home office on July 1. E. H. Goldstein has already taken up duties at Republic.

Gene Autry will star in eight westerns to be produced by Nat Levine and his Mascot Pictures for Republic release. Republic will also have eight John Wayne westerns, produced on its own by Trem Carr, as previously announced.

Mr. Carr said in Hollywood that following delivery of its remaining five-picture commitment for 1934-35, Mascot will lose its trade name in becoming part of Republic, with Nat Levine as Republic vice-president and producing under the Johnston banner. On the other hand, Nat Levine, arriving in Hollywood from New York conferences with W. Ray Johnston, said: "Our merger with Republic doesn't mean this organization in any way will lose its identity."

Screen Attractions

M. Kleinerman, president of Screen Attractions Corporation, was reported contemplating the release of a 12-episode serial, "Queen of the Jungle," and a feature version titled "White Jungle Goddess," both featuring Reed Howes and Mary Kornman, directed by Robert Hill and supervised by I. E. Chadwick. British Continental will distribute in Europe, it is said.

Sherman

Nicholas Ludington, who is associated with First Division Productions, along with William Fiske and John Curtis, will finance Harry Sherman, independent, in the production of six "Hop Along Cassidy" stories for Paramount release.

United Artists

While Al Lichtman, new United Artists president, arriving in New York from Hollywood, was explaining the company's 1935-36 production plans, Monroe Greenthal, of the home office staff, was flying to Los Angeles to arrange for the company's annual sales convention at the Hotel Ambassador, starting July 8. Mr. Lichtman's remarks are reported elsewhere in this issue.

Entertainment worth and showmanship availability keynote the composite 1935-36 production programs. Allowing for the customary substitutions, additions and deletions, it is distinctly noticeable that, in every phase, the features listed on the new season's schedules are more intimately geared to public taste than heretofore. It is also to be noted that the schedules are more flexible and encompass a much wider scope, and that there is less tendency to combine definite names with definite titles. As a supplementary consideration, there is no necessity of resorting to crystal gazing to see that the new programs are exceedingly diversified.

In starting the new programs, Hollywood's producers (Foreign-made productions are not being considered in this article) are inspired by a new optimism and enthusiasm. Improved economic conditions, graphically reflected at the box offices the past several months, provide an incentive sure to result in both an increased number of pictures and improved quality. The path along which producers may proceed is more clearly defined. A year ago, harried by the activities of extraneous groups, which in many localities precipitated actual boycotts, an atmosphere of uncertainty was created. This condition was eliminated by the producers themselves in a manner that won wide approval.

From a standpoint of differentiation of pictures there are four possibilities, the novelty of each potentially transmutable into box office dollars. First, and seemingly the one which will be most widely publicized—and it was tactfully handled in preliminary announcements—is the amount of success in adapting color to feature pictures. Currently, "Becky Sharp" is being tested in the laboratory of public approval.

Second is the possibility of third dimension or the perspective of depth of films.

Two types of pictures already completed point the way to the third and fourth departures from formula. Several companies have plans for pictures based exclusively on the appeal of operatic music. MGM is planning such a feature for Grace Moore and Nelson Eddy. Paramount has Mary Ellis, grand opera singer, on its contract list, and Radio has just signed another noted diva, Lily Pons. Fox is completing "Here's to Romance," starring Nino Martini and featuring Madame Schuman-Heink, in which operatic music is the motivating factor.

Fourth and equally important is the Shakespearian trend. Warner Bros. has "A Midsummer Night's Dream" completed; MGM is considering "Romeo and Juliet" for Norma Shearer, and Pioneer will make "Hamlet," possibly in color.

In the prospectus of practically every company is included a type of entertainment which has proved its entertainment and exploitation value—that adapted from standard literary classics and usually a "costume."

There is no dearth of attractions adapted from old and current best selling novels; also outstanding stage plays. Several studios plan modernized production of pictures which previously made history. This is particularly true of Universal with "Hunchback of Notra Dame" and "Phantom of the Opera." MGM and Paramount are recapitalizing upon the commercial worth of old titles. MGM has "Broadway Melody of 1935" in work, Paramount "Big Broadcast of 1935," a revue.

Modernized musicals, with all their glamor of ragtime rhythm, chorus singing and dancing, spectacular production effects and settings, are included in quantity. Original stories, the exact content of which is unknown, have their place. There is sure to be the full quota of topical pictures like the "G Man" cycle.

There's a thrill in announcements that in the one season three of the industry's most illustrious stars—Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford and Harold Lloyd—again will have pictures to compete with the efforts of stars unborn or unknown when the three were at the peak of screen glory. There's a thrill in a program of an entertainment character running all the way from a Marx Brothers slapstick-gag comedy to such imposing spectacles as Pioneer's "Last Days of Pompeii," Cecil DeMille's "Crusades," and Shakespeare.

While each company lists specials, the material selected to accompany these show window leaders seems to be of much higher quality, so that the difference in entertainment-showmanship quality between the specials and programers will be less marked.

In the great majority of cases the 1935-36 pictures, true to their name, will be action pictures.

It is not unlikely that unknowns may zoom to high popularity a la Shirley Temple; that foreign artists will be imported and capital be made of noted stage names. At the same time plans indicate a greater concentration upon personalities with whom the public is already familiar.

Conspicuous by comparative absence is the stark scare-'em-to-death type of pictures, yet there is no lack of thrillers on the program.

MGM is stressing the thrill-action quality in many of its features. It's the lifeblood of "China Seas" which stars Wallace Beery, Clark Gable and Jean Harlow, and "Mutiny on the Bounty" with Gable and Charles Laughton. There's potent heart appeal as a fundamental of "O'Shaughnessy's Boy," which teams Beery and Jackie Cooper, and in Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities," which stars Ronald Colman. Tentatively this studio has scheduled Jules Verne's "20,000 Leagues under the Sea" and "Forty Days of Musa Dagh," a dramatic saga of a war-wrecked mountain people.

"The Last Days of Pompeii" combines thrill-action in story content and spectacular effects, as does "The Crusades." With exotic mystery it is incorporated in Radio's "She," the Sir Rider Haggard story starring Helen Gahagan. Martial flair accentuates it in "The Three Musketeers;" Warners' "Charge of the Light Brigade," inspired by Tennyson's poem, the same studio's "LaFitte, the Pirate," "Captain Blood," one of Sabatin's best known romantic adventures, and in "Napoleon." Action and thrill will not be lacking in "Page Miss Glory," Marion Davies' picture; in "Doctor Socrates," a gangster, for Paul Muni; Reliance's "Red Salute" with Barbara Stanwyck; "Robin Hood;" "The Last of the Mohicans;" in Goldwyn's "Barbary Coast" with Miriam Hopkins; in Universal's "Hunchback," "Phantom" and "Suicide Club," to be adapted from Robert Louis Stevenson's work. Nor will thrill-action be less significant in "Mary Queen of Scots," which Radio is planning for Katharine Hepburn, in the several pictures to be made from Rudyard Kipling stories, notably "Kim" and "The Light That Failed."

Big Season for Comedy

Comedy, too, is in for a big inning, with the Chaplin and Marx Brothers pictures; Harold Lloyd in "The Milky Way," several W. C. Fields, Wheeler and Woolsey and Burns and Allen features scheduled and the Eddie Cantor annual on the slate. It becomes a more significant factor in the year's product when the Will Rogers features are remembered. Two of them, "In Old Kentucky," completed, and "Steamboat Bill," in which Irvin S. Cobb also will be seen, add lustre and showmanship appeal.

The mode in musicals will logically see Warner Bros. endeavoring to maintain its premier position in this field, with Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler and Al Jolson, as well as its stock company of singing, dancing boys and girls. Yet Radio, having tasted of the profits of such pictures as "Flying Down to Rio" and "Roberta," can be expected to make an aggressive bid for a place in the sun with Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire in "Top Hat." Warner will go on with Powell and Keeler in "Dress Parade," Powell in "Lucky Me," an untitled Rudy Vallee, and "Radio Jamboree of 1935," an all-starred replacement of the "Gold Diggers." Radio has several more pictures programmed for Ginger Rogers and Astaire as well as Gene Raymond. Paramount won't let Bing Crosby and Kitty Carlisle be idle. Light opera, as demonstrated by MGM in "The Merry Widow" and "Naughty Marietta," will have Grace Moore and Nelson Eddy in Sigmund Romberg's "Maytime."

The Supernatural

A distinctive type of picture, that which is based on the absorbing and intriguing power of the supernatural, may wield a great influence on the year's program. In this line, Paramount has "Peter Ibbetson," starring Gary Cooper and Ann Harding, and Radio "The Return of Peter Grimm," two unusual portrayals. Radio, too, convinced that the type of entertainment as exemplified by "Lost Control" and "The Informer" is worthy, plans "The Plough and the Stars," adapted from a play by Sean O'Casey, for Barbara Stanwyck.

More than ever before dependence of success is being placed squarely upon the shoulders of actors, directors and producers who have proved themselves.

As this is written, two alterations of the production setup must be considered. They are the recent amalgamation of Fox and 20th Century and the transfer of David O. Selznick to United Artists. At MGM, with such pictures as "Dinner at Eight" and "David Copperfield." Selznick influenced production trends. The same is true of the majority of pictures produced by Darryl Zanuck for 20th Century.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Addiction of Al Sherman, press agent in New York for Alliance Films, to colored ensembles, almost led to international complications when he was in London not so long ago. One night he was giving the once-over to the sights in Whitechapel, London, when he became conscious of a bloke scrutinizing his very dark blue shirt, which in the night looks black. Al was interested and thought he'd stick around to see what might happen. As the cockney continued to eye the shirt, it dawned on Al that he was probably being suspected of being one of Oswald Moseley's Fascists, who affect black shirts like Mussolini.

Instantly recalling the animosity in Whitechapel toward the Moseley Fascists, Al finally got up enough courage to pipe: "I'm an American!"

"Ha bloomin' Hamerican, hey?" mocked the cockney. "Han Hamerican, hey? Then you'd better 'op a bus."

Al 'opped.

The next afternoon Al observed Mr. Samuel Goldwyn of America indulging in the very British custom of a cup of afternoon tea at the Savoy.

"And waitah," ordered Sam in ultra Mayfair accents, "I think I will also have some strudel."

Major Edward Bowes' amateur radio hour last Sunday night, broadcast from New York through Station WEAF, to National Broadcasting listeners and before a capacity audience at Radio City, reached an impressive moment when the Major read from a time-stained document relating to the Boston anti-tea party, the broadcast being dedicated to the bean town. As the Major continued, it was clear that the document had little regard for tea, and the Major seemed to stress the adjective "despicable" as it appeared in the document in juxtaposition to "tea."

It will be recalled that Major Bowes' program is sponsored by Chase and Sanborn, a coffee company, and that the Major was talking as a paid sales employee.

We nominate as the emptiest threat of a decade that which was expressed last summer by the motion picture Code Authority, and which was passed on through the columns of Motion Picture Daily in the following headline on page one on July 16, 1934:

CAMPI ORDERS QUICK ACTION

Friends in Greenwich Village put up at auction the other night the life works of Maxwell Bodenheim, down-and-out novelist and poet, who, years ago, when both were young, fought and struggled for literary recognition with Ben Hecht. Hecht's prolificness increased a hundred fold. He wrote "The Front Page," newspaper play, and directed motion pictures for Paramount. Scores of stories, movie scenarios, books poured in an unending stream from his typewriter and a correspondent current carried the profits to his bank, the while Bodenheim drifted steadily downward.

Last week's auction was threatening to fail in its purpose, that of raising money so that Max might continue to eat. Ten-cent and quarter bids were the rule, until a woman, unknown to the gathering of writers, dressed richly in the height of fashion, sat down among them.

The auctioneer proceeded:

"Twenty-five cents," quoted some one.

"What? Two-bits for 'Replenishing Jessica'? I'm amazed. . . ."

"Five dollars," called a cool, refined voice.

The audience appeared stupefied.

The next book came up.

"Ten cents!"

"Ten dollars!" said the voice of Lady Bountiful.

Finally all the books were auctioned and the woman had a stack of them in her lap.

"Have you a fountain pen?" she asked the auctioneer, poising her check book.

One was found for her.

The signature she affixed to the check was: "Mrs. Ben Hecht."

"I wish you would bring him out to the studio and I'll make some tests." Rob did, but the tests proved disappointing. Nevertheless, a strong friendship developed and Charlie built a working studio for the artist right on the lot. Redmond died at the turn of this month. UA SETS 26 FEATURE LIMIT, SAYS LICHTMAN

New President Declares Company Will Continue Individual Sales; Seeking New Producer

United Artists is to continue its policy maintained for 17 years calling for individual producers concentrating on a limited output and providing for separate sales on each release. In no year will the company's schedule provide for more than 26 pictures.

Al Lichtman, newly elected president of United Artists, this week made that declaration of company policy, thereby clarifying the situation created by the recent withdrawal of the Schenck-Zanuck 20th Century Pictures from United to align it with Fox, and the simultaneous resignation of Joseph M. Schenck as United Artists president.

Inaugurating the new regime, United Artists Corporation advanced its plans for 1935-36, with the following developments in the week:

The board of directors ratified Mr. Lichtman's five-year contract as president.

The 11-year regime of Joseph M. Schenck as president and chairman formally was terminated when his resignation was accepted.

Mr. Lichtman announced the company definitely will release 25 features next season, plus 18 Walt Disney short subjects.

Art Cinema and Schenck units of stock in the company, purchase of which was ratified by the board, will be retired.

Control of the corporation is now held by Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charles Chaplin and Samuel Goldwyn.

David O. Selznick's contract with the company to distribute his pictures was approved by the board.

Mr. Schenck's connection with United Artists Theatres, of which he is president and chief stockholder, is not affected.

A stockholders' meeting is to be held in Hollywood June 1, following which there will be a directors' session to dispose of unfinished business, including election of a chairman to succeed Mr. Schenck. It was reported not at all unlikely that Mr. Goldwyn will be chosen.

Mr. Lichtman revealed that Mary Pickford has negotiations under way with a well known producer now under contract to a large company, but refused to divulge details other than that the deal depends upon release from his present contract.

"We actually could have closed deals to distribute 100 pictures a year had we so desired," he said, "but we are not interested in acquiring more than one new producer in addition to David O. Selznick."

"As long as there is an industry," he continued, "there will be men and women fighting for recognition who will want to strike out on their own as producers. Our company, distributing pictures individually on their merit, is the only organization set up to handle product of independent producers capable of turning out superior pictures. There is no other outlet through which they could distribute profitably.

"Our policy of individual attention to each production is so sound that it has withstood the test of 17 years through all the storms the industry has passed. No picture is attempted by any of our producers unless it has the ingredients of a successful story.

"The policy of individuality is carried through from production into our sales department and in our advertising and exploitation. It is followed through by our salesmen in the field, all to the end that each picture receives the careful attention it deserves, from the script stage to the time it reaches the public on the screen.

26 Pictures Maximum

"We don't intend at any time to release more than 26 pictures a year. To exceed that number would be to go beyond our capacity to give them adequate attention.

"We intend to stick to our policy of selling pictures on single contracts and separately on their merit, and after screening if the exhibitor so prefers. The exhibitor does not have to buy a pig in the poke from United Artists; we prefer, in fact, that he look at them before buying. Neither does he have to contract for a number of undesirable films to secure one good one."

Far-reaching benefits would follow if all companies would adopt United Artists' methods of dealing with production and distribution, Mr. Lichtman believes.

"The exhibitor would benefit by getting better production from every company," he declared. "The public would have a greater appreciation of the motion picture art. It would eliminate dual bills, premiums and gift nights. It would raise standards generally, and standards definitely need raising.

Charges "Chiseling" on Doubles

"I don't mind duals if the public wants them, but they should be charged for two pictures if they want to see two pictures. Instead, the exhibitor chisels on his price from the distributor and producer. The big producer has been compelled to make cheap pictures to meet low film rentals. If that condition keeps up, worse pictures will be made and the public will sour.

"Under present conditions dual bills in themselves are not indicative of anemic box-office grosses. The only really healthy country in the world from the standpoint of admission prices and the motion picture business generally is England, and duals are universal at theatres in England. The reason for it is so many pictures are made that do not stand up alone.

"Admission prices in this country are too low compared with the cost of making pictures and operating theatres. They could be raised with profit an average of 10 cents without working a hardship on the general public."

Mr. Lichtman announces as definite that the 25 releases will be made up of the following:

Six from Samuel Goldwyn.

Four to six from Alexander Korda's London Film Productions.

Four from David O. Selznick.

Four from a producing organization being formed by Mary Pickford.

Three from Reliance Pictures.

Two from Charles Chaplin.

One or two from British & Dominions Pictures.

One, "Call of the Wild," as the final picture to be delivered by Darryl Zanuck's Twentieth Century.

In addition, said Mr. Lichtman, the company may accept pictures for distribution from independent producers.

Mr. Selznick's contract calls for the delivery of 10 pictures over a period of from two to two and one-half years. He is not acquiring any stock in the company, said Mr. Lichtman. Mr. Selznick, heading David O. Selznick Productions, Inc., will transfer his activities to United Artists late in August when his producer contract with MGM expires.

On reports that Reliance may withdraw from United Artists, Mr. Lichtman replied that if that occurs it will not disturb that company's affiliation with the United Artists distributing organization during 1935-36 as Reliance is committed to deliver three pictures next season.

Miss Pickford, who plans to produce four films a year, will not act in these pictures but will supervise production.

The films to come from British & Dominions will be made expressly for United Artists release in this country exclusive of the company's releases in England, according to Mr. Lichtman. Chaplin plans to produce and direct a picture starring Paulette Goddard upon completion of his current film in September.

Appointment of a general sales manager for United Artists is expected to be announced by Mr. Lichtman at the sales meeting on the coast. Harry L. Gold, eastern sales manager, is understood to be first in line for the post, and any other vacancies will be filled from the ranks. Mr. Lichtman plans to maintain close vigilance of the sales department, in addition to his duties as chief executive.

Stock Purchase Approved

The purchase of 2,000 shares of United Artists' stock from Mr. Schenck and Art Cinema Corporation for $1,300,000 was approved Friday by the United Artists board at a proxy meeting in New York.

An approved purchase price of $650,000 is to be paid for each of the 1,000 units of stock held by Mr. Schenck and Art Cinema. Sale of the Art Cinema holdings must be approved by the chancery court at Wilmington, Del., and approval was indicated Wednesday. The stock will be retired after purchase, leaving company control equally among the four producer-owners, each of whom holds 1,000 shares.

Mr. Lichtman planned to leave Sunday or Monday for the company's annual sales convention starting July 8th in Los Angeles.

Maurice Silverstone, chairman of United Artists Corp., Ltd., of England, arrived late last week. Sam Seidelman, manager of the Mexico office, will be the only other foreign representative to attend.

Douglas Fairbanks is completing his world cruise and is due on the coast July 3 or 4 for the monthly directors' meeting. He may address the convention.

AMPA Honors Lichtman

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers' final weekly luncheon meeting of the summer, at the Motion Picture Club in New York on Thursday, was to honor Mr. Lichtman on his election to the presidency of United Artists. Martin Quigley was among the scheduled speakers.

Among those who made reservations for the luncheon were: H. J. Yates, Felix F. Feist, Jack Cohn, W. Ray Johnston, J. R. Grainger, George Schaefer, Neil Agnew, Arthur Lee, John C. Flinn, Jules Brulatour, Herman Robbins, Harry Thomas, Ned Depinet, Jules Levy, Phil Reisman, E. W. Hammons, E. C. Grainger, Charles McCarthy, C. C. Pettijohn, Arthur W. Kelly, Joseph Moskowitz, Harry Buckley, William Philips, Harry Goetz, Paul Lazarus, Harry L. Gold, Charles Stern, James Mulvey, Dennis F. O'Brien, Moe Streimer, Arthur Dent, William German and Louis Nizer, as well as James Loughborough of the Federal Housing Commission.

These RKO foreign representatives also were to attend: Harry Leasim, Paris; E. D. Leishman, England; Carl Wallman, Denmark; Max Bosman, Belgium; Ralph Hanbury, London; Luis Lezama, Mexico; Nicholas Casazis, Rumania; J. Smit, Holland, and Pierre LeLong, France.

On the program for the day also was the awarding of medals to the AMPA golf team for its victory over the Motion Picture Club team in the Film Golf Tournament.

RADIO'S "HAYS ORGANIZATION" TO STAVE OFF OUTSIDE CONTROL

Institute of the Audible Arts Seeks to Improve Broadcasting Program Standards from Within; Pitts Sanborn Director

Move Comes as New Bill Calls for Revival of Federal Radio Commission Activity with Exclusive Control of Airwaves

Evidence that the radio industry, probably foreseeing the writing on the wall, is bestirring itself to bring about improvement in broadcasting standards is contained in the operations of the Radio Institute of the Audible Arts, a "public relations" group with certain functions similar to those of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

While not representative of the entire radio industry, the Institute, conceived by Edward Bernays, celebrated public relations counsel, is receiving wide recognition as one of the forces working to effect a "purge from within" and to stave off outside control in the form of governmental regulation or ownership. Palpably, the Institute was brought into being by the loud protests over the type of material being sent on the air and the moves in Congress to impose a species of regulation abhorrent to those now in control of radio.

The situation in the radio field bears marked resemblance to certain stages in the film industry which resulted in the founding of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. The stripling radio industry has grown rapidly with little direction, and actuated, insofar as programs are concerned by the shibboleth of "giving the public what it wants." At the same time, distinct from the film business, radio has been subject to certain governmental regulations made necessary by its very nature.

Crystallizing Sentiment

The young Radio Institute of the Audible Arts represents a significant element in the rapidly crystallizing sentiment that the air must be cleansed of the offensive and that standards of broadcasting must be elevated if drastic control is to be averted. Other factors were treated in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of June 15, such as favorable reactions evoked by the 15-point program for the betterment of radio advertising advanced by Roy S. Durstine, executive of a large advertising agency serving radio and motion picture accounts, and policy changes inaugurated by Columbia Broadcasting System to exclude objectionable advertising.

As the radio industry becomes vocal in behalf of a self-reformation, reflected in responses received by the Institute, members of Congress are lending ear to the mounting demand by the public. Representative Managhan of Montana is the latest to introduce a bill to provide "wholesome radio programs free from monopolistic domination and control on the part of the vested interests." It would revive the Federal Radio Commission, separate from the Communications Commission, and give the new bureau "exclusive control," requiring it to "exclusively operate such radio broadcasting stations, in such localities and communities as will best serve the interests of all our people." It would have the right to limit commercial advertising to not more than 20 per cent of the operating time of any station. Not more than 10 per cent could be devoted to "sales or promotional talks or statements." The Monaghan bill would have the Government acquire the nation's broadcasting plant at a price not exceeding 50 per cent of the original cost, representing "substantially less" than the cost of purchasing such equipment.

The Institute's Objectives

In the sweep of such developments came the recent organization of the Radio Institute, with this declaration of purpose:

"The Radio Institute of the Audible Arts was founded by the Philco Radio and Television Corporation as a public service to the American public, to act as a clearing house of information on the broad phases of radio as an instrument of entertainment and culture and to stimulate public recognition and appreciation of the best in radio. The Institute hopes in this way to create a wider demand for good music, news broadcasts, dissemination of opinion and educational programs, thereby encouraging the public to reap the fullest benefits from existing radio broadcasts. If the Radio Institute of the Audible Arts can quicken public interest in worthwhile radio programs, the enormous influence of the radio for good may be realized."

The Institute invited correspondence with groups and individuals interested in the radio "in its fullest aspect as an instrument of education and entertainment." It is also suggested that listeners write to broadcasters and sponsors of programs they have enjoyed, expressing appreciation. "As the discriminating members of the radio audience become more articulate," added the Institute, "radio itself will become increasingly worthwhile."

In these statements of principles and purpose, the Institute adopted a program closely resembling the public relations work of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America under Carl E. Milliken. The Institute's contacts are chiefly with clubs, church leaders, educational institutions and welfare and social service organizations. A difference is in the fact that the Institute is the project of only one company.

Pitts Sanborn Director

Pitts Sanborn, music critic and commentator of the New York World-Telegram, is director of the Radio Institute. He is assisted by an advisory committee consisting of:

LYMAN BRYSON, professor of education, Teachers College, Columbia University.

BOAKE CARTER, radio news commentator.

PETER W. DYKEMA, professor of music education, Teachers College, Columbia University.

MRS. SIDONIE MATSNER GRUENBERG, director of the Child Study Association of America.

DR. THOMAS H. REED, chairman, Committee on Civic Education by Radio.

SIGMUND SPAETH, writer, musician and lecturer.

DR. LEVERING TYSON, director, National Advisory Council on Radio in Education.

The committee will be enlarged gradually to include men and women prominent in fields such as international relations, adult education and other social aspects of radio programs. Kathleen Goldsmith is executive director of the Radio Institute.

Program Bulletin Service

The Institute has inaugurated a program bulletin service of recommended radio programs in various fields, such as music, informative talks, children's programs, entertainment. These bulletins are published monthly and provided without charge to interested groups, individuals and organizations. The recommended programs of the Institute have been reprinted in newspapers, posted in libraries and schools, distributed by clubs, utilized by teachers as an aid to school work and in outside cultural assignments. These bulletins have been used as an aid in the formation of listening groups, since they give advance information on outstanding musical and other programs.

The Institute encourages formation of clubs or "listening groups" with a system of "planned listening," as a social and educational activity. Information is given for a special series of groups listening to music broadcasts, this material being prepared by Mr. Sanborn.

In this respect the Radio Institute is sponsoring an activity in competition with motion picture theatres. The group listening idea, under the Institute's guidance, has been put into effect on a broad scale.

Twenty-seven hundred letters greeted "America's Town Meeting of the Air," the first of a series of serious, hour-long discussions now being broadcast weekly from the Town Hall in New York.

The Institute's files indicate correspondence with 5,000 clubs and leaders in their representative fields, similar to the contacts of the MPPDA's public relations department.

Through information thus received, the Institute serves as a clearing house for helpful radio information and as a stimulation towards appreciation of the better programs. Besides its bulletin service, the Institute has published booklets, manuals and lectures by authorities, several of them members of the Institute's Advisory Committee.

FILMS AND RADIO AS TOMORROW'S SCHOOL

Films and the radio as the mediums of instruction in the school room of tomorrow are envisioned by a superintendent of schools in a Southern state who writes to the Radio Institute of Audible Arts as follows:

"I have a vision of the school of tomorrow leaning very heavily upon radio and sound picture equipment for its best educational effort. I think I see in the program of your Radio Institute of the Audible Arts a start toward the demand which will bring about the type of programs at periods within the school day which will necessitate radio equipped school rooms. . . . I hope to see the day when teachers in the local school will have the status of counsellor and laboratory assistant and most of the teaching process will be done by the very best talent in the world through the medium of sound pictures and radio."

NEWSREEL TELEVISION REPORTED IN GERMANY

Montreal Awaits Citywide Service; Equipment Agreement Is Made for England

Broadcasting of newsreel pictures by television from the scene of the event to a screen in the theatre or home is reported from Germany as the latest accomplishment of science toward perfecting this pictorial medium. There were other advancements reported, too, as follows:

Montreal was expecting a citywide television service.

The first television broadcast was accomplished in the South.

American interests concluded a television equipment agreement with British.

Five hundred exhibitors met in Cardiff, Wales, to discuss television's possible relation to the theatre.

Communications systems continued to squabble at Washington over AT&T's proposed television transmission by telephone.

Television of color was reported from Belgium.

Germany's new television "pickup" newsreel car carries on its roof a standard motion picture sound camera, as do all such trucks, but with added equipment for televising. The truck's roof is cast iron, and a hollow pillar of the tri-cornered camera support is used to convey the exposed film ribbon to a dark room in the interior of the car. By use of special apparatus and extremely fast-working chemicals, the film is developed, according to Radio News, which reports the operation, in one and one-half minutes.

The still-wet film then is sent at once through a socalled "Abtastgerat," which cuts the single-film pictures into 180 lines and transforms each line in a succession of strong and weak electrical impulses. The impulses then are radiated from a transmitter into the air and the television "listener," receiving these impulses through his televisor, may see the broadcast.

Montreal Reports Television Gain

Evidence of the first tangible interest in television to come from Canada was brought to New York last week by William Hoyt Peck, New York inventor, visiting from Montreal. Mr. Peck said that television, of a clarity almost equal to home motion pictures, is now a reality in the Dominion.

The first phase of the development in Canada has been completed, he said, having to do with the experimental work in connection with the problem of selecting waves and equipment to broadcast the images.

The second phase will be the installation of permanent apparatus and the putting of broadcasts on a service basis. "We are now broadcasting pictures 16 inches square on a wavelength of six meters, through the metropolitan area of Montreal, the furthest distance covered having been 60 miles," Mr. Peck told the New York press.

"By July 1st," he added, "we expect to supply Ottawa with images from the Montreal station."

One of the important discoveries claimed by Mr. Peck in Canada was that a mile of steel buildings in the heart of a city could be pierced by six-meter television waves. Another development was a special aerial system which "concentrates the energy of the pictures in desired locations, without wasting the power on undesirable locations." A third discovery, he added, was that six-meter waves, under certain conditions, seemed to penetrate hills.

Call letters of the Montreal station are VE9AK. The transmitter is in the Dominion Square Building, in the heart of the city. Its power will soon be raised to 1,000 watts.

South Gets First Broadcast

Announced as the first television broadcast in the South, a demonstration was given at New Orleans in the establishment of D. H. Holmes, Ltd., by Wendell McMahill, television pioneer.

Mr. McMahill stood before a transmitter on the fourth floor of the department store while spectators in "Holmes' Television Theatre" on the second floor heard his voice and saw his face power will soon be raised to 1,000 watts.

British in Deal with Americans

From California came announcement of an arrangement between the Farnsworth television interests of San Francisco and Baird Television Company, Ltd., London, whereby Baird will use the Philo T. Farnsworth cold cathode filamentless television equipment through the British Empire. This agreement puts television squarely into the motion picture business in England, since Gaumont British owns a controlling interest in the Baird corporation.

On the other hand, Harry Boyd Brown, executive of Philco Radio and Television Corporation, visiting San Francisco, suggested that television still is four years away in this country because the American public is too lax to help pioneer the new industry.

Philco, licensed to manufacture television receiving sets based on the Farnsworth system, has a set to market for $275 that could be made available in quantities in 30 days, but no broadcasting station in this country is able to provide programs, according to Mr. Brown.

Television Up at Exhibitor Meet

Five hundred British theatre owners, members of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, gathered in annual convention at Cardiff, Wales, to discuss the progress of television and to study its possible reactions on and relations to the box offices of motion picture theatres.

Decision Pends on AT&T Request

The Federal Communications Commission's decision on the petition of American Telephone and Telegraph to engage in television experimentation was still pending at Washington.

The Telephone Company asked permission to install a television cable between New York and Philadelphia, but Western Union and Postal Telegraph vigorously opposed the move for fear that the new service may be made available for commercial telegraph work. A hearing was held last week.

Plans for RCA's field test of high definition television to begin some time next year are being developed under the direction of an intercompany committee named this week by David Sarnoff, president of RCA. The committee, headed by Dr. W. R. G. Baker, vice-president and general manager of RCA-Victor, will draw on the experience and resources of RCA in formulating details of the field test.

Reports of a television invention making possible the transmission of images in their original colors simultaneously with sound and picture reached New York last week from Brussels, Belgium, where an invention of Leon Damas, radio experimenter, was said to employ a screened lamp which can be produced at a wholesale cost of $10.

Joseph Schenck, In from England, Honored by U.A.

Honoring Joseph M. Schenck, who withdrew as president and chairman of the board of United Artists to become chairman of the recently merged Fox-Twentieth Century, executives of United Artists gathered at a luncheon at the Ritz-Carlton in New York on Tuesday.

After tribute was paid the film leader who had guided the destinies of United Artists for a decade, a gold cigarette case was presented him by Al Lichtman, who succeeded Schenck as president, and these executives: Joseph Moskowitz, Harry Buckley, Arthur W. Kelly, Paul Lazarus, W. P. Philips, Harry Gold, Hal Horne, Dennis F. O'Brien, Morris Helprin, H. J. Muller, Paul Burger, Charles Stern and Monroe Greenthal.

Upon his arrival from abroad on the Normandie late last week, Mr. Schenck revealed that Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, will fill the same capacity with the new company. Darryl Zanuck and Winfield Sheehan will be vice-presidents.

Mr. Kent, Mr. Schenck, Mr. Zanuck and William Goetz will leave for Coast product conferences. The Zanuck films will be sold separately.

Scouting reports that the Fox name will be dropped, Mr. Schenck asserted that the name of the merged organizations will be Fox-Twentieth Century. He said the company plans to make between 55 and 60 pictures for next season's release. Incorporation of the new company will shortly be completed, he said. Papers concluding the arrangement will be signed this week.

It was announced upon Mr. Schenck's arrival that Fox Film stockholders will meet in July to ratify the merger. No opposition to the move is anticipated.

Denying that a stock issue for public subscription was planned, Mr. Schenck said that 1,250,000 shares of common stock will be issued and divided equally among the Fox and Schenck groups. The new financial structure also provides for an issue of approximately $40,000,000 preferred stock, with a par value of $30 per share. The Fox interests will acquire control of the preferred through receiving $36,000,000 of the total, the Schenck group being allocated about $5,000,000, said Mr. Schenck, adding that he expected the preferred soon to earn $1.50 a share. Twentieth Century earned $1,500,000 in the past year, he said.

Mr. Schenck also denied that Fox plans to gain control of Gaumont British through buying the Ostrer 49 per cent interest in the company. He said reports were unfounded that United Artists or United Artists Theatres were seeking control of the Deutsch-Donada circuit in Great Britain and pointed out that United Artists already owns a 50 per cent interest in the former group and 33 per cent of the latter. Mr. Schenck's withdrawal from United Artists Corporation does not affect his interest in United Artists Theatres.

As part of plans to produce 10 Fox-Twentieth Century pictures a year in England, Mr. Schenck said he had signed Elisabeth Bergner for three productions.

U. S. TRIAL OF ST. LOUIS CASE OFF UNTIL FALL

Texas Quiz Expected to Go On; Out-of-Court Settlement Awaited in Chicago Case

The usual seasonal inactivity of the federal courts in the summer will bring a respite until fall to the distributor and affiliated circuit defendants in the Government's criminal-indictment prosecution in St. Louis.

It does not appear, however, that the Department of Justice will delay its investigation into exhibitor complaints against distributors in Texas.

An out-of-court settlement was in the offing in the federal court conspiracy case instituted in Chicago by Astor Theatre Company, independent, against Balaban & Katz and the large distributors.

Both Washington officialdom and legal spokesmen for the industry were silent on the Texas situation, but it is understood that the Code Authority finally turned over its Texas records after receiving a strongly worded command from the Justice Department.

The Texas investigation is similar to the surveys being made quietly in several other territories where exhibitors complained to the Department about alleged distributor-circuit aggressions.

St. Louis Postponement Indicated

All the preliminary legal skirmishing in the government's anti-trust conspiracy case in St. Louis against Warner Brothers, Paramount, RKO, their affiliates and individual officers, was concluded last week when United States Distdict Judge George Moore took under advisement the motions filed on behalf of RKO. Distributing and president Ned Depinet for sustaining of a demurrer to the indictment as it applies to those defendants, and secondly for a bill of particulars to enable them to properly defend themselves against the charges should the court overrule the demurrer.

Judge Moore granted only four days for the filing of briefs and indicated that he may hand down an early decision on both motions. However, when the question of a day for the actual trial of the case on its merits was raised he indicated that he would not depart from the customary policy of the court not to hold lengthy trials during July and August.

On the question of a date for the trial Russell Hardy, special assistant to the United States attorney general, again pleaded for an early trial, contending that the personal physical comfort of the jury, judge and attorneys in the case should not outweigh the necessity for a quick disposal of the issues in order to stop exhibitor complainants in the proceedings "from bleeding to death."

Warns of Loss to Theatres

He argued that if the trial is too long delayed it will prove a "useless procedure." Catching up a comment by former United States Senator James A. Reed, of counsel for Warner Brothers, that a lengthy summer trial would prove a murderous operation, Mr. Hardy said: "If this case is not tried soon it will prove a murderous operation performed successfully on the victims of this conspiracy." He said that too much delay would destroy the business of the complainants and also result in additional loss to 5,000 or 6,000 bondholders interested in the Ambassador, New Grand Central and Missouri theatres, subjects of the complaint. He said the court should be able to dispose of the motion between now and July 15 and proceed with the trial at once.

Senator Reed and Sam B. Jeffries, of local counsel for Warner Brothers, in their statements to Judge Moore concerning the probable length of the trial, indicated that the defense will counter with a "vicious" attack on the business methods of Fanchon & Marco and Harry Koplar, St. Louis exhibitor. Both figure as St. Louis complainants. Mr. Jeffries indicated that an effort will be made to review the 20-year motion picture career of Mr. Koplar, while Senator Reed commented on the fact that Fanchon & Marco had endeavored to obtain a monopoly of the first run theatres in St. Louis, declaring that he had been informed $1,000 a month was being paid to keep closed the St. Louis theatre at Grand and Delmar boulevards, and commenting upon the fact that the Ambassador theatre was closed about the time the conspiracy case was originally set for trial before Judge Davis.

Mr. Hardy, however, is expected to confine the trial to the period covered by the indictment.

Calls Indictment Vague

Col. William J. Donovan, of the New York law firm of Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Lumbard, in arguing for the sustaining of the demurrer, contended that the Government's indictment as to the alleged participation of Mr. Depinet and RKO in the conspiracy was "too vague and indefinite" to constitute a case under the anti-trust law.

Mr. Hardy, answering this contention, said that the indictment not only set forth the charge but also stated the manner in which the anti-trust act was violated.

Col. Donovan rejoined that the Government was charging a partnership for an illegal purpose and should show not only the agreement but also the course of conduct pursued in carrying out the agreement; this, he said, the indictment did not do.

Unusual Procedure

Then, with the question of demurrer finally submitted to the court, a very unusual proceeding took place, the hearing of the pleadings relative to the motion for a bill of particulars. It is customary to make such a move only after the court has finally passed on the question of a demurer. It was with the reservation that the arguments on the bill of particulars should not prejudice their position relative to the demurrer that counsel for the defense took up the arguments relative to whether the indictment as reported into court gave the defendants sufficient information as to the probable testimony against them.

Jacob Mark Lashly, of the St. Louis law firm of Holland, Lashly & Donnell, contended that the indictment was loosely drawn, indefinite, vague and too general in its allegations, not only as to the time and place of the alleged illegal acts, but also as to the persons who performed them. He argued that a bill of particulars would not only help to prevent the defendants walking into a legal ambush but, he held, it would clarify the issues and simplify the trial of the case. "We want to avoid the element of surprise and embarrassment," he said.

Mr. Hardy on the other hand contended that the defendants had sufficient knowledge concerning the various points covered by the indictment; that they knew who the witnesses before the grand jury were and had photostatic copies of document and records presented.

Ochs, Circuit Head And Film Veteran, Dies in New York

Lee A. Ochs, independent theatre circuit operator in Metropolitan New York, a veteran of the motion picture business, died late last week after being stricken with appendicitis. He was 55 years old.

Mr. Ochs was born in Cincinnati in 1880, and opened the first nickelodeon on Eighth avenue in New York at the age of 25. He acquired other houses until his circuit reached a total of 10. Six of his theatres in the West Bronx recently were turned over to Consolidated Amusements under an operating deal, and four others, the Uptown, Yorktown, Midtown and Costello, were taken over by RKO under a long term arrangement.

Mr. Ochs was one of the pioneers of motion picture production at Fort Lee, N. J. He also made "Road to London" in England. At one time he acted as business manager for Theda Bara and Bryant Washburn when they were famous. For two years he was president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the City of New York and served two terms as president of the National Exhibitors' League of America. For years he opposed exhibitor combines.

He operated the Piccadilly theatre on Broadway until 1924 when he sold it to Warner. It was renamed the Warner and became the first of the Warner circuit. He was a member of the Motion Picture Club at the time of his death, having been one of its founders. He was a 32d degree Mason and an Elk.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Carrie Ochs; a son, Millard, and a daughter, Willa.

Pathe News Wins Achievement Prize

Pathe News last week was awarded the first prize for the "outstanding newsreel achievement of the year," in an international contest sponsored by the National Headliners' Club, for its presentation of exclusive pictures of the Dionne quintuplets. The award was made at the annual dinner of the club, held in Atlantic City. The presentation was made to Jack S. Connolly, general manager of Pathe News, by Governor Harold Hoffman of New Jersey.

Fox Movietone News was awarded second prize for its pictures of the assassination of the king of Jugoslavia in France. Pathe also was awarded honorable mention for one of the "most spectacular newsreel scoops of the year," in its picturization of the flood in Colorado Springs, Colo., in which a man and woman are shown swept to their deaths from the roof of a stranded automobile. The award was made jointly to Pathe News and Paul M. Koons, Jr., Pathe cameraman, who took the picture at the risk of his life.

This was the first competition sponsored by the club, with awards made for the 10 outstanding journalistic achievements in the four news fields, newspapers, newsreels, news still photos and radio news broadcasts.

Drama

Romance, drama, and the thrill action connected with construction of a giant suspension bridge combine with strong cast names in the leads to give this picture potential box office strength. The suspension span across California's Golden Gate, to be the largest of its kind in the world, forms the greater part of the picture's locale, and opens the way for interesting lobby display material in the form of bridge models and the like.

As a further selling impetus, and offering an opportunity for directing an appeal at the feminine contingent of the audience, there is in the story the element of conflict between a man and a woman with respect to her continuance of the work she has been doing, and wants to do, after their marriage. It is a conflict which results in a break between them, despite the fact that they are in love with each other, and the reconciliation comes only when she proves to him that her work, aiding others in distress, is just as important as his, the construction of gigantic bridges. The masculine patronage may be attracted almost entirely by the action phases of the picture.

Sharing the leading roles are Kay Francis and George Brent, a couple who have been paired before, and either of whom may be considered a strong box office attraction. In chief support are Patricia Ellis, Robert Barrat, Barton MacLane and Donald Woods. Barrat, as the foreign-born steel worker, gives an especially good performance and supplies some of the incidental comedy.

Miss Francis is a worker for the Travelers' Aid Society in San Francisco, her post in the railroad terminal. Miss Ellis, spoiled wealthy girl, is given a job because her mother has donated considerable money, but the girl's job is merely a ruse to meet her friend without her mother's knowledge. Brent comes to the station, angry, looking for Barrat, his best steel worker, who has been shipped home by the Travelers' Aid. She and Brent recognize each other as childhood friends, and find a mutual attraction. Brent is superintendent of the new bridge project.

Brent is approached by MacLane, running a shakedown racket under the guise of "protection" on the bridge job, and threatens Brent with trouble if he doesn't pay up. Brent throws him out. Brent and Miss Francis find themselves in love, but Brent insists that she give up her work, which he calls useless, in assisting derelicts. Brent is hurt in a fight with MacLane and some of his men who try to collect money they want. Miss Francis dresses his injuries, then they quarrel and part when Miss Francis refuses to give up her work, in which she is deeply interested.

MacLane, to excite the men, passes drinks to them at lunch, and one man falls and is killed. Brent is blamed, the men hold a mass meeting seeking Brent's dismissal, and MacLane holds in his office, at gun point, the man who knows him and his methods. Barrat, loyal to Brent, breaks in with his boss, while Miss Francis tries to talk the men out of their threatened action. Barrat and Brent bring MacLane to the meeting, he is forced to confess his plans, and is left to the tender mercies of the angered men, while Miss Francis and Brent leave together, he understanding the value of her work, she forgiving him.—AARONSON, New York.

Men Without Names

(Paramount)

Drama

This is a drama of secret service men rather than a story of the secret service. An original, only one incident in it is even vaguely reminiscent of any flaming headline crime. As such it gets away from the stock G-man stuff and provides a unique brand of entertainment in its own right. The element of comedy assumes a more important function as it pertains to both the in and out of line activities of government investigators. While making possible many laughs in both situations and dialogue, it also preserves the elements of suspense and personal danger, and it is climaxed by a highly theatric bit of shoot-'em-up heroics which gives the feature an interest holding quality.

A bank car is robbed, guards are killed and the mobsters make their getaway past state lines and via motorboat. Stolen bills begin turning up in a small western town. A freshman G-man, Grant, is assigned to discover their source. As Hood, supposedly the agent of an air line company looking for a landing field, he checks numbers of the "hot" bills but apparently devotes most of his time making an impression on Helen, a newspaper woman, in which activity he has the help of her little brother David. Sequences show ruthless gangster methods in which Monk cruelly abuses banker Webster, who through loyalty to his yegg brother Red, and fear, passes out the stolen money. In the guise of a peddler of tinware, Agent Lambert combines with Grant in tracking down the gang and Lambert is killed when he discovers their hideout. Helen is grabbed by the mob as is David when Webster uses him as a messenger. Helen is tossed out of a speeding auto, but the boy is held as a shield when the gangsters find all roads of escape blocked. Returning to their hideout, Grant makes a one-man raid, kills Monk, and is himself wounded as other officers mow down the rest of the mob. The finale brings romance for Grant and Helen.

Besides the many methods of exploitation that have been used in connection with this character of picture there are several other available, particularly the manner in which the investigators use classified ad sections for communications, the various methods in which they conceal their identity, and the use of tapped telephone lines. Nevertheless, the type of entertainment seems to be of more importance in creating patron curiosity than either in story content or cast names.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Make a Million

(Monogram)

Comedy

Packed with a host of easily adapted exploitation angles, this novel comedy is both a showman's show and audience entertainment. A fast moving laugh provoker is spun out of the improbable materials that make day dreaming such a popular pastime. Based on a series of chain letters to distribute the wealth and unique ways to transfer money from the pockets of those who have it to those of us who don't, it is essentially topical. In touching upon those topics it takes a whack at everything in the economic line from semi-ridiculing brain-truster theories to graphic illustrations of highpowered panhandling.

College professor Jones, exponent of many unique financial isms, loses his job following a jam with prize student Irene, whose nabob father is the school's wealthiest trustee. Publisher Moxey, whose chain of papers take particular delight in smacking anything savoring of radicalism, soon has Jones on the fire as a national menace. Pete, a past master in the art of panhandling, and Benny and Soapy, minor exponents of getting it easy, conceive the idea of broadcasting a send-a-dollar chain letter. Abetted by Larkey, reporter on one of Moxey's sheets, who scents a story, the dollars drop like leaves in the Fall. Conscience-stricken Irene has become a party to the scheme, and when Jones and Pete gather a gang of bums to pose them as financial powers, her banker father, Corning, amazed that someone other than those of his own ilk is managing to corner a lot of cash, tries to throw a monkey wrench in the scheme. By adapting a share-the-wealth plan for distribution of surplus product, a semblance of legality is given the plan and a legal way to keep the dollars flowing is established. ories, it means great commissions for its sponsors and love and happiness for Jones and Irene.

Comedy, the kind of stuff that most people are familiar with because of having fallen for it at one time or another, looks to be the medium with which to sell the show. It's wide open for any number of tricky exploitation ideas, both those used in the picture itself and others that might have a particular local significance. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

Ladies Crave Excitement

(Mascot)

Drama

An action picture of newsreel cameramen and their thrill-chasing jobs, with comedy and romance intermingled, this has a somewhat misleading title, which probably will necessitate explanation of some sort by the exhibitor in order to overcome the title implication that this is a smart, sophisticated drawing room story, which it emphatically is not.

The action premise is the best for selling purposes, with an indication that the title implies a girl's desire to do a man's job with a newsreel camera. The romance theme, of a wealthy girl and a hard working, wisecracking, ace newsreel cameraman, might be made appealing by using the fact that the man falls in love with a wealthy girl he dislikes, while she does her share by using another name. Also there is a father-son complication, as the apprentice cameraman is put through his paces by order of his father, the tough editor of the reel.

The cast is headed by Norman Foster, with Evalyn Knapp, Esther Ralston, Eric Linden and Purnell Pratt in chief supporting roles. Not in themselves strong drawing names on a theatre marquee, they are nevertheless familiar, but indicate the need of concentrating more on story content than names in the selling of the picture.

Foster, ace cameraman, has Linden, son of Purnell Pratt, the boss, as his assistant cameraman. Assigned to cover army day maneuvers, the show is broken up by a daring woman flier, Miss Knapp, daughter of the head of a rival newsreel, whom Foster never has met but about whom he knows a good deal. His next assignment is to cover a racing handicap, against his will, and while Linden handles the regular shooting of the race, Foster prowls about with his hand camera. He meets Miss Knapp, she introduces herself as the daughter of the horse's trainer, and they become friends on the spot. Later he sees Jason Robards and a companion steal into the horse's stall, and is in time to film the two doping the horse, which belongs to Miss Knapp's father and is the favorite. The race is cancelled. The conspirators are jailed, and the Knapp-Foster romance goes on apace. After a quarrel with Pratt, Foster quits and develops an idea for a dramatized newsreel of current events picturing the background of each occurrence. The close similarity to the "March of Time" reel caused comment among a previewing group.

Foster's idea goes over, with Miss Knapp's help, but just as they are about to break it with Pratt's company, the rival company announces a similar idea. Foster learns Miss Knapp's identity, believes she double-crossed him, and they quarrel. Linden, angered by his father's attitude, had been the source of the "leak." Then Robards and two companions escape from prison and hold up Miss Knapp to use her car. Linden goes after them in his newsreel truck, is knocked out and Foster, learning the truth, follows. They pick up the trail and capture the gang, the rival reel's crew getting there just too late. The conclusion has a merger of the two newsreels and the identities of Miss Knapp and Foster.—Aaronson, New York.

Village Tale

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Adapted from a novel by Phil Stong, which may well be a selling point for the exhibitor, this picture tells in strongly dramatic fashion the story of the havoc nearly wrecked in the lives of several innocent persons through the vengeance of one man and the biting, gossipy tongues of many others in a small village where everyone's business is everyone else's.

It is a film which, in consequence of that theme, may be expected to appeal to patrons in smaller communities, where such occurrences as are pictured, although perhaps not in quite this extreme form, have happened before, and will again. That does not mean that the film is adaptable only to the theatre in the smaller community.

The cast names are familiar, if not outstanding, the leading players being Randolph Scott and Kay Johnson, with the support featuring Arthur Hohl, Robert Barrat, Donald Meek and Guinn Williams.

Romance, honest and innocent of wrongdoing, is made to look ugly and dishonest through the efforts of the man who wants most of all to hurt the one who lives well and is respected by the village while he has nothing and lives in a shack because of his own indolence.

Scott is the respected and honored villager who operates the largest farm, Barrat the vengeful hater. At one time, it is understood, their families started together, but one was left far behind. Hohl, Barrat's brother, is married to Miss Johnson, although his treatment of her is cruel. She married him out of gratitude because of earlier kindness when her parents died.

Scott is in love with her, and she with him, although neither will admit it. When they, together, prepare the church for a coming festival, Barrat sees an opportunity to stir trouble, aided by his daughter, Dorothy Burgess, who is herself in love with Scott, and resents his refusal to pay any attention to her. The sawdust box congregation in the general store is happy at the opportunity of finding food for gossip and the talk goes about the town, until Barrat gives his brother the idea of following his wife to church and firing upon Scott. His wife leaves him and goes to live in the house of Edward Ellis, the community's old man and friend of Scott. Meek, Scott's farm helper, tries to defend his boss, and is badly pummeled by the towering Barrat.

Scott finds Meek, goes after Barrat and beats him nearly to death. Meek commits suicide and finally the townspeople come to learn the truth, and beat Barrat out of town. Hohl, frightened, follows, with the understanding that Miss Johnson, found by Scott, will be able to marry him when desertion shows the way to divorce.

Although down-to-earth material in every respect, there is rather too much drama, too much indicated cruelty and striking examples of men's inhumanity to man to make the picture adaptable to family showing. It is adult material.—Aaronson, New York.

Struggle for Life

(Majestic)

Travel Subject

Major C. Court Treatt, an Englishman, producing for Foy Productions, Ltd., of Hollywood, took his camera and his crew into a comparatively little known section of the world, at least to motion picture audiences. In the great Soudan area of northern Africa, Major Treatt obviously spent many months with the native Habbania tribe of Arabs, filming their everyday existence, making real drama of their eternal struggle to keep alive, to keep their cattle. A sharp action highlight is the rushing spread of a roaring forest fire.

Insignificant comparatively, yet adding interest to the picture as a whole, is a romance of two of the young folk of the tribe, as well as a story thread developed to carry the story of the tribe through many years, as an orphaned infant grows to youth and manhood. Since the people and the territory concerned are but little known, the film has more than usual interest for pictures of its kind. Furthermore, it has been so constructed as to extract from the raw material as much as possible of drama.

Whether the film would be able to stand alone on the theatre program, as the feature attraction, is questionable, especially in view of its comparatively short running time, but it is nonetheless interesting material.

The film opens with pictures of the tribe, moving through the forest in search of a new home. A woman is killed by a lion, and her infant, saved from a snake, is adopted by one of the women of the trible, who has a son. The boys grow up together, their companion a girl who continually apes them. As they grow to young manhood they become two of the tribe's ablest hunters, and are honored accordingly. Then comes a drought, and the people are in danger unless water and food can be found. The two finds a good site, the tribe starts.

Nearing their destination, they are overtaken by a forest fire and flee madly to the nearest river. The father, chief of the tribe, is lost, his son goes back to find him, and both are struck by a falling tree. The orphan returns, finds the father dead, and carries his friend across the river to safety, only to find the victim dead. The orphan is named chief of the tribe.—Aaronson, New York.

the next installment. With Jones are Murial Evans, an attractive and capable heroine, and such old-timers as William Desmond, Walter Miller and Frank McGlynn, Sr. The serial is filled with the sort of action of the West that the youngsters like, its romance is the usual sort, and the danger and hazards that the hero and his friends suffer at the hands of Villain Miller and his henchmen are all that they should be. It tells the yarn of a land rush of the early West, a gold-filled section on new land, and the efforts of Miller to obtain, at whatever cost, that land for himself. The first three chapters of the 15-chapter serial are indicative of real action to come. They are titled "The Land Rush," "The Torrent of Terror" and "Flaming Peril," and run 20, 21 and 20 minutes respectively.

Time Out
Amusing

There are amusing moments in this comedy, featuring Tom Howard, supported by George Shelton. Tom is warned by an astrologer that a certain date will be unlucky for him, inherits some money and goes on a world cruise with George. En route he suddenly discovers that crossing the Pacific he has lost the unlucky day. His efforts to find where the lost day has gone, and to understand George's explanation are amusing. Also he tries to propose to the wife of a ship's officer, the girl being a sleepwalker to complicate matters for Tom. It should be especially entertaining for those who like Howard's particular brand of comedy.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Gypsy Sweetheart
(Vitaphone)
Entertaining

Done entirely in Technicolor, this number of the Broadway Brevities series features attractive dance ensembles, and effectively rendered songs, chiefly by Winifred Shaw. Phillip Reed, attending his sister's debut lawn party, brings with him Miss Shaw, the gypsy girl, and her tribe, who entertain at the party after taking care of the festive board. Miss Shaw and Reed find a mutual attraction in one another, but she is forced to leave with her people. Especially by reason of the color effects achieved, the subject may well be given special attention in the theatre's billing.—Running time, 20 minutes.

A Modern Red Riding Hood
Amusing

Little Red Riding Hood, in very modern dress, literally, and driving a high-powered car, is courted, then pursued, by the wolf—on a bicycle. He gets into grandma's bed, but it is the modern folding kind and Mr. Wolf gets his just deserts, and finally is chased by a squad of motorcycle policemen. An amusing subject.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Rimac's Rhumba Orchestra
(Vitaphone)
Lively, Tuneful

This number of the Melody Master series, featuring the lively rhumba band, is a fast paced, tunefully musical subject, with specialty dancers and vocalists interspersed with the rendition by the band of the typically characteristic music of its Cuban origin. The subject should be found entertaining by almost any type of audience.—Running time, 10 minutes.

All for One
Fair

Featuring Sylvia Froos and Warren Hull, vocalists, this might have had a better story, although the song numbers are done effectively. Miss Froos, with her father, visits one of his old friends, who has a son, Hull. After one of his escapades, his father insists he marry. He mails proposals to four girls accidentally, Miss Froos arrives, he falls in love with her, and the four girls accept. Hull's frantic efforts to save the day and get out of the uncomfortable position are fruitless, until Miss Froos rescues him and gets rid of the girls.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Remember the Maine
(Vitaphone)
Interesting

Number 10 of the "See America First" series, produced by E. M. Newman, this is rather more interesting than the earlier subjects, covering the period from 1898 to 1917. Picturing important historical landmarks and monuments, the series covers the country's history in highlights. Touching a comparatively later period, this subject has actual newsreel material, which is of real interest. The funeral of McKinley, pictures of Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft and Woodrow Wilson, and the taking over of the Virgin Islands by the United States are the most interesting scenes in the subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Hyp-Nut-Tist
(Paramount)
Good Cartoon

Popeye, the sailor of cartoon fame, herein takes his best girl to the vaudeville show, there to see the hypnotist. Popeye is anything but convinced, but changes his mind when the performer takes Olive Oyl as a subject and changes her into a chicken. When Popeye goes to the rescue he suffers a similar fate, until the old reliable spinach gets in its work, after which it is too bad for the hypnotist. As usual with this series, an entertaining and amusing cartoon.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Amateur Night
Good

A good cartoon, this is a burlesque on the popular amateur nights on the radio, as the cartooned animals gather at the studio to hear the applicants, while others gather at their radio sets to hear the efforts. Burlesqued cleverly are Rudy Vallee, Stepin Fetchit, Bing Crosby and the like. An entertaining cartoon number.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Stranger than Fiction No. 10
(Universal)
Interesting

As is generally true, this subject in the series depicting oddities spotted by the camera in the four corners of the globe, contains material which should be found of general interest and in a sense informative. Highlighting this number are scenes of the Missouri town entirely run by women; the descendant of a long line of sword makers, still practicing that exacting art in New York City; the young Californian who is a sculptor with a blow torch; the women of Seattle who capably operates a fleet of sternwheelers on Puget Sound.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Ski Scrapers
Good

An interesting and scenically effective subject, telling, chiefly in pictures, something of the sport of the ski. On the snow and ice-covered slopes of a mountain in central Europe is seen a group of unquestioned experts. Their skill, their daring and their grace, as they race down the slopes, over snow banks, across ledges with ease and poise, makes of this a subject which should have wide appeal and be found generally interesting. The camera work is a definite asset to the short.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Mercy, on 23rd Anniversary Takes Sons Into Partnership

On the occasion recently of the 23rd anniversary of the opening of Fred Mercy's first theatre, in Yakima, Wash., the circuit operator was besieged with congratulatory messages. The Yakima Morning Herald published a special section devoted entirely to the anniversary, detailing the background of the Mercy Circuit and the various theatres included. In addition to the articles on the circuit were advertisements of congratulation from local merchants as well as practically all the major film companies.

Mr. Mercy at the same time dedicated a new $45,000 building to be used as the administrative headquarters of the circuit, and took his three sons into partnership with him. They, and their new positions in the Junior Amusement Company, are: Frederick Mercy, Jr., secretary; Paul F. Mercy, vice-president, and Edgar B. Mercy, treasurer. Arch Bartholet is division manager of the theatres outside of Yakima and is city manager of the four Yakima houses. There are three houses in Walla Walla, one in Toppenish, one in Pasco, one in Sunnyside and one in Kennewick.

Cinematography Group Makes Numerous Awards

The American Institute of Cinematography recently announced in Hollywood the bestowal of awards on the following screen personalities: Bette Davis, Helen Hayes, Paul Muni, Howard Estabrook, Walter Disney, Frank Capra, Rouben Mamoulian, Frank Lloyd, George Cukor, W. S. Van Dyke, Ernst Lubitsch, Sidney Franklin, King Vidor, Richard Boleslawski and Victor Milner.

Loew's, RKO Plan No Summer Closings

Loew's and RKO plan no theatre closings for the summer, it was learned in New York last week. Loew's operates on a 40-week rental basis and already has paid rents for the 10-week summer period. RKO has discontinued the practice of charging off rents for the summer months. Loew's recently closed the Lyric and Bridgeport, Conn., and unless plans are changed, the house will remain dark until after September 1.

J. J. Franklin Expands In Hawaiian Territory

J. J. Franklin, former division manager of the RKO interests in San Francisco, is conducting an expansion schedule in Hawaii, according to William Citron, Mr. Franklin's San Francisco representative. Mr. Franklin is adding a $50,000 theatre to the two he already has in Honolulu. A 14-year lease has been obtained on the premises in the downtown section of the city, and calls for an aggregate rental of $123,600.

STUDIOS GO IN FOR RUSH OF BUILDING
OUTPUT IS 10 PER CENT UNDER LAST YEAR'S
THREE-ACRE SET MADE FOR "BARBARY COAST"
SEVEN FILMS ARE COMPLETED, NINE STARTED

THE sound of chisels is nothing new in Hollywood, but now the merry ring of hammers is resounding from almost every lot. A wave of building has surged over the studios. It may be Spring. It may be that the much-discovered move to Florida is forgotten. The fact remains that all over the place new buildings are popping up.

Warner-First National has begun construction on four new sound stages, approximating $100,000 each. Just finished on that lot is a building to house Cosmopolitan executive offices, and Marion Davies' bungalow reposes there, picked up off the MGM lot and moved, looking-glass and all, to the Burbank studio.

There is no new construction on the MGM lot itself, but Harman-Ising just has moved to new quarters which triple their space for production of an expanded program of color cartoons. Mascot has a new, permanent western street, and the paint shines brightly on a building, just erected, which provides room for 18 writers.

Fox is going ahead with plans for a big building at the Pico entrance of the Westwood lot to take care of the publicity department and some executive offices, before the Twentieth Century staff needs office room on August 1st.

RKO Radio has contented itself with leasing space at Prudential and Pathe Studios, rather than with building new stages, but the housing fervor did not pass them up entirely. They joined the building parade with a huge roofed-over parking lot at the Marathon gate, and the joining of two buildings which were some 30 feet apart, thereby providing new executive offices and star dressing rooms.

Universal and United Artists both are commodious enough to accommodate heavy schedules, but the smell of new paint floats on the air of United Artists Studios, and Universal is waging a battle on termites with new underpinnings.

Catching Up On Output

Hollywood production output to date this season is about 10 per cent under the same period of last year.

From January 1 to June 1, 1934, Hollywood's combined production output totaled 209 features. For the first six months of this year the output to date is 186 pictures, or 23 fewer. With double billing practiced in a great number of the country's theatres, independents are finding further encouragement.

Several reasons for the lower total output are given. Outstanding was the uncertainty under which producers labored during the state legislative threat of excessive taxation. Production mills came to almost a complete halt during the last two weeks in February and the entire month of March.

As the producers came to an understanding with the politicians, picture making spurted. Forty-three productions went into work in May. To date, in June, 30 pictures have started and programs call for the staging of 15 more before the end of the month. Thus in two months the 86 started total only a little less than half the previous four months' figure.

All companies having set their 1935-36 quota, midsummer and early fall production promises not only to be more intensive than ever, but so arranged as to insure a steady flow of pictures from Hollywood to the points of distribution.

A Three-Acre Set

Samuel Goldwyn is spreading himself on the production of "Barbary Coast." At the United Artists Studio an entire section of the San Francisco water front is reproduced. In addition to two wharves and replicas of buildings which lined the hectic coastal sector, it includes a portion of the Pacific Ocean large enough to float an actual size three-masted schooner. Waves are made to undulate in this artificial sea at the will of Director Howard Hawks. Miriam Hopkins, leading woman, has already been photographed several times as others of the cast rowed her about in this span of water. Even the San Francisco fogs are re-created, by a device which utilizes steam and mineral oil.

Heat on the set was at first unbearable. Before the actors reported for work two electricians succumbed to a temperature of 140 degrees, generated by the lights and other equipment. When Mister Goldwyn heard of this he immediately ordered installation of an air-cooling system, and now temperature is held down to about 90 degrees, uncomfortable enough for players working in the padded costumes of the days of '49.

The "Barbary Coast" set covers almost three acres. When the picture is finished it probably will be left standing.

Kaufman Stays in Hollywood

Not generally known in Hollywood is the fact that the local stage production of "Waiting for Lefty" was directed and produced by S. Jay Kaufman, New York columnist and publicist. Mr. Kaufman refused even to be programmed.

The New York Theatre Guild, in its search for directors, could do worse than lasso Kaufman, but it is understood that he is to remain here in Hollywood, to direct a unit for one of the large studios.

Mr. Kaufman previously wrote and directed eight pictures for Paramount at Astoria and then went to Russia and Germany, absorbing foreign production for seven months. His first Hollywood screen vehicle now preparing is based on an idea of his own, with seven episodes. It is titled "Romance As You Go."

Nine Start, Seven Finished

Nine pictures started in the past week and seven others were finished. Seven studios participated in the new activity; the completed productions are credited to five. Radio, Reliance and Goldwyn started important pictures.

Under Rowland V. Lee's direction, Radio started "The Three Musketeers." To date the cast includes Paul Lucas, Margot Grahame, Heather Angel, Onslow Stevens, Rosamond Pinchot, Walter Abel, Ralph Forbes, Lumsden Hare, Miles Mander.

Reliance began work on "Red Salute," an Edward Small production which will star Barbara Stanwyck, with Robert Young, Gordon Jones, Paul Stanton and Ruth Donnelly. Sidney Lanfield is directing.

Samuel Goldwyn started "Barbary Coast." Howard Hawks is directing Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea and Edward G. Robinson, principals.

Universal started two. "Storm over the Andes," being made in two languages, will feature Jack Holt, Mona Barrie, Antonio Moreno, Gene Lockhart, Grant Withers and Juanita Garcias in the English version. Christy Cabanne is directing. Also underway is "Gee Women," which will have Zasu Pitts, Hugh O'Connell, Helen Twelvetrees, Lucien Littlefield, Bert Gordon and Ward Bond. William Nigh is directing.

Two began at Paramount. In "Without Regret" Elissa Landi, Kent Taylor, Frances Drake and Paul Cavanaugh will be seen. Harold Young is directing. "Soup to Nuts" features George Burns and Gracie Allen.

Warners' "Special Agent" will present Bette Davis, George Brent, Ricardo Cortez, Lyle Talbot, Adrian Morris and Joseph Sauers. William Keighly is directing.

"Happiness C. O. D." is a Chesterfield. With Charles Lamont directing, the cast includes Irene Ware, Donald Meek, Malcolm MacGreagor, Maude Eburne, William Bakewell, Junior Coghlan, Polly Ann Young and Edwin Maxwell.

Both Universal and Radio completed two features. At Universal, "Outlawed Guns," a western featuring Buck Jones and Ruth Channing, moved to the cutting rooms. The second feature, "Manhattan Moon," will present Ricardo Cortez, Dorothy Page, Henry Mollison.

Radio finished "Old Man Rhythm" and "The Return of Peter Grimm." In "Old Man Rhythm" Charles Rogers, George Barbier, Grace Bradley, Barbara Kenty, Betty Grable, Erik Rhodes, Eric Blore, John Arledge, Joy Hodges, Douglas Fowley, John Mercer, Evelyn Poe, Dave Chasen. Edward Ludwig directed. The second production features Lionel Barrymore, Helen Mack, Edwin Ellis, Donald Meek.

Fox completed "Silk Hat Kid," with Lew Ayers, Mae Clarke, Paul Kelly, William Harrigan, Warren Hymer, Ralfe Harold, Vince Barnett, Billy Lee, John Qualen and William Benedict. Bruce Humberstone directed.

MGM finished "The Murder Man," directed by Tim Whelan. The cast includes Spencer Tracy, Virginia Bruce, Harvey Stephens, Louise Henry, Robert Warwick, Ralph Bushman.

SCOTS MAPPING WAR ON QUOTA "QUICKIES"

Kalmus, in London, Gives Black-and-White Films Only Five More Years to Live

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

It is commonly accepted that British films, with outstanding exceptions, are not good box office in Scotland. It is therefore not surprising that the Scottish Branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association should have passed a resolution deprecating the coming increase of the exhibition quota to 20 per cent and demanding, instead, a reduction of the figure. It is, however, significant that this step should have been taken on the eve of the CEA Summer Conference at Cardiff. The Scots have the eloquence and drive with which to make their pronounced views on "quickies" a very important features of this event.

The possibility of a British First National Exhibitors' Circuit, similar to the onetime company of that name, was brought up Wednesday as one of the first activities of the convention itself.

Open to Reprisals

Over a year ago, it was pointed out in these columns that American distributors' shortsighted policy in regard to British films laid them open to the danger of drastic reprisals. If a minimum cost of £15,000 to £20,000 for a British film is shortly imposed, one wonders what many of them are going to do about it. The obvious answer is that they should buy or commission better British films, but the problem is not so simple as all that. Neither the brains nor the studio facilities of the U. K. are unlimited.

United Artists shows signs of optioning a considerable proportion of what is left after the few British majors have been served. Fox wants space and manpower for twelve supers of the $400,000 class. Do the other U. S. companies expect to get salable boxoffice material from the sources which have supplied their $25,000 "quickies"?

Just by way of comment, an American-inspired British film—which may have cost quite a lot of money—was hooted off the bill at the Paramount Plaza, in Piccadilly Circus, last week-end. Its title was "School for Stars."

All-Color in 5 Years: Kalmus

Five years is the time allotted provisionally by Dr. H. T. Kalmus, head of Technicolor, for disappearance of the monochrome film. Dr. Kalmus is in London to establish a British plant, following the triumphal opening of "Becky Sharp" at Radio City Music Hall in New York.

Although numerous stories have linked Technicolor with a British company to be floated by Sir Adrian Baillie, M.P., Dr. Kalmus said that no final decision had been made as to European affiliations, that several financial groups which had sent representatives to see him in Hollywood were still interested.

That the British plant probably will be at Elstree, that he was not interested in propositions which entailed a public issue of capital, and that the plant could be in full working order in six months, was all that he would say further about his European plans, with the exception that, though he intended visiting Berlin, he did not contemplate opening a plant there. One is to be established in Paris.

There is little doubt that United Artists, as part of its greatly increased proportion of British films, will release a Technicolor feature to be made by Tower Film Productions, in which the principals are Sir Adrian Baillie, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., the Continental producer Marcel Hellman and Dr. Paul Czinner, husband and director of Elisabeth Bergner. United may also use Technicolor in an ambitious production of "La Vie Parisienne," for which Continental directorial and acting talent will be used.

London Color-Conscious

Whether the Tower production will be made under emergency arrangements with the American plant or as the first venture of British Technicolor seems likely to depend on the speed with which Dr. Kalmus works. He plans to sail on the Normandie on July 3rd or the Ile de France on the 10th, not even waiting for the London premiere of "Becky Sharp" at the New Gallery on the 11th. That looks like being an historic date in the British industry.

Color consciousness is already present on this side in a degree which even Dr. Kalmus must find encouraging. British processes like Dufaycolor and Colorgravure are still in a comparatively early stage of technical achievement but newsreel color shots, of such obviously appropriate events as the Jubilee procession and the Trooping of the Colors, have been well received.

Wm. Rowland in Independent Deal

On his return from the United States with Capt. A. C. N. Dixey, M. P., chairman of Anglo-American Renters, Ltd., Peter Witt, of Reunion Films, Ltd., announced a deal had been completed with G. Niclas of Independent Producers' Studios for production of four musicals, to cost $1,000,000.

Three will be made at the Eastern Service Studios, New York, and one at the Consolidated studio at Elstree, which is in future to be known as the Independent Producers' Studio. Distribution outside U. S. and Canada will belong to Anglo-American, which also will have a financial interest in the American end.

Production will be in charge of William Rowland, president of Broadway Productions, Inc., and the first feature, "Romance Unlimited," from an original of Charles Beaham, will start July 8 in New York.

Anglo-American Renters, Ltd., with Victor Creer as managing director, will open London distribution offices in the next few weeks.

HAYS ACTION PLEASES LONDON

Assurances from Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, that a New York office of the Production Code Administration will be opened as a convenience to British producers wishing to submit films for inspection have been received with satisfaction in London.

Charles B. L. Tennyson, chairman of the film manufacturers' group of the British Federation of Industries, who was active in arranging the recent visit of Carl E. Milliken, representing the MPPDA, and Martin Quigley, who explained the operation of the American code, cabled Mr. Hays, "I am extremely grateful to you for having given such prompt and satisfactory attention to the suggestion put forward as a result of the Milliken-Quigley visit to England last month, and I am confident your action will be greatly appreciated by British producers."

Vaudeville, Film Policy Draws at Yonkers Theatre

A policy of a vaudeville presentation, combined with a double feature picture program, is reported by the Barkley Theatres Company, operator of the Barkley Warburton theatre, new house in Yonkers, N. Y., to have resulted thus far in performances characterized by the appearance of the S. R. O. sign. According to a newspaper report in the Yonkers Daily Record, the vaudeville presentation seemed to be the chief lure for the patrons. "Frivolities of 1935," staged by Stanley Woolf, was the stage attraction.

Sachs Signs Queenie Smith

Queenie Smith has been engaged by J. L. Sachs to appear in his London production, "All the King's Horses." The deal was arranged by the William Morris Agency.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended June 22, 1935, from 103 theatres in 18 major cities of the country, reached $935,770, an increase of $13,920 from the total for the preceding week ended June 15, when 104 theatres in 18 major cities aggregated $921,850.

Columbia

AIR HAWKS: Ralph Bellamy—Good program. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

BEHIND THE EVIDENCE: Norman Foster—Only a fair program picture.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

BEST MAN WINS, THE: Jack Holt, Edmund Lowe, Bela Lugosi—Drew average business and pleased the crowd. That's what counts. Nothing to shout about, but nothing to make you hide from your patrons. Running time, 57 minutes. Played May 24. —H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

BEYOND THE LAW: Tim McCoy, Shirley Grey—Not enough action for Tim McCoy. Played to the poorest Saturday business in months. Just a mystery-melodrama with too much talk for the Saturday crowd. Running time, 57 minutes. Played June 8.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—The big error in this picture is that the advertising does not mention the horse race and this is the big high spot in this picture. Although horse racing is fast slipping away from the small communities, the old timers still enjoy a good horse race. Business was only normal on this picture. However, the horse race was so realistic that most of our patrons came out with a cold sweat from excitement. Running time, 105 minutes. Played Sunday-Monday.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—What a picture! It had them standing up in their seats and cheering. Business average and the comment was a delight to a theatre manager's ears. Running time, 105 minutes. Played April 28-29.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

CARNIVAL: Lee Tracy, Sally Eilers—A very entertaining action picture. All characters well played and story good. Lots of comedy and clean. I call it an extra good picture of the kind. Circus and carnival life.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GIRL IN DANGER: Ralph Bellamy, Shirley Grey—An average program picture that did average bargain night business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played May 7.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie, Winnie Lightner—A very nice program picture that didn't do average business. However, it was no fault of the picture as it pleased those who saw it. Running time, 69 minutes. Played April 16.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

JEALOUSY: Nancy Carroll, George Murphy, Donald Cook—Just a picture; that is all that I can say for it. Average business on bargain night. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 14.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

LAW BEYOND THE RANGE: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—In this picture Tim McCoy does some real two-gun work. Tim is always a drawing card for our western fans. This is one of his best. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Friday-Saturday.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

NAME THE WOMAN: Richard Cromwell, Arline Judge—Just an average programmer that pleased the bargain night crowd. Business average. Running time, 63 minutes. Played April 9.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore, Tullio Carminati—A fine picture, but no good at all in my town. Few very fine comments. Some complaints. Few walkouts.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

SQUARE SHOOTER: Tim McCoy—Got a very good print on this one. A good western. Played June 13-14.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHITE LIES: Walter Connolly, Fay Wray, Victor Jory—Excellent program picture. Pleased and drew average business. Fay Wray and Victor Jory do acceptable work. Running time, 67 minutes. Played May 31.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

WHITE LIES: Victor Jory, Fay Wray—A very good program picture. Played on a double bill. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Robinson plays a dual role in this picture and does it very effectively. As a matter of fact, he steals the whole show—a very commendable character actor being able to properly portray the proper emotions necessary to make this picture a big success. Running time, 93 minutes. Played April 21.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—I am still wondering why this picture failed so completely at the box office. We gave it the biggest advertising campaign that we have given any picture in months. Had a splendid tieup with the local Chevrolet dealer and all we got out of it was an evening's entertainment (by ourselves) and a headache. The only explanation I can offer is that the title was misleading as most of us small towners know that for years the local high school has been putting on amateur performances of another show by the same name. If I remember rightly, Universal made a picture by the same name about seven years ago. Running time, 93 minutes. Played April 24-25.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

First National

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler Pat O'Brien—Very good. It drew above average and pleased all of them.—H. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler —This is a mighty good picture. Gave splendid satisfaction. Story entertaining and acting fine. Gave as good satisfaction as any of the big musicals we have played and did more business than most of them the second night. Played May 19-20.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—Was sorry afterward that I bought the picture for four days. It didn't pan out. Practically no story at all and the trick photography was too easily detected. Nothing at all like the other "Gold Diggers" of previous years. Played May 1-4.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

G MEN, THE: James Cagney, Ann Dvorak, Margaret Lindsay—It seems funny to see Cagney playing the part of the law but he does a very good job of it. Our patrons were very much pleased with the show and told us so. This picture has all the action necessary and if at any spot the action lags the comedy of the picture fills the vacancy. A very good supporting cast also. Running time, 97 minutes. Played June 5-6.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

LIVING ON VELVET: Kay Francis, George Brent, Warren William—A mighty good entertaining picture. Three very popular stars and a good story well acted. —Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon —A dandy picture that went over better than some of the specials. Just a clean, entertaining story of every day life that might have happened in our own home town. And don't forget Betty Jean Hainey as Mary Jane. She will go places. Not a super-special but pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 71 minutes. Played June 12-13.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee —This picture is an extra good program picture. Pleased them all.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MURDER IN THE CLOUDS: Lyle Talbot, Ann Dvorak—Another good program picture from Vitagraph. Played on a double bill and pleased them all. —Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell—This is a wow of an entertainment. Action, comedy and lots of it. Clean and funny. Star great and entire cast extra good. It is a real laughing show. Played June 13.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

WOMAN IN RED, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—This picture is an extra good program picture. Pleased them all.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Fox

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Thought it would have done better than it did but we have a new five-cent tax which is playing hob with the grosses. I feel Rogers is slipping. Too much of the same style.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

COWBOY MILLIONAIRE: George O'Brien—Much better than average Saturday. Something different. The dude ranger goes to town and gets his man.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—Good action picture. Running time, 69 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—We ran this picture on a double feature for an owl show on Saturday night thinking it would be a second rate picture but it turned out to be a honey. Plenty of good comedy and action and should appeal to any audience. Running time, 71 minutes.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: "Pat" Paterson, Lew Ayres—A better than average comedy drama. Double billed it with "Wednesday's Child." Not that it needs doubling but this town doubles even Shirley Temple pictures. So we have to double whether we like it or not. This double bill did better than average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gayor, Warner Baxter—Pretty weak so double featured it which is not a practice here. Seems that Gaynor is getting weaker with every feature she works in. Played June 15-16.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Not up to the standard of Janet Gaynor's earlier pictures. Action slow and somewhat draggy. No audience appeal and the attendance was smallest we ever had for a Janet Gaynor picture. Played May 18.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—A fantastic and unconvincing plot counteracts the excellent acting of Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter and makes this a below par picture for entertainment. Why does not Fox give this team the kind of picture they deserve? It will be difficult for me to sell this team again as the picture did not please. Running time, 87 minutes. Played May 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—The title taken from Harold Bell Wright's story fails to follow the story as definitely as it should. Some of our patrons expecting a little better western than usual were disappointed. However, we did a good business on this picture because we have a clientele of western fans that are very loyal to this type of picture. Running time, 66 minutes.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

Invincible

GHOST WALKS, THE: John Miljan, June Collyer —Pretty good mystery comedy. Okay for Friday and Saturday. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

Mascot

CRIMSON ROMANCE: Ben Lyon, Sari Maritza, Erich von Stroheim—Is a real thriller. Suitable for Sunday and family trade.—J. Edelstein, New Victory Theatre, Hibbing, Minn. General patronage.

IN OLD SANTA FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp —I have recently made it a point not to review the westerns, as they are pretty much the same sort and it is useless to review them. However, I'll have to break over and say a good word for this western. It drew better than average business and pleased. Created a lot of comment. Play it (on Saturday). Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 25.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Ga. General small town patronage.

LITTLE MEN: Ralph Morgan, Erin O'Brien-Moore, Frankie Darro—Did a very nice business for us. As a matter of fact, we played it three days and had to bring it back a day by request. We feel that we should say a good word for Mascot Pictures. Have played all that they have released to the present time and must say that they pleased 100 per cent.—J. Edelstein, Manager, New Victory Theatre, Hibbing, Minn. General patronage.

LITTLE MEN: Erin O'Brien-Moore, Ralph Morgan —Although not up to "Little Women," this picture has an appeal that will merit its showing. The boy cast was very well selected and the direction is very well done. The picture could have been improved with more outstanding adult stars. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 12.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

MARINES ARE COMING, THE: William Haines, Armida, Conrad Nagel, Esther Ralston—Is a very pleasing picture. Give us more like this one.—J. Edelstein, New Victory Theatre, Hibbing, Minn. General patronage.

MGM

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett, Stuart Erwin—A splendid example of what happens when a producer tries to tie a slipping star to a popular one. This picture was splendid and pleased those who came but there are a lot of people that won't come to see Constance Bennett no matter who the co-star is. Gable is popular but being teamed with the unpopular Bennett was too much for him. Business below average. Running time, 73 minutes. Played June 2-3.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Constance Bennett, Clark Gable—This is a splendid entertaining picture. Did not draw very well but gave good satisfaction to them we did draw. Played June 2-3.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—Even Robert Montgomery couldn't get them in to see this one. A very mediocre "talk" picture. No action and Harding no draw. It was bad enough before we played RKO's "Enchanted April," but since then, it's thumbs down on Ann Harding. Business below average. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 22-23.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

CASINO MURDER CASE, THE: Paul Lukas, Alison Skipworth—A Van Dine murder mystery that is satisfactory if you like murders. Personally I am getting tired of them. Pleased about 50 per cent. Running time, 84 minutes. Played June 5-6.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Franchot Tone, Clark Gable—They didn't break their necks over this one. Print poor. Little old, I guess. Not a special from the receipts.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronge.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: All star cast—Picture splendidly produced and enacted. Didn't do the business expected of it, however. Sunday-Monday business above average, however. Sunday business off but came back strong on Monday. It brought people into the theatre that haven't been in for a long time and kept a lot of the regulars away. Running time, 133 minutes. Played April 14-15.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery, Clark Gable, Charles Butterworth—Splendid. Average Sunday and Monday business and pleased everybody. Butterworth stole the show. Running time, 84 minutes. Played April 21-22.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General small town patronage.

GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombard, Chester Morris, Zasu Pitts, Leo Carrillo—This picture pleased practically all the patrons and did average business. Not a special but just a program picture that will please. Running time, 82 minutes. Plyed April 12.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

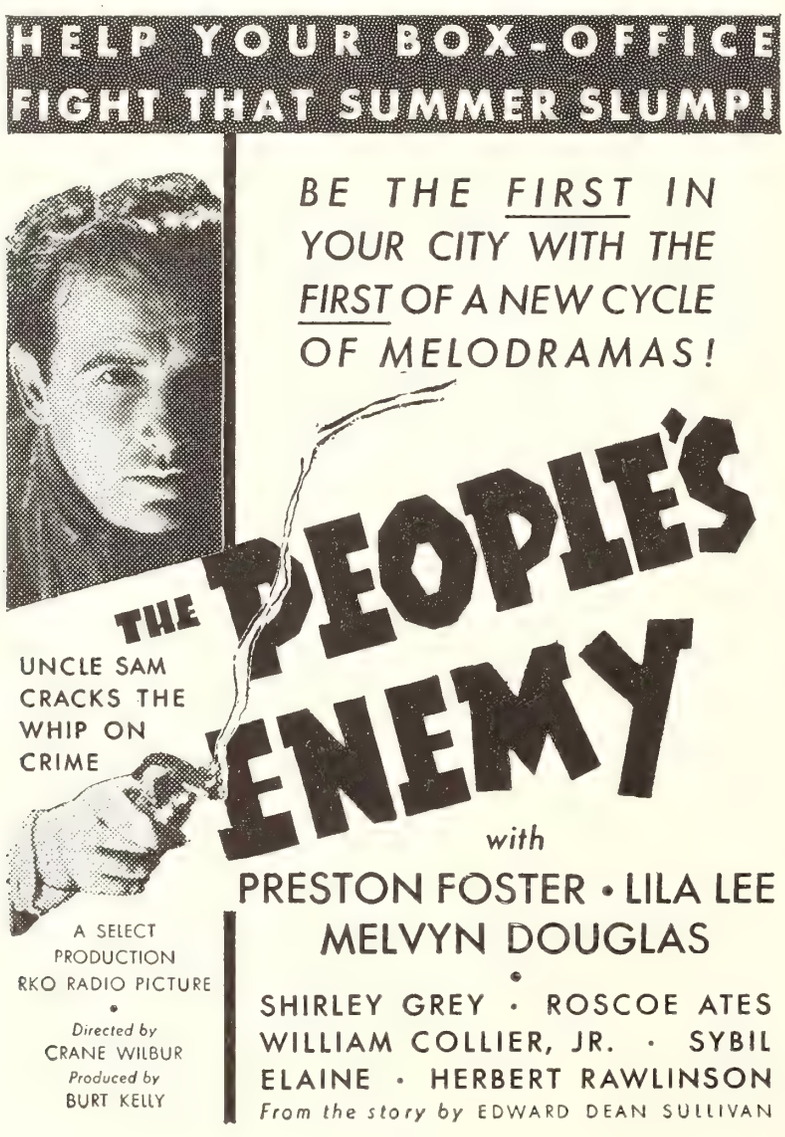
GAY BRIDE, THE: Carole Lombard, Chester Morris—A good entertaining picture. Splendid direction and photographing. The acting was fine. The picture clean. All liked it.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MARK OF THE VAMPIRE: Lionel Barrymore, Bela Lugosi—There won't be any if I book another picture like this one. The most horrible horror picture it was ever my misfortune to see. Ghosts, dead people, bats, black cats, spiders, cobwebs, vampires, in fact, they did not leave out anything that could have made the film worse. The kids howled, the ladies walked out, the proprietor gritted her teeth and ran all the way home. Good acting, too good, it was too real. Even Leo's voice was weak and shaky. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 8-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—Music and story combine to make this one of the best pictures of the year. History, drama, romance, adventure and music. Jeanette MacDonald in her best performance and MGM's new star, Nelson Eddy. Comedy, beautiful costumes, pirates, well, this one has every thing to make it one of the best of the year. If any of my patrons did not like it, they forgot to tell me, and I do not think they ever do that. Step on the advertising. It is as good as MGM says it is and that is very, very good. The song hits are especially good. Running time, 106 minutes. Played June 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—A great picture. The best singing we ever had in any picture by two great artists. Story entertaining and a great cast of characters. I call it a 100 per cent picture. Plyed June 9-10.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo—This is a mighty good picture. Gave good satisfaction. Did not draw much business but it was not the fault of the picture. All said the best Garbo they ever saw. Played June 16-17.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.



SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—Another picture that will make you glad that you are in show business. They'll tell you in no uncertain terms that they like this one. Drew our regulars and some who seldom come. Some stayed through both night performances and then came back the second night. A grand show. Business above average. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 29-30.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

SHADOW OF DOUBT: Virginia Bruce, Ricardo Cortez—A very entertaining program picture. Gave good satisfaction on a double bill. Played June 11-12. —Bert Silver, Silver Theatre Co., Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

VANESSA, HER LOVE STORY: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—The majority of our patrons liked this picture. However, they came to see Robert Montgomery and not Helen Hayes. Miss Hayes may be a big drawing card in the cities, but not in the small towns. Business average. Running time, 77 minutes. Played May 10.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan—The patrons, the operator, the doorman and I all liked this picture and it did average Sunday-Monday business. A lot of favorable comment. You'll be proud you ran it. Running time, 88 minutes. Played June 9-10.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young—The best picture of the air ever filmed. Shows the growth and development of the U. S. Army Flying Corps from the first crude ships to the superships of today. A fine story of a father's love and sacrifice to make a man of his own son. His spectacular rescue of his son, and his court-martial and dishonorable discharge, his comeback and reinstatement, the romance between little Mike and Skip, make this a picture with 100 per cent entertainment value. Don't be afraid to advertise this one. Every member of the cast is good. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 1-2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre; Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Young—A mighty entertaining picture that gave good satisfaction. Played May 12-13.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WICKED WOMAN: Mady Christians, Charles Bickford—This is a fine picture. This star gave a great performance. A good story, very entertaining and the whole cast good. Hope we will have more of this star's pictures soon.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda, Ted Healy—I note that most of the exhibitors are panning this one. I shall be forced to rise to the defense of it as it pleased my patrons and did average business. I grant you that it was hokum, but after all that is what makes show business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 3.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

Monogram

SING SING NIGHTS: Conway Tearle, Hardie Albright, Boots Mallory—Pretty fair program picture. Different from average run of program fare.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

SUCCESSFUL FAILURE, A: William Collier, Sr., Lucille Gleason—Nice little programmer that did slightly under average business. Running time, 62 minutes. Played June 4.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Carl Brisson, Mary Ellis, Edward Everett Horton—A well made picture that failed to draw and pleased about 75 per cent. Business average but not due to the picture, as we staged a fashion show that drew in what business we got. Running time, 85 minutes. Played April 10-11.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown, Duke Ellington and his orchestra—My folks thought this as good as the usual West pictures. Drew fairly well.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

FATHER BROWN, DETECTIVE: Walter Connolly, Paul Lukas, Gertrude Michael—A very interesting program picture that drew less than average business. Pleased those who saw it, however. Nothing to be ashamed of. Personally, I believe that every young man and adolescent child should see it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 17.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Good picture but below average at the box office for some reason. Played June 11-12.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby, Kitty Carlisle, Roland Young, Alison Skipworth—Another good one from Crosby. He always pleases here.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Caesar Romero, Larry Crabbe—Damon Runyon story. A nice little program picture with plenty of entertainment but no drawing power. Business away below average. No stars to attract the fans. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 1-2.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper, Lila Lee, John Wray—Old but good. Drew fairly well to be so old. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

LOVE IN BLOOM: George Burns, Gracie Allen, Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee—Pleasing program picture that would have been better with Burns and Allen left out. Business average. Running time, 77 minutes. Played June 7.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Walter C. Kelly, Andy Clyde, Richard Cromwell, Betty Furness—Very good light comedy drama. Pleased holiday crowd. Played May 29-30.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields—Our customers just naturally like songs and scenes of the South and this picture has the acme of both. Bing sings better than I have ever heard him and I dare you to find a comedian to beat W. C. Fields, especially at playing poker. This picture is a sure fire box office tonic, stimulant and restorative. Running time, 74 minutes.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

TWO REPORTERS JOIN DEPARTMENT

The South and the Midwest are the locations of the two showmen who this week have joined the host of exhibitors who contribute regularly to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department. They, and their theatres, are:

J. EDELSTEIN, New Victory Theatre, Hibbing, Minn.

J. M. LAKEMAN, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields—What a combination these two make. Just what the doctor ordered for your box office. They'll thank you when they come out for allowing them to see this picture. Business above average. Give it the works and it will make you money. Running time, 80 minutes. Played May 26-27.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

ONCE IN A BLUE MOON: Jimmy Savo—If you have a date set on this, pull it at once; cancel the picture under the NRA if you can; if not, pay for it but under no circumstances show it. We just finished the first matinee and had to refund money to half the patrons as they came out. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 12-13.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburgh, Ill. Small town patronage.

ONE HOUR LATE: Joe Morrison, Helen Twelvetrees, Conrad Nagel—Very fine program picture. Pleased most of the patrons and did average business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 26.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

PRIVATE WORLDS: Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Joan Bennett, Joel McCrea—A complete departure from the average type of film. In fact, I am inclined to believe that it was too great a departure. Colbert has always been popular in our town, but she won't be if they give her many more pictures like this one. The general consensus of opinion from our patrons was that they attend the theatre to be entertained and that this picture was decidedly not entertainment. Business below average. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 5-6.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charlie Ruggles, Zasu Pitts, Roland Young—One of the best pictures produced this year, but did not do average Sunday-Monday business. Even had a few walkouts on this picture. However, I attribute the lack of business to the unpopularity of Laughton in our town. It still is a good picture, however, and we are not sorry we ran it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 19-20.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—Not the picture that "Bolero" was. Drew below average business and created a lot of bad comment. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 12-13.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott, Tom Keene, Kathleen Burke—Good western. Keene fine. Wish I could get more westerns with him.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO Radio

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson, Hale Hamilton—A splendid picture. Fine story well acted. All we got in to see it were pleased, but one of those pictures that will not draw in this town.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—A different twist to the college football story. Keeps moving at a lively pace with a good comedy thrill finish. More pictures with Eddie Quillan would be quite welcome. No special drawing power but a fair average for warm weather.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE: Ben Lyon, Thelma Todd, Pert Kelton, "Skeets" Gallagher—A very nice little program comedy-drama that pleased. Business average. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 28. —H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—John Beal's peculiar manner just naturally captures the audience and supported by the child star, Virginia Weidler, puts this picture over with a bang. If your patrons have been howling for pictures of the classics, then this is your opportunity to satisfy them. Running time, 69 minutes.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

RED MORNING: Steffi Duna, Regis Toomey—This is a good program picture. A big story well acted. People liked it, they said.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Excellent picture. Pleased as near 100 per cent of any picture I played this season. We had the bad luck to get into a regular flood that was the reason it did not make money for us. Running time, 106 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Asaire, Ginger Rogers—Very excellent picture that did average business. My only criticism is that there was too much singing by Irene Dunne for that type of picture. Running time, 105 minutes. Played June 5-6.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—A good program picture that did average business and pleased the crowd. To me, it was just another "melodrammer" but it pleased the patrons. They are the ones to be pleased. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 21.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—Most enthusiastically received by our patrons. More applause for this feature than we have had for weeks. Full of action and thrilling episodes. Played May 25.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD: Karen Morley, Edward Arnold, Frankie Thomas—Frankie Thomas shows remarkable ability. Double billed this with "Lottery Lover." Of the two "Wednesday's Child" created the most interest. A fine drama treating the problem of divorced parents and what of the children after divorce. Many will no doubt criticize the ending where the father decides against remarriage on account of the son. Rather tough on the father but on the whole a mighty interesting drama.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Republic

NUT FARM, THE: Wallace Ford—This picture is named right as it is the nuttiest picture I ever played. Lots of good comedy. Played it on Saturday with a western and tickled the natives pink. A regular Saturday nighter.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, George Raft, Jackie Cooper, Fay Wray—An old picture but very good. I just can't make a thing on U. A. pictures.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young, Warner Oland—A fine picture that didn't do a thing at the box office. Didn't take in film rental. Running time, 83 minutes. Played April 23.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO, THE: Robert Donat, Elissa Landi—A picture that you can be proud of. Played to less than average Sunday-Monday business due to the fact that this picture had played a neighboring theatre ahead. However, the audience reaction was excellent. Running time, 113 minutes. Played April 7-8.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

KID MILLIONS: Eddie Cantor—Very good. I can't figure out why Eddie don't draw better. I guess most people hear him too much over the radio. Running time, 100 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

KID MILLIONS: Eddie Cantor, Ann Sothern, Ethel Merman, Block and Sully—A swell musical picture that pleased. Ice cream scene excellent. Good comedy. Business above average. Running time, 92 minutes. Played April 17-18.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

LAST GENTLEMAN, THE: George Arliss, Edna May Oliver, Charlotte Henry—Excellent picture but did not please more than 60 per cent. Business average. Arliss is not popular in our town. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 19.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

MIGHTY BARNUM, THE: Wallace Beery, Adolphe Menjou, Virginia Bruce, Rochelle Hudson—Swell entertainment. Drew average business and pleased. What more could any exhibitor ask? Running time, 104 minutes. Played May 15-16.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

OUR DAILY BREAD: Karen Morley, Tom Keene—Pleased our bargain night crowd. However, anyone who spent any time in the locale of the picture would be able to find at least 15 "movie boners." Business slightly above average. Running time, 74 minutes. Played April 30.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND: Gene Raymond, Nancy Carroll, Jack Benny—A very cleverly produced mystery musical. Nothing sensational, but very pleasing. Slightly below average business. Running time, 92 minutes. Played May 8-9.—H. M. Johnson, Avon Theatre, Avon Park, Fla. General, small town patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Anna Sten, Fredric March—Shelve this one or double bill it. It's a sure sample of depression. Pass it up. You'll lose your prestige with your people if you play many like this.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

Universal

BORDER BRIGANDS: Buck Jones—This picture did slightly better than average Saturday business. Jones is one of our favorite western stars.—J. M. Lakeman, Princess Theatre, Haleyville, Ala. Small town and rural patronage.

CRIMSON TRAIL, THE: Buck Jones—Pretty good western. Not as good as most of the other Buck Jones films. Running time, 59 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall, Frank Morgan—Played it weekend. Everybody thought it crazy. Saw a lot better. Gave it the works, heralds, etc., but no draw. Name is enough. —Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. Small town patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—Very good picture. Wonderful acting by Claudette Colbert and the rest of the cast. I can't understand why this picture did not draw better at the box office. I think the title hurt the drawing power of the picture. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW YORK: Lyle Talbot, Heather Angel—This is an extra good program picture. Story entertaining. Both stars very good, but some of the cast nearly stole the picture. Clean, entertaining and funny. We need more like it.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD: Claude Rains, Joan Bennett—What might have been a special was spoiled by dark photography and talking too low to be well heard. Plenty of quality but the people want to see and hear the picture and that is what they pay for and should get. It had the elements of a special but failed to satisfy. Played June 1.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS: Alan Mowbray—This picture proved to be the worst picture we have run at any time. The idea, the cast, and the direction are without effect. Running time, 73 minutes. Played April 14.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis, Margaret Lindsay—Here is a class A drama in every respect. But was there any need of having Margaret Lindsay meet a tragic death? In my opinion this marred an otherwise almost perfect picture. While Margaret Lindsay played the society playgirl, one could hardly expect her to marry Paul Muni, who was acquitted of murder, but still under a cloud. She could have refused him without meeting a tragic death and Muni could have gone back to his people just the same. Just average summer business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—A splendid flying picture. Lots of good comedy by the two funniest scrappers on the screen. Gave good satisfaction. Drew fairly well. Played May 26-27.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DINKY: Jackie Cooper—This is what I call a first-class picture. The moral effect is very lasting and is suitable for the entire family. While the circumstances are not likely to happen in every home, still it is something that should be considered. Our juvenile business went up several points on this picture, and the military academy atmosphere adds to its wholesome entertainment. Running time, 65 minutes. Played June 2.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

NIGHT AT THE RITZ, A: William Gargan, Patricia Ellis—A good comedy picture. Very funny. Lots of hokum, but clean entertainment. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—They just don't go for Rudy. Picture only fair. Made film rental, but pass it up if you can.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ont., Canada. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

AMONG THE COCOONS: Laughing with Medbury—Of all the Medburys I have seen I have failed to see one that pleased the audience or myself. His jokes are stale and the scenes are very uninteresting. —R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

I'M A FATHER: Andy Clyde—This will bring the laughs from any audience. Andy Clyde always goes over with our patrons. Running time, two reels. —R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

UNCIVIL WARRIORS: Three Stooges—We have some customers who only go to the show when we have the Three Stooges. Others stay away when we run them. This is a good short subject and will please their particular followers. Running time, two reels.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

MAN'S MANIA FOR SPEED: Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman—This is a very interesting short subjects as are all of Fox shorts. Sure to please. —R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

BEGINNER'S LUCK: Our Gang—The best comedy this Gang has ever put on. Clicked. The amateur numbers were a show by themselves. The Arizona Nightingales were especially good. This is good for any dates. Running time, 19 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BURIED LOOT: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Personally I did not like this one but find it went over quite well with the patrons and they are what count. Running time, 19 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GYPSY NIGHT: Musical Revue—All color musical short that was very good. Running time, 19 minutes. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

RAINBOW CANYON: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—One of the most beautiful travel shorts I ever saw. Color is wonderful. A lot of good music and singing and an interesting talk made this short both educational and entertaining. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TREASURE BLUES: Todd-Kelly—Good comedy from this team. Kelly is always good. Running time, 19 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Own Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

DREAM WALKING, A: Popeye the Sailor—This is the best Popeye we have had. The music is good and that's half the battle in a cartoon of any kind or description. Running time, one reel.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

HARK YE, HARK: Headliners—Not so hot. Ben Bernie's wise cracking must be modernized if he expects to keep in pictures. The whistling stunt is at least five years old. However, he does have a good male quartet. Running time, one reel.—R. B. Garvin, People's and Whiteway Theatres, Fredonia, Kan. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

JOLLY LITTLE ELVES: Cartune Classics—Very pleasing in color. About the same as Columbia's "Shoemaker and the Elves."—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

RIMAC'S RHUMBA ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—An unusually good Melody Master. The dancing is very good. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

BURN 'EM UP BARNES: Jack Mulhall, Frankie Darro, Lola Lane—Have played all Mascot serials for the past year and "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" with Frankie Darro broke all records for our serials business. Very little repeats in this one. Here's hoping that Mascot keeps up the good work. One thing they are doing is giving us major pictures.—J. Edelstein, New Victory Theatre, Hibbing, Minn. General patronage.

PHANTOM EMPIRE: Gene Autry, Frankie Darro —Here is something different in serials. Based on the fantastic ideas made popular by the comic strips such as Buck Rogers and Flash Gordon. Started this on a hot Sunday but it is building and holding those who started it. It is well done with more plot than most serials. Just showed the third episode. The producers deserve credit for this new idea in serials and the clever manner in which this has been produced.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MGM to Share Financing Of "Jubilee," Stage Play

"Jubilee" will be the first stage play in which MGM will participate financially. Contracts have been signed with Max Gordon and Sam Harris, who will produce it in September. MGM is to supply 50 per cent of the finances. Arrangements on other plays are to be worked out later. Mr. Gordon plans to reopen the Center theatre in New York with "The Great Waltz" on August 5.

Neufeld with Club

Oscar Neufeld, manager of the Philadelphia Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association, has resigned to become manager of the new clubhouse recently opened by the local Variety Club.

Metro Stock Suspended

The New York Stock Exchange has announced that Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation seven per cent cumulative preferred stock, $27 par value, has been suspended from dealings.

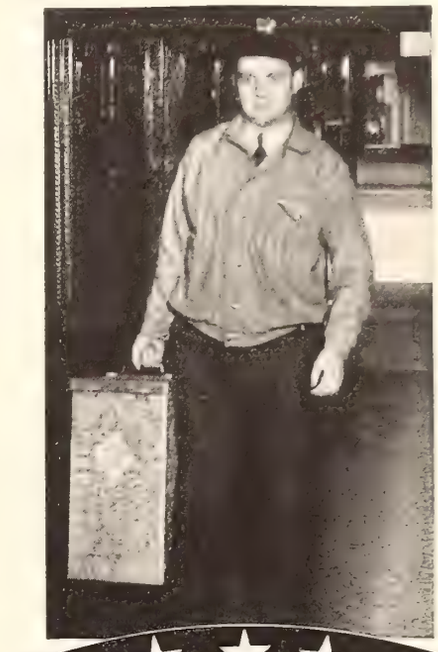
Tully Marshall to Retire

Following completion of his role in MGM's "A Tale of Two Cities," Tully Marshall, at the age of 71, will retire permanently from the screen. He was on the stage for 45 years before entering motion pictures.

To Open Stock Company

Jack Stern, actor-producer on the legitimate stage for more than 20 years, and more recently with the old Proctor's Fifth Avenue theatre in New York, will open a summer stock company at the Elverhoj theatre, Milton-on-Hudson, next month.

Heads Building Group



Clarence M. Turley, rental manager of the Ambassador and St. Louis theatre buildings in St. Louis, and an official of Best Amusement Company, was elected president of the National Building and Managers' Association at the Cleveland convention last week.

Dickstein Resigns

Martin Dickstein, motion picture critic of the Brooklyn Eagle, New York daily, has resigned.

Prepares Music Library

Seiden Sound Library, Inc., has compiled a group of original musical sound tracks, which are now available to producers.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Omaha, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

We found this town of Omaha just about the same as it was when we left it a year ago except that they have taken in the Union Stock Yards, Dundee and the Happy Hollow golf course for taxation purposes. The Missouri River still has water (and catfish) in it, but they haven't painted the street cars since 1894.

We made a terrible mistake in letting it be known that we were coming down here for it gave the boys a chance to jump their laundry bills and get out of town.

Ted Mendenhall, Paramount branch manager, grabbed an airplane and started for New York under the pretext of going to the Paramount convention, but that was a lot of horseradish. He wanted to get out of town before we got here. That's the trouble with Paramount, they sometimes hold their conventions at the wrong time.

A Clever Ad Writer

Harry Shumow, the MGM manager, was busy trying to hypnotize a cross-eyed exhibitor and get his John Hancock on the dotted line when we called. He succeeded in getting it after the second dose of chloroform, and they were both happy because they had both made some money, and we were happy, too, because we knew that that boy had bought some pretty good pictures; maybe not the best, but some pretty good ones.

Speaking of MGM, we'd like to pause right here and say that the man who writes the ads for Leo in the HERALD is certainly the cleverest ad writer in the business. He puts comedy punch in all his ads that draws attention, and that's what an ad is for.

Hazel Anderson books pictures for MGM. Hazel is a blonde but we don't know whether she is married or not; you will have to make your own investigations. If she isn't, then these Omaha boys better get their blankets and go back on the range where they belong. Hazel says she is not related to Andy and Herb Anderson of Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, although they all have blond hair and their forefathers came from Stockholm and helped to make this country what it is today.

Steering Wheel Neuritis

A. M. Avery, the RKO manager, has gone down to Mineral Wells, Texas, to drink Crazy Water and try and get rid of that tired feeling. Down there is where the crystals come from. You take Sherm Fitch, the RKO manager at Sioux Falls, S. D., and stand him up alongside of A. M. and you will need no further proof that RKO knows how to pick 'em.

We saw D. V. McLucas going across the street yesterday and he walked like he had just come from a pacifist convention and somebody had hit him with a chair. He walked kinda lopsided. We asked him what the matter was and he said he had neuritis in his steering-wheel and transmission and wanted to know what to do for it. We told him we had it once and our wife gave us everything the neighbors could think of, including stove polish and Old Dutch Cleanser, after which we got mad and went down and played golf. D. V. said he'd try it. Our guess is if United Artists don't look out they will have to get another manager.

If you will go out to the Ak-Sar-Ben race track every day you will find Max Wintrob out there picking out the favorite pony. Max said he had placed ten bets and picked the right horse every time but nine and that he was going back that day and get his money back. Oh yeah, he will get it back like Elmer Gaily of Wayne did when the other fellow held four sevens.

A Handsome Manager

When going through Omaha, and you have a stopover ticket, drop up to the Western Theatre Supply Company and meet J. A. Van Housen, the manager. Don't tell him that you know us or he won't lend you a dollar. We have known Van for a long time and the Warden always let him in when he came to call on us. He is popular with the boys and the fact that he has the goods is why the red arrow points to the Western Theatre Supply Company. While you are there meet Temple Devillis, Van's assistant. Temple says we called on him some years ago when he was managing a theatre for the Griffith Brothers out in Greeley, Colorado. Maybe we did but we had forgotten it. Anyhow you ought to meet him.

H. J. Chapman, the man who carries the Columbia banner in the parade, was just recovering from an operation; that is, he said he was, but we had some doubts, but speaking of good looking managers, we would advise you to look H. J. over before distributing your blue ribbons. Of course some of the other boys will give him a close race, especially since he is recovering from the effects of a meat cleaver in the hands of a horse doctor. (We know how it goes, we've been there.) Our advice to Mrs. Chapman would be to have a sign painted and hung in his office reading, "Hands Off. He's Married."

A "Real" Dinner

If you don't know L. O. Ringler of the Midwest Film Distributors you better make it a point to meet him, for he is a swell guy. The first time we ever saw him was in northwestern Kansas, some years ago, when he was selling United Artists service out of K. C. He says we helped him sell some service and he's had it in for us ever since. He had Mr. Troxel and I out to dinner at his house recently and we had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Ringler, and say, Gerty, if you want to know what a real dinner tastes like you should sit down to her table. We'll betcha we won't want another thing to eat for six weeks. Then if you want some good pictures you better look L. O. Ringler up. He also manages the Des Moines exchange for Midwest.

If it weren't for Gus Harms we would probably have it in for Bob Ballantyne, manager of the National Theatre Supply Company (Gus, you know, is Bob's assistant). We had just got all set to have a good visit with Charley Williams, president of the MPTO, when that doggone Bob came along and yanked him into his car and took him down to Oklahoma just because he wanted Charley along for company, and that left us to flock all alone by ourself. But speaking of Gus, if you didn't know him you would probably take him to be a Hoosier, but he isn't; he's a Mormon from South Omaha, and he can tell the difference between a Berkshire sow and a Plymouth Rock rooster. Should you want something good in the way of theatre equipment look up Gus or Bob; you will find them both sober, and we will add, reliable.

Remembering When

We had dinner yesterday with Bert Creal. Bert and his son Walter operate the Beacon theatre out on the north side. Mr. Kirk also operates one out in that neighborhood and the two are breaking about 50-50. Walter said he recently sent his renewal check to the office for the HERALD because he didn't know where to reach us. Good gosh, Walter, didn't you know that your Dad and me used to buzz the same girl back in Gates College days in Neligh, Nebraska, and that the poor thing couldn't make up her mind which one to take and then married a bootlegger from Omaha? Didn't you know that? Doggone it, that Dad of yours has beat us out of a lot of things but you know we are both rather glad that she married that bootlegger, for now we don't have to support eleven children and a bulldog.

P. S.—Regina Molseed, secretary of the Film Board, is going to lunch with us today. We hope Lola Gentry of the Film Board of Los Angeles doesn't hear of this.

If it weren't for the blue pelicans roosting in that "Shelterbelt" every night where would the jazz orchestra and love song crooners get an audience? We are going to put this up to gum-chewing Lizzie.

Let's see, who was it that said "To hell with the constitution?"

Fred Meyer has been named to represent Universal on the board of directors of the Producers' Association on the Coast. He fills a vacancy left by a number of changes in studio executive personnel.

Waldron in Metro Picture

Charles Waldron has been booked by the William Morris Agency to appear in MGM's "Here Comes the Band" in which Ted Lewis will be starred.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

BLUECOATED representatives of alleged Law and reputed Order have been paying polite calls on exhibitors employing (to skip naming patented names) box office stimulants that are doing nicely, thank you, throughout the country. The bluecoats intimate to the exhibitors that City Hall is not so glad about the spread of practices smacking of lottery (two or three have crudely said gambling) and might, may or will crack down if something is not done about it. Up to now there is some vagueness as to what is meant by "something." Best guessers say it's the old take, pointing out that with licensing of the bookies the boys on the beat have to look elsewhere for the fives and tens that make walking a pleasure. Others opine that it's a build-up to a bill seeking to establish a regular and regulated rake, as in the case of the pony boys. Take or rake, it's the principal topic of conversation this bright June morning along the film frontier and—this is news—it didn't rain today.

Declares Visual Method Best for School Teaching

The study group of the Better Films Chapter of the Louisiana Educational Association last week discussed the manner in which motion pictures are invading American schools. Edwin Eley, assistant superintendent of schools, declared that visual education is superior to any other method of instruction except the actual doing of things by the pupils. He reported that 16 New Orleans schools are equipped for silent films and four for sound pictures.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

GUEST SECTIONS

Though material for these pages is forwarded by members in all sections of the country and other parts of the world, it cannot be denied that there are certain theatre groups which take much more than a passing interest in contributing to this department and the general Round Table doings.

Prominent among these are such circuits as Loew's, Warner Brothers, Mullin and Pinanski, Minnesota Amusement, Famous Players Canadian, and Skouras, to name a few. From the ranks of these organizations come regular contributions that serve as advertising meat and drink to many of our reader-managers and theatre publicists.

To signalize fittingly the enthusiastic cooperation of such members, your Round Table inaugurates in this issue a series of what might be termed special guest sections, devoted entirely to the activities of these individual operations.

Loew's Theatres lead off, to be followed by those fast-moving Warnerites, who in turn will make way for others, independents as well as affiliates, reporting regularly to these pages.

PRECIOUS METAL

From the fog of discussion that accompanies the advent of the Technicolor production, Radio's "Becky Sharp," emerges one unescapable conclusion, and that is, regardless of what the future has in store for the all-color picture, right now it sure tosses an exploitation natural into the showman's lap.

The strength of a screen story rather than the form in which it is presented, is still obviously the answer. But, yes or no, "Becky Sharp," to our way of thinking, is an exploitation mine of precious box office metal.

INSURING THE PERSONNEL

Not too well protected financially against sickness or death is the average theatre employee. And thus attention must be drawn to the recent setup inaugurated by Phil Chakeres, president, Chakeres Theatres of Ohio, and reported by divisional director A. Milo DeHaven.

A five cent service charge made upon every pass goes to a fund to pay for premiums on combination sick benefit and life insurance policies given as rewards to all members of the various house staffs.

If passes must be distributed, the plan of taxing their users mildly for the benefit of not too highly paid theatre workers appears sound enough to be adapted in other situations.

ART SHOP IN THE "SPOT"

Reference to the importance of good poster work, made by Eddie Melniker in his article, issue June 15, brings approval from Paul Andrews, art department head, Halifax Theatres, Daytona Beach, Fla., and a bow to his chief, City Manager Jim Cartwright. Says Paul, in part:

"Some managers appreciate fine work, which the artist strives to do. . . . If an artist knows his work . . . he deserves a 'pat on the back' now and then, and if he gets this occasional praise, the manager will very soon find that the artist is working for the benefit of the organization. . . . Mr. Cartwright ranks high in this respect."

The current spotlighting of art shop operation, including the initial article by Hal Kopplin in last week's issue, leads us to believe that these discussions will result in better understanding and more "pats on the back" between managers and artists now vexed with each other's problems.

WE ASK YOU

Of what doth avail the expensive cooling plant, the polar bear cutouts, the valances, the banners, the newspaper cool ads and publicity shots, the buildup health stories from prominent doctors and all the other beating on the drums, when the lamps under the marquee send down a heat blast of sufficient intensity to singe the very hairs of your head?

SWELL STIMULANT

The flood of letters and wires to this department from theatremen acknowledging the various Awards and Mentions made in the monthly Quigley competitions is perhaps the best indicator that these recognitions are highly prized. As an instance, we quote Wm. K. Jenkins, of Lucas and Jenkins in regard to the May Honorable won by Tommy Read, of the Paramount, Atlanta. Writes Mr. Jenkins:

"Today I am sending him a cash bonus to stimulate his continued interest in working out good campaigns and submitting some of the best to you."

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Another giggle from the subtle brush of Milt Rosenfeld.

Doorman-Monster Startles Reading

The monster demanded a mate, but Manager Dwight Van Meter, Astor, Reading, Pa., wanted a Frankenstein and at a cost of $2.15 transformed his doorman into the hair-raising screen character, using this unique bally to crash a two-column cut and story on the makeup stunt and a flock of other slick gags.

The first job for Franky was to shock 'em as part of the trailer, in advance of which some warning copy was projected. The house was then darkened, and the monster under a green spot, to the accompaniment of weird sound effects, rose on the organ loft, chained to a large chair. Finale was monster breaking his bonds and disappearing into the wings.

A succession of other stunts were put on, monster appearing at annual May dance sponsored by fire department (see photo), where he was introduced to the guests. The high school seniors, evidently in sympathy with Franky's desire for a mate, found him a "bride" and put on a mock wedding at their prom. Stunt was played up well in advance. Couple appeared at night clubs and also toured the town in bannered car.

Most amusing was one reaction to Van Meter's gag ad on classified page asking for furnished apartment for monster and wife wherein one householder evidently impressed wrote to the theatre detailing the comforts and cleanliness of his home.

Boucher Ties Radio Station In on Birthday Club Gag

Frank Boucher, assistant to Hunter Perry Dominion Theatres, Virginia, has elaborated on the birthday club idea for the Paramount in Lynchburg securing cooperation of radio station which announces in advance that locals sending in their birthdays with request numbers would be honored on their natal day with broadcast congratulations, the requested songs played and tickets to the current showing at the Paramount. In exchange for the ducats theatre gets radio plugs.

On "Under a Pampas Moon," local florist donated Warner Baxter roses which were presented to ladies attending matinees; credit card was attached to each posy. Frank has also turned orator and for the recent Flag Day celebration, put on by the D. A. R. made an address on "Influence of Moving Pictures on the Homes of the Community."

CONFIRMING JUNE JUDGES

As stated in last week's issue, the judges for the Quigley June competitions are as follows: Samuel Frisch, Randforce Circuit; A. W. Smith, Jr., Warner Brothers and A. P. Waxman, Gaumont British. Their decisions will be made known in the issue of July 13th.

Managers are again reminded that deadline for June entries is midnight of Saturday, July 6th, at which time all entries must be at Club headquarters.

Nick Karl Puts Out Circuit Movie News

Very professional and readable is the four-page tab size weekly called the "Movie News," gotten out by Nick Karl, ad head, Hall Industries, of Beeville, Texas, for all the houses of that circuit, distributed locally and mailed out in drawing area of each spot.

Interesting especially is the back page, which carries directory of all the theatres in the circuit, the idea being that with autos and good roads, a 30 to 40 mile trip to another town to see a favored picture is counted as very usual. Nick's thought is that if the locals don't like the attraction at their Hall Theatre, the directory might tip them off to another picture at a different house in the same circuit.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

"Wipe Away Them Tears"

Getting away from the old crying towel gag, R. E. Martin, Rivoli, Douglas, Ga., on "Life Begins at 40" mailed government postcards with cut of Rogers, picture copy and piece of kleenex attached, with instructions to bring card along to wipe away the tears of laughter.

Bassin Has Artist Sketch MacDonald Head in Lobby

Six nights ahead of "Naughty Marietta" Charlie Bassin, Oriental, Boston, Mass., had an artist in the lobby doing a charcoal of Jeannette MacDonald, finishing the portrait opening night. Attractively colored hangers were used in lobby and under marquee and theatre ads plugged fact that the picture was the first to play theatre with the installation of wide range. Letters were sent to mailing list calling attention to new equipment.

Shepherd Ties Merchants In on "It's a Small World"

Sonny Shepherd, Mayfair Theatre, Miami, Fla., effected some neat tieups on "It's a Small World" with department store coming through with effective luggage window, tying in with picture copy as did radio dealer in his window where large card with scene stills bore copy "it's a small world when you tune in on our sets and get foreign stations."

American Express Company's ads carried cut of Spencer Tracy and offered round-the-world trips tying in with picture copy.

Powell Interviewed for Cocks

Manager Harvey Cocks at the Strand in Akron arranged with Eddie Selzer at the Warner Hollywood studio for drama critic of the Akron Beacon-Journal to interview Dick Powell via telephone. Four column story with cuts of Powell and critic talking together broke as an advance on Harvey's "Gold Digger" date.

"Frankenstein" Visits in Reading

Sells "Black Fury" As Czech Feature

The Czechian atmosphere in "Black Fury," the bits of dialogue, the songs and dances gave Al F. Spivak, assistant at the Granada, New Prague, Minn., the inspiration to sell the date as a Czech picture to the great numbers of that nationality resident in New Prague and surrounding towns.

Spivak proceeded with a story in the local paper which explained that the picture was the story of a Czech miner in Pennsylvania, and followed with display ads in which the title was translated into "Cerny Buric," meaning black madness or fury.

Newspaper ads in the Czech language were also carried and copies of these made up as heralds distributed throughout the immediate area. In this canvass, as part of the campaign passes were issued to persons bearing names of the various characters in the picture.

Billboards carried Czech copy, as did the front (see photo), and on the two nights of the showing all conversation by the staff was in the Czech tongue, the personnel further building up the atmosphere by wearing national costumes borrowed from local dramatic club.

Spivak, himself a Czech, recommends this treatment to other theatremen similarly located, for gratifying returns.

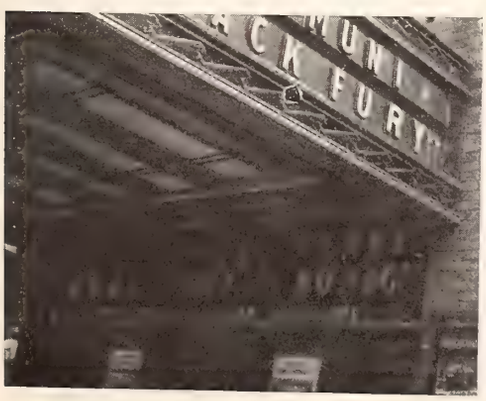
Kane Stooged for Moses When the Lights Went Out

Alert Tommy Kane, Sequoia Theatre, Redwood City, Cal., quickly stepped to the stage and made a bid for amateur entertainment from the audience when his lighting system went haywire, leaving the house in darkness.



Candles were supplied and patrons with the aid of harmonicas, dialogue and song numbers supplied their own vaudeville talent until the lights went on and show was resumed. Incidentally, Tommy didn't have to refund a single admission.

Sindlinger won his plaque on Paramount's "Goin' to Town" at the Appleton Theatre in Appleton.

McManus Arranges Fashion Show

Leading department store in Kansas City tied in with Johnny McManus at Loew's Midland for his "One New York Night" date with a mezzanine fashion show at the theatre in which five of the mannequins acted as hostesses, circulating among patrons and describing the gowns in detail.

With the arrival of the MGM traveling studio, during run, winners in the screen talent search were interviewed over radio and screen tests made from stage.

On "Flame Within" a dance contest was sponsored by the theatre at amusement park with special prizes, including cup, for winners. Postcards were mailed to all prominent physicians urging them to see the picture and screening was held for critics.

Lindbergh Expert Fronts for Jones

Locally resident in Richmond, Va., is E. J. Cassidy, one of the handwriting experts retained on the recent Lindbergh kidnapping case, and with a bit of urging, Manager George Jones of Loew's, in the Virginia metropolis, promoted from the expert the loan of an eight-foot case filled with various tools of the handwriting trade.

Machines, microscopes, cameras, measuring devices used to detect clues in handwriting, bullets, bloodstains, etc., were included in the showing on "Public Hero No. 1."

"Just Married" Car Plugs Caldwell's "Ladies" Date

A "Just Married" sedan all decked out with ribbons and cowbells was Wally Caldwell's "No More Ladies" street bally at Loew's Valentine in Toledo. A Crawford bathing suit window was secured from leading department store, wedding apparel display from specialty shop and silver-framed wedding stills decorated jeweler's window.

On "Les Miserables" a special preview was held for clergymen and educators, doorknob hangers used on all parked cars and reward heralds were distributed.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Sharrock's "Private" Preview

A special preview of "Private Worlds" was held by Raleigh Sharrock, Palace, Morrilton, Ark., for doctors and nurses. Comment cards were distributed and remarks later used in advertising copy and heralds. Raleigh used the chain letter gag, inserting the letters in newspapers delivered to homes.

LOEW'S ACTIVITIES ON FOLLOWING PAGES

The following six pages are devoted to the activities of Loew's Theatres in the New York metropolitan area and throughout the country. Included are articles from Joseph R. Vogel, C. C. Moskowitz, Oscar A. Doob, Ernest Emerling and W. D. O'Brien, photos of divisional managers and reports on individual theatre doings from various parts of the country.

A bow, incidentally to Doob and staff for ace cooperation.

FIRST-RUNS

by JOSEPH R. VOGEL
General Theatre Executive
Loew's Theatres

JOSEPH R. VOGEL

THE importance of proper advertising, exploitation and publicity for our attractions is kept in the forefront of the entire Loew organization. We try not to permit this phase of our activities to become routine or secondary to any other effort. There's only one way to display showmanship—that's through selling tickets. And intelligent advertising is the selling force.

For first-run theatres we believe that the daily newspaper is the backbone of any advertising campaign. Our theatres have a regular, weekly normal budget for newspaper advertising. Our Home Office Advertising Department services Loew theatres with master-ads. These ads are adapted to meet local conditions.

Aside from the newspaper budget, the theatres are left pretty much on their own as to exploitation expenditures. Managers are encouraged to use their own judgment as to the value of a stunt. A Loew manager or exploitation man knows that he need not pull publicity or exploitation stunts just to be doing something and to make a "showing" in his press book.

Where we have good newspaper coverage for a theatre, we do not go in heavily for outdoor advertising. On special occasions, when an attraction lends itself to "circusing," we may use outdoor displays—but not as routine.

In the larger cities, like Cleveland, Washington, Boston, Baltimore, etc., where Loew's has more than one theatre, experienced publicity men are employed. In other smaller cities, the Loew theatre manager handles his own advertising and publicity, with the guidance of the Home Office advertising department. Virtually all our district managers have had practical training and experience in theatrical advertising.

Fortunately, the Loew circuit is not too large to prevent the Home Office from having close personal knowledge of what each theatre is doing. We have an enthusiastic exchange of ideas, through daily bulletins, and each man in the field works with the knowledge that if he devises or executes a good campaign, his Home Office superiors know about it.

It is a matter of pride with me and other Loew executives that our theatres have been able to win so many Awards and Mentions in the Quigley Competitions each month.

I firmly believe that in recent years there has been a decided improvement in the general tone of theatre advertising. The advertising, I think, has behind it a more careful, business-like analysis of the product to be sold and a greater care to avoid waste in advertising expenditures.

NEIGHBORHOODS

by C. C. MOSKOWITZ
General Theatre Executive
Loew's New York City Circuit

C. C. MOSKOWITZ

THE problem of selling the shows in Loew's neighborhood theatres in Greater New York can scarcely be compared with the selling problem of any other group of houses in any other city. The extremely high rates for newspaper advertising—due to the fact that even though the New York papers have neighborhood rates they cannot break down their circulation sufficiently to make the rate low enough to be profitable to the small neighborhood theatre—boils down the selling problem to a matter of exploitation and outdoor advertising.

Our New York theatres receive the guidance and active assistance of the Home Office advertising department. A group of young exploitation men is assigned to the various boroughs. Trailers, lobby displays, outdoor posters and similar routine (even to the writing of marquee sign copy) are provided by the Home Office advertising department. This is not intended to relieve the theatre manager and his staff of the responsibility of selling his shows. It works out just the opposite. It gives the manager more time to get out work on his own exploitation plans.

One of the activities which we consider vital to our New York City selling effort is the publication of Loew's Weekly—a rather modest little four-page magazine which has been published regularly, week after week, for some 20 years. It has a circulation of close to 1,000,000 weekly; half of this is mailed direct to homes—not promiscuously, but upon request. To quickly and thoroughly reach the prospective patrons of a neighborhood we have found nothing better.

Our outdoor bill-posting is given close attention. We have very complete coverage, especially with three-sheets. But this is watched closely to avoid waste, duplication, bad locations.

Through radio station WHN, our neighborhood theatres are given air advertising daily. Daily newspapers published in the various communities are used liberally. Weekly publications, programs, special editions, hotel guides.

The development of the showmanship in our managers is one of our chief concerns. For instance, in Brooklyn, the assistant managers meet once a week with the Brooklyn publicity department. These meetings have done much to develop the initiative and ingenuity of the young junior managers.

Enthusiasm is what is needed to keep the multiple-change houses on their toes. I believe the constant enthusiasm of Loew staffs is the outstanding characteristic of the circuit.

THE WHO'S WHO OF THOSE BELOW

H. M. Addison, pictured to the extreme left in the line-up below, is Loew's Northeast district chief, flitting between Boston, Syracuse, Rochester, Toronto and way stations. With Loew six years, and previously with Fox, Wilmer and Vincent.

Dominic Barecca is the youngest of the eight district heads supervising the 68 theatres in the New York City area, graduating to his present assignment from the Orpheum, Brooklyn, some five years ago.

Carter Barron, Eastern Divisionnaire, is the youngest of the Loew battery, starting as assistant in Atlanta, 1927. Majored in football at Georgia Tech, forward passed to Washington as City Manager in 1932, and won his D. M. stripes two years later.

* *

Lawrence Beatus, in charge of Westchester and New Jersey, recently celebrated his twenty-third year in Loew service, starting with Col. Schiller in Memphis. Fifteen years as City Manager in Washington and Chief Film Booker, also mark his record.

William A. Downs, whose district is split between Central Long Island and midtown Manhattan, is another long-termer, and served for many years as the skipper of Loew's State, in Newark, N. J.

* *

William A. Finney, Western Division head, is one of the circuit veterans, joining Loew's in St. Louis nearly a quarter of a century back. Formerly a legit. notable, Finney managed Atlanta and Memphis and has been district chief for ten years.

Harry Karasik, in charge of the New York East Bronx sector, spent many years in the service of the late David J. Picker, whose theatres are now a part of the Loew chain. Has been D. M. for three years.

* *

Lionel H. Keene, Southern Division manager, joined up in Birmingham in 1917, went to war for a spell and subsequently became assistant to Col. E. A. Schiller, in Atlanta. Later served as Western representative in San Francisco and with Col. Schiller in New York.

Millions for the Box Office; Not One Cent for Eye-Wash

by OSCAR A. DOOB

Advertising Director, Loew's Theatres

THE advertising activities of the Loew circuit involve several millions of dollars annually. This vast sum of money goes to buy everything from elephants to jumping beans; from paper napkins to newspaper white space; from airplanes to subway cards; from billboards to cooling plant trailers; from posters in Chinese to publishing our own Loew's Weekly, with a million weekly circulation!

OSCAR A. DOOB

Theatre advertising—especially for a circuit—presents probably more possibilities and temptations for wasted money than any other form of advertising. It would be a very simple matter to waste, say, $250,000 of the several millions spent! In proportion, this applies to any theatre.

Loew's theatres are very liberal in spending money for advertising. But it is spent constantly with an eye on the box office. Many a spectacular, expensive advertising idea is passed up because of its doubtful value as a ticket-salesman. The old "eye-wash" idea of filling up press books with futile publicity effort has now been pretty well eliminated.

The operation of the advertising department is geared up on the assumption that theatre advertising is not an expense—but an investment. And it differs from other investments because we demand of it immediate profits or dividends. Theatre advertising must get its results within a week, sometimes within 24 hours. It doesn't always do that, but that's the target.

The Home Office advertising department is operated as a "service station" for the out-of-town circuit, supplying the theatres from Toronto to Houston, from Boston to New Orleans with every possible advertising help they may need. Portfolios are issued on pictures playing the circuit, giving ads, publicity and exploitation aids of a strictly practical nature; no fantastic, impractical "eye-wash" dreams. For the in-town (New York) circuit, the Home Office department maintains a complete publicity division, with a staff of men to cover every theatre—a man to each group of 10 or 12 theatres. The Capitol Theatre, Broadway, is handled also. In addition, 20 or more theatres in distant foreign lands receive the Loew portfolios.

The great bulk of the advertising budget for out-of-town theatres goes to the newspapers, considered the pivot of the selling effort for the first-run houses. Outdoor advertising in those situations is used rather sparingly. Exploitation is encouraged, to give spice and novelty and snap certain campaigns out of the routine.

All Loew theatres play Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures. In addition the pictures of virtually every other producer are played somewhere around the circuit. So a salable picture by any producer is welcome news, and all product played is given careful, maximum selling effort. Loew's attempts to give the producer complete cooperation. Loew theatres are quick to accept producer help in connection with national campaigns; to encourage producer exploiteers and work with them.

The depression has done much to intensify and make more intelligent, theatre advertising effort. Much of the ineffectual wasteful stuff has been culled out by the pressure of enforced economies. Theatre advertising today is probably on a more solid, more business-like foundation than it has ever been.

NEED NOT BE TECHNICIANS

Loew Managers Required to Have Sufficient Lay Knowledge Only in Seeking Screen or Sound Defects

by M. D. O'BRIEN
Projection Department, Loew's Theatres

For many years there has been considerable propaganda tending to browbeat theatre managers into the belief that in order to properly present a picture with its accompanying sound, it was vitally necessary that they immediately become thorough technicians.

There have been articles, appearing from time to time in various trade publications, trying to impress managers with the need for this education. We do not coincide with these views. It is our opinion that the manager of a theatre shall be equipped with sufficient lay knowledge to determine the entertainment value to the layman who has purchased a ticket. In order to become a thorough technician and be able to determine exactly the cause of every little disturbance in the reproduction of sound it would be necessary for the manager to take a comprehensive course in electrical and radio engineering.

Many Defects Possible

There are several thousand possible defects which may occur in the highly complicated sound equipment installed in a theatre which may cause interruption to the performance. In our opinion, this equipment should be supervised and maintained by men who have no other duties and who have previously spent years in the proper instruction and training in the maintenance of this equipment.

In a large chain of theatres, where a department is maintained for this purpose, the manager should be relieved of a considerable worry with regard to technical defects appearing in sound and projection equipment. However, we do feel that a manager should have sufficient layman knowledge of equipment to be able to determine whether or not a defect appearing on the screen or in the sound is of a serious enough nature to require immediate supervision by a competent technical man. He should be in a position to determine whether or not the reproduced sound and feature are of a quality to satisfy and give enjoyment to the paying patrons. He should, by familiarity, be sufficiently well-informed in the various types of defects which may occur in the proper rendition of his picture to be able to advise the proper technical department as to the nature of the defect, without being required to actually render the necessary remedy for correcting this defect.

Bad Sound Ofttimes Temporary

Aside from the actual discontinuance of sound or projection in a theatre, in which instance an emergency exists, there will occur, from time to time, extraneous noises in the sound and unusual visual conditions on the screen. Where slight extraneous sounds are introduced in the sound reproduction, an emergency does not exist. In some cases, even this discordant note may disappear of itself.

At times equipment in wearing will introduce these noises for a second or two or sometimes a minute. When these noises occur, if the projectionist has not noticed it, the manager should be in a position to be able to call the projection room and notify the projectionist of the nature of the sound—whether it be a low grumble or growl, motor boating or squeal or hiss. In some instances, this will serve to lead the projectionist directly to the source of the trouble. The same is true with respect to visual projection. If the manager notices a recession of the light distributed on the screen, a discoloration, flicker or poor focus, he should also be able to recognize these defects and notify the booth.

There are so many things which can happen to a print from the time it has left the cutting room until it reaches the theatre, it is entirely possible an error in sound reproduction has crept into the print itself and the manager should be able to determine whether or not the sound equipment is at fault or the particular subject being presented.

If there is a chronic ailment in the equipment he will make every effort to have the necessary technicians repair it, but if it is a case of neglect on the part of the projectionist, he will then have been familiar enough with it to advise them to make the necessary repairs.

Dirt at the aperture on the sound system is one of the most constantly recurring indications of neglect in the projection room and a constant recurrence of this state of affairs can readily be recognized by the manager.

When a print is delivered from the laboratory directly to the theatre, at times wax and emulsion may deposit on the sound aperture and after several recurrences of this, the manager should be in a position to recognize this state of affairs particularly where this occurs more than once during the running of a feature picture or subject.

Determining Sound Balance

There has been so much said about proper volume at which to maintain the sound and as this is purely an individual condition in each theatre, suffice it to say that a manager in any theatre should be thoroughly familiar with the correct volume level necessary to maintain a comfortable audible flow of sound in all portions of the house. This of course has previously been determined by the proper distribution of the horns with due regard to acoustical conditions existing in the theatre. The individual theatre manager determines the correct volume levels by the number of people who are present at any particular part of the day.

To sum up, we repeat a manager should be in a position to recognize either minor or major defects in the reproduction of his sound and visual projection, but we do not feel that he should be technician enough to be able to roll up his sleeves and remove the defects.

DEERING PAYS $25 FOR GRAVEYARD NAP

Francis Deering, down in Houston, Texas, locating a lad who professed himself as being able to "take it", paid him $25 to spend the night in the local marble-orchard as a builder-upper on "Mark of the Vampire".

What with Sam Gilman and Bob Suits holding screenings on the same feature in their city morgues, it begins to look as though we can expect a cool summer.

"Can You Take It?" Asks Sam Gilman

Sam Gilman's invite to a showing of "Mark of the Vampire" at the Harrisburg, Pa., morgue was run some issues back, and now Sam reports other activities on the date at Loew's, in that spot, that earned for him a First Mention in May.

The morgue party, incidentally, earned a whole flock of stories, including the entire space next day in one of the leading columns, and a neat mention by one of the sports editors who attended. Other newspaper special stuff included classified ads inviting fearless females to attend a showing held in an undertaking parlor.

Black-and-White Color Lobby Theme

Black and white was the theme of the front (see photo) in which Dracula figures and Vampire girls were plentifully spotted, all eyes being filled in with green flasher bulbs. Cutout bats were used and copy under box office read, "If you are a sissy or can't take it, don't see this picture."

Scare lobby stunt was a regulation coffin and a gal dressed in white a la Vampire, makeup including black flowing hair and pale makeup. From time to time, gal supposedly in a trance, was led into the coffin and when a sufficiently large crowd gathered Miss Vamp was led into the theatre. First aid station in lobby and bannered ambulance out front promoted from the local fire department, were other stoppers.

Among the novelties Sam put out were the question-and-answer heralds, circular vampire stickers illustrated with black bat which blanketed the town, and waxine bags containing some of the "bat-thorn" mentioned in the picture, copy stating that if the thorn was worn it would ward off the vamp gal.

CLEVER, INDEED, THOSE CHINESE

Tucked away in a corner of New York's East Side, is Loew's Canal, one of the world's most cosmopolitan theatres, catering to most every race and nationality, with Chinese said to be largely in the majority.

Manager Maurice Seidletz, who takes his job seriously, had occasion to do a couple of nip-ups the other day when he was requested by the firm of Chin, Hau, Chu, Wong and Lee for window cards to be placed weekly in the Sugar Bowl eatery, located in the heart of New York's Chinatown.

"When Will She Wake?" Rosy Asks Bridgeport

A week ahead, Morris Rosenthal, Loew's Majestic, Bridgeport, Conn., for "Mark of the Vampire" turned his lobby (see photo) into a cemetery with coffin in mound and skeleton placed in the coffin surrounded by tombstones, grass mats, etc. A woman was planted in audience at each show to scream and faint, after which she was carried out to ambulance parked in front of theatre and whisked away.

Rosy hooked in with leading furniture store for window, in which sleeping girl was placed. Ballots were distributed and to first three guessing correct time at which girl would awaken, grandfather clocks were awarded. Girl stationed in lobby at coffee table advised those who "couldn't take it" to stop and have some of the beverage; nurse at operating table offered first aid and issued faint checks. Bat street stencils were used and black cutout hats hung under marquee.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

"—Speak Boldly"

Words uttered by His Eminence, Cardinal Richelieu, in the George Arliss picture, gave Fred Ostereicher, of Loew's Columbus, Ohio, a chance to cop himself a headline and picture credits in a local daily's promotional ad. "When you believe a thing—speak boldly," said the Cardinal. Fred believed, and did.

HOPPING THE BAND WAGON

In Which Is Pointed Out Instances of Some Recent Quick Thinking That Capitalized on Page One Headlines

by ERNEST EMERLING

Advertising Department, Loew's Theatres

"Beats any car on the road on the get-away!" is the auto salesman's favorite selling-point. In these hectic days of vocal tintypes, "Quick thinking!" is the accelerator of good showmanship. While there is no copyright on being speedy in jumping on the bandwagon, the Loew organization has consistently been up ahead of the line-up, or at least won "place" money!

The trick, obviously, is to recognize a "natural" when it rears its head across the front pages, or to tie a silken ribbon around its neck when it hops into your lap. Most recent example of "Loew-thinking" is the "$500 Reward" offer made by the Loew Theatres to the first person presenting one of the Weyerhaeuser kidnapping bills at the box office of a Loew Theatre. Thus, "Public Hero No. 1" hopped onto the front pages in 35 key cities. The cost, $500, if one of the bills were to be presented, otherwise, nothing.

A couple of weeks ago, Loew's gave up the old New York Theatre after a twenty-year tenancy, to move the same policy into street. Certainly nothing there for the N. Y. dailies to devote more than three lines—or a "stick" at the most, but the idea of inviting a group of old-time stars, managers, etc., to pay a brief tribute on the stage of the old theatre while the wreckers were waiting to begin its destruction, a brief unveiling of a tablet to the late Marcus Loew in the Mayfair lobby, gave Irwin Zeltner, Loew's N. Y. newspaper contact man, a chance to land feature stories, some with two and three column heads, in all the papers. Another example of making news when there was none.

"Ziegfeld Museum" Clicks

The Ziegfeld Theatre in New York City has figured prominently in a number of Loew "news-making" stunts largely because of its association with the illustrious producer. Its opening as a picture house brought reams of publicity no other second-run, off-Broadway theatre could equal. The name has been kept in the papers consistently through "re-unions" of Ziegfeld players, radio broadcasts, etc. Oscar Doob's idea of creating a "Ziegfeld Museum" in the theatre is a consistent publicity getter, giving excuse for frequent stunts that such a theatre seldom has.

Being "on-the-button" with timely ideas that might get the Loew name on the tongues of a greater number of people, was indicated by the Loew scoop during the Hauptmann trial. Two newsreel inserts were prepared, one reading "Hauptmann Guilty" and the other "Hauptmann Not Guilty" and were supplied to all Loew's theatres. Each theatre had a radio in its office, where the manager or some attendant awaited the verdict. Some made newspaper tieups for the verdict flash. At the moment it came the picture was stopped and the "Guilty" trailer flashed on the screen.

The organization of Loew's Cadet Bands in New York and other cities in the east has meant entree for Loew advertising into many parades and civic celebrations where commercial advertising is banned. In such demonstrations as New York's "Beer Parade," the huge NRA parade, Memorial Day turn-outs, etc., Loew's has been conspicuous by the presence of this musical organization. Loew's Band in Washington frequently plays at the White House.

A few years ago a new theatre, Loew's Pitkin, was opened in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn. The theatre is situated on an intersection of several streets, with a tiny triangular plot of ground fenced off in the center. The idea cropped up to name this spot "Loew's Square" as a tribute to the founder of the Loew organization, and all of East New York turned out to witness the parade and the ceremonies, arranged by Eddie Dowden, Loew's Brooklyn publicity man.

Stress Ideas with Angles

Newspaper readers are interested in "hot" movie news, not the cut-and-dried publicity stories culled from press sheets, but ideas with an angle. It is in this type of publicity that the Loew press department endeavors to excel . . . and here are some recent examples:

"Is so-and-so really in love with her new leading man?" . . . "Is it real love or reel love?" . . ."Around the clock with Harlow." . . . "7 A. M.-8 A. M." etc. . . . "New millinery styles on the Hollywood horizon." . . . "Why the wild-waves of Malibu are wild!" (bathing suit layout) . . . The nation-wide tribute to the late Marie Dressler on her 62nd birthday (with scroll signed by Pres. Roosevelt and the Governors of every state), etc.

Among other instances of quick thinking might be included capitalizing on the chain letter craze with Loew theatre ads in chain letter form. The amateur hour craze recently was tied in with Hal Roach, and an $8,000 model home prize, tying in with the National Better Housing movement, both detailed on another page, can also be included under this heading.

Burnett Asks Golden Wedding Celebrants to "Miserables"

To usher in his "Miserables" date at Loew's Theatre in Dayton, Ohio, M. C. Burnett broke front page of dailies with his invitation to all couples married a half century or more to witness the film as his guests. Paper tied in carrying application blanks and later running story and photo. Promoted refreshments were served and all women presented with flowers.

Fifteen minute playlet was broadcast, circulating libraries devoted windows to book displays and public libraries distributed book marks. Newsboys paraded to theatre and department store devoted window to display of gown worn by Rochelle Hudson.

RECENT NEWSPAPER CONTESTS

Various Box-Office Slants Found Profitable by Loew Men in Tie-ups with Their Respective Dailies

As long as our great public continues to go for chain-letters, drop a few pennies on the nags, and spend endless evenings shuffling the pictorial pasteboards, so long will the "Manager's Friend"—the newspaper contest, endure, opines Loew adman, Ernie Emerling.

It's the old gambling instinct, the idea of outsmarting one's neighbor, which makes contests popular, says Ernie, who feels that with the huge prize-money contests now being stressed by magazines and newspapers, the old game is taking a new lease on life.

Below are set down some details on recent contest gags pulled by the Loew gang from here and there and taken from contributions forwarded in the past few weeks.

West Silhouette Contest

Lou Brown, pressman for Loew's Washington Theatres, dug up every full-length star photo he could find with a streamlined torso. He blanked out the faces only. The Washington News ran layouts of three figures daily, asking readers to name the stars. Of course, covering up Mae West's face did not conceal her identity.

Spending A New York Night

If some one were to ask us how to spend "One New York Night" we would probably have to admit that we go home and to bed at 9 P. M.—but in Columbus, Ohio, it's different. So Fred Ostereicher, who chisels the lineage for the Loew's Theatres there, offered prizes to the readers of the Dispatch for letters on the most entertaining manner of spending "One New York Night" in conjunction with the picture of that title.

Win-A-Home Contest

During the month of June, Loew's Theatres in Brooklyn and Queens are to award an $8,000 completely furnished model home, located in a new real estate development on Long Island. Each patron attending during the month is given a numbered coupon when ticket is purchased. Name and address is placed on half the coupon and dropped into box in lobby.

Grand drawing is scheduled for night of July second on stage of Loew's Metropolitan, in Brooklyn, with radiophonic hookup with the other 26 theatres in the district. Revolving drum will shuffle the tickets and prominent city official make the drawings.

Large Brooklyn chain furniture outfit is supplying the furnishings and with the realtors is taking large newspaper space to plug the deal.

Scotch and Irish Jokes

It may be a bit aged, but Jack Lykes, Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, found it profitable to hook in a contest with local sheet for best Scotch and Irish jokes as a buildup on "McFadden's Flats."

"Public Hero" Angle

Around the circuit, a number of Loewmen tied in to put on newspaper contests asking readers to nominate outstanding local "public heroes of 1935," giving in so many words the reasons for their selections.

Movie Amateur Slant

Hal Roach, Laurel-Hardy, Our Gang and Charley Chase comedies producer, through the New York Daily Mirror announced a search for new screen comics. Auditions were held on stages of Loew's Theatres and winners will appear in a two-reel comedy produced in New York. Paper publicized the tieup for 30 days and over 1,500 entries were reported.

"Reckless" Drivers

For tiein on the Jean Harlow picture, numerous Loewmen conducted contests with their local papers offering prizes for "Wreckless" drivers, Dailies published license numbers of drivers selected who were entitled to guest tickets.

"Golden Wedding" Party

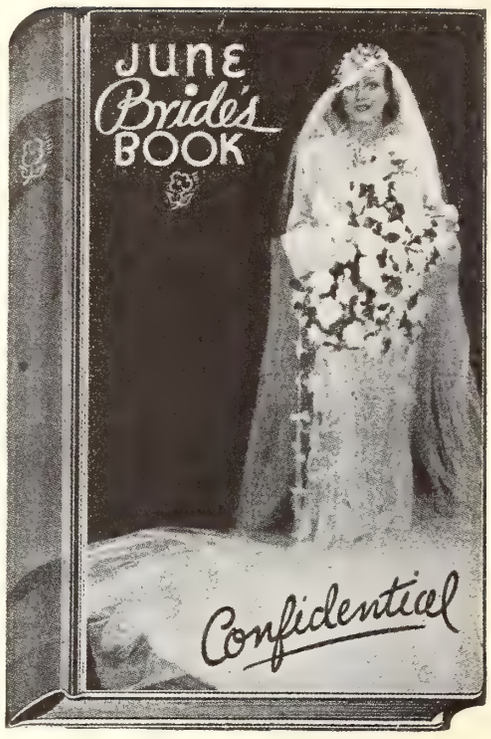
Martin Burnett, out in Dayton, Ohio, has made his "Golden Wedding Theatre Party" an annual tiein with the Dayton Herald. Couples living in the Miami Valley section who have been wedlocked half century or more are invited, with daily giving the gag plenty of strong promotion.

"Honeymoon Is Over"

Managers all over are busy planning the "honeymoon is over when—" contest on the coming "No More Ladies." The gags run along these lines "the honeymoon is over when the little woman says don't wake me up when you come in," etc. Same picture is also inspiration for newspaper readers to air their views on holding a husband.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Eddie Plants New Amateur Hour



Loewmen are endeavoring to duplicate locally the success of WHN's original New York Amateur Hour, with Eddie Melniker, of Loew's Grand, Atlanta, reporting a tiein with local daily's station for weekly tryouts.

Syracuse and Reading are among other Loew towns staging local amateur contests with newspaper cooperation.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

PLUS DILLINGER. Matt Saunders, Poli, Bridgeport, promoted lobby display from police for "Public Hero," cards explaining various items attached to local crimes.

Portfolio Service Reported in Demand

From Oscar Doob's office to all Loew Theatres goes a regular portfolio service on all MGM pictures consisting of special publicity material, tieup ads, contests, fashion features and stills, mats of newspaper promotional tiein ads used by theatres around the circuit. Material is mailed out bit by bit as various items become available, this material being filed in portfolio envelopes on each picture. This is arranged so as to do away with delays in getting ideas to theatres in advance of playdates.

Taking "No More Ladies" as an example, managers already have on hand a wealth of stuff to help put over this attraction. Newspaper contests are available as follows: "When Is the Honeymoon Over." "Do Women Love More Deeply Than Men?" Others include tieups with merchants and papers to select June bride outfit from various ads.

Feature Slants Included

Publicity features for other spots than the movie page include, Joan Crawford life story, serial, hairdress feature, set of makeup stills, week-end wardrobe suggestions, Crawford and Montgomery fashion stills, etc.

Tieup stills and ad mats are other helps. Among these are Crawford bridal poses for coop page, bride and groom still, bathing suit shots, collar styles, and a flock of newlywed ads tying in the picture. Promotional classified page mats are also on hand, as are picture ad mats, including special holdover flash.

Special printing and novelty heralds are prepared by Doob's department on timely or unusual angles such as the herald, front page of which is illustrated below. Picture copy is carried on inside pages with blank back page space for individual theatre imprint. Portfolio stuff is in demand by outside houses using MGM, and arrangements are made to supply those requesting it, in non-competitive situations.

Who's Who With The Loew Divisionaires

CARL LEVI, who supervises houses on the New York East Side and in Brooklyn, is one of the old, old-timers and has carried the Loew banner in many jobs from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Known as a "trouble-shooter" and started with Loew as a door-man.

COL. HARRY LONG, of the Cleveland sector, became a Loewman seven years back, opening the State, in Louisville. Served in Syracuse, then to the Eastern Division in Baltimore and a spell under the flag of the Great Lakes division before his latest assignment.

* *

SAMUEL H. MEINHOLD, in charge of all New York area district managers, has been with the Loew organization since its inception in the penny arcade days. His personal reminiscences mirror the history of motion pictures and vaudeville exhibition.

* *

EUGENE MYERS keeps a weather-eye on the Loew theatres in upper Manhattan and the West Bronx sections of New York, is an alumnus of the old Yorkville Theatre, in midtown New York. Later was skipper of the old American Music Hall, on 42d Street, now dismantled.

GEORGE SCHENCK, Brooklyn district chief, pioneered with Nicholas and Joe Schenck in the old Fort George days, joining the Loew ranks many years ago and managing the Metropolitan, in Brooklyn, for quite a stretch. Has been a supervisor for eight years.

* *

HARRY SHAW, Loew-Poli New England Theatres head guide, general-managed for B. S. Moss and became a member of the Loew gang at the State, Cleveland. Was with Louis K. Sidney in the Production Department, then to Syracuse, and then to the Poli houses.

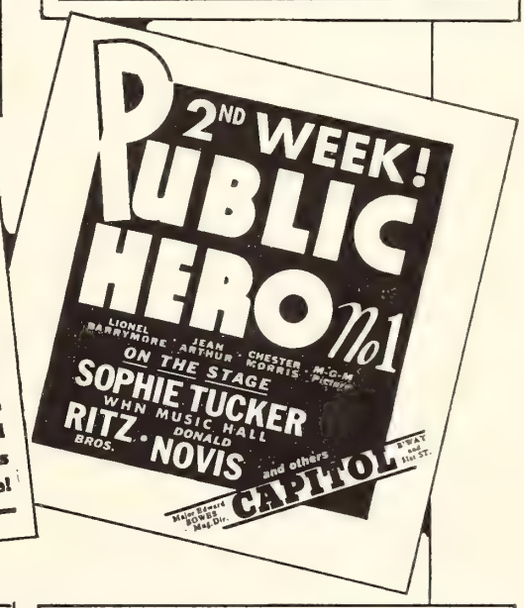
Pollock Secures Classified Ad Tie-up on "Richelieu"

Leading paper in Rochester, tied in with Les Pollock for his "Richelieu" date at the Rochester Theatre offering cash and ticket prizes for the best answers to a questionnaire on "What is your Ideal House?" Ads carried large cut of Arliss and O'Sullivan with instructions for entrants to read through real estate ads and state their ideas of what the well-dressed home should contain as to heating, interior decoration, constructions, etc.

Another contest for which cash and tickets were awarded was a contest in which participants were to submit slogans for different advertisers. Newspaper also featured a "Cardinal" cartoon done in lines and dots, which when filled in presented the likeness of Arliss.



On "Mark of the Vampire" man in black cape and domino walked through main streets with back banner "I'll haunt Loew's Rochester next week," while another draped in white sheet spoke through loudspeaker from roof of theatre calling attention to date. At night green spot played on ghost.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 271 (one of a special group on sound).—(A) What care should be given the photo-electric cell? (B) Why is it important to keep a light connected to an AC circuit away from the sound head, especially when the exciter lamp is operated on DC? (C) How often should the Morse silent projector drive chain be lubricated and what type of lubricants should be used? Give reasons.

Answer to Question No. 265

Bluebook School Question No. 265 was. (A) Explain how the operation of most vacuum tubes (not P. C. cells) used in theatres depends upon heat. (B) With sound systems equipped with a motor generator to supply low voltage D.C. sometimes trouble is experienced because the generator of the set will not "build up" when the set is put into operation. (a) What precautions can be taken to prevent such failure and (b) If and when it does happen, what action may the projectionist take to overcome the difficulty?

The engineers answer thus:

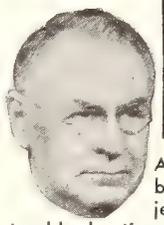
"(A) Practically the very smallest, tiniest thing known is the electron, which really is a little gob of negative electricity. The filament (cathode) of a tube must provide a supply of electrons for the evacuated space in the tube, whereupon the positive plate voltage pulls them to the plate, this flow constituting what is called the 'plate current.' The materials used for filaments and cathodes are of such nature that when cold their electrons are tightly bound to the mother body and cannot be drawn away therefrom by the plate voltage. However, when these materials become heated by the passage of the filament current, the electrons are set into a violent motion, whereupon they actually fly or 'boil' off the surface into the surrounding space, very similar to steam leaving the surface of boiling water. In this semi-free form, the plate voltage is able to and does attract them, and thus a plate current is established, without which the tube could not, of course, function.

"(B) (a) The residual magnetism (magnetism retained in a generator magnet or magnets when the machine is at rest—F. H. R.) which causes most generators to 'build up' voltage when first started is more likely to be retained in the magnet when the generator is shut down if the motor switch is opened and the machine permitted to come to rest before the load is disconnected from the generator by pulling its switch. (b) When the generator refuses to build up voltage in the normal way, the following steps may be taken in the order named: (1) Start the motor generator with the full load connected and momentarily short-circuit the terminals of the generator by laying across them either a one-half ohm resistance or a fuse of not more than 20 amperes capacity; (2) Shunt a 1.5 volt battery across the field resistance (Connect it across.—F. H. R.) if the generator has one, together with the normal generator load. Note: The battery should be so connected that its poles coincide with these of the generator; (3) In event these methods fail, as a last resort the field may be excited by removing all the generator commutator brushes from one side (polarity) only and 'flashing' the field by touching the poles of a 12 or 18 volt battery across the output terminals of the generator. No load should be connected to the generator when this is done. After 'flashing,' replace the brushes immediately and start the machine under load, in order that it may pick up voltage before the residual magnetism is again lost."

Well, men, in all the years this is, so far as I can recollect, the first wash-out. Out of the hundreds who answered, not one could be regarded as correct on both questions. I shall therefore omit publication of names this week, publishing only the answer to (A) by brothers Rau and Evans and to (B) by M. and J. DeVoy.

(A) First, there is the so-called hot cathode type that has a filament heated by current from an A battery. Its filament, by reason of the applied heat, emits or throws off electrons that pass or fly off into the immediately surrounding space in the tube and, being negatively charged, are attracted by the positively charged plate of the tube. The filament will not throw off electrons in any amount (if at all) while cold, and that is the answer to the question. Heat is for that reason necessary. Without it there would be no action at all.

"However, it is imperative that the temperature of the filament be kept constant, which means a perfectly steady A battery current. If this were not the condition, the electronic action that constitutes the plate current would vary as the temperature varied, with sound distortion as a result."



Messrs. Evans and Rau then described the cathode heater type of tube, but inasmuch as the point raised by the question is fully and very well covered it seems hardly necessary to go into that.

(B) M. and J. DeVoy say: "There may of course be many causes for the failure of a generator to fail to pick up its load; in other words, its voltage. An open circuit is one, poor contacts another; brushes poorly adjusted, sticking in their holders or having poor electrical contact with the commutator surface; incorrect adjustment of the resistances; some connection made wrongly or a short; loss of residual magnetism are some of them.

"The remedy in most cases named is pretty evident, but loss of residual magnetism is something else again. It is possible that after the switch is shut that connects to the load the condition may be remedied by running the machine and laying a 20 ampere fuse across the terminals for a second. It may also be cured by connecting a small battery (single cell dry battery is OK) across the field resistance of the generator, provide it have one, being careful to connect the battery polarity so that its current will flow in the same direction as would the normal current through the resistance. While doing this have the load connected.

"A third method, to be employed only after the others have failed, is to take out all positive or all negative brushes—all of one polarity—and repeatedly (several times and quickly) touch the terminals of a rather high voltage (not less than ten or more than 20 volts) battery to the generator terminals connecting to the load, but with the switch connecting to load open. Having done this, start the generator with the least possible delay and it should, if nothing is basically wrong, pick up at once."

Pretty good! Almost the same as the engineers answer. Readers will please remember that this school welcomes constructive criticism of answers. If you think any answer wrong, or that it might be improved, by all means let us hear from you. The school is not a perfection proposition. It is carried forward with the idea of helping us all to improve our knowledge. We don't know it all. Neither do you, so let's work together in this matter for the benefit of us all and for the benefit of the profession.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

Kuykendall Opens Theatre

Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, opened his second theatre, the Dixie, in his home town of Columbus, Miss., this week. After attending southern exhibition meetings, Mr. Kuykendall arrived in New York last week and left for Memphis by plane on Saturday.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

EXTRA SPEED

SUPER X "Pan" is much faster than regular Super Sensitive. Under normal conditions its extra speed gives definitely better shadow detail . . . general improvement in quality. And under adverse light it often means certain success instead of probable failure. Combining this great speed with startling fineness of grain, Eastman Super X marks a substantial advance in motion picture photography. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N.Y. (J. E. Step Up PATRONAGE and PROFITS WITH H-W Streamline Seats!

Whether you are building a new theatre or reseating an old one . . . make YOUR HOUSE . . . the smartest . . . most comfortable . . . most talked of theatre in town. You can do it too . . . with the new H-W streamline theatre chairs. These modern seats have metal edge backs (either enamelled or chromium plated) which lend sparkle to the house interior . . . fit into any decorative scheme. They're built to take abuse, to withstand plenty of wear without showing it.

● The chromium edge backs furnish a ready eye-guide for patrons in finding seats—thus quickening traffic all over the house and eliminating delays in the aisles. New, smart, fabrics and color combinations have been especially developed for these streamline chairs. The new streamline backs afford greater sitting depth. In brief, everything has been done to give Heywood streamline theatre seats plenty of class, comfort, and customer appeal. You'll like them . . . (and what is more profitable to you) your patrons will like them! We'll be pleased to send you complete information and to have our engineering staff work with you on any seating or reseating problem. A note to any Heywood-Wakefield sales office will bring ready response, without cost or obligation.

BEFORE: This is how the Adelphi Theatre in Chicago, Ill., appeared before being remodeled.

AFTER: And this is the difference a new Pittco Theatre Front made! Architect Mark D. Kalischer, who designed the front, and the theatre manager both feel that "the flash and richness of Pittco materials make them ideal for use on theatre fronts . . . and that the results obtained amply justify the expenditure".

"THE RESULTS WE HAVE OBTAINED AMPLY JUSTIFY THE EXPENDITURE"

THIS is the report received from the Adelphi Theatre in Chicago about the new Pittco Theatre Front which was recently installed there. And many other theatre owners and managers throughout the country who have joined the "Modernize Main Street" movement by remodeling their theatres with new Pittco Fronts are equally well pleased with the results. For a Pittco Front puts new life into admission records, draws new patrons, helps you keep old ones, and marks your theatre as an enterprising, up-and-coming entertainment house.

We recommend that in remodeling your front, you retain a local architect to design it for you. And if you feel unable to finance the modernization personally, we suggest that you apply to your local financial institution for a loan under the National Housing Act. Our representative will gladly help you negotiate such a loan. So remodel now with Pittco Store Front Products, whose success in the store modernization field is a good indication of their value when applied to outmoded theatre fronts.

Send for Free Book

Of course, you need complete information on Pittco Fronts. Our book "How Modern Store Fronts Work Profit Magic" will give it to you. The book also contains numerous photographs of Pittco-remodeled properties of many types and sizes, construction costs for fronts pictured, resulting business increases, etc. Clip the coupon for your copy.

EQUIPMENT AND MATERIALS

A Department of Reports on Developments in Products Used by Theatres

VELOCITY MICROPHONES

● Microphones adapted to the technique of many present-day stage performers, and to other purposes of the theatre, have been developed by the Amperite Corporation of New York. They are of velocity, or ribbon, type, employing a ribbon suspended between powerful magnets, which actuate it. The ribbon is but one ten-thousandth of an inch thick in order to eliminate so-called "resonant peaks," which tend to give a mechanical characteristic to the reproduced sound. It is also intended to prevent feed-back.

These microphones are of high-impedance type, eliminating the necessity of special input transformer and pre-amplifier. The Amperite instrument can be plugged directly into the photoelectric cell connection of the main amplifier of the sound system, thereby permitting its use as a public address system. Another characteristic permits the use of ordinary carbon volume controls as mixers.

In installing, special low-capacity cable is used for the microphone lead. The microphones can be placed either in the footlights, spaced about 15 feet apart, or on a stand. For the use of performers or speakers moving around the stage or in the aisles, a tiny junior size is available.

NEW CHAIR

● A new theatre chair of steel construction and with certain installation and maintenance features peculiar to the design, has been placed on the market by the John L. Cable Manufacturing Company. The theatre division has headquarters in New York, with Ed Dawson in charge. The chair is marketed under the trade name "Challenger."

The front side of the back may be upholstered in fabric, imitation leather or other upholstering material. The rear of the back is of steel, and is painted, or can be plated at a small extra charge. The arms are of wood and are clamped into position in installation. The seat hinge is of one-roller type fitting into the outer and inner grooves bracket and rising members. The pan is of steel and is part of the seat unit. Two rods on the bottom of the seat, forming a frame, simplify assembly.

The seat spring is of unit design, the springs being held in position and responding as a unit by means of a wire offset which goes around the rim of the frame. The end pieces consist in cold-rolled steel tubing and steel insert panels. The latter are painted, or may be plated or fitted with leather covering.

ELECTRIC FANS

● Five types of electric air circulating fans have been introduced to the theatre market by the National Air Conditioning Corporation of Chicago. The models vary as pedestal, wall bracket and shelf styles, but are essentially similar in design. They have been especially designed, according to the manufacturer, for the heavy-duty work in larger areas, as found in theatres.

The propeller is constructed in one piece of aluminum alloy and measures 20 inches in diameter. Tests submitted show that at a speed of 1,140 revolutions per minute, about 4,500 cubic feet of air per minute is delivered.

RECTIFIER FOR SUPREX

● A rectifier of copper oxide type for supplying two Suprex arcs and a spot, has been developed by the Forest Manufacturing Corporation of Belleville, N. J. A Westinghouse copper oxide rectifying unit is used, and a transformer network for connection to a three-phase alternating current supply line of from 200 to 240 volts, is employed. To hold down the arc striking current, sufficient reactance is provided in the circuit.

A blower system for cooling the rectifier is driven by a small ball bearing motor, factory lubricated. This rectifier is also designed to supply a regular carbon arc spot lamp from 50 to 55 volts by use of a special attachment.

BUYING SERVICE

● An equipment purchasing service has been established by Joseph S. Cifre of Boston, for the purpose of advising theatre operators contemplating the purchase of apparatus and supplies. Mr. Cifre was formerly associated with the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, and owned the United Theatre Equipment Corporation prior to its sale to the National Theatre Supply Company. He has been Boston manager for the latter concern since the sale.

LIGHTING STRIPS

● Unit holders for the mounting of General Electric Lumiline lamps (incandescent lamps of extended linear dimension and with small sockets permitting almost a continuous line of light) have been developed by Curtis Lighting of Chicago. With this equipment, borders may be effected without the use of gas-tube lighting, and because of the various colors available, the Lumiline Lightstrip is also well adapted to cove lighting. Not only color combinations, but geometric patterns are also possible.

A 60-watt lamp, used with an 18-inch length of Curtis Lightstrip, will supply enough light for good vision. In 12-inch lengths, 40-watt lamps are used. The latter is especially adapted to short distances where a high level of illumination is required.

The Lightstrip has receptacles at each end for holding the Lumiline lamp rigidly in place. The reflector is highly polished, while the other parts are cadmium-plated.

THEATRE SEATS

● A new line of theatre seats has been placed in manufacture by the Cole Theatre Supply Company of Kansas City. According to an announcement of the company, initial efforts will be concentrated on a nine-spring box seat with steel castings, and a wooden back. Distribution at first will be confined to Western Missouri and Kansas, distribution to be extended later.

Among those interested in the new venture are E. H. Emmert and T. F. Cole, head of the Cole Supply Company.

A recent visitor to the Chicago headquarters of Herman A. DeVry, Inc., was Prince Purachatra, of Siam. Mr. DeVry is shown greeting him on his arrival. The prince is a cinema enthusiast.

Members of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association and guests at the annual banquet held the third night of the convention in Chicago.

CODE AND TESTS PLANNED BY DEALERS

● Winning the respect and confidence of every theatre owner in the United States is the aim of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association in putting into effect the constructive program adopted at a four-day convention at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago from June 15 to 18. High points of plans for the coming year include:

Enforcement of a code of ethics and fair trade practices.

Laboratory examination of all equipment seeking outlets through the association, to assure quality and durability.

Extensive institutional advertising of the association's trade mark to impress the industry with what it stands for.

Joe E. Robin, who retired as president of the association to become executive secretary, has been entrusted with the responsibility of putting the entire program in operation and has been given the power and finances to enforce it.

As head of the fair trade practice committee, he is backed by a new set of by-laws with "teeth" in them. On the committee with him are Henry C. Dusman of Baltimore and W. J. Katz of New York, with J. E. McGuire of Los Angeles and Joe Goldberg of Chicago as alternates.

In case of any complaint on the part of any theatre owner of unfair treatment the committee or its representative in the territory, has the power to compel attendance at the hearing, and it has access to the books and correspondence referring to the subject matter.

In case the complaint is substantiated, the committee has the right to impose fines of $250 and higher, and in extreme cases, to revoke membership, which in addition to being a very serious matter in itself might involve a large loss of money by forfeiting shares in pooling arrangements.

"To put it briefly," said Mr. Robin at the close of the convention, "we want every theatre owner to know that he will be given fair and equitable treatment from every member of our association.

"The great majority need no code, but the few who do will find that there are teeth in it and that we will not pull our punches."

Every type of misrepresentation is prohibited. Members are pledged to live up to every contract, verbal or written, in spirit as well as in letter.

One of the most important rules, from the standpoint of both manufacturer and theatre owners, is a provision that no dealer is permitted to give a longer guarantee on any piece of equipment than the manufacturer orginally has given.

The trade mark of the association is now registered and fully protected. New membership certificates will be issued quarterly.

Within a few weeks the association plans to launch a campaign of institutional advertising in the trade to familiarize everyone with the aims and ideals of the association and the trade mark which is its emblem. This advertising will be supplemented by three or four direct mailings to theatre owners.

On the basis that it intends to comply with every regulation of the government price agreements were carefully avoided. Flooding a territory with goods at prices below the generally accepted standards was denounced as an unfair practice, however.

Setting up of a laboratory for the examination of all equipment offered the independent dealers for distribution will be one of the most important of Mr. Robin's responsibilities.

It is the aim of association to handle only product of quality, manufactured by responsible people, whose sales policy is aggressive and fair. In the future, members will be expected to purchase only such items as have been thoroughly tested by the association and are found not only to perform what their manufacturer claims, but are backed by first-class houses. These tests will be made in established laboratories of standing with a representative of the manufacturer present.

As to the aggressive and fair sales policy required of manufacturers, the association is to insist that the manufacturers create a real demand for their product by advertising or other effective means, and have an equitable differential in discounts. It believes that the established dealer is entitled to a wider spread than the repair man, and that he in turn is entitled to an advantage over curbstone dealers.

From every angle, the recent convention was highly gratifying to the men whose work made it possible. The equipment display in the East Lounge of the hotel was one of the most complete ever assembled, and the exhibitors were more than enthusiastic over its success.

Numerous manufacturers lined up dealers in territories where they were hitherto unrepresented, and a great many direct sales were closed. Convention sessions were arranged so that the members had plenty of time to spend at the exhibit.

The Grand Ballroom of the hotel was filled Monday night, when a banquet, dance and entertainment were provided for the conventioneers.

At the conclusion of the meeting it was voted to hold also the 1936 convention at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago, on account of its central location.

B. F. Shearer of the B. F. Shearer Company, dealers with headquarters in Seattle, succeeds Mr. Robin as president. Other officers elected at the convention for the following year are K. R. Douglas, Capitol Theatre Supply Company, Boston, vice president; Clem Rizzo, Philadelphia, treasurer; J. E. Robin, executive secretary.

Joseph Maronne, Southwestern Theatre Equipment Company, Houston; J. C. Hornstein, Joe Hornstein, Inc., New York; George McArthur, McArthur Theatre Equipment Company, Detroit, and Joseph Graham, Graham Brothers, Denver, were elected to the board of directors.

Member dealers, and those who officially represented them at the convention, were:

American Theatre Supply, Paul Hueter, Toledo.
Amusement Supply, Ralph Ruben and Russell Ruben, Detroit.
Amusement Supply, J. J. Pear, New York.
Capitol Motion Picture Supply, I. S. Pearse, New York.
Capitol Theatre Supply, K. R. Douglas, Boston.
Clem Rizzo, Philadelphia.
Crown Motion Picture Supply, W. J. Katz, New York.
Des Moines Theatre Supply, A. E. Thiele, Des Moines.
J. F. Dusman Company, H. C. Dusman, Baltimore.
Exhibitors Supply, Ray Colvin, St. Louis.
J. Goldberg, Inc., Joseph Goldberg, Chicago.
Graham Brothers, J. Graham, Denver.
Guercio and Barthel, J. V. Guercio, Chicago.
Joe Hornstein, Inc., J. C. Hornstein, N. Y.
McArthur Theatre Equipment Company, George McArthur, Detroit.
Oliver Theatre Supply, Carl White, Omaha.
Queen Feature Service, Miss V. Harwell, Birmingham.
Service Theatre Supply, O. J. Hazen, Salt Lake.

Wenzel, M. Wenzel.

NOTES ON EXHIBITORS

● Unusually many for a convention display were the kinds of theatre equipment exhibited at the convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association in Chicago. Thirty-six manufacturers were represented, some of them by several products. In this way, and also through especially arranged conferences with dealers, manufacturers played a prominent part in the 1935 convention.

H. J. Maul, who is now with the Weber Machine Company of Rochester, N. Y., spent happy hours explaining the Weber soundheads, complete sound equipment, and portable systems to the dealers.

B. A. Miller of the Amiglaze Corporation, New York, certainly received plenty of attention for his liquid finishing compound. He closed with the majority of independent dealers present, and this, together with outlets previously established, makes his product available in almost every distributing spot in the country. Miller was jubilant over the fact that Warner Brothers, who had the first real opportunity of testing Amiglaze in a large number of theatres, reported an average saving of 32 per cent in maintenance costs through its use.

Homer A. Wilson, it was learned at the convention, has joined the Operadio Manufacturing Company and will represent it in the East.

The exhibit of J. P. Kraft for Air Controls, Inc., manufacturing cooling fans for theatres having up to 800 seats, was one of the most interesting.

E. T. Dawson of New York displayed a line of moderately priced chairs which the John L. Cable Manufacturing Company believes is going to make second-hand chairs a drug on the market.

Both J. C. Heck and C. H. Roessner of Da-Lite Screen reported very satisfactory sales in the educational field, which they believe offers a big opportunity for equipment dealers.

W. H. Hirschfeld was in charge of Motiograph's display, but O. F. Spahr was around the hotel several days renewing old acquaintances and discussing technical matters with other experts.

Louis B. Goldberg of Denver, representing Goldberg Brothers, displayed at this convention for the first time.

The Ideal Seating Company's display adjoined the door, and the new models displayed by William Gedris gave a welcome place to sit to many who wearied a bit making the rounds.

Golde baby spots were placed at several points to good advantage. Mrs. Mary Ashcraft made good use of one of them in exhibiting Ashcraft projection lamps.

C. E. Phillips announced that the Peabody Seating Company had closed with Capitol of New York for the latter to represent Peabody product in the Metropolis.

Karl Brenkert of the Brenkert Manufacturing Company; Harry H. Strong of Strong Electric; and O. F. Neu of Neumade Products, were themselves on hand at the exhibits of their respective companies.

Two of the most complete exhibits were those of Chicago Cinema Products, with General view of the equipment exhibit at the I. T. S. D. A. convention in Chicago.

ROY P. BEDORE in charge; and of the Wenzel Company, with N. WENZEL present.

J. S. MECK of the Clough-Brengle Company had an effective demonstration of his company's new "Series AQA" amplifiers and cathode ray Oscilloscope.

The decision of RCA Victor to exhibit its latest models was considered a fine goodwill gesture.

The Baldor Electric Company exhibit of its Rect-O-Lite was under the direction of GEORGE A. SHOCK. A very effective pamphlet was distributed from the booth.

A. E. GARDNER of Platter Sound Products, in charge of their complete display, reported business steadily increasing over a period of the last eight months.

The DeVry exhibit had a favorable location at the left of the entrance to the East Lounge, and its simplified projector attracted a great deal of attention throughout the session. Among the features of this projector which brought requests for repeated demonstrations was its silent chain drive. Also on exhibit was the new DeVry spring steel 2,000-foot reel.

W. C. KUNZMANN was on hand to represent the National Carbon Company. "Bill" Kunzmann is an old-timer at conventions, he being the ringmaster for all the SMPE affairs.

MRS. REUSCHLE of the LeRoy Sound Equipment Company, Rochester, N. Y., was one of the two women in charge of equipment exhibits. The other was MRS. MARY ASHCRAFT.

A MANAGER SUGGESTS

● Why hasn't some equipment concern developed a "robot doorman" operated by a photoelectric cell, that is entirely practicable for theatres? This question is implied in a communication from Edwin Segdwick Chittenden Coppock, who has been one of Paramount's most valued theatre managers, later a developer of circuit properties in Bermuda, and more recently associated with Pix Theatres in New York, a new company which is soon to erect the first of a group of partially pre-fabricated theatres of small seating capacities. Apparently Mr. Coppock has been investigating the possibility of eliminating tickets, doormen and so on and hasn't been able to find the kind of automatic apparatus he wants. He writes:

"One of the pet annoyances of patrons for many years has been the necessity of securing a ticket from a box office and then presenting that ticket in abject humility to a pompous guardian of the premises. Exhibitors have in many cases become confused in their minds as to just what that ticket-taker represented and how he should conduct his duties. Certainly the stern, gruff, army sergeant, type may be effective in frightening prankish kids and the movie-minded drunk, but he is at the same time defeating all the manager's efforts toward creating good will for a community institution. He and the cashier are the two employes or representatives that come in intimate contact with all the patrons of the theatre.

"Personally, I feel that the ticket itself is an unnecessary nuisance. In the Trans-Lux interpretation of the 'automatic' theatre a recording turnstile has been installed in a narrow entryway. From the patrons' point of view the turnstile does not seem to be satisfactory. Its physical design is that of a barrier, a thing that certainly does not belong in front of the doors of a building when so much effort is being expended to get people to that building. Women, particularly expectant mothers, have expressed their objection to the turnstile. Nevertheless, some way must be devised to accomplish the following things:

"Count patrons for the purpose of checking the cashier, stop unauthorized or undesirable people, make a record for the computation of federal admission taxes, entirely eliminate the use of tickets, properly handle patrons with passes, allow patrons to leave for short intervals such as going out to purchase cigarettes, and provide an accurate check of attendance as required for percentage attractions.

"Now to my mind the answer to this problem will be the clever use of the photoelectric cell or 'electric eye.' In the familiar Trans-Lux front and lobby layout the electric eye would be augmented by an electric lock on the entrance door, controlled by the cashier to stop unauthorized persons. She should also have a buzzer connection with the foyer so that anyone on duty there could be called or advised of a possible error, or of a 'gate crasher.' Employes would enter the theatre through another doorway at the stage end of the building or at the side. In checking the cashier, her money and passes should total the number of patrons recorded.

"Other uses for such a device will suggest themselves to any interested manager. Personally, I believe it is time some of the engineering brains in this industry turned toward the perfection of automatic devices of this kind."

NEW REPRODUCERS

● Sound reproduction systems in two models have been brought out by the Pacent Engineering Corporation of New York. The models are identical except for the soundheads, one of which is larger and more rugged than the other.

The larger head is built on an iron casting in which there are two compartments, one containing the filter and its driving gears, the other the optical system, sprockets, etc. The filter consists in a large solid flywheel mounted on the sound sprocket shaft by spiral springs. The clamping is fixed, the filter being designed to require no adjustment. In this same compartment is a train of gears, which drive a lower takeup sprocket, which is not filtered.

In the film compartment are the rollers and scanning mechanism. The film is pulled over a drag block by a constant-speed sprocket driven by the mechanical filter as described above. The film is looped at the constant-speed sprocket so as to eliminate tension. There is also a special roller permitting rewinding of the film in the projector.

The smaller head is similar, but simpler. It is built on an aluminum casting with a single compartment, for the film only. A large outboard cast iron flywheel is connected to the constant-speed shaft which runs in a long bronze bearing. This shaft and the attached parts form the only moving unit in the head. The drive from the motor is to the periphery of the flywheel through two rubber fabric V-belts, which supply resilience to the filter system. In the single compartment are the film tension arm and inertia roller, which keep the film taut and running smoothly in position on the cylindrical drag block. The photoelectric cell is inside of the drag block. The film goes directly from the constant-speed sprocket to the rewind magazine.

Both heads use exciter lamps of 7½ amperes, 10 volts. In the larger head, the lamp socket is on a ball-and-socket joint to allow the filament to be adjusted. In the smaller head the optical system and distance of exciter lamp from it are fixed, though the latter can be adjusted up and down by means of thumb screws. Both heads use standard 90-volt photoelectric cells.

No head amplifier is employed in the new Pacent system, a lead going directly from the amplifier to the photoelectric cells. Cell voltage is supplied by the amplifier and is adjustable from 80 to 120 volts.

The control panel of the amplifier carries the line switch and pilot light, record pickup switch, fader, photocell voltage control and range control. The latter consists in two continuously variable controls, one of which attenuates the bass response of the amplifier, the other the high frequency response. The incorporation of this feature in the design was to provide the projectionist with a means of reducing the ill effect of dirty film or poor recording.

The speaker system is unified in one mounting and consists in two 12-inch low-frequency dynamic cones and one high-frequency horn mounted together. The speaker system includes a power supply for the field and a frequency filter.

The manufacturer claims a flat frequency response for the amplifier of from 40 to 8,000 cycles.

A new design from top to bottom using a tried and proven principle of rectification that will adequately meet the exacting requirements of the new Suprex Arc. It enables the projectionist to obtain the maximum advantage and light-efficiency from this superb new arc.

Three-phase, full-wave rectification delivers a smooth, uniform, direct current to the arc.

Two sizes available — 40-50 amperes for the 6-7 mm. trim and 50-65 amperes for the 6.5-8 mm. trim.

A permanent type of rectifying unit that requires no maintenance or replacements. First cost is the only cost.

High efficiency. Will save from 5 to 10 cents per hour in cost of current over other types of D-c. power equipment.

The attached coupon will bring you complete details of this newest General Electric product.

A 500-SEAT DESIGN BY AN EXHIBITOR

The front of the Janes theatre, executed in Carrara glass.

Describing the plan and architectural scheme conceived by Mr. Fred H. Witters for his Janes theatre in Saginaw

ABOUT a year ago a caller at the offices of Quigley Publications in New York was Mr. Fred H. Witters of Saginaw, Mich. He was contemplating the construction of a neighborhood theatre in that city, and had come to discuss his plans with the architect of the service department of Better Theatres.

At that time he had not yet selected his site, but had made a survey of the town and believed he knew about where another theatre, if planned carefully to meet local needs, could be successful. A month or so later he acquired the site, but zoning restrictions had to be overcome before construction could start. Meanwhile——

"During the several months previous to starting the building," writes Mr. Witters to the editor of Better Theatres, "I tried to gather together as much information as I could regarding small theatres, that being the reason for my call at your office, and I want to thank you for several valuable suggestions which you made at that time. Many other well versed men have been very kind in giving me good information and advice, for all of which I am very appreciative.

"Perhaps the one source of the greatest amount of information was Better Theatres, which I study carefully. The information through its columns is of great value to anyone planning a building as I did.

"I planned the layout of the building, but had some assistance from a local firm of architects so as to be sure that all beams were planned with the proper safety factors. I had no supervision from the architect, and ran the job completely myself, using day labor throughout.

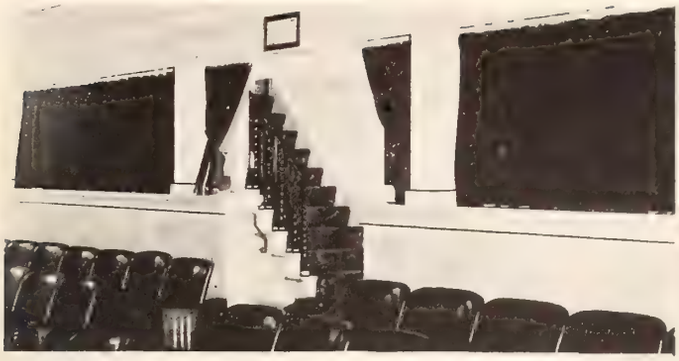
"I am very proud of this theatre, having designed it, and the response from our Saginaw people has been wonderful. I have given them something in a neighborhood theatre which they did not have before. I have combined comfort with practicability, and my patrons rave over the comfortable chairs, exceptional sound, good projection and wonderful air, as well as the beauty of the interior. This is the second theatre I have built."

It is common, perhaps usual, for exhibitors to participate directly in the planning and designing of theatres. More than most other types of buildings do theatres represent the ideas and selections of their owners and operators. This is because the theatre is so specialized in its functions, so technologically and otherwise vital to the purposes of the motion picture showman.

Nevertheless, it is probably not common for a showman to participate in the planning of a new theatre, with claims to fine appointments and complete facilities, to quite the extent that Mr. Witters has in the creation of his Janes theatre.

The description that follows, and the schematic sketch of the floor plan, are based on data supplied by Mr. Witters himself—are presented, indeed, in essentially his own words.—G. S.

IN PLAN, in architecture, in materials and facilities, the new Janes theatre in Saginaw, Mich., must represent, with unusual thoroughness, just what its owner and operator wanted. For it was designed by him. With the exception of basic structural engineering, the Janes is the creation, as well as the property, of Mr. Fred H. Witters. Steel work, foundations and certain structural details were planned by Cowles & Mutscheller, firm of Saginaw architects. Mr. Witters developed the layout, conceived the design, purchased the materials and superintended construction. No contractor was employed. Mr. Witters hired all the labor. And when not occupied with these matters, he worked on the job himself! The first performance was presented five months after the beginning of construction.



The Janes theatre is located in a rather densely populated neighborhood section of Saginaw, which has a population of 81,000. The total seating capacity is 508. [The floor plan is shown on page 12.]

The size of the lot is 40 x 110 feet, and the building covers the entire lot. It is located in the middle of the block. The lobby is 10 x 22 feet. At the left of the lobby is a small private office, and at the right is the box office. The floor is of terrazzo with recesses for rubber mats, which are of modernistic design in colors.

From the lobby, two double doors lead to the foyer, which is 10 feet by about 38 feet. The foyer is completely carpeted, and a three-foot runner of the same carpeting extends down each aisle, this being recessed to make the floor and carpet flush. Entrance to the women's room is at one end of the foyer. At the other end is a stairway leading to the basement, where is located the men's room and the heating plant for the front end. A stairway with wrought iron hand rails leads from the foyer to the mezzanine, which accommodates 66 seats.

The auditorium is approximately 38 feet by 80 feet from standee rail to the front stage line. Two-thirds of this distance has a pitch of one inch to the foot. The stage is 10 feet wide, and the screen is located 4 feet from the rear wall.

Under the stage is a basement in which is located the main heating plant and ventilating equipment. This consists of a Bertossa, 400,000 B.t.u. warm air unit, this being chosen because of its large percentage of heating area. Natural gas is used entirely for heating the building. A No. 105 blower furnished by National Theatre Supply Company is connected to the furnace for air circulation. This blower is driven by a 7½-h.p., 4-speed motor through a Tex-Rope drive and is silent. In the summer months, the furnace is by-passed, and fresh air is taken directly from the roof through a penthouse.

The blower is capable of furnishing 50 cubic feet of air per seat per minute, if necessary. The blower is controlled by a heat switch on the furnace, which starts the blower when the hood of the furnace reaches a predetermined temperature. However, when the room temperature reaches the thermostat setting, the blower stops and the ventilating process also stops. In this case, ventilation is continued by the use of a manual switch located in the foyer, which takes the control away from the heat switch, so that the blower is then operated independently and regardless of heat or furnace conditions.

The air handled in the heating months is a mixture of recirculated and outside air. When the house is fairly well filled, the gas at the furnace is shut off automatically a large portion of the time. Obviously, the lobby would then be short of heat, which is the reason for the smaller gas heater located in the front basement.

In the construction of the building, safety was considered of prime importance. The auditorium and foyer floors are of concrete and are laid on the ground. The lobby floor is of re-inforced concrete, as is the floor and ceiling of the projection room. Cinder blocks were used throughout for wall construction. (These, Mr. Witters comments, are very satisfactory from an acoustical standpoint.) In the auditorium, these were laid in a broken ashlar pattern and then sprayed with Bondex, a cement paint, in a light buff color.

The side walls of the building are not required for support of the roof, the roof being supported entirely on steel columns and crossbeams. There are about 24 inches of air space between the ceiling and the roof, and the ceiling boards were covered with mineral rock wool to a depth of 4 inches as in insulator.

The entire ceiling of the auditorium is covered with a wood veneer, each tile 16 x 32 inches, laid in herringbone pattern. These tiles are variegated. They have considerable insulating value, and Mr. Witters finds them good acoustically.

The front is of a modernistic design. The entire surface is covered with black and white Carrara glass, furnished and installed by the Saginaw branch of The Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company. The poster frames, furnished by National Theatre Supply Company, Detroit, are set in recesses, the chromium borders being practically flush with the glass front. A marquee and sign of modern pattern with a considerable quantity of neon display, was furnished by National Theatre Supply Company and was designed and built by the Flasher Neon Display, Detroit.

The main floor of the auditorium has 442 seats and the mezzanine has 66. All chairs are 20 inches wide, have full spring-to-edge seats and upholstered backs. The seats are black, and the backs red, in imitation leather. The chairs were manufactured by the Irwin Seating Company.

The projection room is 10 x 22 feet. It has two metal sash windows in the front. In an adjoining room are located complete toilet facilities for the projectionist. Motiograph projectors and sound systems are used, with three speakers behind the screen. An older type of amplifier (the one shown in the photograph), with separate speaker, has been installed for use in case of emergency only. The main amplifier, located between the projectors, also furnishes the exciter lamp current, there being both an a. c. and a d. c. supply. This gives considerable flexibility to the sound system. The direct current for the Motiograph low-intensity lamps is furnished by a 20-40 Hertner Transverter located in the front basement, the controls and panel being located in the projection room. Illumination of the 12 x 16-foot screen is obtained with 20 amperes, throw 95 feet.

The auditorium is lighted by both direct and indirect equipment. The dimmer control for these circuits is located in the projection room. All of the lighting fixtures in the building, excepting those in the lobby, are of Mr. Witter's own design and manufacture. On the pilasters in the auditorium, the lower modernistic fixtures are made of cast iron supporting an opal glass tube 4 x 18 inches, with a white and an amber bulb on dimmer control.

SHORTSIGHTED POLICIES IN OPERATION

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

Naming these policies, the author speaks out for the establishment of intelligent, constructive co-ordination

IN THE BUSINESS of providing motion picture entertainment, the employes, the owners, the stockholders, and also the bankers, and in some notable instances, the creditors, are all partners. All being in the same business, each group is very much dependent upon the other for ultimate success. Selfishness or greed in individuals of each group, and consequently of the entire group, leads them to believe that his or their contribution to the business is the most important, and as the result the contributions of either the labor or the money of other groups are depreciated.

Men for generations have been involved in this complicated problem of attempting to determine the true relationship of each group to business generally, but as yet no universal and practical formula has been evolved. The underlying problem of determining the true relationship, in terms of participation in the financial profits of capital, management and labor, still occupies the center of the industrial stage.

Our business is no exception to the rest of industry, and it is only by attempting to understand the problems of all classes that dissatisfaction can be averted. The incidences or locations where our system of business is out of balance are legion. From a careful study and consideration of the problems, the evident conclusion is that there is never going to be a solution based on general principles, or rules of thumb applied with dictatorial pressure, without changes or variations in all parts of the industry and in all parts of the country. This does not mean that there are no underlying truths which must be acknowledged, accepted and used, as the foundation for specific adjustments and balancing of the interests of all in the motion picture business, whether their interests be financial, administrative, management, labor or service.

I present that which I consider the most fundamental truth which must be accepted by all before any real progress can be made, and this is, that any and all unprofitable businesses are a social and economic evil. This applies to the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor. Unprofitable units in this business are very definite liabilities to the entire industry, and all effort to keep afloat unhealthy situations by the power of money, mergers, trick bookkeeping, or smart deals is just prolonging the agony, with a finally greater crash and calamity in the end, dragging with it worthy people and perhaps other worthy enterprises.

The bankers who are driving hard deals, demanding maximum security and the lion's share of the profits, if any, are aggravating the difficulties of adjustment. The landlords who are taking 25% to 35% of the gross of a theatre for rent are shortsighted in their policy. The circuit owners who are taking advantage of the unemployment situation to operate with cheap labor are retarding their own progress. And managements who are operating on a percentage of the grosses and bleeding the operation with cheap maintenance and cheap labor and cheap policies are definitely hurting the motion picture industry. Finally, it must be added that when so-called organized labor demands wage scales all out of proportion to the earning power of a particular operation, they are wrong and only retard the arrival of the day when labor will realize its true value and receive its just compensation from industry.

DETERMINING A COST BASIS

IT IS PERHAPS unfortunate that we cannot operate our business with the exactness possible in the manufacture, distribution and sale of, say, automobiles. If such were the case the problem would be very much simplified and there would be background, history and precedent to guide us. But the basic cost of entertainment . . . amusement . . . an intangible thing . . . has no bearing on the ultimate financial expectancy. A motion picture, being neither food nor raiment nor shelter, depends for its value, commercial and otherwise, on its effect upon human emotions. Human emotions cannot be appraised and catalogued completely in advance, at least not sufficiently in advance to enable us to establish reasonable cost figures for a particular production, including distribution and exhibition. This does not mean that it must all be guesswork, as it is quite evident that by analysis of story, shooting script, and supervision of production, from a new point of view, great improvements could be made in the usual type of program picture.

All of this is to emphasize the difficulty of determining just where to start in establishing costs, for costs must be determined before profits can be available for division. Pictures are all we have to sell, and every exhibitor in the land is affected by the producers' inability to determine a right cost because guesses, plus some experience, are all that he can base his possible future income from that picture on, whereas the automobile manufacturer knows the price that he is going to sell his car for before he goes into production.

MARKET UNCERTAINTY

At the very inception of a picture uncertainty thus enters importantly into the situation, and this uncertainty is carried in ever-increasing proportion right down the line to the exhibitor, where it becomes an absolute nightmare. The exhibitor has invested in an elaborate one-purpose building, or he has signed a ten-, fifteen- or twenty-year lease at high rental, basing his plans on selling to the public a product of indefinite quality with intangible appeal to the public.

Furthermore, the exhibitor speculates with his very location. The chances are that before the termination of his lease, or before he has realized on the complete useful period of his theatre, the ebb and flow of population, or the construction of highways, or the re-zoning of the town has made his site to some degree obsolete.

The exhibitor's earnings are always in jeopardy from encroachment by other circuits or independent operators. Again, the attitude of the public is unusual in that they expect their theatres to be maintained better. They expect better appointments than when dealing with the butcher, the baker, the grocer or the general store. And finally, the exhibitor frequently suffers from municipal and State regulation and State and federal tax legislation. All of this in addition to the fact that night baseball, boxing and wrestling matches, night clubs, road houses, and dine-and-dance places cut into his business.

LACK OF STABILITY

Any impartial survey, I believe, will adequately establish that the exhibitor takes a greater chance with his investment than any other element of the business. According to some schools of financial thought this should indicate that the exhibitor should profit most, but does he? My answer is no! Being harrassed in the operation of his business by many uncertainties, while at the same time loaded to the breaking point with very definite fixed charges of substantial proportions, the exhibitor finds himself unable to stabilize his own business operation. Without stabilization in some degree the exhibitor cer-

THE FIFTH OF A SERIES ON REMODELING, CONSIDERING IN SUCCESSIVE ISSUES: FRONTS, LOBBIES AND FOYERS, THE AUDITORIUM, AND LOUNGES

Decorative treatment of the Edgewood theatre, Baltimore, which includes ceiling and wall panels laid with Acousti-Celotex.

Panels between plaster-ornamented pilasters in the Hiland theatre, Fort Thomas, Ky., treated with U. S. Gypsum acoustic tiles.

I.—ACOUSTICS in DECORATION

By EUGENE CLUTE

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to consider the decorative treatment of a motion picture theatre auditorium without keeping in mind the necessity for good acoustics. While good acoustical conditions should be attained, so far as practicable, by designing the shape and proportions of the auditorium to this end, more or less sound-absorbing material is needed and must be taken care of in the decoration.

Most existing theatres seem to have been built with but little knowledge of, or regard for, acoustics, and dependence for good sound in them must be placed largely upon the proper use of acoustical materials.

Sometimes the deliberate desiging of an auditorium of such shape that its acoustics need a great deal of correction with such materials, may be warranted by the pleasing appearance of the room. Often space considerations dictate a shape that is not ideal for hearing reproduced speech and music. Fortunately there are many and various good acoustical materials, some of them moderate in cost.

Just what surfaces need such materials, and just what to use in each instance, are matters that often should be determined with the advice of a competent acoustics engineer. Some of the firms manufacturing sound equipment maintain engineering staffs and advise theatres use their equipment. It is to their interest to see that their apparatus is not blamed for acoustical faults of the theatre. Manufacturers of acoustic treatment material also render such service, and there also are a number of consulting acoustics engineers. General recommendations are of little value except to give a rough idea of the usual requirements and methods of treatment for there are likely to be complicating conditions, while theatres vary widely.

It may be said in general, however, that extremely large, plain ceiling surfaces in the auditorium should be of acoustical plaster. Relief ornament may be of hard plaster, as the irregularities of its surface break up the sound. A ceiling that is deeply coffered in small panels or is otherwise thoroughly broken up, does not need any acoustical material.

The rear wall of the auditorium should, as a rule, be treated with some efficient sound-absorbing material. Often the side walls, for some distance from the rear, need acoustical treatment, which is frequently carried to the front line of the balcony. It is well to cover the balcony facia with sound-absorbing material.

Sometimes it is highly desirable to use acoustic tile, plaster or other sound-absorbing material on the side walls from the front of the balcony to the proscenium. Though the reflection of sound from these walls may seem likely to do no particular harm, it may contribute to unsatisfactory acoustical conditions. Also, much of this sound must be absorbed by the back wall, and it is often felt that it is better to absorb part of it in the first surface it strikes and have less of it to take care of at the back.

A long, narrow and low auditorium should, as a rule, have all of the walls and the ceiling of acoustic material. Tile lends itself readily to decorative needs here. Acoustical plaster covered with a felt blanket that is in turn covered by a decorative fabric, is also a form of treatment for such auditoriums.

Carpet in the aisles of the main floor and of the balconies, and sound-absorbing upholstery, such as a mohair pile fabric, on the seat backs, are needed to absorb sound. The clothing of the people in the audience absorbs sound very satisfactorily, but the vacant seats need to be practically as efficient in this connection. Heavy draperies and such wall hangings as tapestries are highly sound-absorbent.

If street noises are disturbing, owing to a lobby too short to keep them out of the auditorium, a plate glass screen on the top of the standee rail will relieve the trouble to some degree. But the sheets of glass forming it should be set on a zig-zag, especially if the standee rail is curved, to prevent sound reflected by the glass from having an adverse effect. If sheets of glass 3 feet wide are set 3 inches out of line in rail fence fashion, the reflected sounds will be spread sufficiently and practically lost.

Over-treatment with acoustical materials should be avoided. It is possible to absorb so much sound as to make reproduced speech be unnatural and to ruin utterly orchestra music.

ACOUSTICAL MATERIALS

Acoustical plaster should be of a brand that has known value and should be applied in strict accordance with the manufacturer's directions in order that its efficiency may not be impaired. It should not be painted so as to seal the pores. Tiles with large perforations, which depend on the holes for transmission of the sound to the absorbing areas, may in general be painted with a lead base paint thin enough to prevent filling of the perforations. Acoustic plaster, however, and any non-perforated material, should be coated, if decorative surfacing is necessary, with a non-bridging lacquer, or calcimine may be used.

Perforated J-M Transite board, backed by rock wool, makes a highly efficient sound-absorbing wall treatment. Transite tile units 12x12 inches costs about 60c a square foot installed. J-M rock wool blanket 1 inch thick costs about 55 cents a square foot installed, and about 90 cents a square foot in the 4-inch thickness. It is also made 2 inches thick. The perforated Transite tiles are furnished in a standard finish of cream color paint. They may be painted in place with thin oil paint of any desired color, care being taken not to clog perforations. They are frequently used in back of a decorative fabric.

Rock wool acoustical tile comes in units 12x12 inches. It has beveled edges and a factory finish of light cream color porous lacquer. It should not be painted, but may be decorated with stenciling in oil colors thinned with turpentine, leaving as much of the surface as possible untouched. It can, of course, be used in back of a decorative fabric. It costs about 35c a square foot installed.

Sanacoustic tile comes in units 12x24 inches, scored across the center so as to appear like two 12-inch squares when in place. Each unit consists of a perforated sheet metal case enclosing a pad of rock wool in a cover of porous fabric. The standard finish is white or cream paint. It may be painted with oil colors with proper care, or stenciled, or it can be had pre-decorated in several designs at an additional cost of about 30c a square foot. It may be used in back of fabric. Also, if painted a fairly dark color, the perforations are not noticeable, and the tiles may be used in horizontal or vertical banding with decorative metal strips.

GUIDING THE PATRON

Because there is very little light in motion picture auditoriums, various means are being introduced to make it easier for patrons to find their way and to avoid a misstep. One of these is a small light source 4x12 inches, set flush in the carpet of the aisles at intervals of 15 feet. It is of Catalin 2 inches thick in a metal housing, and contains a tubular incandescent lamp. A new idea is to inlay a light-colored strip in the carpet at the edge of the steppings in the balconies. On the main floor a light strip may be inlaid in the carpet the full length of the aisle, as has been done in the new Trans-Lux theatre on Flatbush Avenue in Brooklyn.

Auritorium of the Regun theatre in New York City, with a decorative scheme incorporating Atlantic Gypsum "Acoustex." The tiles are applied to the side walls and rear wall—there is no acoustical treatment at ceiling. Pilasters, friezes and beams are in ornamental plaster, and the color scheme consists in bronze, gold, silver and green.

II.—EFFICIENT MAINTENANCE

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

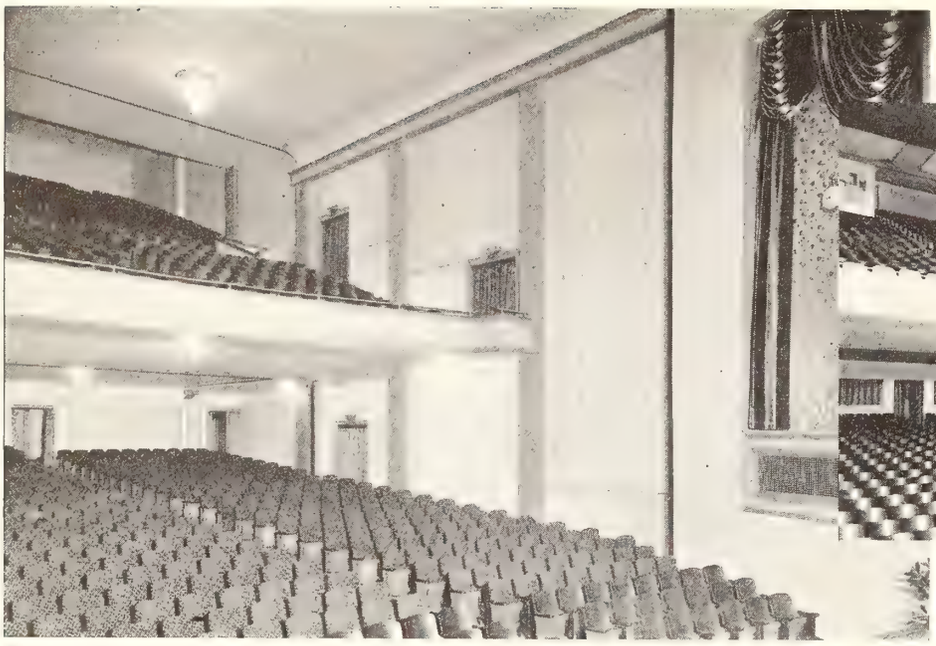
WHEN REMODELING the theatre auditorium, keep the maintenance problem in mind. The maintenance too often consists in sweeping the floor underneath the seats and vacuum-cleaning the carpet of the aisle every night, and giving the floor a coat of paint once or twice a year. Add to this seat maintenance, and that frequently is the whole story today. There is much more that needs attention.

ORNAMENTATION

If plaster changes are contemplated in the plan, try to have the architect eliminate heavy ornamental plaster that serves to catch much dirt and filth. Reduce, if possible, the number of mouldings and headings that are hard to get to in order to clean. Fabric panels are not the best type of decoration to use from a maintenance point of view because they become dirty shortly after installation. In brushing down fabric panels don't use a wool wall brush, but use a bristle brush.

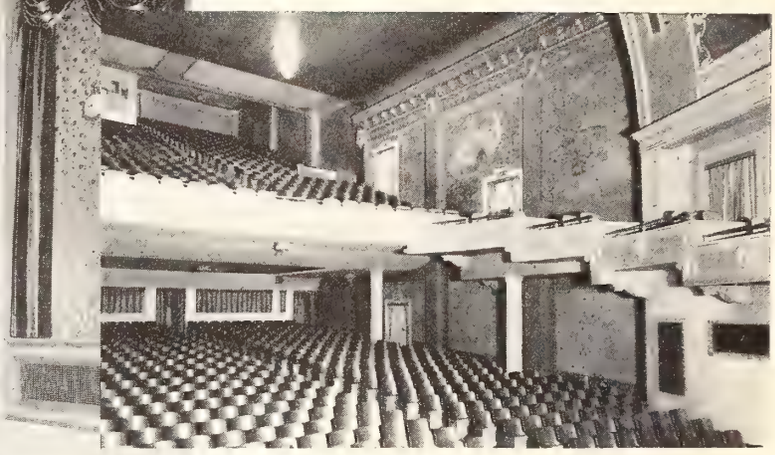
Eliminate as many draperies as possible —too many draperies is an indication of the age and period of your theatre. It is expensive to have them cleaned, and once they become dirty all the brushing in the world will not restore them to freshness.

LIGHTING



When deciding upon lighting fixtures consider the facilities for reaching them and keeping them clean; also consider the time it takes to relamp them. Plain, simplified fixtures that create an effect through illumination are much more practical than fixtures that are in themselves highly ornamental works of art, as well as more in keeping with modern decorative and architectural styles.

Practically every auditorium is cleaned in the dark. True, there is enough light so the cleaners won't fall over the seats, but seldom enough to do a first-class job of cleaning. Provide more electric light outlets so that the cleaners can use shorter extension cords on their lights and thereby move them about with greater facility and less loss of time.



PAINTED FLOORS

In most theatres the management tries to keep painted the floor under and between the rows of seats. The usual colors are a dirty battleship gray or a dark maroon red, both bad colors. The battleship gray used has usually a large amount of blue in it, and this causes it to look very dark under projection lighting. Use a simple gray, or black and white, and the nearer the gray is to white the better. True, some may complain about the appearance, but everyone knows that he is stepping on an uncarpeted floor, and the lighter color will facilitate the movement of people in and out of the row; further, it will make

SIMPLICITY FOR ORNATE

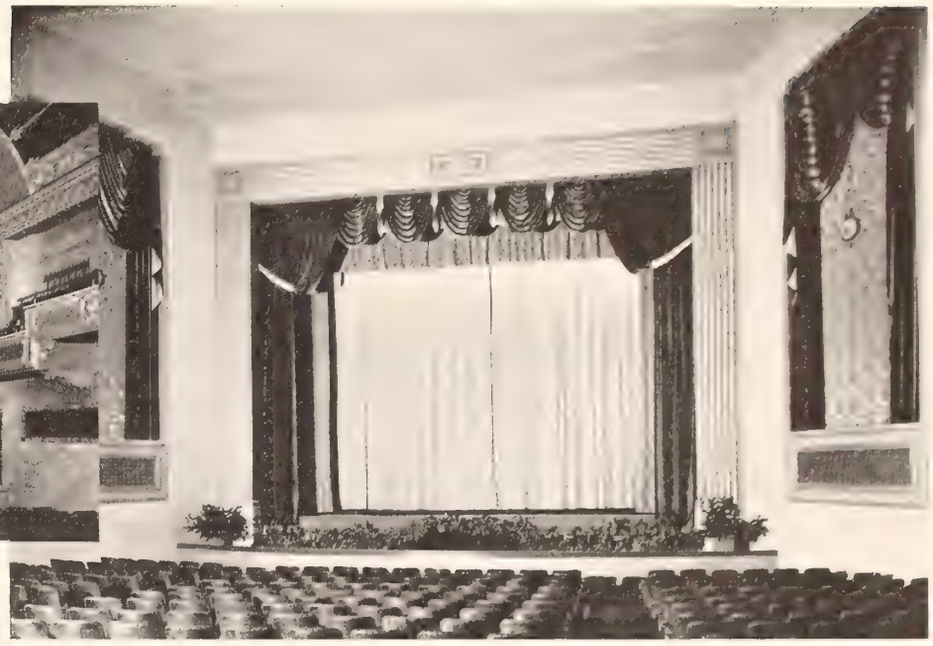
THE REMODELING of the D & R theatre in Aberdeen, Wash., has consisted essentially in transforming the ornate into simplicity. The D & R is the property of the D & R circuit, the president and principal owner of which is Mrs. Grace Dolan. The redecorating was carried out under the direction of Bjarne Moe and R. C. Peacock of the B. F. Chearer Company, from designs by O. T. Taylor, assistant manager of the circuit.



The D & R is the largest theatre in the circuit, with a seating capacity of 1,564. It was built in 1924 and had never been revamped prior to the remodeling recently completed.

The accompanying photographs, showing the house before and after revision, indicate the changes made, particularly in the decorative treatment. Eight old-fashioned boxes were removed, some 48 wicker loge chairs were taken out of the balcony and replaced with 60 modern chairs. Other improvements included modernization of the heating and ventilating plants, and recarpeting of the balcony aisles.

Ornamental details were eliminated from the proscenium arch, which was also structurally transformed into a square opening to make it harmonize with the straight lines characterizing the new treatment at the ceiling and walls of the auditorium. The ceiling was repainted in rich tones and lighting fixtures were harmonized with the new design.

The new auditorium walls have panels hung with friar's cloth furred out about 2 inches from the concrete walls. These are stained, rather than painted, so as not to impair their acoustic qualities. The rear wall of the aditorium is treated with Acousti-Celotex. An especially heavy paint was used throughout the rest of the walls and the ceiling.

The foyer was enlarged, and glass standee rail was replaced by a solid wall. All foyer radiators were recessed, and the walls, from which former plaster and stenciled ornamentation had been removed, were painted in pastel shades.

New carpeting was laid in the auditorium, foyer and lounges. It is of Wilton type carrying a small pattern in many colors, with the notable exception of the stairs and balcony, which have rust-colored Wiltons. Draperies were added at the stage, and in the foyer and the box office. The new stage curtain is of gold damask with sides of rust damask. Anti-proscenium drapes are also of rust damask, festooned with over-drapes of green rayoma. On either side are suspended lighting fixtures.

EQUIPMENT AND SERVICE CONTRACTS

By LEO T. PARKER

Analyzing recent cases and decisions of the higher courts involving the sale of goods to the theatre

THE HIGHER COURTS have consistently held that if the defects in theatre equipment subject of a sale are so radical as to render the equipment absolutely useless, or the use so inconvenient and unsatisfactory that the theatre owner would not knowingly have made the contract of sale, then the theatre operator may rescind the agreement without liability.

On the other hand, if the defects are of such character as only to diminish value of the equipment the buyer may demand a reasonable reduction or return of the contract price. And if the purchase price has not all been paid, the purchaser may oppose a suit to compel him to pay the full price and let the court decide the reasonable reduction in consideration of the defects. Moreover, if he has paid all the price, then he may sue for damages on the expressed or implied warranty if he chooses to retain the merchandise, and recover from the seller the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the equipment; or the purchaser may refuse to keep the equipment and demand return of the full contract price plus damages sustained.

However, if the theatre owner chooses to repair the equipment he cannot recover from the seller a greater amount than the latter was informed that the repairs may cost.

CASE

For instance, in Morehouse v Tooke & Reynolds (154 So. 402, Bastrop, La.), it was shown that a seller of certain equipment was notified that it was defective. Later the purchaser wrote to the seller pointing out that the equipment had nine different and distinct defects, and estimated that the cost of making the repairs would amount to about $250. No other communications passed between the parties, and the purchaser began repairing the equipment with the view and purpose of bringing its condition up to what he deemed to be the seller's obligations under the terms of the contract of sale. The total of the labor was $692.60, plus cost of parts, accessories, freight thereon, etc., and the total bills amounted to $1,863.91. It is interesting to observe that the higher court held the seller liable for only $253.74, saying:

DECISION

"Is it not but natural that defendant (seller) assumed, and had the right to assume, that plaintiff's (purchaser's) original estimate of the extent of the repairs necessary to put the plant in 'good, mechanical condition and in a reasonable state of repair,' was within reason. . . . For the reasons herein assigned, the judgment appealed from is amended by reducing the amount thereof in plaintiff's favor to $253.74."

RECOVERY OF OVERPAYMENT

IT IS INTERESTING to observe that one who voluntarily pays what he knows to be an overcharge on a contract price, is not entitled to recover this overpayment. So held a higher court in Mississippi Corporation v Williams (143 So. 889, Rolling Fork, Miss.).

In this case it was shown that a company and a purchaser entered into a contract by the terms of which the former agreed to sell to the latter merchandise at a stipulated price.

However, the seller continued to charge the purchaser a higher price for the delivered equipment. Later the purchaser filed suit against the seller to recover the sum of $1,365 alleged to be the difference between the billed price and the contract price, but it is important to observe that the higher court held the purchaser not entitled to recover the amount, and said:

"We hold, therefore, that appellee (purchaser) was not entitled to recover the difference in the price regardless of whether there was any consideration for his agreement to pay the additional price or not. Since appellee has already paid the amount to appellant (seller), he cannot recover it back."

JURY CONSTRUES AMBIGUOUS CONTRACT

IN ALL LEGAL controversies involving contracts it is necessary, in order that the complaining party shall re-

LEGAL AUTHORITY OF AGENTS

By M. MARVIN BERGER
Member New York Bar

THAT important field of law, known as agency, is one which deals with the relationship which arises when a person, known as the principal, appoints another person, known as the agent, to deal with third persons in behalf of the principal. This relationship differs from that of employer and employe in that an employe, unlike an agent, has no dealings with third persons in his principal's behalf.

For example, a theatre manager having the power to make contracts for film rentals with distributors for the benefit of the person or corporation for which he works, is an agent; a projectionist is an employe. It often happens that an agent is also an employe, but a distinguishing line must be drawn between these two capacities.

The relationship of principal and agent comes into existence generally by agreement between them, either written or oral. In certain cases, usually those involving the purchase or sale of real estate, the agent must have written authority. It is not necessary for the establishment of the relationship that the principal pay the agent a salary or money for acting in his behalf.

The agreement of agency is for the most part subject to the same rules applying to any other type of contract. For example, the acts which the agent is authorized to perform for his principal must be legal. Then, too, the principal must be of full age and sound mind.

On the other hand, an agent need not be of full age in order to bind his principal in his dealings with third persons. The reason for this is to be found in the underlying basis of agency: that an agent is a person who may do for his principal anything that the principal may do for himself, yet, since he acts for another, the agent need not be capable of binding himself. Thus an agent may not bind a principal who is under twenty-one years of age, but an agent under twenty-one years of age may bind a principal.

In dealing with an agent, a party is obliged by law to use reasonable effort to cover full payment, that complete testimony must be presented to the jury who shall decide the exact and intended meaning of the clauses in the contract.

For example, in McAllister v Frost (62 S. W. [2d] 232), it was shown that an employer and an architect entered into a contract by the terms of which the latter agreed to render professional services in construction work. The contract contained a provision that the architect's fee "shall be five per cent of the total cost of the work."

After the project was completed legal controversy arose over the question whether the above-mentioned clause in the contract included the total cost of new improvements, as well as the cost paid for an adjacent building which the employer had purchased and improved in conjunction with the new building. In holding that this question must be decided by the jury the court said:

"While the language of the contract introduced in evidence and relied on by him (architect) was that his copensation should be 'five per cent of the total cost' said issue required the jury to find that the language of such contract was that his compensation should be 'five per cent of the total cost of the new improvements as well as the costs paid for the old.' "

RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS

IN ALL litigations involving the right of a contracting party to recover payment or damages, testimony that the complaining party signed a receipt or waiver of all claims is prima facie evidence that no further payment or damage claim is allowable.

CASE

For instance, in James v. Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation (33 P. [2d] 63, Los Angeles), it was disclosed that Jessie Estelle James, the grandchild of Jesse James, sued the Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation to recover $100,000 which she alleged was due her in damages and for services rendered. The controversy arose out of the filming of a picture intended to portray the activities of the notorious Jesse James. Jesse's grandchild contended that the Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation had breached a contract by which she was induced to leave her position in Kansas City, where she was employed at $110 per month, and to come to California to take part in the filming of the picture referred to. She alleged that she was employed to take the part, as an actress, of Zerelda Samuels in the filming of the picture and also to assist in creating publicity for the picture.

During the trial testimony was introduced proving that in a letter written at Kansas City she said: "I am planning to leave Kansas City for Los Angeles, on June 15th, to join my family, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse James, Jr., and am very anxious to obtain a small part in the picture of my grandfather's life."

A reply to this letter was written by Alfred L. Werker, whose title is "Production Supervisor," and on a letterhead bearing the inscription "Fred Thomson Productions," which reads as follows: "Your father . . . has already spoken to me about a screen test for you when you arrive in Hollywood. We will be very happy to make a test of you and may possibly find something for you to do in the filming of the picture."

Miss James arrived in Los Angeles and a day or two later she first visited the F. B. O. Studios, where the picture was being filmed. She posed either alone or with other members of her family for still pictures and later took a minor part in a courtroom scene. As compensation for her services in the part she took, she was paid $22.50 by the F. B. O. Studios, Inc. Three receipts were signed for different payments, one of which is as follows:

"F. B. O. Studios, Inc. No. 480. Los Angeles. Talent Pay Check, Date: July 30. Pay to Jessie James, $10, exactly ten dollars, only dollars, in full payment for services in pictures No. 370. Approved for payment: Martha Lennan. I hereby acknowledge receipt of the above sum from the F. B. O. Studios, Inc., as payment in full to date for services in posing, and hereby consent to the public exhibition, for the purpose of trade or advertising, of any picture ever posed by me for the F. B. O. Studios, Inc. Signature: Jessie James."

In view of this evidence the court refused to hold the company liable.

CONTRACT OBJECT IS HELD LAWFUL

AS PREVIOUSLY stated, a contract having an illegal object or purpose is void. However, no person or firm may avoid liability on a contract, on the contention that it has an illegal object, unless the complaining party introduces convincing testimony which proves conclusively that the ultimate object of the contract is unlawful.

CASE

For example, in Kagey v. Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation (31 P. [2d] 67, Wichita, Kan., it was disclosed that a firm of lawyers filed suit against the Fox West Coast Theatres Corporation to collect an amount alleged to be due on a contract by which the lawyers were to file suit and test the validity of a law.

It was contended that this contract is void because a valid contract cannot be made to defend any corporation for a violation of the law. However, the court held the lawyers entitled to a verdict, and said:

"The contract pleaded was one where the amount of the fee depended to a certain extent on the outcome of the litigation. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that a contract to pay an attorney to bring an action in court to test the validity of a statute is such a contract that it will be held to be against public policy and therefore void. The object of the contemplated action was not to defend defendants for a contemplated violation of law, but to ascertain whether contemplated acts would be a violation."

find out how far the agent's authority extends, for all acts of an agent which go beyond the authority actually given him by his principal or his apparent authority, will not bind the principal. In brief, an agent, besides his actual authority, has the power to do anything necessary to carry out his actual authority.

For example, a salesman with actual authority to sell his principal's goods, has the authority to make arrangements for delivery. Again, whenever the principal permits the agent to do something outside of his actual authority without disapproval, or whenever the principal puts the agent in a position from which an outsider may fairly assume that the agent has the powers usually possessed by agents in such positions, then the principal will be bound by his agent's acts.

For illustration, the manager of a corporation's branch office, even though he has been instructed not to engage any employes, has been placed in such a position by his principal that it may fairly be assumed by a third person that the manager has such power.

Where to draw the line between the things an agent may or may not do in his principal's behalf, is often puzzling. Yet the application of common sense to the problem is always helpful. For example, a real estate broker engaged to find a buyer for his principal's property is a special agent, limited to doing just that thing, and a third party should know that the broker has no authority to buy an automobile for his principal. Again, a third party should not rely upon the agent's own statement as to how much authority he possesses.

The relationship of principal and agent may come to an end:

(1) When the particular job for which an agent has been hired has been completed, or the period for which he has been engaged has ended.

(2) When the subject matter of the agency has been destroyed (for example, the destruction of a house which the agent has been engaged to sell).

(3) When the conditions of the parties change, as by death, insanity or bankruptcy of the principal or agent.

(4) By act of the parties. A principal or agent may bring the relationship to an end at any time, subject, however, to a right of action on the part of an agent or principal, if the ending of the relationship has been wrongful.

Upon the ending of the agency, the principal should notify all third parties with whom the agent has been dealing to that effect, or he may be held liable for the agent's acts even after the agency has come to an end.

POWER SOURCES FOR THE SUPREX ARC

By HARRY RUBIN

Examining the means of current supply for the efficient operation of Suprex lamps — the third article of a series

THE SUPREX ARC requires a direct current of comparatively low voltage, and high amperage, as has been stated in an earlier article in this series. There are several ways of obtaining the necessary arc supply current—(1) from direct current supply mains, where available; (2) from a motor-generator system; and (3) from a rectifier.

When the theatre happens to be in a district where direct current is the only available supply, there is only one practical choice, that of installing sufficient resistances, or rheostats, to reduce the voltage. Of course, if the direct current supply has higher voltage than 110, as is sometimes the case, it would be advisable to use a motor-generator between the line and the lamps to reduce the operating cost, over what it would be with just rheostats. The electrical energy lost in the rheostats is always the difference between the line voltage and the arc-voltage multiplied by the arc amperage. In the case of a line voltage of 115 volts being reduced through the rheostats to an arc voltage of, say, 33 volts, there is the difference of 82 volts being taken up by the rheostat, and this multiplied by the amperage being consumed at the arc of, say, 50 amperes, involves a loss of 4,100 watts in the rheostats to obtain 1,650 watts of useful energy at the arc (an efficiency rating of only about 28%). From the standpoint of operating cost such a system is expensive to operate. If an alternating current power supply line could be obtained in that theatre it would pay big dividends to discontinue the use of the direct current supply and install a rectifier.

The sections where only direct current supply is available are few. In all other locations the power supply is alternating current and will have to be changed or rectified to direct current before it can be used at the arc.

There are two widely adopted means of making this change—either by using an a. c. motor to drive a generator, or by using a rectifier.

MOTOR-GENERATORS

Motor-generators are usually used for low-intensity projection arc of the 80-volt output type, and to try to use these for Suprex arc operation entails rheostat losses almost as great as in the case of the direct current source. There is a great danger also of damage to the motor-generator, as they were never designed for the direct current requirements of Suprex, and the writer would not recommend any such attempt unless fully sanctioned by the generator manufacturer.

Generators designed for Suprex arc operation are either single-unit type, having one motor driving one generator, or of the two-unit type, having one motor driving two generators.

With the single unit type of motor-generator it is necessary to have the output voltage of the generator high enough to allow the use of a ballast resistance for each arc, so that upon striking the second arc the first will not be put out or dimmed to a noticeable extent. Where ballast is used there is, of course, a loss which must be taken into account in figuring the overall efficiency of the device.

The double-unit motor-generator provides one generator for each lamp so that the ballast resistance is not used, but this does not make any appreciable difference in the overall efficiency of the two systems, unless the comparison is made where a larger amount of ballast is used than is necessary for stability at changeover.

RECTIFIERS

Rectifiers as made for the operation of the Suprex arc are of two general types; first, the bulb type; and second, the copper oxide type.

The types for low-intensity arc operation were first made for rectifying single-phase alternating current and have been quite satisfactory for that type of projection arc, but because of the great increase in light obtained from the Suprex arc over that of low-intensity it is imperative that the rectified current be as free from ripple as possible, and also the required amperage for the Suprex is greater than could safely be rectified with one pair of bulbs. By rectifying a polyphase current using four or six bulbs, it is possible to obtain a very smooth direct current at the desired higher amperage.

To obtain a better understanding of the practical working of a polyphase rectifier let us consider, first, a two-phase alternating current supply circuit. This system consists of two single-phase currents, one of which is 90 degrees out of phase with the other. This means that when the current falls to zero in one phase, the current in the other phase is at its maximum value.

Now let us assume that we have two single-phase rectifiers side by side, and we connect the a. c. input wires of one rectifier across one single-phase of the two-phase supply line, and the second rectifier across the other single-phase of this same two-phase supply system.

Next let us connect the positive output wire from each rectifier together, then connect the negative output wire from each rectifier Now each rectifier in itself will give a single-phase rectified current, and the rectified current from each rectifier will have a ripple, but the ripple from one rectifier will overlap the ripple of the second rectifier, because each is supplied with a separate phase of the two-phase system.

Now since the ripple of one rectifier is 90° out of phase with the ripple of the second rectifier, then when the current from one rectifier is at the crest of the ripple, the current from the second rectifier is at the valley of the ripple. Since the output currents of both rectifiers are tied together, it is apparent that the load, or arc in this case, receives current of even value, or practically without ripple.

THREE-PHASE TYPE

The three-phase rectifier is the same as the above in principle except that it may be considered as three single-phase rectifiers working on 120° phase difference, instead of two rectifiers on 90° phase difference.

COPPER OXIDE RECTIFIERS

The copper oxide rectifier employs no tubes, but instead uses copper oxide disc type of rectifying elements connected into a three-phase double-wave bridge circuit, which results in an extremely smooth output for the arc.

The efficiency of rectifiers is higher than that of other arc supply devices and therefore effect an operating economy which should not be overlooked, and since the copper oxide elements of the rectifier are not used up in service its maintenance cost should be lower than that of other current conversion methods.

In the next issue I will give some comparative costs obtained from observation.

EFFICIENT MAINTENANCE

it easier for patrons to find articles dropped on the floor.

When good money is spent for floor paint it should be cared for. Frequently the cleaners use a scouring powder for cleaning painted floors. This method removes the paint faster then the traffic over the floor. Don't use hot water or scouring powder to clean painted floors. Use tepid water, and only enough neutral soap to loosen the dirt.

Here is another practice that spoils the paint on concrete floors. Most of the solutions for removing chewing gum also remove paint. After squirting two or three times too much gum remover on the spot, the cleaner generally proceeds to scrape up the gum with a putty knife. No paint in the world will stand such treatment. When the paint surface breaks in one spot, deterioration from then on is rapid. If you want to preserve the paint on the floor, clean the gum up every night. If this is done the gum is usually still soft and the careful use of a putty knife is all that is needed. When the gum is permitted to harden several days or a week, it is impossible to remove it without damaging the paint on the floor.

There is one other thing that might be considered part of the auditorium—the proscenium grand valance. Rig this on a frame so that it can be lowered from time to time for a thorough cleaning. When this drapery is nailed up solid, long ladders or scaffolds must be used. This is a slow process and a costly one, consequently it is not cleaned as part of the routine, but only when so dirty that it is unsightly.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

I COUNTED 118 FAULTY SPLICES IN A SINGLE PICTURE

VISITING A MOST excellent theatre, in which everything is of the best, the projectionists are careful, expert men, equipment is kept in first-class condition, and the very best productions are played (though not as first-run), I was astounded to be shown 118 (I myself counted them) faulty splices the projectionists had cut out of one seven-reel production upon its receipt from the Fox exchange in New York City.

I examined many of these splices and do declare that sending out a production in such miserable state to be a plain, unadulterated outrage. I make that declaration regardless of type of theatre or class of service, but it is especially true where the service goes to such a theatre as the one cited.

As I understand the matter, exchanges contract to supply pictures of certain footage—most emphatically pictures (which may and in some cases do arrive barely in time to thread in the first reel and start) that cannot possibly mean anything if they are not films in such state of mechanical repair that they may be safely and effectively projected.

As I have said many, many times, it most emphatically is not part of the duty of projectionists to make repairs on films received from an exchange. As above set forth, that is a part of the duty of the exchange inspector. However, some (not all) exchange managers attempt to lower their operating expenses by forcing projectionists to do their repair work. As many as 118 faulty splices in one production! That was truly outrageous.

PROJECTIONISTS' WORKING CONDITIONS

FROM MISSOURI comes this inquiry: "I am about to close for thirty days and remodel my theatre. My manager and projectionist have me on the spot, so, not being myself an expert, I appeal to you, whose sensible advice in the old Moving Picture World, and later in BETTER THEATRES, has given me the right steer very many times. The question is this:

"My present projection room is plenty wide, but is only a scant eight feet deep. Its ceiling is only six feet, two inches above the floor. The sound equipment (amplifier, etc.) is at one end of the room. There is a rather heavy projection angle and the bottom of the holes the projectionist looks through (observation ports, I think they are called) is only 60 inches above the floor.

"Now here is the trouble: The ceiling can be raised. The projectionist demands that it be hoisted to 8 feet. The front wall can be moved forward. He asks that it be done. He say the bottoms of the observation ports are too high and wants them lowered, all of which the manager declares to be entirely unnecessary and, if done, a waste of money. Oh, yes, the projectionist also demands that I have ventilation ducts and a fan installed. There is no vent hole now, and I myself admit there should be, though my manager indignantly directs my attention to the fact that we have gotten along without them for twelve years. May I hear from you without delay, Mr. Richardson? I promise whatever you recommend shall be done, but please give your reasons, so that I may in part appease my manager, who is a good manager, and has made the theatre pay every year, even through the worst of the depression."

He may be a good manager in many ways, but nevertheless your projectionist is right in all his contentions—and especially about the ventilation. It is nothing less than outrageous to compel men to work in a room in which electric arcs are giving off unhealthy gases, plus much heat, without ample ventilation, with air taken from outside the theatre. This is particularly obnoxious when the ceiling is but little higher than enough to permit men to stand upright.

Not only this, but if a film fire occurs (as it may, no matter how careful and capable the projectionist), where is the smoke and gas to go except out into the auditorium, with possible panic and death as a result?

That ceiling should be raised to at least 8 feet if at all possible. Ample ventilation should be provided, with an exhaust fan to insure proper air action. As to the front-to-back depth, it will serve as it is, though in a one-man room I believe it is better to have the sound equipment, where possible, immediately in back of the projectors, but with 36 inches of clear space between them and the front of the sound equipment.

I would appreciate comment from projectionists as to best location, from an operating point of view, for sound equipment. There may be some diversity of opinion on that point.

As to the bottom of observation ports, it depends upon conditions just how high they should be. Here is the best rule to follow. The port bottom should be 1 inch below a straight line from the bottom of the screen to a point opposite the light source, and 5 feet, 2 inches above the floor. This will give a man 5 feet, 6 inches tall a clear view from a point opposite the light source, and from right up against a port 12 inches high as well. It will be all right for the six-footer, too, though it perhaps might be better to make such ports 14 inches high. The main idea is to provide a clear view of the screen from any working position beside the projector. Your manager to the contrary notwithstanding, that is essential to good results, and "working position" may be regarded as from a point opposite the light source to the surface of the port itself. Difference in projection angles demand different vertical position for such ports, and variation in the height of men

CLEANING MECHANISM AFTER A FIRE

RICHARD KEUSTER, a New York City projectionist of very real ability and many years of experience, writes: "In rereading some old 'Bluebook School' answers in the HERALD, I note that C. Oldham, answering Question No. 240, recommends peroxide of hydrogen for removing the deposit left on the projector mechanism after a film fire. It is about twelve years since I had a fire. In those days one man had to take care of everything, including two projectors, film rewinding and repairs. Had to go into a separate room to rewind and watch the projectors through an open door.

"One day a repair was imperatively necessary. I called the manager, asked him to stand beside the working projector and went into the rewind room to do the work. A splice opened below the intermittent sprocket and the firm started to bunch up under the lower fire shield. As I sprinted in to take care of things, the wise manager pulled the lower fire shield open, whereupon the film promptly sprayed up into the light beam and—bluey! Lucky it was a single reel.

"A hasty job of cleaning was in order. You had recommended peroxide so I used it, only to discover that while it did the trick all right, all metal cleaned with it promptly acquired a coat of rust. I therefore would suggest that after such cleaning the parts be well rubbed with heavy oil, all surplus being of course wiped off. This is not a criticism. I am only intending to add to the aforesaid answer and your own recommendation."

For which many thanks, Brother Keuster. Readers will kindly take note.

STANDARDS IN SCREENING ROOMS

SOME WHILE since a member of the East Coast Preview Committee wrote describing atrocious projection faults encountered in various screening rooms—one in particular. In view of that article, which might be construed as criticising all alike, and in recognition of those companies and projectionists who do try hard to have their screening room projection above just criticism, I asked the complainant to select what seemed to be the best example of them all and tell us about it. Here is the result.

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Your criticism of my former, perhaps too sweeping, condemnation is justified. In compliance with your request I will tell you of what seems to be the best example.

"Today I previewed a picture in one of the screening rooms at the Fox headquarters, Tenth Avenue and 54th Street, New York City. The room in question is called the "Little Theatre." It seats 200 and is in itself a thing of beauty. The results, both visual and sound, were excellent.

"When the preview was finished I had a chat with Chief Projectionist Leon J. De Titta, who very courteously offered a tour of inspection into the realms where shadow land and sound are 'made' through re-creation.

"The projection room is about 25 feet long by 15 deep. It contains two Simplex projectors, equipped with Hall & Connolly H. I. lamps. There is a rewind table and a work bench, both conveniently located. Along the rear wall are various sound equipments and panels. The equipments were immaculately clean, though the room was itself not quite as tidy as it might have been. Not too bad, you understand, but I am an old maid and just a bit fussy.

"However, I must voice objection (I've read your stuff for a long while) to the unnecessarily bright illumination of the room, which is (I agree with you) not a good optical condition from the projection viewpoint. This fault was due to a large window (it was daytime), and an entirely too light wall color. When I spoke of this Mr. De Titta assured me they were going to have a darker wall covering applied—it had already been done in a smaller room.

"Just off the projection room was a room housing the motor-generator; under the main room was a men's room.

"I felt it both right and proper to compliment Mr. De Titta upon the excellence of both screen and sound results and the cleanliness and apparently good condition of the various equipments. Here a new production is never projected before an audience, preview or otherwise, until it has been carefully cued throughout. At the start of each projection Mr. De Titta goes into the auditorium to observe the sound.

"The Little Theatre picture is of correct dimensions for a theatre of that size. No outside noises annoy audiences. I cannot remember ever having had my sense of fitness offended by the projection of a film smeared with dirt or oil on the Little Theatre screen, or by a white screen or the sight of a trailer.

"The projection staff consists of five men —Mr. De Titta, Fred Boehringer, James Daisey, George Unstatter and Patsey Puciarielli."

This narrator is indeed well pleased to be able to follow the former "roast" with a genuine boost, especially when I have personally known of the lay-out and know that the praise is justified. I was editor of Movietone Bulletin for a year, as you may remember, and know Fox screening rooms very well indeed. I hope those companies who permit or perhaps force low-grade projection in their screening rooms will have this matter brought to their attention, and that they will put a stop to such sloppy work. I say force because it is possible conditions are such as will not permit the production of good work. There is and can be no legitimate reason why any but the very best projection, both visual and sound, should be tolerated in screening rooms. If the productions they screen for preview or otherwise, are not worth proper presentation, then I suggest that they should not be presented at all.

My compliments to the Fox organization in general, and to W. C. Michel, executive vice president, and E. I. Sponable, technical director, in particular, for the conditions deserving the praise contained in this letter.

SOUND-PROOFING OBSERVATION PORTS

FROM W. H. Cooper projectionist of the Liberty theatre, in North Wilkesboro, N. C., comes an order for the new Bluebook and this, "I have finally found a way of sound-proofing the ports of the projection rom. In order to secure badly needed ventilation I removed the glass covers of the ports, only to find too much sound went through. Projectors could be heard and I could not speak above a whisper. I started experimenting. Got some scraps of sound-absorbing material that were around the theatre. Cut four pieces just large enough to slip into the ports, resting upright, of course. In the center I cut an opening large enough to permit a good view of the screen. I find these layers of the material, spaced apart in proportion to thickness of the wall, act as a perfect sound valve. I can converse in ordinary tone of voice without being heard outside. As the sound reaches each piece of the material a portion of it is absorbed, until at the last one it is dead.

"Mr. Richardson, this has done the work for me, with result that the room is much cooler. If it is not an old trick, please pass it along."

MAZDA LIGHT REGULATORS

FROM Michael O'Leary of Glace Point, Nova Scotia, comes this letter:

"Just purchased a second-hand portable projector that uses a 1,000-watt 110-volt Mazda lamp, which latter we do not seem able to make work right. It is in the center of the projector optical system, but does not seem bright enough. Is a regulator necessary to govern the amperage, or are the 110 volts all right? It uses two flat condensers about 2½ inches wide, and a mirror back of the lamp about 2 inches wide. Any information you may be able to supply will be highly appreciated."

Certainly a regulator is necessary. In fact, it is vitally essential. Line voltage cannot be expected to remain at exactly 110 all the time. Any variation from exactly the correct amperage is very bad. If too high, the light will raise in brilliancy, but the lamp will not last long. If too low, the light will be poor. Surely the outfit you bought includes a voltage regulator. Also the light (lamp) should each time be burned a short while at low before being raised to full amperage.

JUST MUST HAVE HIS OWN MARK

BOB PITTMAN, projectionist of Fairbury, Ill., writes: "Recently we received a Paramount print having all Standard Release Print cues in place and in good condition. However, some projectionist had glued, about 3 feet in advance of the first mark and even with the last one, a narrow strip of opaque film on one frame line, reaching from the sprocket holes on one side to the sound track on the other. An instantaneous black mark was visible at the bottom of the screen image as each went through. Curiosity induces me to ask you to advise me as to the why and wherefore of such a stunt."

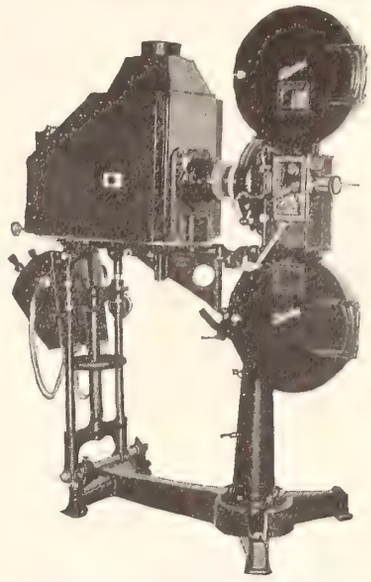
At first I thought you meant 3 feet in front of the start mark, but concluded you meant at the tail end of the reel. It is just one more case where some "machine operator" who is too shiftless and lazy to watch for the standard cues, must have something he can see without any trouble at all. Those black stickers are it.

If the exchange inspector and manager were on their jobs, those markers would have been observed, reported and the theatre asked to pay for replacement of all film beyond the first sticker. But, too many exchange inspectors and managers are aseep at the switch, and the outrages go merrily on.

FOCUSING RCA LIGHT BEAM



JOHN GIBSON of South Chicago asks, "Will you be good enough to tell me just how I may know when an RCA soundhead is operating at its best? This may be a simple matter, but to us fellows in projection rooms who are trying hard to do the best we can, many things that may seem very simple to engineers and other experts are really not at all simple to us. Please help, Mr. Richardson, as I see you often do when others have failed."

Possibly that is true, Brother Gibson, because I try to make my meaning more clear to projectionists than others do. Here is an example: I quote from the RCA Victor instruction book verbatim:

"Due to the wide frequency range of the high fidelity equipments, the optical system should be focused by means of an output meter or a listening test. An output meter, such as a thermo-galvanometer, across the voice coil circuit, and a 9,000-cycle test film running through the projector, will indicate when the correct adjustment is obtained. Focal adjustment which gives maximum output is sharply defined.

"If an output meter is not available, the optical system may be focused by a listening test. With the 9,000-cycle film running through the projector and soundhead, the optical system should be adjusted until the 9,000-cycle is the loudest. This is the proper focal adjustment, and the optical system should be clamped in this position."

While this is all quite correct and wholly understandable to sound engineers, I am able to pick out several points that might and probably would have the average projectionist more or less guessing as to the exact meaning. One word often makes a lot of difference. This instruction at one point says, "Until the 9,000-cycle is loudest." Now many men would wonder, does that mean the 9,000-cycle tone is to be louder than all the other cycle tones, or what? Were it worded, until the 9,000 cycle tone is at its loudest, there could be no possibility of a misunderstanding. I would have worded that instruction somewhat as follows:

Because of the wide frequency range recorded on high fidelity sound tracks, the most reliable test for proper focusing of the RCA optical system light beam at the soundhead aperture is to use a 9,000-cycle test film, which the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has made available to all theatres. Reproduce such test film and so adjust the soundhead optical system that the 9,000-cycle tone is at its loudest, whereupon clamp the optical system in that position. Such a test reel should be stocked by every theatre using sound, unless it may be obtained on rental from a supply house.

As to the thermo-galvanometer, the average projectionist would not be able to obtain one. If he could he would not know whether or not it gave correct readings. Moreover, the instruction does not make it any too clear how the reading is to be used, though probably one that gives the highest reading is the correct one.

However, daily checking of the sound head optical system is not a thing that must be done daily. Once a week, or even once in two weeks, should be quite sufficient. The system is so designed that once it is set correctly, it will remain so indefinitely. No further adjustment should be required, unless the clamping screw has been loosened. A soundhead is comparable to an automobile. If it is operating satisfactorily, no adjustments are required, though periodic examinations should, of course, be made to make certain it is operating satisfactorily. It should be given the same attention one would give any good piece of machinery, plus keeping its lenses perfectly clean, of course.

Another thing: Manufacturers' engineers have a full supply of all test apparatus necessary to the making of top-notch adjustments. Such men are trained to make the adjustments required to obtain the very best performance. It is a fact that unless a man knows exactly how to use test apparatus he may do more harm than good by attempting to use them.

It is excellent practice for all theatre managers to stock a sound test reel. Where several theatres are close together, they might combine and purchase one for joint use. Each exchange might stock a test reel, renting it to theatres at a rate merely covering cost of service.

TO A BROTHER BACK ON THE JOB

A LETTER FROM Barney De Vietti, chief projectionist at the Strand theatre in Helper, Utah, which is on the D. & R. G. Railway just below the famous Castle Gate, has pleasantly arrived. Says he:

"It has been quite some while since I wrote you. Some years ago I was working here as assistant projectionist; also, I joined the 'Bluebook School.' Was a subscriber to the HERALD—depression—no job—no coin—no HERALD, no 'Bluebook School.' Well, that's all past. I'm back in harness again. Have subscribed again to the HERALD and—well, here I am with both feet. I'm a regular 'chief' now—the assistant days are past!

"We have Powers projectors, Western Electric on universal base, with wide range sound.

"Have been waiting anxiously for the new Bluebook. Had my order in February 14, on the very first day you announced the fact that the new book was to be published. F. H., I certainly regard the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES as splendid publications. Always they are read from cover to cover, always saving your columns for last because I like to have the best things last.

"In the April 6 issue of BETTER THEATRES, under the title 'An Odd Case of Flicker,' you discuss a flicker problem that is an exact duplicate of one encountered by an Edson, Alberta, projectionist. It was found to be due to an increase in frequency of the a. c. supply, the same being from 60 to 65, which was just enough to synchronize with the openings of the lens. That trouble was met with when using a bulb type rectifier."

Yes, and a single-phase one at that, I think, but the result is not a true flicker, but a waving up-and-down effect in the light. A flicker, as the term is used, is a rapid alternation from full light to considerably less than full light—possibly total darkness.

ON SUPPLYING OPERATNIG DATA

ALEFRE TITSWORTH, projectionist at the Rex theatre in Nowata, Okla., makes what seems to me to be a very reasonable kick. He says, "I have had considerable experience and have tried hard to learn everything possible and give the best service I know how. We just recently changed to wide range. I am now in search of something that will help me with the equipments. Would you advise getting the three-volume set of Bluebooks or just the one now being issued?

"I wrote the Simplex folks for an instruction book, which they sent promptly, also offering to render any possible aid in case I had any trouble. But now comes the punk part. Could you get me or tell me where I could get a wiring diagram or blueprint of same for the sound equipment? I wrote the General Talking Pictures Corporation, who replied that they had no blueprint of this equipment. Their attitude seems to be that I don't need to know anything about the equipments. 'Let our service man take care of it,' is their reaction. All very sweet, F. H., but those gentlemen are a long, long way from here, and their service man calls about once in a coon's age.

"I read all your BETTER THEATRE articles and believe you me I get a lot of good out of them."

I hold it to be the very height of folly from any and every viewpoint to refuse or even fail to supply projectionists, especially those in isolated locations such as this, every possible bit of information. Suppose there is a full house and something goes wrong! What possible help could the service man be? I very much doubt there is one closer than 200 miles. Moreover it is the height of nonsense to expect men to handle anything intelligently and well unless they have every possible bit of information concerning it.

No, Friend Titsworth, I cannot tell you where you can obtain blueprints or wiring diagrams of your sound equipment.

As to the Bluebook, the last of the fifth edition has been sold. There are no more anywhere, so far as I know. Get the new book. It does not deal with individual makes of equipments, but with the underlying principles upon which all sound equipments operate.

LIGHT CENTER OF MAZDA LAMPS

FROM Floyd E. Boyer, projectionist at the Victory theatre in Poteau, Ore., comes a complaint that the filament of two mazda projection lamps received were fully ¼-inch different in vertical position. That is to say, if the socket were so placed that the higher filament centered on the axis of the optical train, then the one having the lower filament would lack .25 of an inch of seating properly in the socket. A photograph of each lamp was sent, Brother Boyer having adopted photography as a hobby.

I referred the letter and photos to General Electric, who replied:

"Our 900-watt projection lamps are designed for a light center of 4¾ inches. This distance is measured from the center of the filament to the extremity of the lamp base. We control variations in light center length to within plus or minus ⅛ of an inch, hence all equipments that use this lamp with the mogul-screw base should provide for a vertical adjustment of not less than ⅛ of an inch above and below the 3¾-inch design center.

"While it is not so stated, I assume the lamps in question are G. E. lamps. If so, we would most certainly suggest that they be submitted to the dealer from which they were purchased. If the lamps are found to be incorrect as to light center we are sure there will be no difficulty in effecting satisfactory adjustment."

This is printed for the general information of those using mazda equipment.

'NOW I SNAP my fingers at Maintenance Costs'

says—JERRY BUCHBINDER
Manager Walter Reade Circuit

Gentlemen: The bronze doors of the Majestic Theatre in Perth Amboy were a constant expense to us. The salt air made it necessary to keep two men busy polishing them. We tried different materials to protect the doors, but each failed. Recently we used AMIGLAZE and have found that the doors retain their luster in all kinds of weather. We are now treating all metal and wood work in all our theatres with AMIGLAZE, reducing our maintenance costs considerably. (Signed) JERRY J. BUCHBINDER.

then secretary of the local, took me to the meeting where you talked to our union men on projection. Later I attended other meetings where you addressed us, so I don't regard you as a stranger.

"Recently I was elected chairman of our local union examining board; also a member of our educational committee. Some while ago you said you had compiled a list of questions and answers that might be useful to examining boards and educational committees. May I have a copy of them? Glad to pay any charge there may be."

Many months ago a projectionist in Jacksonville, Fla., a member of the local there, sent an urgent call for the questions and answers. I sent them, asking that he copy any part required and return the manuscript. He received and kept the mass of material and did not even have the courtesy to write a postcard of thanks.

However, the new Bluebook will supply all of such needs. From its subject index one can quickly compile a complete list of questions and have the answers all indicated in the text.

HISTORICAL FILM DEVICES WANTED

VISITING OUR national capital recently, I paid a visit to the Smithsonian Institution where, in the photographic division, is an excellent, though small display of early-day motion picture apparatus. I had a talk with Mr. A. J. Olmstead, assistant curator in charge of the section, who kindly consented to open the cases and permit an intimate inspection of the various items therein displayed. These included a "Zeotrope," a "Whirligig of Life," and other examples of very early experimental apparatus for transforming still pictures and drawings into an illusion of motion.

I was also privileged to examine several specimens of very early motion picture projectors, some of which moved the film intermittently across the aperture by means of a "beater" movement. Others had movements extremely complex. One framing device, I remember, both Mr. Olmstead and myself puzzled over for several minutes before its action became clear.

But here is the big item: For several years we have been told that further additions to the motion picture historic section could not be made because of lack of space. Mr. Olmstead emphatically declared this to be wholly untrue. Said he, "Worthy exhibits are and always have been welcome. Space will be made for all truly historic apparatus or exhibits offered." He also advised that recently the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has been in touch with him, but that as yet nothing has been accomplished.

Certainly this national museum should have a far more complete exhibit. There should be examples of early photographic experimental work (I do not recollect any at all on display). There certainly ought to be many early pieces of experimental apparatus employed in the development of projection. Photographs of early celebrities such as J. Stuart Blackton, "Pop" Rock, E. J. Smith, Mary Pickford, Florence Turner (the very first woman star, known then as the Vitagraph girl), and others.

True, there is what I believe to be an excellent exhibit in a Los Angeles museum, but after all the main historic display should, it seems to me, be located at the Smithsonian Institution museum.

STUDY SUPPLIES THE ANSWERS

FROM DALLAS comes this letter: "I have your Bluebook and regard it as the best thing ever printed on projection. I also am a 'Bluebook School' student. And now I have a question.

"This county recently required all projectionists to take an examination. One of the questions asked was, 'What is the width of the shutter blades?' It did not give the kind or diameter of lens, nor the kind of projectors.

"This question also has been bothering me: 'Why cannot a transformer be used on direct current?' I asked an engineer. His answer was that 'it magnetized the transformer.' Is that right?

Brother, if you own a Bluebook you have not studied it as you should. The answer to your first question is contained in general instruction No. 22, page 644, volume 2. The answer to your other question will be found under "Electrical Action," page 596, volume 2. Both answers are thorough and complete. No use getting a Bluebook and not studying it.

There is no need to know kind or diameter of lens, or kind of projector used, to answer the first question. The master blade must be just wide enough to cut all light from the screen while the film is in motion over the aperture, without travel ghost discernible to the eye. Both blades must be of equal, or very nearly equal, width.

As to the second question, a transformer cannot be used on d. c. for the reason that transformers depend upon magnetic action induced therein by alternating current. Such magnetic action is not induced by d. c., except at the instant the switch is opened or closed.

I do not like answering examination questions that can be answered by anyone possessed of basic knowledge of the subjects they deal with. I do so in this case, with apologies to the Dallas examiners, to show how really foolish it is to have a Bluebook and not to study its contents. Too many do exactly that. They buy it, lay it on a shelf ready to grab when trouble comes, but never take it home, sit down and really study it. I'm not roasting this brother. I am pointing out a wasteful procedure which too many are guilty of. He writes 2,000 miles to ask questions, the complete answers to which are in his possession.

In my books I try hard to give basic knowledge. I give you the basic knowledge that will enable you to set any shutter, trim its blades and know just what you are doing.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

WE HAVE a piece of property 50x125 feet on which we are anticipating erecting a new theatre building. Have you, or would it be possible for you to obtain, sketches and floor plans for a theatre building of this size. At the present time we are figuring on either a stadium type house or a so-called one floor proposition. The building is to be constructed of concrete with a full basement. There will be no office rooms above the foyer. Rest rooms will be in the basement. If a stadium type building is erected, we will probably have two small mercantile establishments on each side of the lobby.—A. F. J.

The Answer:

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE for this department to furnish you with sketches or plans drawn specifically for your situation. A publication cannot function as a licensed architect.

I do not see any benefit in building a basement under the entire theatre. All it could be used for is for boiler, coal, and fan room, and toilet and rest rooms.

As you did not mention the seating capacity required, I cannot advise whether a stadium type is desirable in your case. Such a type is more expensive than a one-floor house. At any rate you are safe in planning for two small mercantile establishments on each side of the lobby, whether the building is to be of stadium type or not.

The Question:

I AM ENCLOSING a rough draft of a theatre we wish to put in operation, and the condition is as follows:

Ceilings are in bad shape, need repairs. Can buy a paper board about ½-inch thick made up very loosely like Celotex, in a faun color, for 3c a foot. Thought of using this to cover the ceilings, also to recess it some, like a panel. But the most important thing is, I should be pleased to have you give me what help you can in arrangement of colors, design and draping, as we want to make a pleasing job, but money is rather limited.—L. J. T.

The Answer:

THE MATERIALS you mentioned for repairing the ceiling are satisfactory. Your sketch shows that there are beams in the ceiling. Lay up each panel with a square border and lay the field diagonally. This will produce a pleasing effect.

To break the plainness of the side walls, I suggest to install draped panels between the wall pilasters.

Without more information concerning the layout and general conditions of your interior I cannot intelligently suggest certain color schemes and decorative methods. You doubtless have been reading the series in BETTER THEATRES entitled "New Theatres from Old," and I am sure that if you go over these articles carefully, with your own theatre in mind, you will find many practicable suggestions.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The Question:

I TAKE a lot of pleasure in reading your magazine, and I watch your building suggestions very close, as I have been figuring for a year to build my own theatre, and now I have made up my mind to go ahead and build. I want to make the building right up to the minute in new ideas. I figure to use nothing but neon throughout as lights, aisle lights and side lights in the theatre and also in front.

The size of my lot is 25 feet wide by 142 feet. One story, brick walls, concrete floor, fabricated steel joist and concrete roof, fireproofed in every way.

As you will see, this will not be a large place, but it will be ample for my place, but I would like all the new ideas. In fact, a person's business place is never up-to-date, and I want to be just a little ahead of the suggested ideas. Any new ideas on ticket office, lobby, foyer and seating, suggested heights, etc., will be very much appreciated.—D. H.

The Answer:

YOU CERTAINLY are right to plan your theatre up-to-the-minute, with the latest ideas. The construction of your building is as it should be. Your idea of using neon lights all the way through the building is all right, but I have my doubts about using them for aisle lights.

There are no limitations to designing the most modern ticket office. By using phenolic veneers, such as Formica, or architectural glass with stainless steel trimming, very effective designs may be obtained.

For foyer and lobby, concealed lighting will give very desirable effects. As far as the height of the auditorium is concerned, I advise you not to make this less than 17 feet.

Since your lot is only 25 feet wide, I suggest that you use a center bank with wall aisles on each side. Of course, you will be able to get only ten seats in a row if you are figuring on 20- or 21-inch seats.

As for specific suggestions for the decorative treatment of your lobby and foyer, I can do no better without knowing more about dimensions, your tastes, and the amount of money you wish to spend, than to direct your attention to the various articles and illustrations on the subject in recent issues of BETTER THEATRES—particularly the series entitled "New Theatres from Old," in which many suggestions are made for treatment with modern materials.

The Question:

I HAVE A LOT of 150 feet in depth and a 40-foot frontage. Would like to know what would be the cost of erecting a building which will inclose two stores of about 15 feet square each, or thereabouts; and an auditorium which will accommodate 300 seats.

Would consider putting three apartments over the entire second floor, about four rooms to each apartment. I would want the material fireproof, and also soundproof as near as possible. Do not know just what this would be unless I use cork walls and floors.

This theatre is for a town of 1,500 and must be erected at a minimum cost.—V. Z.

The Answer:

FOR A THEATRE with a seating capacity of 300 and two stores the floor space required does not have to exceed 40x90. The entrance lobby should be about 15 feet wide, so the width of each store cannot be more than 10 feet, because allowance must be made for a stairway, 3 feet, 6 inches wide leading to the apartments on the second floor. A building of such requirement will contain 126,000 cubic feet. The cost of this type of building would be at about 25 cents per cubic foot, minimum, or approximately $31,500.

This may seem rather high, but the cost per cubic foot is larger than usual for theatre buildings when there are to be apartments on the second floor. Even for this amount the greatest economy must be exercised.

I doubt if you can use cork for soundproofing. While it is one of the best materials for this purpose, I am afraid it will increase the cost. The least expensive method I know of is to use mineral wool. But why not ask for two different quotations, then judge for yourself?

The Question:

WE ARE PLANNING to build a theatre on a lot between 48 and 50 feet wide, which runs out the level of the street about 55 feet and then slopes down to a river about 100 below. How long would the building have to be in order to get in 500 seats? Naturally the shorter it is the cheaper it would be to build, as it would require less filling. We were thinking of building a frame work of steel on concrete bases instead of filling in, but don't know if the State would allow us to do it.

Would also like to know how thick the walls must be and out of what material they must be made, and also if the roof must be of fireproof construction. Would appreciate it very much if you would submit some sort of sketch of the floor plan, and what the approximate cost of the building would be. Also, how much floor slope would be required.—W. L.

The Answer:

A THEATRE building 50 feet wide should be at least 100 feet deep to accommodate 500 seats. I think that reinforced concrete columns to support the building would be cheaper and just as good as steel columns, and they would be allowed by your State code.

Be sure to insulate the floor slab over the incline of the ground. You may just as well build the walls out of concrete. In many parts of this country it is cheaper than brick. For brick walls, 13 inch thickness is required.

For a one-floor house, the roof may be constructed out of composite materials—steel trusses and wood joists.

You may base the cost of such a building at the minimum estimate of 20 cents per cubic foot.

Sorry that this department cannot supply you with any sketches, but you can plan the floor plan as follows: A center bank of 11 seats across with an aisle on each side, and two wall banks of six seats across. The floor slope can total 36 inches.

The Question:

I AM PLANNING a new house on a lot 40x112 feet. It already has a good one-story brick building on it, 40x112, with 12-foot ceiling. It's on a corner and has a concrete floor in it, and the back end runs into a hill and only leaves about half of the wall out of the ground. How high would the walls have to be rebuilt, and how many seats could

I have, and how spaced, allowing for a small stage? And what would be the approximate cost of running the walls on up and equipping it in a fair way, say with cushion seats and veneer backs? Also send me some cuts of houses if you have some, showing inside and out.—T. C. K.

The Answer:

A THEATRE with a floor space of 40x112 feet can accommodate a seating capacity of 470 seats. This is based upon a center bank of 11 seats across, with an aisle on each side; and two wall banks of four seats across, each. This is after figuring for stage or platform 15 feet, lobby 12 feet, and foyer or cross-aisle 7 feet, and sufficient space between first row of seats and screen.

The roof should be raised at least 5 feet. Raising the roof, and building up the walls will cost about $1,000. Be sure to waterproof the rear walls that run into a hill.

The cost of equipping such a theatre will be between $8,000 and $10,000, according to the kind of equipment desired.

I do not advise the use of veneer backs for seats. They are detrimental to good acoustics when the house is only partly filled. Use an unholstered back.

I refer you to the past issues of BETTER THEATRES for pictures of interiors and exteriors.

The Question:

I AM A SUBSCRIBER and have been for the past four years. I have run into a place where I feel that I might as well get a little benefit out of your space in BETTER THEATRES by asking for some ideas on how and what color paint and materials I should use in repainting and repairing my theatre in a week or so time. I have taken photos of the theatre and they are enclosed. No. 1 is of the outside lobby. The ceiling is white, and the upper walls blue, and base of walls, on the sides, are brown cement. The front of the lobby is painted white about 4 feet above the lights, and the rest of the front and building is redbrick. What colors or altering for the front and lobby?

No. 2 is taken of the inside lobby. The varnish is a reddish color, and the walls are pink. How can I make this look better? No. 3 is taken from the left side after going into the house from the inside lobby. We seat 270 people. The walls are pink and have frames of felt with a piece of Celotex in the corners. The lower part of the walls are of dark-brown cement. How can I make the appearance of the smoky felt look pleasing? What colors should I paint the walls? Should I leave the base as is? No. 4 is a photo of the ceiling. The ceiling is made up of Celotex and squared off with varnished strips of wood. How can I paint this, or should I clean it?—J. J. S.

The Answer:

AS TASTES vary considerably in selection of colors, it is impossible to please everybody. At present one does not have to be afraid to use vivid colors. All that is required to obtain good effects is to have the different colors harmonize. It has been said that the preference of colors for men are in the following order: blue, red, purple, orange, yellow, and green; and for women: red, purple, orange, green and blue. So, for the lobby you may select one of these colors for walls and paint the ceiling and cornice light with the ornamentations highlighted. The cornice should be about two shades darker than the ceiling. For the auditorium walls, you may use apricot, and paint the wainscoting to harmonize with the color of the chair upholstering.

You may be able to spray the felt in the wall panels, otherwise remove it and install sound-absorbing tiles in these panels.

You may be able to clean the Celotex in the ceiling with a rubber sponge and leave it in its natural color. The moulding in the angle of ceiling and wall and the ceiling strips may be gold or silver.

Shortsighted Policies in Operation

tainly cannot assure stabilized employment or long-time program policies for the benefit of the progressive development of his own business, or for the welfare of the community. A business cannot be substantially healthy with the continuous changes of management, personnel and operating policies, including admission prices, advertising, programs, and the resulting classification of theatres as A, B or C houses, with fluctuating, increasing or curtailed operating expense. This all reacts definitely toward a demoralized personnel, which in turn affects detrimentally the box office.

THE EVIL OF CHEAP LABOR

THE VACILLATING policy of operation leads everyone to be more considerate of himself than for the interest of his employer. Hours are frequently long, and periods of duty irregular. The theatre employe must work when his friends are playing, and his period of employment is indefinite. So frequently does one find the itinerant theatre employe just making the best of conditions, that one is led to believe he is the rule, not the exception.

It is quite evident that the conditions mentioned above can be given as the reason for the great growth in strength of the theatrical unions, and they, in some locations, exact as much as they can get out of the operation. They have seen great fortunes grow out of motion pictures and they have known the uncertainties of the employes. Consequently their attitude of taking all they can get is, from their point of view, justified. However, the events of the last two or three years have brought capital and labor much closer together, and it is to be sincerely hoped that both will endeavor to keep alive the mutual understanding that the depression has forced on all.

From the foregoing it is apparent that the exhibitor has a very speculative existence, and many try to protect themselves against the hazards by employing cheap labor. Cheap labor does not pay dividends. Cheap labor is costly in theatre operation. The exhibitor, in the long run, pays as much for cheap labor as he does for competent labor, hence it is hard to understand why it is not paid direct by employing competent help. If we were in the suit and cloak business or novelty manufacturing business there might be the justification that cheap labor increases the margin of profit. But we are not in that type of business. When cheap labor is employed in a theatre, the theatre becomes cheap, and the difference is paid for by rapid deterioration of equipment, building and materials, more accidents to patrons, more interruptions to shows, poorer projection, questionable sound, higher maintenance costs, and greater expenditures for replacements and mechanical repairs. Such conditions will very soon be reflected at the box office, and the competitor will get the profit of your cheap labor policy.

TECHNOLOGY

We sell an intangible service of entertainment and amusement. It becomes a rather personal service when one fully realizes the likes and dislikes of the average audience. Consider the fact that the entertainment comes to the theatre on an impersonal piece of film, is reproduced by impersonal machinery, and the theatre is after all just a building! Our business is absolutely mechanical, electrical, technical, and the life, vitality and personality is breathed into the whole operation by the employes. How, then, can we fail to appreciate the value of high-class labor as against the disadvantages of cheap labor in theatre operation? The stake that this industry has in its 300,000 employes is tremendous, and frequently one wonders whether this is fully appreciated by the bankers, the important executives of production, distribution and exhibition, as well as security holders scattered all over the world. The tremendous earning power of this industry is in the hands of and dependent upon real, live human beings, and without this great army of employes the huge investments would not be worth much. There is every reason to believe that motion pictures have a brilliant future from this point on, but it is not going to be attained by the continuous shifting process of introducing novelty after novelty in order to arouse new interest in the minds of the public; nor will it be attained until the personnel of the industry begins to feel a part of the industry and that in some degree at least they will have some progressive security, regardless of mergers, reorganizations, or personal connections.

Control MAKES IT PRACTICAL

IT IS an established fact that Air Conditioning is ineffective without the guiding hand of Automatic Control. Always in the background—unobtrusive, silent, efficient—the Minneapolis-Honeywell Modutrol System of Automatic Control governs the Six Factors* vital in the year-round air conditioning in the modern theatre. The result is, inevitably, pleased patrons in greater numbers, and a busy box office.

Minneapolis-Honeywell, pioneer and leader for fifty years in the development of Automatic Control of temperatures, has available a brief informative book on the vital subject of Air Conditioning and its Automatic Control—a clear explanation of a subject whose uses and terms are often misunderstood.

Your request on your letterhead addressed to Minneapolis-Honeywell Heat Regulator Co., 2822 Fourth Avenue South Minneapolis, Minn., will bring your copy.
